

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

NYPL RESEARCH LIBRARIES

3 3433 08166577 4

XDA
Niles

NILE ,' WEEKLY REGISTER,

CONTAINING

POLITICAL, HISTORICAL, GEOGRAPHICAL, SCIENTIFIC, STATISTICAL, ECONOMICAL AND BIOGRAPHICAL

DOCUMENTS, ESSAYS AND FACTS:

TOGETHER WITH

NOTICES OF THE ARTS AND MANUFACTURES,

AND A

RECORD OF THE EVENTS OF THE TIMES.

WM. OGDEN NILES, EDITOR.

THE PAST—THE PRESENT—FOR THE FUTURE.

FROM SEPTEMBER, 1836, TO MARCH, 1837—VOL. LI. OR, VOLUME XV.—FIFTH SERIES.

BALTIMORE:

PRINTED BY THE EDITOR,

AT THE FRANKLIN PRESS, WATER-STREET, EAST OF SOUTH STREET.

INDEX TO VOLUME LI.

General directions. For things happening in Great Britain, France, &c., or the several states, see their own proper heads; in congress, see congress, &c.

A.
Abadie, Dr. his letter	34
Abolition of slavery—[see " Congress ," " Thompson, George "] trial and acquittal in Georgia, of an abolitionist 272; abolition convention at Harrisburg, Pa.	384
Academy of sciences at Paris—hoax on the	224
Accidents 32, 82, 96, 128, 146, 152, 160, 163, 164, 176, 179, 192, 193, 208, 240, 238, 321, 352
Adam, Sir Frederick	80
Adams, John Quincy—[see " Congress "] his letter to an anti-masonic committee 151; his proposed course concerning the presidential election 151; his remarks on a petition from ladies for abolishing slavery in the District of Columbia 316; his letter concerning his course in Whitney's case, and on the petition from slaves	402
Africa—[see " Colonization ," " Liberia ," &c.] eastern, account of, by Mr. Isaacs	66
French troops in	128
Agg, John, claimant of a large English estate	96
Air—solidified	179
ALABAMA—[see " Congress ," " Presidential election ,"] elections in 4, 18, 226; adjournment of the legislature 416; rail road companies incorporated by 416; city of, and Montgomery rail road company 416
Alexander, emperor of Russia, made an honorary member of a peace society in Boston, and then expelled from it	208
Alexander the Great, statue of	96
Algiers 86, 304; cotton of	192
Alibaud, trial and execution of	10
Allan, Chilton—[see " Congress "] his letter concerning a charge against Francis Granger	151
Alcock, Dr. E. J.	275
Allen, Ethan, anecdote of	164
American antiquarian society	164
Anderson, James, repels an accusation against H. L. White 150—[see " Law cases ,"]
Andros, Thomas	272
Animal magnetism	222, 223
Anti-masonic state convention proposed	416
Antique, an a revolutionary relic 66; antiques	176
Appointments by the president, &c.	290, 322, 416
Appropriations for government expenditures 2; and for offices created in 1836, 61, 154; [see " Congress ,"]
Arago, general, his death	192
Aram, Eugene	16
Arbuckle, gen. Matthew	129
Arctic enterprise	11
Ariel, the brig, fire and explosion of	149
ARKANSAS—[see " Congress ," " Presidential election ,"] meeting of the legislature 81; passage of the expunging resolutions 145; election of James S. Conway as governor 81; elections in 97;—[see " Conway, James S. "] message of the governor 139; salaries of officers	176
ARMY—[see " Congress ,"] general orders 5, 21, 54, 55, 87, 116, 149, 166, 167, 227, 402, 403; see 272; promotions, resignations and refusals of appointment, &c. 17, 21, 49, 117, 166, 224; number of resignations in the 176; see 320; useful invention for the sick of the	163
Arsenic—mode of detecting it in food	112
Ashantee—two sons of the king of, in London	160
Atwater, Amzi, his account of the settlement of the western reserve	291
Aurora borealis	352
Austria, population of	36; see 221, 224
B.
Baltimore, inspections in 97; address directory	161
delegation of, to the legislature	320
deaths in	336
Baltimore and Ohio rail road 7, 97, 107, 274, 352, 353; [see " Rail roads ,"]
Baltimore and Susquehanna rail road	123
Bangor, litigation at 160; deposit bank	176
Bank of England 97; [see " British affairs ,"]
Bank of the U. States 80, 81, 97, 113, 126, 187, 129, 215, 225, 230, 337, 343; [see " Biddle, Nicholas ," " Congress ," " Pennsylvania ,"]
Banking—states which have prohibited the issue of notes under five dollars 80; in Massachusetts 242; [see " Deposit banks ,"] capital in the U. States 162; in New York	257
Barbadoes 164; legislature of	369
Barbour, James—his eulogium on Madison	170
Barham, the frigate	144
Barrell, George P., U. S. Consul at Malaga	178
Bates, Barnabas, retires from the New York post office	32
Bayard, James A., appointed U. S. Attorney for Delaware	192
Beasts of prey destroyed in Sweden	288
Beet-root sugar 32; [see " Manufactures ,"]
Bell, John; [see " Congress ,"]—invited to a public dinner 13—his answer 14—his reception	49
Bell, Dr. rescues a German princess from drowning	16
Benton, Thomas H.—see [" Congress ,"]	321, 353
Bermudez, judge, attempt to lynch	49, 69
Bernard, general, made war minister of France	146
Biddle, Charles—his plan of a rail road	69
Biddle, Nicholas—his remarks on agriculture	119
his letters to J. Q. Adams	230, 243
Bird, Dr.	283
Births, extraordinary	176
Black, John; [see " Congress ,"]—his remarks in the senate of the U. States on certain Indian reservations	412
Blennerhasset's island	99
Bonaparte, Joseph	19, 176, 180, 288
Louis Napoleon—his attempt to excite a revolution in Strasburg 273; Lucien, sons of 66, 86, 208; Napoleon, sale of his effects 9, 84;—his order concerning suicide 195; memoranda of his generals 84; Chateaubriand's remarks concerning him 147; the twelve apostles	192
Bonneville, captain	16
Bosnia, insurrection at	170
Boston, supplying pure water to 16; increase of 83; revenue of 97; cargo of ice and apples sent to Calcutta from 96; its proposed representation in the legislature of Mass. 128; money market 178, 225; usury 352; flight of a cashier 192; blind choristers 192; fires 336; mortality	384
Bozzaris, honor to	16
Brady, Samuel, legend concerning	168
Brainard, Aldis, the polygamist	144
Brandon, William—his death	208
Brazil, events in	20, 101
Breadstuffs 93, 193; quick manufacture of bread 147
Breckinridge, Robert J.—his letter to Dr. Wardlaw	186
Brent, William—his petition to congress concerning four votes given in Virginia for president and vice president of the United States	357
Bridge over the Ohio	80
Bristol, ship wreck of the	194
BRITISH AFFAIRS.
Agricultural report for July 17; alligator, an in the Thames 208; American lands, speculators in 160; bakers, regulations concerning 160; banks, stringent measures of 160; bank of England 98; British association for the advancement of science 154; Chamberlains of England, hereditary grand 112; church dues, sale of property for, and riot 176; Church of England schools 112; commercial policy 164; criminality, proportionate, in the counties of England and in Ireland 154; criminals, relative ages of, in England and France 154; education in England 202; exchequer bills, interest on 160; exports and imports of hardware and cutlery 18; of cotton 2; exports 176; factories, laborers in English 275; fire in London 112; protection of the bank of England against fire 290; flogging of soldiers and marines 208; geological changes in Great Britain 83; Horticultural Society, London 144; medical practitioners, bill concerning 112; money market in England 100; national debt, curious calculations relating to it 210; navy, French timber for the British 224; Newgate, state of 36; newspapers, bill concerning the conveyance of 10; stamp duties bill, &c. 50; duty on, reduced 115; penalty of a million of dollars incurred in one day, under the new stamp duties act, by a ministerial newspaper 208; New Grenada , anticipated rupture between England and 369, 385; parliament , scene in the house of commons 30; debate in the house of commons, on slavery in Texas 38; prorogation of; speaker's address; king's speech 79; meeting and prorogation of 193; postage, arrangement with France concerning 10; [see " Newspapers ,"] post office laws, evasion of 96; prosperity in England 99; reading taste of the British public 83; revenue 179; roads, public 288; Serpentine river, draining of the 201; Smithfield market, statistics concerning the London 86; tea drinking in England 99; tea trade in London 96; Texas 35; Thames tunnel 48; comparative height, weight, and strength of the English, Belgian, Scotch, and Irish nations	154
Broom-corn	16
Buchanan, James—[see " Congress ,"]
Buchanan, judge John,	273
Buckland, Dr.—his alleged declaration concerning the age of the world	144
Buffalo, N. Y.—trade 82; wooden pavements 83; sales of real estate	128
Burchard, Matthew	226
Burnet, David G. President of Texas—his message to the Texan congress 199; his answer to president Santa Ana's protest 191; resigns his office	227
Burr, Aaron—his death 33; his burial 49; his will 83, 138; his valedictory of the senate	199
Butler, Benjamin F. attorney general appointed acting secretary of war	17, 82, 144
Byron, ship	30
C.
Caldwell, James, to light Mobile with gas	144
Calhoun, John C.—[see " Congress ,"]—his speech at a dinner given to himself and Waddy Thompson, in S. C. 77; his letter concerning a rail road 88; spoken of as president of the great southern and western rail road company 192; his speech on the admission of Michigan into the union 307; his speech on the distribution bill 309, 310; a letter of the president of the U. States to him	396
Call, Richard K. 821—[see " Florida, War in ,"]
Campbell, lieutenant Archibald S.—his death	178
Canada, Lower, disturbances in 99; remarkable and ridiculous jury in	164
Canada, Upper, meeting of the legislature 194, 208; burning spring in 99; appropriations for roads and for the Welland canal	275
Canals, 2, 7, 8, 96, 145, 192, 272, 274, 275, 304, 336, 384
Canal tolls, travel, trade, &c., N. Y. 2, 7, 98, 168
Carey, Mathew, eulogium on him, by Richard Peters 34; proposed new edition of his " Vindiciae Hibernicae "	150
Carlisle, Richard, his conversion to Christianity	144
Carlos, Don, his proclamation	129
Carrel, Armand, a French editor—his death	20
Cass, Lewis, leaves Washington for France	17
further notices of him	82, 288
Central America, scheme of emigration to	36
Cesarian operation—afflicting case of a	176
Chambers, Thomas J. murders Moses Camp	208
Chandler, Joseph R., extract from his speech at Philadelphia, concerning the American press 33
Charlemagne's Bible	80
Charles I., king of Great Britain—his Bible	224
Chateaubriand—his remarks on Napoleon	147
Cherokees , affairs of the, letter of John Ross concerning 90; letter of Mr. Clay 160; war with them 5, 6; sale of intoxicating liquors to them	290
Chesapeake and Ohio Canal 8—[see " Canals ," " Congress ,"]
Chesney, Col. F. R.—letter from	81
Cheverus, Bishop, biographical sketch of	22
Chicago, commerce of	274
Chili, attempted revolution in	178
reported hostilities with Peru	358, 385
China, trade with 10; a peep at 102; slavery in 228 see p. 181, 36
Cholera in Charleston, S. C. 17, 23, 49, 65, 84, 97 in the vicinity of Charleston, S. C. 128; in the papal states 113; cure for the	66
Chorbon, a disease fatal to cattle and men	96
Christina , queen of Spain—her pecuniary investments 144; her beauty and fascination	208
Chronometers	201
Churchill, Mr.—redress to him from the Turkish government	50
Cincinnati, a theatre at, destroyed by fire	160
pork market of	341
Clarke, James, governor of Kentucky—his inaugural address	41
Clarksburg (Va.) clerk's office burnt	16
Clatow, general—his death	181
Clay, Henry—[see " Congress ,"]—his speech at a public dinner given to him in Kentucky 14; his marvellous escape from death 17; his remarks at Lexington, Ky., on African colonization 40; his letter to John Gunter, a Cherokee Indian 160; his letter concerning a charge against Francis Granger 152; his remarks on asking leave to introduce his land bill 269; re-elected a U. S. senator from Kentucky 273, 353; his remarks on the distribution bill 310; his letter accepting the office of president of the American Colonization Society 339; his speech on the resolution to expunge a part of the journal of the senate, for 1833-4	406
Clayton, John M., chief justice of Delaware	321
Clayton, Thomas, elected a U. S. senator	305
Cleveland, trade of	176, 180, 195
Clinch, general, invited to a public dinner in Georgia 400—see [" Florida, War in ,"]
Coal and coal trade 22, 32, 48, 80, 112, 160, 176, 304—see [" Congress ,"]
Cochran, John H., invents a rifle of extraordinary power	160, 194, 320
Coffee, gen. John—his death	112
Coins , ancient 16, 208; proposed issue of new coins in the United States 128; new coin of fifty-cent pieces 240; the new dollar 241; gold and silver coin, supply of	274, 351

- Cold, effects of extreme 147
Coleman, George, the younger—his death 304
Colonization, African—[see "Congress."] 40, 83
Colonization Society, the American, its receipts 48 its twentieth annual meeting 241, 259
Compromise act, a test question concerning the 414
Concord monument 258
- CONGRESS.
Abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia, &c.
280, 316, 317, 318, 333, 334, 335, 336, 351
359, 378, 383, 390, 392, 399, 411, 413—[see
"Yeas and nays."]—"Slaves."] 359, 390, 396, 397, 399, 413
Adams, Mr. 255, 270, 280, 291, 296, 316, 317, 318,
334, 335, 351, 359, 380, 383, 385, 386, 387,
389, 390, 396, 397, 399, 413
Agent of claims at Paris and London 288
Alford, Mr. 359, 386, 397
Allan, Mr. C. 297, 334, 335, 359, 383 Amendments to the constitution, concerning the election of P. and V. P. 353
American authors 413
American seamen 281
Anthony, Mr. 280, 358, 359, 398
Appropriations 281, 360 for the Indian department, &c. 360, 377, 414 for the suppression of Indian hostilities 399 for the army 392, 398, 399, 416 for fortifications, &c. 892 for completing military roads in Arkansas, 413, 414 for the navy 399, 415
Arkansas 413, 414, 415
Ash, Mr. 398
Ashley, Mr. 276, 280, 297, 383, 396
Bank of U. States—notes of the late 415
Banks 283
Bastrop's heirs 294
Bayard, Mr. 294, 331, 347, 349, 378, 394, 411, 412, 413
Beale, Mr. 351
Bean, Mr. 383
Beaumont, Mr. 399
Belgian and Dutch vessels and cargoes 394
Bell, Mr. 270, 271, 280, 315, 318, 334, 335, 351, 352, 358, 359, 376, 396, 398
Benton, Mr. 233, 240, 253, 259, 269, 270, 278, 279,
299, 320, 330, 331, 332, 333, 347, 348, 356,
357, 392, 393, 395, 400, 411
Black, Mr. 315, 347, 392, 411, 412, 418
Bond, Mr. 334
Boon, Mr. 239, 230, 295, 315, 316, 317, 351, 395, 396, 398
Borden, Mr. 316
Bouldin, Mr. 386, 397, 398
Bounty lands 283
Boyd, Mr. 335, 352, 358, 415
Brent and Cox, memorial of, 359
Brent, William, of Virginia, petition from 359
Briggs, Mr. 256, 281, 317, 334, 353, 359, 383, 395,
399, 400, 415
Briggs, Dr. John P. case of, 380
British authors 316, 376, 377, 399, 400
Brown, Mr. 294, 373, 390
Buchanan, Mr. 278, 279, 298, 299, 314, 330, 331, 347, 349, 357, 360, 378, 412, 414
Bynum, Mr. 334, 389, 390, 397
Calhoun, Mr., of Kentucky 320, 359, 389, 396, 397,
398
Calhoun, Mr. J. C. 259, 270, 279, 279, 298, 307, 314, 315, 330, 331, 333, 347, 349, 355, 356, 357,
376, 377, 378, 379, 384, 390, 391, 392, 393, 394,
400, 411, 413, 414
Calhoun, Mr. of Mass. 335, 383
Cambreleng, Mr. 271, 281, 282, 316, 318, 319, 333,
350, 351, 359, 360, 380, 383, 389, 398, 399,
415, 416
Carter, Mr. 255, 399
Casey, Mr. 351, 360
Chambers, of Ky., Mr. 280, 317, 383, 396
Chambers, of Penn., Mr. 283, 395, 396
Chapin, Mr. 358, 398
Chesapeake and Ohio Canal 351
Children in factories, 384
Childs, Mr. 255
Claiborne, Mr. 239, 297, 315, 351, 358, 396
Claims on U. States, examination of 294, 331
Clay, Mr. 256, 314, 315, 330, 331, 333, 346, 347,
348, 349, 355, 356, 357, 376, 377, 378, 384,
390, 391, 392, 394, 400, 411, 413, 414, 416
Clayton Mr. 392, 411
Coal, duty on 349
Coffee, George, death of 239
Colonization Society 255, 334, 355, 357, 359, 383, 399
- Committees of the senate, standing 240, 254; to inform Martin Van Buren of his election to the presidency 379, 390; to inform Richard M. Johnson of his election to the vice presidency 379, 392
Committees of the House of R., standing, 239, 240,
254, 250; to investigate executive departments 387,
370, 380, 395; on steamboat disasters 270; to inform
- Messrs. Van Buren and Johnson of their election 396; committee, joint, of the two houses, to examine the votes of president and vice president 356, 382, 396
Compromise act, test question concerning it 414
Connor, Mr. 256, 270, 350, 351, 359, 399
Contempts 399
Copy right 376, 377, 399, 400, 412
Corwin, Mr. 320, 333
Court of inquiry at Frederick 411
Craig, Mr. 281, 283, 351, 358, 359, 397, 415
Crary, Mr. 358, 359, 382
Crittenden, Mr. 270, 294, 330, 346, 392, 393, 395,
400, 411, 413
Cumberland road—[see "Yeas and nays."] 394, 400
Currency in payment of dues to United States 357,
392, 416
Cushing, Mr. 281, 351, 359, 360, 383, 389
Cushman, Mr. 281, 295, 320, 330, 333, 358, 359, 380, 415
Cuthbert, Mr. 411, 414
Dana, Mr. 270, 330, 331, 349, 414
Davis, Mr. of Ind. 240, 270, 280, 317, 335, 383, 390
Davis, Mr. of Mass. 256, 279, 294, 314, 320, 330, 331, 347, 356, 357, 376, 379, 384, 392, 393,
411, 413, 414
Dawson, Mr. 317, 358
Decatur, case of Mrs. Susan 380
Denny, Mr. 399
Deposit banks 296, 380
Distribution bill 308
District of Columbia—[see "Abolition of slavery, &c.;"] penal laws in 349, 394; banks of 318; days for considering bills relating to 379
Dromgoole, Mr. 358
Dry docks 415
Dunlap, Mr. 282, 358
Durett's heirs 296
Duties on goods destroyed by fire at New York 411 imports 355, 414
Education 315, 347
Elections, freedom of 315, 318, 351, 358, 359; bill to secure the 376; report in the senate, concerning the election of president and vice president 377, 378; in the house 382; votes for president and vice president counted in H. R. 383; election of vice president 379
Ellicott & Co., letter from, 413
Elmore, Mr. 389
Evans, Mr. 316, 389
Everett, Mr. 255, 281, 283, 415
Ewing, Mr. of Illinois 413
Ewing, Mr. of Ohio 240, 253, 254, 298, 331, 346, 347, 348, 349, 352, 354, 392, 394, 411, 412
Express mails 335, 359
Expunging resolution 320, 330, 331, 382, 346; proposition to rescind it 378
Fairfield, Mr. 398, 400
Florida 346, 413
Foreigners—immigration of 400, 413, 414
Forrester, Mr. 270
Forsyth, John—claim of 294
French indemnities 392
French, Mr. 318, 335, 359, 389
Fry, Mr. 280
Fulton, Mr. 256
Gainesville and Narkeeta rail road 413
Galbraith, Mr. 283, 333, 415
Gales & Seaton's American state papers 379
Garland, Mr. of Louisiana 359, 380, 396
Garland, Mr. of Va. 283, 295, 296, 381, 393
Gholson, Mr. 389, 390, 396, 398, 399, 414
Gillett, Mr. 239, 255, 281, 282, 295, 296, 315, 381, 398
Glascock, Mr. 316, 317, 333, 389, 396
Goldsborough, R. H. death of 233
Graham, Mr. 271, 335, 396
Granger, Mr. 315, 359, 387, 397, 399, 415
Grantland, Mr. 386
Graves, Mr. 359, 389, 399
Grennell, Mr. 360, 414
Grundy, Mr. 254, 273, 279, 298, 307, 314, 331, 347, 348, 349, 356, 377, 378, 379, 383, 390, 392,
393, 395, 411, 418, 414
Haley, Mr. 397
Hall, Mr. of Maine 297, 298
Hamer, Mr. 298, 318, 380, 382, 398
Hannegan, Mr. 270, 283, 295, 298, 350, 390, 397,
415, 416
Hard, Mr. 253, 283, 399
Hardin, Mr. 283, 316, 336, 350, 351, 383, 396, 398, 400
Harlan, Mr. 283, 295, 296
Harper, Mr. 271, 282, 283, 317
Harrison, Mr. of Missouri 271, 298, 397, 398
Hawes, Mr. 336, 350, 359
Haynes, Mr. 239, 317, 318, 360, 386, 387, 398
Heister, Mr. 335, 350
Hendricks, Mr. 278, 279, 298, 331, 378, 392, 394, 400
Herod, Mr. 350
- Hoar, Mr. 399
Holsey, Mr. 297, 360, 384, 389
Hopkins, Mr. 398
Howard, Mr. 282, 283, 297, 334, 352, 358, 397, 398, 399, 415
Howell, Mr. 359
Hubbard, Mr. 279, 294, 314, 349, 377, 392, 411, 418
Huntsman, Mr. 280, 315, 350, 351, 358, 398
Importation of goods—frauds in the 377
Imprisonment for debt 359; in the District of Columbia 384
Indian affairs—[see "appropriations."] 378, 379,
399, 400, 412,
Ingersoll, Mr. 296, 319, 359, 396, 397, 399
Insolvent debtors 281
Iowa Indians 377
Island, artificial 379
Jackson, Mr. 316
Jarvis, Mr. 255, 271, 316, 335, 350, 358, 359, 379, 383, 396, 399, 415
Jenifer, Mr. 316, 335, 350, 358, 359, 396, 414
Jersey city 414
Johnson, Mr. of Ky. 297, 335; elected vice president 379
Johnson, Mr. of Louisiana 280, 315, 397
Johnson, Mr. of Tenn. 358, 380, 383, 397
Jones, Mr. of Ohio 334
Jones, Mr. of Wisconsin 271
Jones, Walter appears before H. R. as counsel for
R. M. Whitney 399
Journals of congress—mutilation of 335, 345
Judicial system of U. States 282, 283, 392, 393, 414, 415
Kent, Mr. 288, 294, 333, 394, 411, 414
Kentucky and Tennessee volunteers 395, 399, 414
Key, Francis S.—his letter to the secretary of the treasury 350; appears before the house as counsel, for R. M. Whitney 399, 400
King, Mr. of Ala. 240, 294, 331, 347, 348; elected president of the senate 356, 357
King, Mr. of Georgia 294, 346, 394
Kinnard, George L., death of 240
Knight Mr. 253, 393, 413, 414
Land bill 268, 357, 369, 376, 377, 378, 379, 384,
416—[see "public lands."] 416
Land frauds 376; [see "public lands."] 416
Lane Mr. 270, 271, 295, 315, 334, 383, 396, 397,
398, 415
Lawler, Mr. 359, 360, 389, 390
Lawrence, Mr. 319, 334, 335, 388
Lee, Mr. Gideon 282, 335, 396, 415
Leonard, Mr. 399
Lewis, Mr. 255, 318, 386, 387, 389, 396, 398
Lincoln, Mr. 283, 351, 383, 389, 395, 396, 397, 398
Linn, Mr. 269, 279, 314, 348, 377, 400, 411, 413, 414
Lloyd, William B. case of 344
Love, Mr. 282, 283
Lowrie, Walter—sec. of the senate, resigns 232
Loyall, Mr. 255
Lyon, Mr. 378, 413
Madison, James—his MSS 411, 412, 413
Mann, Mr. of N. Y. 255, 256, 282, 283, 297, 316, 317, 319, 338, 334, 350, 358, 359, 388, 395,
398, 400, 415
Marine hospitals 376
Martin, Mr. 270, 382, 398
Mason, Mr. of Maine 415
Mason, Mr. of Va. resigns his seat 351
Massachusetts, claim of, on the U. States, 415
McCarty, Mr. 270, 395
McKay, Mr. 297, 319, 396, 415
McKean, Mr. 357
McKenna, Mr. 283, 380
McKeon, Mr. 281, 333, 335, 396, 415
McKim, Mr. 360, 399
Meade, R. W. claim of, on the U. States, 415
Meeting of the 24th congress, at the 2d session, 232, 233
Melville, David, a removed ganger, case of 335
Members of the house 238
Mercer, Mr. 239, 255, 319, 350, 359, 379, 382, 383,
395, 396, 398, 399, 415
Messages from the president—annual 232; see
p. 239; transmitting correspondence with Mrs.
Madison 238, 245; transmitting a report from the post master general 271; concerning Texas 272, 277; concerning the admission of Michigan into the union 278; concerning the Smithsonian legacy 294; executive 314; concerning a canal or rail road near the isthmus of Panama 314; concerning the penal laws of the District of Columbia 383; transmitting correspondence with president Santa Ana 335; concerning the mint 349, 351; with communications from the secretary of the treasury and the U. S. attorney for the District of Columbia 349; with an act of the state of Missouri 350; concerning Mexico and Texas 352, 358; recommending contingent reprisals against Mexico 378; concerning a treaty with the Sac and Fox Indians 379; communicating

- a treaty with Morocco 392, 399; concerning a seizure at Bermuda, of American slaves 394; concerning relations with Peru 415
Mexico, 352, 358, 378, 398, 409, 412
Michigan 278, 294, 298, 307, 315, 322, 336, 351, 358, 359, 376, 377, 378, 393, 413, 414
 Mileage and compensation of members 350, 352, 358
 Military appropriation bill 393; establishment 393, 400
 Milligan, Mr. 389
 Mint 351
Mississippi, contingent locations of land in river, &c. 413
 Montgomery, Mr. 297
 Moore, Mr. 269, 279, 380, 395, 400, 413
 Morgan, Mr. 335
 Morris, Mr. 294, 298, 299, 333, 347, 349, 357, 377, 378, 379, 394
 Muhlenburg, Mr. 333
 National bank 379
 National hospital 399
 Naval service, employment of boys in the 413
 Navy appropriation bill 415
 Navy department; [see "Reports,"] communications from the 298, 380
 Newcastle, port of entry 411
 Niagara, ship canal 399
 Nicholas, Mr. 269, 314, 349, 357
 Niles, Mr. 269, 294, 315, 330, 347, 349, 390, 392, 413, 414
North Carolina, act of, concerning American seamen 415
 Norvell, Mr. 357, 378, 393, 394, 413
 Nourse, Joseph, claims of 357
 Officers of the senate 254, 279
 Owens Mr. 283, 319, 333, 398
 Parker, Mr. 280, 281, 360, 393, 415
 Parks, Mr. 280, 316, 358, 395, 398
 Passengers from foreign countries 400, 414
 Patent office 271, 314, 393
 Patterson, Mr. 333, 383
 Patton, Mr. 240, 255, 317, 350, 386, 387, 389, 396, 397, 398, 400, 414
 Pearce, Mr. D. J. 256, 271, 281, 295, 358, 383, 395, 399, 415
 Penal laws 415
 Penitentiary system 314
 Pennsylvania ship 415
 Pensions 280, 281, 294, 296, 314, 351, 377, 380, 414
 Peru 415
 Petitions, presentment of 383
 Peyton, Mr. 256, 296, 380, 382, 415
 Phillips, Mr. 317, 359, 379, 383, 389
 Pickens, Mr. 280, 282, 334, 358, 389, 397, 415
 Pierce, Mr. 413
 Pilots 415
 Pinckney, Mr. 317, 318, 335, 389, 399
 Porter, Mr. 294
 Post office; [see "Reports,"] 399
 Prentiss, Mr. 294, 390, 394, 413
 President of U. S.—[see "Messages, &c."] his letter to Mr. Calhoun 384, 390; president and V. P. examination of votes for 356, 357 committees to wait on 232, 238, 239
 Preston, Mr. 380, 386, 347, 378, 393, 394, 395, 400, 411, 412, 413, 414
Public lands 295, 296, 297, 315, 320, 331, 333, 345, 346, 347, 349, 350, 357, 380, 390, 392, 393, 413, 414 [see "Land bill," and "yeas and nays,"]
 Rail roads 400, 413
 Rankin, Christopher, death of 239
 Receivers of public moneys 399, 413
 Reed, Mr. 253, 313, 317, 358, 378, 383, 415
 Relief vessels 392, 414
 Removals from office 335
 Rencher, Mr. 315
Reports. Annual report of the secretary of the treasury 246; annual report of the secretary of the navy 251; annual report of the secretary of war, ad interim 261, 295; annual report of the postmaster general 267; report of the secretary of the treasury concerning New York duty bonds 283; report of the secretary of the treasury concerning the distribution of the surplus revenue 297; report of the secretary of the treasury concerning transfers of public money 312; report of the postmaster general, transmitting estimate of expenses 283; report of the postmaster general concerning the burning of the general post office building 271; report of the acting commissioner of the general land office 286; report in the senate on relations with Mexico 412; report in the house of representatives of the committee of ways and means 325; report in the house of representatives on the post office conflagration 344
 Revenue, reduction of the 318, 321, 333
 Reynolds, Mr. 272
 Ringgold, Tench, relief of 413
 Ripley, Mr. 256, 303
 Rives, Mr. 279, 314, 330, 352, 357, 394, 411, 413
 Robbins, Mr. 330, 390, 411, 413
 Robertson, Mr. 256, 333, 349, 390, 394
 Robertson, Min. 297, 316, 356, 359, 378, 383, 386, 395, 398
 Ruggles, Mr. 269, 314, 315, 390, 398
 Rules of the house of representatives 239
 Russell, Mr. 359
 Santa Ana 331, 336, 380, 398
 Seamen, relief of sick and disabled American 415
 Senate, members of the 232, 253, 254, 256, 257, 270, 298, 331, 330, 360; [see "Officers of the senate,"] political cast of the, after March 4, 1837, 338 persons privileged to be admitted on the floor 353
 Sevier, Mr. 279, 293, 333, 349, 360, 392, 400, 414
 Shepard, Mr. W. B. 271, 334, 335, 379
 Shields, Mr. 415
 Slavery in the District of Columbia—[see "Abolition of slavery, &c."] slaves, right of, to petition congress 396, 397; petitions from 383, 387, 390; seizure of certain southern, at Bermuda 356, 379, 394
 Smith, Mr. 281, 334
 Smithsonian legacy 294
 Southard, Mr. 279, 314, 392, 398, 400, 413
 Specie circular 240, 253, 259, 346, 392
 State department—[see "Foreigners,"] communications from the 314, 315, 400, 409, 414, 415
 Steam boilers 392
 Stockton, Stokes, et al. case of 411
 Storer, Mr. 270, 315, 351, 399
 Strange, Mr. 331, 333, 411
 Surplus revenue 380; statement of the distribution of the 238, 297
 Surveys 399
 Swift, Mr. 377, 390, 391, 394
 Taliaferro, Mr. 397
 Tallmadge, Mr. 330, 347
 Tariff 380, 411, 413, 414, 416
 Taylor, Mr. 283, 396, 397
Texas 314, 336, 346, 347, 352, 353, 393, 398, 411, 413, 415
 Thomas, Mr. 315, 316, 319, 335, 386, 350, 351, 358, 359, 380, 382, 396, 398, 415
 Thompson, Mr. of S. C. 280, 283, 295, 315, 351, 359, 386, 387, 388, 389, 390, 397
 Thomson, Mr. of Ohio. 296, 359
 Thruston, Judge, case of 359
 Tipton, Mr. 253, 315, 330, 347, 348, 349, 384, 394, 400, 411, 413, 414
 Tobacco planters 414
 Tomlinson, Mr. 279, 315, 347, 357, 392, 394, 413, 414
 Toucey, Mr. 296, 319, 351
 Treasury department—[see "Reports,"] communications from 297, 298, 315, 318, 331, 359, 383, 393, 399, 415
 Tudor, William, jr. his correspondence 316
 Turrill, Mr. 282
 Underwood, Mr. 255, 256, 280, 315, 335, 350, 351, 358, 390, 396, 397, 398, 399
 Van Buren, Mr. V. P. of U. States—his valedictory to the senate 356; answer of the senate to it 357
 Vanderpoel, Mr. 271, 283, 295, 296, 319, 335, 350, 351, 358, 383, 390, 397, 399, 400
 Vinton, Mr. 297, 315, 319, 358, 388
 Walker, Mr. 240, 314, 330, 331, 333, 346, 347, 348, 349, 355, 357, 360, 377, 378, 384, 390, 392, 393, 394, 395, 411, 412, 413, 414
 Wall, Mr. 294, 414
 War, department of—[see "Reports,"] communications from the 318, 380, 383, 392, 415
 Ward, Mr. 271
 Wardwell, Mr. 350, 359
 Washington, Mr. 335, 380
 Webster, Mr. 256, 269, 270, 272, 315, 357, 377, 378, 379, 390, 392, 413, 414
 Western armory 393
 White, Mr. of Florida 271, 280
 White, Mr. of Tenn. 294, 314, 333, 360, 378, 393, 395, 400, 412, 414
 Whitney, R. M. his case 295, 380, 395, 396, 397, 398, 399, 400, 414, 415
 Whittlesey, Mr. 239, 255, 271, 296, 315, 334, 358, 380, 383, 399, 400, 415, 416
 Williams, Mr. of Ky. 415
 Williams, Mr. of N. C. 283, 295, 315, 334, 390, 395
Yeas and nays in the senate—on referring a bill to extend certain sections of the deposit act of the last session 270; on motions to adjourn 294; on engrossing for a third reading the bill to admit Michigan 294; on the passage of the bill 294; on referring the whole subject of the treasury order, or specie circular 315; on the expunging resolution 332; motion to discharge a disorderly person from the custody of the sergeant-at-arms 333; [see "Lloyd, Wm. B."] on the bill for the relinquishment of the 16th sections granted for the use of schools, and for the entry of other lands in lieu thereof 347; on Mr. Morris's amendment to a bill concerning the sales of public lands 347; on Mr. Tipton's amendment to a bill concerning the sales of public lands 349; on Mr. Benton's amendment to a bill concerning the sales of public lands 349; on an amendment to the bill designating the funds receivable for dues to the U. States 352; [see 356 note.] On the bill 392; on a motion to take up the memorial from the American colonization society 357; on Mr. Buchanan's amendment to the land bill 357; on agreeing to the land bill in its amended form 357; on a resolution leaving undecided the question of the validity of the Michigan votes for P. and V. P. 378; on a motion to lay on the table a motion that an abolition petition from Ohio be not received 378; on the passage of the land bill 384; [see p. 369;] laying on the table a motion to refer to a committee a petition concerning the slave trade in District of Columbia 390; on reconsidering the vote on the second reading of Mr. Calhoun's bill to cede the public lands to the new states 390; on laying on the table a motion for the second reading of the bill 392; on laying on the table the bill making appropriations for fortifications 392; on the passage of the bill 393; on considering a resolution recognizing the independence of Texas 393; on the bill to establish a foundry, armory, arsenals, &c. 394; on engrossing the bill to amend the act for punishing certain crimes against the U. States 394; on the passage of the bill 394; on striking out certain sections of the Cumberland road bill 394; on an amendment to the bill striking out the appropriation for Illinois 394; on striking out a portion of the bill concerning the repayment of money 394; on inserting a proviso, disclaiming any pledge on the part of the government to do any thing further for the Cumberland road 394; on engrossing the bill for a third reading 395; on the bill to increase the military peace establishment of the U. States 400; on Mr. Black's amendment to the bill for the relief of R. H. Meade's executrix 411; on a resolution to purchase Mr. Madison's MSS. 413; on the bill making appropriations for certain military roads in Arkansas 414; on taking up the bill reducing the duties on certain imported articles 414; on retaining the present duty on certain articles 414; on retaining the present duty on china, porcelain, earthen, and stone-ware, [a test question as to the compromise act] 414
Yeas and nays in the house of representatives—on receiving a petition for abolishing slavery in D. C. 317; on motion to lay the same on the table 318; on presenting petitions from slaves 390; reconsidering the vote rejecting a resolution censuring any member who should hereafter present a petition from slaves 396, 397; on a resolution refusing to receive a petition from slaves 397; on a resolution denying that slaves have a right of petition 397; on the motion to lay on the table the report and bill for reducing the revenue 333; on suspending the rules in favor of a resolution to prevent the mutilation, &c. of congressional records 345; on laying on the table a proposition concerning the sales of public lands 345; on the admission of Michigan into the union 376
 Yell, Mr. 296, 315, 351, 358, 400
 Young, Mr. 358
 CONNECTICUT—[see "Congress," "Presidential election,"] elections in 178; extra session of the legislature 304
 Consignees, rights of 116
 "Constitution"—Russian meaning of the word 192
 Constitution, the frigate, coach made from it for president Jackson 288
 Consuls, American 179
 Conway, James L. governor of Arkansas, his inaugural address 119; his message 139
 Copley, sir John 144
 Copper, coinage of 81; copper mines 208, 307
 Copy right—[see "Congress,"] 17
 Corn 32; corn trade 17
Cotton. Imports and exports of, into and from Great Britain and Ireland 2, 97; manufacture of, in U. States 22; in U. States and other countries 138; price of, at Liverpool 160; crops 162, 168; growth of, in the U. States 416; cargo of 224
Courts martial, military. Court of inquiry at Frederick, Md. concerning the war in Florida and Alabama 82, 192, 209, 226, 227, 257, 288, 369, 401; [see "Congress," "Florida, war in," "Gaines, Gen.," "Jesup, Gen.," "Scott, Gen." &c.] 240, 402
Courts martial, naval
 Cowan, Esq. made associate judge of N. York 17
 Creek frauds and Creek hostilities 1, 83, 193, 402
 Creeks, removal of the 34, 65, 162
 Crops 50
Cuba 194, 210, 275, 337; reported revolution in 192; statistics of 290
 Cumberland road 304; [see "Congress,"] 288
 Custom house officers D.
 Dallas, George M. his letter on annulling the charter of the bank of the U. States 42; examination of it by "Madison;" [see "Opiskur, Abel P."] remarks on it by the Washington Globe 127
 Dana, Judah, elected a senator from Maine 241
 Dayton, Aaron O. 288
 Dead warrior, sketch of a 3

- DELAWARE—[see "Congress," "Presidential election,"] elections in 305; resolutions of the legislature, instructing the senators of the state in congress to introduce, &c. a resolution to rescind the expunging resolution 378, 404
 Deposit banks—[see "Congress,"] 289, 295, 311
 Deposit bill, statement concerning it 226
 Dewey, Mr. his remarks, &c. 148
Dickens, Asbury, secretary of state, ad interim, his note to Mr. Gorostiza 198 elected secretary of the senate 241, 254
Dinothorium giganteum 32; its immense head 176
 DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, slavery in the, 44; [see "Congress,"] resolutions concerning slavery in, offered in the legislatures of Georgia and Vermont 210; conflagration of public buildings in Washington 241, 242; supposed cause of it 272; official notices relating to 242; swords made in the 338
Dodge, Col. Henry, his expedition to the Rocky mountains 143; his letter to the commissioner of Indian affairs 354
Dogs—act of parliament concerning 32; in New York 16; tails of 224; a dog saves a ship's crew 80
 Dolphin, U. S. schooner 82
 Doncaster, wreck of the ship 160
 Donelson, Mrs. her death 290
Downing, lieut. S. D. naval court martial for his trial 240; retracts his charges against capt. Thomas Ap Catesby Jones 402; his sentence remitted 402
 Drisborough, Mr. his plan of boring for water 80
 Dufavel, a well-digger—distressing case of 153, 164
 Dunklin, Daniel, governor of Missouri 144
 Dupin, Baron Charles, his calculations 154
 Duties, reduction of 224; [see "Congress,"]
 Duvall, Washington, his address to the public 105;
 E.
 Eagle rail road and lumber company 416
 Echols, Mr. his patent 144
 Edinburgh, alleged bankruptcy of 176
 Editorial notices, &c. 1, 17, 33, 49, 65, 81, 97, 113, 129, 145, 161, 177, 193, 209, 225, 241, 257, 273, 289, 305, 321, 337, 353, 369, 385, 401, &c. &c.
 Egypt, events in 128
 Egyptian hieroglyphic 112; pyramids 86; sideboard 16; society in Cairo 288
 Electioneering in England 94
Elections. In Alabama 4, 18; Arkansas 97; Connecticut 161; Delaware 161, 195; Georgia 100, 116, 132, 196; Illinois 305; Indiana 3, 45; Kentucky 196; Louisiana 196; Maine 116; Maryland 18, 34, 48, 85, 100, 161, 195; Massachusetts 177, 195; Michigan 274; Mississippi 243; Missouri 4, 100; New Hampshire 177, 193, 211, 242; New Jersey 100, 116, 163; New York 161, 177, 195; North Carolina 4, 18, 196; Ohio 116, 132, 161; Pennsylvania 100, 116, 132, 161, 195; Rhode Island 18; South Carolina 116, 132, 145, 195; Tennessee 196; Vermont 34, 82, 116, 145, 163, 177; Virginia 161, 196; [see "Presidential election," and the several states by their names.]
 Ellis, Powhatan U. S. minister to Mexico 353
 Ellison, Andrew, his grave above ground 128
 Emancipation—[see "West Indies," &c.] 10
 Emory, Thomas, 273
 English language—miscellaneous materials of 224
 Escourt, capt. Jno. B. his letter 31
 Euphrates expedition 31
Ewings, Thomas—[see 289, 320; see "Congress,"] his letter to a committee of working men of Cincinnati 123; his remarks in the senate on his resolution to rescind the treasury specie circular 259
 Exchange, par of 306
 Execution at sea 32
 Experiments at sea 181
 Exploring expedition 49, 224, 227; [see "Congress,"]
 Express mails 33, 137, 177, 225, 226, 257, 320, 336, 384; [see "Post-office,"]
 Expunging resolutions of Mr. Benton 401, 404, 405; anecdote concerning the expunging pen 353; [see "Congress,"]
 F.
 Fall river, population of 192
 Figs, cultivation of 128; see 192
 Fire, protection against 290; in the mountains 176
 Fires 16, 49, 80, 112, 143, 181, 221, 224, 241, 242, 256, 271, 336, 352
 Fisher, John, his card 8
 Florida, war in—[see "Court martial" &c.] 6, 18, 35, 36, 49, 54, 66, 81, 85, 100, 113, 118, 123, 129, 145, 149, 164, 181, 184, 196, 209, 225, 226, 241, 257, 260, 275, 276, 289, 305, 337, 339, 340, 353, 401; monument at Charleston, S. C. to deceased volunteers 48
 Florida, Cape, light house at, burnt 181
 Flour 16, 384
 Food of man 3
 Forests, sub-marine 99
 Forrest, Edwin 273
 Forsyth, John secretary of state 81, 404; his letter to Mr. Ellis 409, 410; [see "Congress," "and Gales and Seaton,"]
 Fort Gibson, unhealthiness of 305
 Forward, Walter, his reply to a committee of democratic citizens of Alleghany county, Penn. 142
 FRANCE, statistics of 9, 222, 304; trial and execution of Alibeaud 10; relations with the U. States 16; tour in, by water 96; spirit of the Parisian journals 122; troops of, in Africa 128; American claims on for spoiliations prior to 1800 137; royal tombs 144; relations with Switzerland 175, 180, 193; with Turkey 221, 222; another attempt on the life of Louis Philippe 385, 410
 Frick, William H. collector of Baltimore 193
 Gaines, gen. E. P. [see "Court martial, &c." "Florida, war in,"] his letter to the governor of Tennessee 87; recalled from the south western frontier 129; see 162, 304, 401; his letter responsive to an invitation to a public dinner at Mobile 184; disavows any claim to the honors of the sortie from fort Erie 416
 Gale in the St. Lawrence 146
 Gales and Seaton 404
 Gallatin, Albert, his letter on the lay of New York in restraint of paper currency 329
 Garrett, Thomas, a revolutionary veteran 34
 Gates, major 269
 Geological changes in Great Britain 83
 GEORGIA. [see "Congress," "Presidential election," "Surplus revenue,"] elections in 100, 116, 177, 195; governor's message 203; meeting of the legislature 177; its adjournment 304, sale in England of Georgia lands 160
 German literature 16; festivals 48
 Gibraltar, trade of 32
 Girard, Stephen, proceedings to set aside his will 48
 Gold, amount of, coined, &c. at the U. S. mint 48, 81, 97, 162, 338—[see "Coin,"]
 Goldsborough, Robert H. death of 81—see 238
 Goodman, Rev. Mr. 279
 Gorostiza, Mr. terminates his mission and leaves the U. States for Mexico 177 his note 197; [see "U. States," &c.]
 Government expenditures 2
 Grand Key, Turks Island, a free port 114
 Granger, Francis, defended against the charge of being an abolitionist 151
 Granite, remarkable natural rift or dyke in a quarry of 114; see 192
 Greece, &c. events in, 101, 128
 Greenough, Thomas, last of the Nobscussets 352
 Griswold, George, letters from him and Benjamin L. Swann to Mr. Woodbury 133
 Grundy, Felix—[see "Congress,"] his speech in the U. S. senate on the admission of Michigan into the union 322
 Gum elastic, manufactures from 3
 H.
 Hackett, the comedian, claimant of a barony 144
 Hamilton, James jr.—report on Texas 277
 Hardware and cutlery, exports of British 18
 Harlem rail road tunnel 8
Harrison, gen. W. H.—his letter to Sherrod Williams 23; his letter to citizens of Staunton, &c. 44; his reception at Baltimore 49; his letter repelling a charge that he had sold white men 94; see 188; his letter repelling a charge that he had burnt a Moravian town in Canada 150; his letter concerning the tariff, compromise bill, &c. 189
 Harvard university, centennial anniversary of 80
 Havens, Mr. humanity and gallantry of 3
 Hayne, Robert Y. intendant of Charleston, S. C. 48
 Head, sir Francis, governor, notice of his address to the Canadian legislature 194
 Heileman, col.—his life insurance 48
 Hendricks, William; [see "Congress,"] his remarks in the U. S. senate on the expunging resolution 346
 Henry, Dr. William, a chymist—his suicide 144
 Herring, statistics of this "interesting fish" 416
 Hessian fly, habits and progress of 182
 Hindoo exhibition 103
 Hitchcock, capt. Ethan A. 225
 Hocker, Alfred, made a post master 240
 Holcomb, Amasa, his telescope 160
 Ho-poe-thle Yo-ho-lo—his talk 37
 Houghton, Mary, curious story of 129
Houston, Samuel, president of Texas; his proclamation 67; invents an "awfully destructive" weapon 112; "the Washington of Texas." 113
 Hunt, Memucan, another minister from Texas to U. States 400
 Huntsman, Adam; [see "Congress,"] his letter concerning the president and the deposit bill 226
 I.
 Ice, a vessel in the 352
 Iceberg, encounter with an 30; see 96
 ILLINOIS—[see "Chicago," "Congress," "Presidential Election,"] meeting of the legislature 272; elections in 305
 Immigration of foreigners, [see "Congress,"] 400, 413, 414
 Imports and exports for six years 320
 Inclined planes 130
 INDIANA—[see "Congress," "Presidential election,"] elections in 3, 257, 352; convention in 304; adjournment of the legislature 416; White Water canal 145
 Indians; [see "Cherokees," "Congress," "Creeks," and p. 35, 289, 303, 352;] lands conveyed to emigrating tribes; number of, &c. 143; of the north west 354; in Arkansas 195; the Winnebagoes 178; honesty of the 256; execution of six 256
 Indian, payment at Logansport, riot at the 146 princess, funeral of an 117
 Indian stream difficulties; report concerning the 231 treaties 84, 130, 162 written language 140
 Ingersoll, Charles J.—his letter on the U. S. bank and vested rights 215
Insurance—[see "Heileman, Colonel," "Law Cases,"] unearned premiums on policies of 83; Vermont Mutual Insurance Company 116; heavy losses of marine insurance companies 240
 Iron, improvement in puddling 32; new process in smelting 147
 Island, a growing 163—[see "Congress,"]
 Isthmus of Panama, project of a rail road across 69
 J.
 Jackson, Andrew, president of the U. States—[see "Congress,"] his visit to Jonesborough, Tenn. and answer to an address 13; his toast at a public dinner given to him near Nashville 17; leaves Nashville for Florence, Ala. 32; his letter to certain citizens of Bedford county Tenn. 43; portrait of him for the City Hall at Washington city, D. C. 48; his reception and speech at Nashville 76; returns to Washington city 81; his answer to an invitation to attend a festival in honor of Lemuel Paynter's election to congress 150; his health 194, 226, 273; his opinions, &c. of the deposit bill 226; letter of the sultan of Muscat to him 258; a carriage made for him out of the Constitution 258; gen. Ripley's eulogy on him 303; his letter to Mrs. Donelson 339; his answer to an invitation to a festival at Philadelphia on the 8th of January 342; anecdote concerning him 353; his letter to the committee of the H. R. for inquiring into the executive departments 370; his letter to Mr. Calhoun, of S. C. 390; his answer to a letter from certain members of the legislature of Pennsylvania, inviting him to Harrisburg 401; large cheese presented to him 402; his opinion on the proceedings of the court of inquiry concerning the campaign against the Creek Indians 402
 Jackson, Andrew, jr. secretary under a land office law 226
 Jarvis, William C.—his death by suicide 112
 Jersey, farmers of, robbed of their Alderney cows 144
Jesup, gen. T. S.—[see "Florida War," &c.] letters from 55, 338, 339; his controversy with gen. Scott 74; his correspondence with some gentlemen in Alabama 123
 Jewish marriages 37
 Jews—their condition in England and France 80 their condition at Warsaw 96
 Johnson, Richard M. [see "Congress,"] his appeal to his congressional constituents for support in his canvass for the vice presidency 151; elected by the senate vice president of U. S. 379; his letter accepting the office 404
 Johnstown, fire at 224
 Jones, Walter—[see "Congress,"]
 Journal of the Franklin Institute 146
 Judges, longevity of four living 128
 K.
 Kearsley, Mr.—his remarks in the British house of commons 30
 Kendall, Amos, post master general—[see "Congress,"] his answer to a letter from Samuel McKean 137; his answer to an invitation to attend a festival in honor of Lemuel Paynter's election to congress 150
 Kennedy, John, appointed a commissioner of claims under a Cherokee treaty 144
 KENTUCKY—[see "Congress," "Presidential Election,"] governor Clark's inaugural address 41; elections in 273; exports of 304
 Kinnard, George L.—his death 240; see 208, 224
 L.
 La Guayra, affairs at 55
 Lake Erie, commerce of 352
 Lake Superior 96
 Land office frauds 384; [see "Congress,"]
 Lane, col.—his death 164
 LAW—indemnification in Switzerland to accused persons who are acquitted 32; singular oversight in, an English law 96; profits of litigation 208
 LAW CASES—[see "Rathbun,"]—Abolition of slavery—trial and acquittal, in Georgia, of E. E. Ro-

- berts, an abolitionist 272—Attorneys—Payne v. Barbour, Payne v. Smith; suits against attorneys, for neglect of duty, and want of professional skill 50; Banks—indictment of three bank commissioners, for a fraudulent disposition of stock among themselves 112; Burning of the U. S. treasury building—trial of Harry White 305, 337, 334; trial of Richard H. White 257, 273, 305, 321, 337; Captains of vessels, liability of, U. S. v. Mahon; U. S. v. Boardman; suits against captains for refusing to bring home American seamen 50; Allen v. Rowland, suit against the captain of a merchant vessel for ill-treating a seaman 123; arrest of capt. Otis Taylor for flogging a seaman to death 288; Combination—[see "Trades Unionists;"] Contract—Ewing v. Wood, breach of agreement relative to the sale of a house 152; Distress—"sufficient distress" 240; Ecclesiastical law—case of an unlicensed confessor in France 112; Editors—trial of Day and Beach, editors of the Sun, for abducting a packet containing the president's message 116; trial of M. Skouffs et al. editors of the Sotir, a French paper 221; Frazier v. Berkeley, assault and battery 304; Fences—decision concerning division fences 192; Forgery—conviction of James Anderson 208; Fraud—case of Venables and Pemberton, extensive frauds 152; McGregor v. McKinley, fraudulent purchase of goods 162; French court—singular scene in a 201; Insurance—decision of the vice chancellor of New York, concerning unearned premiums on policies of insurance 83; Hercules insurance company of Scotland et al. v. Hunter, insurance against fire, frauds 93; Lamon v. Mix et al. letter of credit 210; Liability of a judge of a court—Suit of the Anti-Slavery Society against Richard Riker, recorder of N. York, for disobeying a writ de homine replegiando, in the case of Jesse Collier, alias Abraham Gosley 84; Larceny—Thomas J. Aimes, a thief extraordinary 228; Law suit, picture of a, a curious Spanish relic 18; Libel—Carpenter v. Coburn 94; Murder—Samuel Ackley convicted of having murdered his wife by impalement 203; Polygamy—trial and conviction of Aldis Brainard 144; Rail road collision—Thompson et al. v. Providence rail road company; Rust v. same damages on account of collision of cars 322; certain U. S. seamen v. Boston and Providence rail road company; injury from collision between two locomotives 288; Ship owners, liability of—Fetterplace, Hiler & Co. v. Tinkham & Hart, action for injury done to merchandise 133; Slander—Mills v. Mason 224; Slave cases—[see supra "Judge of a court;"] case of commonwealth v. Avis at Boston 4, 49, 53; a slave case at Reading, Penn. 112; case of Jesse Redmond, alleged to be Mr. Turlington's slave, New York 208; Steamboats—commitment of Joshua Andrews, first mate of the steam packet William Gibbons, for trial for robbing the passengers 162; bank of Bridgeport v. heirs et al. proprietors of a steam boat; liability for stolen property 227; Trades unionists—trial and punishment of a number of at Nantes, for combination, &c. 160 Lawrence, Abbot—[see "Congress;"] his remarks on the bill for reducing the revenue 319 Lead trade 96 Leaps, dreadful 112, 128 Leigh, Benjamin Watkins—his letter, declining an invitation to a dinner in Orange co. N. C. 89; his letter resigning his seat in the senate of U. S. 243; proceedings in the legislature of Virginia concerning it 274 Lexington and Woodville rail road company 416 Liberia—[see "Colonization;"] 8, 225; trade of 112; letters from colonists 200 Life spar 256 Lightfoot, Samuel L. appointed surveyor of the port of Norfolk 98 Linden rail road company 416 Linthicum, Wesley—[see "Reform or Revolution" in Maryland;] his address to the public 105 his letter to his co-recusants 185 Liston, Sir Robert, death of 19, 288 Liverpool, education in 192 Lloyd, William B.—[see "Congress;"] 337; his memorial to congress 345, 347 Lockjaw 192 Locomotive power, new 224 Locusts in Syria 115 London, plan of supplying it with sea water 176 Long Island farms 131 Longevity, cases of 128, 144, 208 Louis XVI., a person claiming to be his son 131 Louis Philippe, king of the French; another attempt to assassinate him 385, 401 LOUISIANA—[see "Congress;" "Presidential election;"] elections in 338 Louisville, Cincinnati and Charleston rail road, report concerning it 109; subscriptions to it 160 Lovell, Dr. Joseph—his death 113 Loyall, George 416 Lucas, Robert, governor of Ohio—his letter concerning his political sentiments 105 Lunar rain bow 32 Lynch law 49; [see "Mob law;"] Lynch, Mathias—his punishment for malicious practices on a rail road 96 Lyndhurst, lord, said to have been born in Boston 32 Lynn, failure of the Nahant bank at 208, 224 M. Macedonian, the frigate 176 Machine for raising coals, &c. 99 McCulloch, James H.—his death 161, 195 McDuffie, George, governor of South Carolina—his message 229; see 242, 273 his address before the legislature 276 McKean, Samuel—[see "Congress;"] his letter to the post master general, concerning the political conduct of deputy post masters 137 his letter to the H. of R. of Pennsylvania concerning the expunging resolution 405; see 401 McKinley, John, elected a U. S. senator from Alabama 226 McLane, Louis, elected president of the Baltimore and Ohio rail road company 274, 358 Macomb, John N. 112 Madison, James, eulogium on by gov. Barbour 170 Magnetic needle—query concerning the 195 Mahmoud, sultan 224 Mail, robbery of the 192; attempted 336 *Mails 176, 256; [see "Express mails;"]* 144 Mail contractors fined 81 MAINE—[see "Congress;" "Presidential election;"] elections in 116, 178, 241; resources of 272 Malibran, Madame 48; her death and funeral 160, 163; see 224 death of her ex-husband 304 Mangum, Willie P. resigns his office of U. S. senator 209 MANUFACTURES—[see "Congress;" &c.] of beet root sugar 32, 80, 84, 96; bread 147; a buggy 192; combs 144; cordage and twine 144; cotton 22, 138; hemp, New Zealand 115; India rubber or caoutchouc 210; from nettles 16; of old garments into new 9; of rifles 320; of shoes 112; of silk 80, 96, 112; of swords 338 Marcy, William L.—his "farm" 180 Maria Louisa, ex-empress of France 16 Maria Monk's disclosure 97 Martineau, Harriet—her expected work on the U. States 144 MARYLAND—[see "Congress;" "Presidential election;" "Reform or Revolution" in Maryland—"Surplus Revenue;"] elections in 18, 34, 48, 85, 100, 239; loans 65; meetings of the legislature 193, 273; a senate elected 199; adjournment of the H. of delegates 209, 214; governor's message 213, 291; meeting of the reform convention 215; commissioners appointed to negotiate the internal improvement loan 273; finances of 336; professions, &c. of members of the legislature 384 MASSACHUSETTS—[see "Congress;" "Presidential election;"] triennial festival of the Mass. Mechanics' Charitable association 105; thanksgiving day in 114 Maulsby, I. D.—his card 121 Medford, Mass. ships, &c. built at 144 Medical statistics 201 Meeteer, Messrs.—fire in their ware house 401 Meteors 160, 179 Meunier attempts to assassinate the king of the French 385, 401 Mexico—20, 21, 33, 34, 81, 97, 113, 129, 160, 164, 176, 191, 192, 194, 209, 224, 225, 273, 290, 321, 369, 385; population, characteristics, &c. of 18; letter from Natchitoches 87; reported mission from Spain 147; independence of, recognised by Spain 337; official correspondence concerning her relations with the U. States 409; [see "Congress;" "Texas;" "U. States;"] MICHIGAN—[see "Congress;" "Presidential election;"] meeting of delegates at Ann Arbor 65; decision by the convention 81, 100; information concerning 67; proposed convention in 225; first rail road of 272; bill for admitting her into the union 294; elections in 274; debate on her admission into the union 298, 307, 322; see 337 Miguel, Don 112, 192 Milk, instrument to test its quality 176 Miller, Jesse, first auditor of the treasury 114 Milton's watch 114 Mint, the 274, 351; [see "Coins;" "Gold;"] Mirage, called Spectre of the Broken, 153 Miramichi, a free port 80 MISSISSIPPI—[see "Congress;" "Presidential election;"] boundary line with Tennessee 145; banking in 416; rail road from the line of, to Mobile 416 Mississippi river, changes in the bed of the lower 82 sources of the 163 MISSOURI—[see "Congress;" "Presidential election;"] elections in 4, 100, 226; resignation of governor Dunklin 144; charters of a bank, a rail road, &c. 352; bill concerning banks 384; population of 416 Mob law—[see "Lynch law;"] 32, 176, 180, 195, 275, 400, 401, 403, 416 Mobile rifle company, generous act of the 208 Monk, Maria, 97 Moore, Henry—his humanity and courage 163 Morfit, Henry M., commissioner to Texas 33, 34 Morris, Thomas—[see "Congress;"]—his speech on the admission of Michigan into the Union 322; his remarks concerning W. B. Lloyd's removal 347 Morris Canal and Banking company 336 Morton, gen. Jacob—his death 240 Mountains, height of 98 Muhlenberg, Henry A. [see "Congress;"]—his letter on being named as a candidate for a seat in the U. S. senate 276 Murder, and attempts to murder 272 Murderer a, burned alive 275 Muscat, sultan of—his letter to the president of the U. States 258
- N.
- Nacogdoches, letter from* 21 Naples, statistics of, 96; dowry of the proposed queen of 144; rebellion in 275 Napoleon—[see "Bonaparte;"]—case of D. Pierre and D. Antoine Lucien 12 Nashville rail road 369 Natchitoches, wants at 99 Nations—physical characteristics of several 154 Navy—[see "Congress;"]—assistant surgeons in the 257; board of examination, composed of naval surgeons 98, 147, 163; naval courts martial 240, 402; depot 34; Lyceum at Brooklyn 2; news 32, 160, 178, 241, 288; warfare invention by R. L. Stevens 304 Ne-ah-mi-co, death of 416 Neapolitan indemnity 49, 65 Nelson, lord—account of the amputation of his arm 129 Nettles 16 New Grenada 68, 369, 385 Newark, N. J.—great fire at 146 NEW HAMPSHIRE—[see "Congress;" "Presidential election;"] elections in 257 NEW JERSEY—[see "Congress;" "Presidential election;"] elections in 100, 116, 163; meeting of the legislature 129; beets and banking in 80 New Orleans—All Saint's day in 182; a chandelier at 144; commercial prosperity of 160; extortion by seamen at 240; growth of 32; health of 32, 112; hospitality of 352; immigrants to 160, 192; scarcity of specie at 160 Newspapers—[see "British Affairs;" "Press;"] statistics of 8, 93 conveyance of 10 the Allgemeine Zeitung, a newspaper at Augsburg 32 immense penalty incurred by an English newspaper 208 NEW YORK STATE—[see "Banks;" "Canals;" "Presidential election;"] elections in 401 votes for governor, from 1789 to 1834 195 banking capital in 257 restraining currency law 370 Dutch names of places in, explained 131 New York, city of—American Institute 145; aristocracy in 116; banks in 193, 306, 322, 334; new plan of a banking institution 288; Tradesmen's bank 288; memorial of the board of trade, concerning the U. S. bank 343; bell, a new 112; Bowery theatre destroyed by fire 49; rebuilt 288; buildings erected in 80; burnt district in 80; commerce of 339; deaths in 16, 130, 195, 336; dogs, massacre of 96; exchange 208, 306; flour riot or mob 400, 401, 403, 416; fortifications in the harbor of 82; frauds extensive, of two storekeepers 152; imports into 195; money market, 83, 225, 289; physicians, variety of, in 112; pilots 352; post office, a branch of the city, established in Wall street 160; prices and value—high prices of coal 80; of grain 384; value of real and personal estate 17, 167, 176; rents of houses 384; usury 352; wooden pavement in Broadway, particulars concerning it 8; youth in the, cases of their depravity 144 Niles, Hezekiah—his valedictory address to the patrons of the REGISTER 1 Niles, Wm. Ogden—his introductory address of 1 Norfolk, Virginia—centennial anniversary of its incorporation 16; see 256 NORTH CAROLINA—[see "Congress;" "Presidential election;" "Surplus revenue;"] elections in 4, 18, 226 meeting of the legislature 209 liberal regulation adopted by the university 176 North west passage 80 Norway—her supposed reluctance to being incorporated with Sweden 128; revenue in 1835 greater than her expenditure 160; mode prescribed by her

- constitution for filling vacancies in the legislature 192
Noury Bey, a Turkish officer 192
O.
Oaths, modes of taking 48
O'Connell, Daniel—reported proposition to submit to his decision the boundary question between the U. States and Great Britain 164; his plan for reforming the House of Lords 304; rumor of his death 369
Offices in U. S., created in 1836 61, 154
OHIO—[see "Congress;," "Presidential election;,"] elections in 116, 132, 338; settlement of the "Reserve" 290; case of breach of privilege before the legislature 304; statistics of 400
"O. P. Q.," his letter to the editor of the N. Y. D. Advertiser 136
Oswego and Utica rail road 96
Otho, king of Greece, marriage contract signed 160
Otis, Wm. S. C. his letter concerning a charge against gen. Harrison 188
P.
Packet ships, loss of 240
Paganini, the fiddler 48
Paquette, Mr. an Indian interpreter, killed by an Indian 178
Paris, royal printing office at 208; failures in 288; number of officers and soldiers in the Hotel des Invalides 288
Parker, Richard E. judge 385
Parkes, George his escape from a bear 147
Patent office—[See 273, 338; and "Congress;,"] synopsis of a report in the U. S. senate on the 7; building—a part of the post office building burnt down 241, 242
Patton, John M.—[see "Congress;,"] his remarks on a petition from slaves 386
Paupers and prisoners, foreign 16; [see "Congress;,"]
Paynter, Lemuel, his pledge against the U. States bank and Jesse R. Burden, and in favor of Andrew Jackson 8; see 150
Peabody, George, 385
Peace society in Massachusetts—admission of Alexander, emperor of Russia, &c. 208
Pemberton, John, his extensive frauds 152
Penn, William, his advice to emigrants 66
PENNSYLVANIA—[see "Congress;," "Presidential election;," "Surplus revenue;,"] ardent spirits, proposed tax on the distillation of 302 banks of 338; bank of U. States, resolution concerning it 273; compromise act, resolutions concerning it 337; elections in 100, 116, 132, 178, 241; finances of 229; legislature, session of the 226; professions and birth places of its members 384; no prisoner for crime or debt in Adams county 416; school fund 178
Pensioners—[see "Congress;,"] treasury circular concerning 129; David Thompson, the oldest pensioner 129
Peru—reported hostilities with Chili 353, 385
Peters, Richard, his eulogium on Mathew Carey 34
Petrified fish 48
Peyton, Balie—[see "Congress;,"] his letter in answer to an invitation to Knoxville 104; his letter in answer to an invitation to Jonesborough 169; his speech on the appointment of a select committee of investigation 299
Phenomena 158, 176, 304, 406
Philadelphia, deaths in 16; Laurel Hill cemetery 144; sacrilege in 128; soup houses in 416; statistics of the northern dispensary 384; usury 352
Phormium tenax, or New Zealand hemp 115
Physicians, variety of in New York 112 fees of at Lahore 224
Physiology 154
Pigeons, speed of 32; see 18, 192
Pilots—[see "Congress;," "New York;,"] 256, 352
Pinder, J. his peep at China 102
Plants, native countries of certain esculent 2
Platt, M. the judicial associate of certain land pirates, apprehended 400
Pleasants, John H. his letter to gen. Harrison 94
Poland, Russian ordinance against 128
Poles, the 16, 304
Political economy, valuable recipes in 416
"POLITICS OF THE DAY."—[see "Reform or Revolution" in Maryland, &c. &c.] 8, 89, 104, 141, 150, 153, 342; resolutions and letter of a committee of democratic citizens of Alleghany county, Penn. to Walter Forward 141, 142
Pontais, Edward, minister from France to the U. States 49
Population—a numerous family 176
Port au Prince 245
Porter, Alexander, invited to a public dinner 83; see 226; resigns his seat in the U. States senate 284
Portland, duke of, his condescension in helping to save his own life 80
Portugal—[See 86, 131, 180, 181;] destruction by fire of the treasury building at Lisbon 16; elections in 36
Post-office department—[see "Congress;," "Express mails;," "Kendall, Amos;," "Mails;," "New York;,"] its financial condition 81; regulations concerning failures of the mails 117; correspondence between Samuel M'Kean, a senator of the U. States and the postmaster general, concerning alleged electioneering practices of officers of the post-office department 137; appointment of Alfred Hucker to be a postmaster 240; burning down of the General Post-office building, &c. 241, 242; see 257, 344
Postlethwaite, G. L.—[see "Wilson, Edward J.;,"]
Poverty and titles 208
Powder, a store blown up by 179; mills blown up 176, 193
Prentiss, Samuel, re-elected a U. States senator from Vermont 146; [see "Congress;,"]
PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION.—[See "Congress;," "Harrison, gen. W. H.;," "Van Buren, Martin;," "Webster, Daniel;," "White, Hugh L.;,"] in Alabama 228, 257; Arkansas 228, 259; Connecticut 161, 177; Delaware 161, 177, 193, 196; Georgia 177, 196, 211; resolutions offered in the legislature 209, 210; in Illinois 228, 258; Indiana 177, 193, 196, 258; Kentucky 177, 193, 196, 212; Louisiana 196, 228, 257, 259; Maine 177, 193, 211; Maryland 193, 196, 228; Massachusetts 177, 193, 195, 242, 258; Michigan 228; Mississippi 243; Missouri 228; New Hampshire 177, 193, 211, 242; New Jersey 177, 193, 195, 211, 243; New York 161, 177, 193, 195, 211, 243; North Carolina 177, 193, 196, 228, 243; Ohio 161, 177, 193, 211, 243; Pennsylvania 161, 177, 193, 195; Rhode Island 193, 211; South Carolina 243; Tennessee 196, 228; Vermont 177, 193, 195; Virginia 161, 177, 193, 196, 243; days for holding it 145; certain disqualified electors chosen 289; votes for president and vice president 241, 373, 383; the several presidential elections from 1789 212
[For further proceedings, returns, &c. see vol. 52]
Press—[see "Chandler, Joseph R.;," "Law cases;," "Newspapers;,"] remarks of Noah Webster concerning the 129; circular proposing a plan for improving the American 183; a deaf and dumb printer and editor 416; printing office with 56 fonts of oriental characters 208
Preston, William C.—[see "Congress;,"] 152
Prices, increase of in forty years 162
Prisons, statistics of 48
Prizes for virtuous actions 114
Protestant Irish 112
Providence, R. I.—number of persons in several professions and trades in 240
Public lands, sales of 32, 84, 208, 256, 296, 353; [see "Congress;,"] amount owned by U. States 65
Q.
Quack—coroner's verdict against a 141
Quebec, fires at 80, 256; scarcity of coal at 160; marine news 256
R.
Rail roads [see "Congress;,"] 7, 8, 32, 46, 47, 48, 65, 69, 80, 82, 88, 96, 97, 107, 109, 123, 130, 160, 176, 224, 256, 272, 288, 304, 333, 352, 369, 384
Rail road accidents—[see "Law cases;," "Rail roads;,"] 82, 129, 288, 322
Randall, col. Thomas—[see "Florida, War in;,"] Randolph, John notices of his will 256
Rathbun, Benjamin, his address to his creditors 22 admitted to bail 65; imprisoned 93; his estate 240; postponement of his trial 322
Rathbun, Lyman, flight of 322
Reform, characteristics of 194
"REFORM OR REVOLUTION" in Maryland—editorial notices of 48, 64, 81, 97, 113, 161, 177, 193; public meeting in Frederick county—resolutions 51; see 135; public meeting in Cecil county 51; public meeting in Baltimore 51, 52; see 70, 95; meeting of electors at Annapolis 52; address of the Nineteen recusant electors to the people of Maryland 42; their letters to the twenty-one whig electors 53, 54; their adjournment 54; singular coincidences 65; address of the twenty-one whig electors to the people of Maryland 52; great public meeting at Baltimore 70; resolutions of the Van Buren central committee of Frederick county 74; card of four Van Buren candidates 74; card of four candidates in Allegany co. 74; proceedings of the constitutionalists in Allegany county 74; card on behalf of the democratic general committee of Baltimore 74; meeting of mechanics and workmen in Baltimore 95; addresses to the public by Washington Duvall and Wesley Linthicum 105; reform meeting at Hagerstown 120; Frederick county reform convention 120; Hartford county reform meeting 120; I. D. Maulsby's card in favor of the "gallant and devoted nineteen senatorial electors" 121; great public meeting at Cumberland 121; presentment of the eighteen recusant electors as unfaithful public agents, and disturbers of the public peace, by the grand jury of Allegany county; a majority of the jurors being Van Buren men 122; meeting in Allegany county 134; letter of Mr. C. Sprigg to John C. Buchanan, and Mr. Buchanan's answer 134; circular to Mr. Buchanan 134; his answer 134; meeting in Frederick county 135; public meeting in Montgomery county 151; governor Veazey's proclamation 165; publication concerning it 165, 166; major Contee's notice 177; correspondence between John S. Sellman and certain whig electors 184, 199; Wesley Linthicum's letter to the other recusant electors 185; circular of delegates to a proposed convention 185, 186; meeting in St. Mary's county 186; names of the qualifying, and of the recusant electors 193; journal of the proceedings of the electoral college 199; senators elected 199
Religions in the U. States 118
Renshaw, Benjamin letter from 1
Revolutionary relic 2
RHODE ISLAND—[see "Congress;," "Presidential election;," "Surplus revenue;,"] elections in 18
Rice, culture of, in Java 128; advantages of rice flour 160; deficiency of the crop of, in S. C. 400
Rice, Mr. the buffalo singer 304
Richmond, flour inspector in 97 meeting in, concerning a rail road 160
Rio Grande 283
Ripley, Eleazar Mr.—[see "Congress;,"] his speech on appointing a select committee of investigation 302
Rives, William C.—[see "Congress;,"] his remarks on the distribution bill 311
Road, great western 163
Robbery—a bank at Utica 194; of jewels, and their restoration 225
Roberts, Mr. U. S. commercial agent, death of 178
Roebuck, Mr. his speech 30
Roenne, Baron de minister from Prussia to the U. States 144, 163
Ronaldson, James, a letter from 92
Ro's, John, his letter concerning the Cherokees 90
Rothschild, Nathan Meyer, his death, funeral and will 17, 48, 50 anecdotes of him and his family 90, 112
Russia, singular customs in 36; discontents of the people of Caucasus 50; growth of 116; ordinance of the emperor against Poland 128; soldiers of 180; Russian definition of the term "constitution" 192
S.
Salt—quantity of, used throughout the world 32
Santa Ana, Antonio Lopez, president of Mexico, his protest addressed to D. G. Burnett, president of Texas 191; relieved of his irons 209; his letter to the president of the U. States 336; leaves the U. States 336; [see "Congress;," "Mexico;," "Texas;,"] see 257, 288, 289, 305, 321, 341, 369
Sandwich Island, trade with the 130; inhabitants of the 131
Sardinia, the king of, orders 32
Savage, judge John, resigns his office 13 tribute of respect to him 13
Savannah, abundance of money in 416
Saw mills in Maine 112
Schley, William, gov. of Georgia, his message 203
Schoolcraft, Henry R. his letter concerning Michigan 67
Schools in Boston 48
Scott, sir Walter, a letter from 202
Scott, gen. Winfield—[see "Court martial;," "Florida, War in;," "White, Joseph M.;,"] and p. 162, 337, 349, 401; his controversy with gen. Jesup 74; dinner to him at Richmond 416; his defence before a military court of inquiry 360, 371
Secretary of state, and the Nat. Intelligencer 404
Segar trade of U. States—foreign 3
Sellman, John S.—[see "Reform or Revolution" in Maryland;] his letters to certain senatorial electors in Maryland 184, 185, 199
Senate of U. States 2; persons privileged to be admitted on the floor of 353; [see "Congress;,"]
Serrurier, M. appointed minister to Brazil 49
Sewall, Samuel E. assault on him 2
Sgricci, the improvisatore, his death 96
Shakespeare, statue to 224; see 304
Shaw, chief justice, his opinion in the case of commonwealth vs. Aves 55; [see "Law cases;,"]
Sheep in Hungary and Transylvania 96
Shepley, Ether, made a judge in Maine 96
Ship building on the lakes 66
Shipping, American and British 65
Ships of war, sale of four 144
Shipwrecks 194, 275, 288, 290, 305, 306, 338, 341, 384
Shooting stars 163
Silk works at Lynn, Mass. 80; American sewing silk 96; manufacture of, in Russia 112; manufacture of at Nantucket 272; duties on, in Egypt 144; goods, exhibition of 342
Silver—a new metal combining all its qualities 80 coinage of 81
Slave trade—treaty for its abolition between France and Sweden 144; increase of the 160; slave ships captured 176
SLAVERY—[see "Abolition;," &c.; "Congress;," "Law cases;," "Texas;,"] in the District of Columbia 44; exportation of slaves from Virginia 83; a

- slave case in Pennsylvania 112; sale, by a slave of his wife 112; in China 228
Sloop of war, new plan of a 80
Smith, Samuel re-elected mayor of Baltimore 114
Snow—[see "Storms;" "Weather"] early snow 83; deep snow 128; snow—fall in Montreal 128; rain and snow 176; great fall of snow in France 288
South, Dr. 224
SOUTH CAROLINA—[See "Congress;" "Presidential election,"] statistical and geographical information concerning 46; elections in 116, 132, 145, 195, 237; session of the legislature 226; governor's message 229; report in Texas 242, 273, 277
Southey, Robert 288
SPAIN—[see "Carlos;" "Christina;" "Mexico;" "U. States."] events in 20, 34, 50, 66, 86, 87, 101, 113, 129, 131, 164, 180, 193, 273, 401; decree for selling the bells and furniture of the convents 128; the constitution of 1812 148; murder of priests in 176; war in 290
Spanish indemnity 49
Spanish relic, a curious 18
Specie, importations of 224
Specie circular—[see "Congress;" "Treasury."] 240
Speculation 240
Spence, Dr. John S. elected a U. S. senator from Maryland 289
Sprigg, Michael C.—[see "Reform or Revolution" in Maryland] 134
St. John, N. Brunswick, fire at 352
St. Petersburg, extinction of fires in 130
St. Simonsians 128
Stage proprietors, damages recovered against, in France 96
Stage robbery 256
Stambaugh, S. C. his letter concerning the Iowa copper mines 307
Steam, progress of 8; steam-power vs. horses 275; navigation across the Atlantic 32, 138; communication by, with distant parts 138
Steamboats—[see "Congress," and p. 240;] loss of the Tigris 31; explosion of the Commerce 80; for cattle 112; immense freight carried by the Huntsville 128; wreck of the William Gibbons 128; inhuman conduct of the crew 146; see 162; the Unicorn 141; in the Mediterranean 144; affecting incident 146; the Rhode Island runs into a sloop 163; accident to the Flora, and loss of life, &c. 208, 224, 240; explosion of the Dolphin 275; captain of a steam boat saves fourteen lives 352; tonnage and cost of American 384
Stockton, Stokes, et al. [see "Congress."] 354
Stone, William L. his card concerning the "awful disclosures of Maria Monk" 97
Street, Joseph M. Indian agent, his letter 355
Storms—destructive gale along the pepper coast 96; remarkable snow storms 112, 113, 352, 416; hail storm 176
Sub-marine journey 201
Suicide, case of 32, 176
Supreme court of the U. States meets 320; adjourns 401
Surplus revenue—[see "Congress;" "Treasury," and p. 114, 257, 239;] remarks of a West India paper concerning the 17; treasury notice concerning it 81; proportions of the, to be received by each state 161, 167; disposition by several states of their portions of it, Rhode Island 161; Pennsylvania 257; Virginia 274; Maryland 290; Georgia 305; North Carolina 352
Swan, Benjamin—letters of George Griswold and, to Mr. Woodbury 183
Switzerland, France and 175, 180, 193; revolutionary societies in 222; vineyards of 272
T.
Tacon, gov. quells an insurrection in Cuba 275
Tallouard, Sergeant said to be a native of Boston 32
Tallapoosa and Coosa rail road company 416
Talleyrand 112
Tallmadge, Mr.—[see "Congress."] 220
Tallmage, gen. his letter 220
Tariff—[see "Compromise act;" "Congress"] 353, 400
Taylor, capt. Otis case of 238; [see "Law cases."] 96
Tea trade in, at London 99, 176 drinking of, in England 99, 176
Telegraphs 208
Telescope a, mistaken for an infernal machine 160 invention of a powerfully reflecting 160
Temperance 80
Temple, Mr. elected to the legislature of Indiana after his death 48
TENNESSEE—[see "Congress;" "Presidential election"] meeting of the legislature 97; boundary line with Mississippi 145; elections in 196; volunteers 197
Terry, Thomas A. an editor, assault on 18
TEXAS—[see "Burnet, David G.;" "Congress;" "McDuffie, George;" "Mexico;" "Morfit, Henry M.;" "Santa Ana;" SOUTH CAROLINA,] notices relating to 3, 33, 34, 58, 67, 81, 97, 101, 119, 146, 189, 209, 225, 242, 257, 273, 275, 277, 288, 321, 353, 369, 400; debate in the British house of commons on slavery in 38; navy of 130; sale in England of Texas lands 160; alleged fertility of 160; president Burnet's message 189; vessels of, seized in New York 208; resolutions acknowledging her independence, reported in house of representatives of U. S. 415
Thermo-electric instrument 304
Thiers, M. resigns his seat in the French cabinet 86, 136
Thistle, capt. H. S. his useful invention of a saddle for sick soldiers 163
Thompson, Mrs. her donation of clocks to churches 144
Thompson, George, the abolition propagandist, aided by an abolition society in South Carolina 304
Thompson, Waddy—[see "Congress"] addresses a public meeting in S. Carolina 77
Tigris, loss of steamer 31
Tin mines 208
Tobacco 80, 97
Towns, George W. B. a representative from Georgia, resigns his seat in congress 226
Trade. Baltic 80; China 10; coal 23, 32; corn 17; cotton 97; of Gibraltar 32; hardware and cutlery, exports of British 13; lead 96; Sandwich Islands, with the 130; sugar trade of U. States, foreign 3; tea, in London 96; tobacco, exports of 97; Tuscany, with 23
Trades unionists—trial and punishment of, at Nantes, for a combination 160
Travelling, facilities in 135, 144; see 238
Treasury of the U. States—[see "Congress;" "Surplus revenue"] amount in the 2; rumor of a secret order from the, contradicted 33; notices from the, concerning the Neapolitan indemnity 49, 65; notices from the, concerning the surplus revenue 81, 167; notices from the, concerning the burning of the post-office 242, 272; remarks &c. on the specie circular from the 81, 129, 193, 212; order concerning pensioners 129; secretary's letter to Messrs. Griswold and Swann 138; secretary's statements of amount in the treasury 145, 226; secretary's annual report 246; substance of it 226; secretary's statement of transfer drafts 306; secretary's decision concerning time for proving damage to goods 384
Troy, N. Y. India rubber company at flour in 416
Truck, Rev. Mr., his salary of dun fish 144
Turkey, notices concerning 101, 128, 192, 222, 224
Turkeys, wild 128
Tuscany, trade with 23
Tyler, John, his draft of a report on slavery in the District of Columbia 44
Typographical convention, national 180 its address to the printers of the U. States 202
U.
UNITED STATES—[see "Congress,"] relations with France 16, 161, 208; southern boundary of 96; entire population of 98, 118; relations with Mexico 113, 129, 176, 177, 194, 197, 337, 353, 369, 401, 409; religious statistics 118; imports, exports, and finances 118; banking capital in the 162; parties in the, characterized by the London Quarterly Review 179; the north and the south 182; extent of the territory of the 192; immigration into the 208; American enterprise 256, 339
Upshur, judge Abel P., supposed author of "Madison," in reply to George M. Dallas 129; see 125
Uruguay, course of 288
Usury, views of, in New York, Philadelphia, and Boston 332
V.
Vaccination 16
Van Buren, Martin, his letters to Sherrod Williams 25, 26 his answer to an invitation to Philadelphia 342 his valedictory address as president of the senate 356; resolution responsive to it 357 elected president of the U. States 388
Veazey, Thomas, governor of Maryland—[see "Reform or Revolution" in Maryland.] his proclamation 165; his messages 213, 291
Vegetable physiology 154
Venables, Richard, his extensive frauds 152
Venezuela, restriction on immigration to 1, 102
Ventilation, new and original mode of 147
VERMONT—[see "Congress;" "Presidential election,"] elections in 34, 82, 116, 145, 163; gov. Jenison's recommendation concerning public schools 160; elections of judges in 160; adjournment of the legislature 224
Vesuvius 192
Vice president of the U. States—[see "Presidential election"] election of 257
Victoria, princess, her popular manners 48
Viger, D. B. a Canadian judge 164
Vindicia Hibernica, Carey's 130
Vine and olive in U. States 99
VIRGINIA—[see "Congress;" "Leigh, B. W.;" "Presidential election;" "Surplus revenue,"] visitors at the Sulphur springs 16; mineral wealth of 32; slaves exported from 83; session of the legislature 226; finances of 256; case of contempt before the house of delegates 288; banking capital in 320; contested election, between Messrs. Hopkins and Scott 384
Volcanoes at sea 66, 152
Voltaire, stolen MSS of, discovered 112
Vote, value of a single 192
W.
Walker, Robert J.—[see "Congress"] his remarks on the distribution bill 310
Warfare, horrible 128
Washington, gen. punctuality of 116
Washington monument, invitation of designs for the 2
Weather 36, 48, 128, 147, 160, 192, 288; [see "Storms."] 31
Webster, Daniel—[see "Congress,"] notices of his address at the Boston lyceum 176, 183; his letter concerning the presidential election 242; his protest against the expunging resolution 331; his reported intention to resign his seat in the U. S. senate 416
Welland canal 272, 275
Well-digging, distressing casualty relating to 153, 154
Wellington, Duke of, side of a hill like him 176
Western frontier—[see "Indians," &c.] disturbances on the 67
West Indies, emancipation in the 10 exports, imports, productions &c. &c. 17
Whale fishing 179, 192
Whalers, voyage in search of lost 200
Wharton, William H., minister from Texas to U. States 225, 257, 340; [see "Texas."] 340
Wheat 16, 96, 176, 384
Whitcomb, James S. appointed commissioner of the land office 144
White, bishop 80, 192
White, Harry, his trial for burning the treasury department 305, 337, 354
White, Hugh L.—[see "Congress"] extract of a letter from him 44; his letter to Sherrod Williams 44; his speech at a dinner given to him in Knox county, Tenn. 59; a toast given by him 83; the charge of his intimacy with a free negro, repelled 150; his letter concerning a national bank 178; his letter declining a public dinner in Carter co., Tenn. 275
White, Joseph M. his return to the U. States 160 his letter concerning gen. Scott 276
White, Richard H., his trial for burning the treasury department 257, 273, 305, 321, 337
White blackberries 80
White water canal 145
Whitney, Reuben M.—[see "Congress"] his card vs. Messrs. Wise and Peyton 289; his circular concerning the deposit banks 311, 312; see 353; his publication concerning a scene in a committee room 354; appears before the H. of representatives under a charge of contempt 397; his paper read on that occasion 397, 398; further proceedings 399, 400; his discharge 401, 415
Whittlesey, Elisha—[see "Congress."] his letter concerning a charge against gen. Harrison 188
Wife, the word 180
Wilks, lieut. 226
William Byrnes, ship, lost 384
William IV. king of England 144
Williams, Sherrod—[see "Congress"] his letter to gen. W. H. Harrison 28; his letter to Mr. Van Buren 26; his letter to judge H. L. White 44
Wilmington in Delaware, its advantages 400
Wilson, Edward J. and G. L. Postlethwaite, their publications concerning Texas 59, 119; answered 102, 119
Wines, royal 144
Wisconsin territory of, census 82; apportionment of members of the legislature 97; its meeting 224; election in the 224; seat of government fixed at Madison 272
Wise, Henry A.—[see "Congress."] his letter in answer to an invitation to Knoxville 104; his speech concerning the executive departments 284, see 345, 381; his house burnt down 385
Wood, consumption of 48
Woodbury, Levi—see "Congress;" "Treasury department,"] his letter to Dr. B. Waterhouse 1
Wooden pavements, letter concerning 8 in St. Petersburg, &c. 83
World, age of the 144
Wright, Silas jr.—[see "Congress"] re-elected a U. S. senator from N. York 401
Y.
Yankee doodle in London 48
Z.
Zoology 154

NILES' WEEKLY REGISTER.

FIFTH SERIES. No. 1.—VOL. I.]

BALTIMORE, SEPTEMBER 3, 1836.

[VOL. LI.—WHOLE No. 1,302.]

THE PAST—THE PRESENT—FOR THE FUTURE.

EDITED, PRINTED AND PUBLISHED, BY WILLIAM OGDEN NILES, AT $5 PER ANNUM, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

TO THE PATRONS OF THE REGISTER.

Twenty-five years have elapsed, this day, since the publication of the "REGISTER" was commenced, and many persons have adhered to it through good report and evil report, during the whole of that time; for which I offer my respectful acknowledgments.

The predictions, at its commencement, that it would be a failure, have not been verified. I knew and was aware of the general feeling at the time—But I knew my own resources, and the vainness of a hope of relying on any other. The work is my own, whether it be good or bad; and has been persevered in with invincible industry, and oftentimes under distressing circumstances, until, at length, I am, temporarily at least, placed in a condition that compels a retirement from its active duties—for three months past being paralytic, on the right side, and incapable of doing much for others or for myself. This state, there is no doubt, has been caused by my devotion to business, and the necessity that existed of personal exertion for so long a period—having been predisposed to the disorder under which I am now suffering, for several years, without the ability to relax my concerns and take the needful exercise. But the time has arrived when I must relax and recruit myself, if it be possible, giving up my business to my eldest son, WILLIAM OGDEN NILES, who has lately conducted it under great disadvantages of location, having had an establishment of his own at Frederick, in this state, which he had to attend to, superadded to the constant illness of the most interesting and dearest member of his family; but he has now removed to this city, and will exert all his energies to carry on this favorite work. He has a good mind with much resolution and considerable experience in the business of this work, having for many years assisted me in its duties; and I respectfully solicit for him that indulgence which I myself have received from a liberal and enlightened public, to whom my thanks are due for the steady and regular support I have received from it.

For myself, I retire from the editorial seat with feelings of gratitude and without hostility to any human being, though thinking that, on many occasions, my motives have been impeached or misrepresented by individuals who could not, or would not, understand them. In thus, however, retiring, I do not expect to lose an interest in the success of this work, or to cease to give it my support; hoping and believing that I shall recover my strength and ability to assist in the various details of business—tho' without that immediate attention which has destroyed my health and rendered me what I am.

The difficulty under which I at present labor in communicating my thoughts, will, I hope, be received by my numerous friends and patrons as an apology for the brevity of this address to them, from their much obliged fellow-citizen and friend,
H. NILES.

Baltimore, September 3, 1836.

The above communication may surprise many, and will cause regret in the minds of all, who have for quarter of a century seen the evidences of my father's zeal and industry in the pages of this work. A consciousness of the purity of the motives which induced this self devotion, is the best reward he can enjoy,—the result of his labors must be estimated by the people; it is not my province to commend either. I may, however, be permitted to say, that I have never known an individual who gave up his whole faculties to any subject with such engrossing attention, as my father gave his to the interests of his "REGISTER." With this unbiassed opinion of his perseverance and resolute determination to effect what he deemed "rightful purposes," it is not necessary to say, that I enter upon the duties which have been assigned to me, fully sensible that I am not able to accomplish what he has effected, and that I am rendering myself liable to all the imputations which may arise from the contrast. Yet I am willing to endure these, and hope the spirit which has prompted this determination may be properly estimated.—For the patrons of the "REGISTER" are assured, that I would willingly have declined the task which has been imposed, if I had been at liberty to consult my own convictions of my incompetency to maintain the old character of the work. The representations of numerous friends, however, who have thought my long experience in the duties, and consequent familiarity with the details of the business, of the "REGISTER," peculiarly qualified me for the undertaking—added to an honest desire to keep up a work which enjoys such an enviable reputation at home and abroad, have overcome my reluctance, and I now throw myself upon the indulgence of the public.
VOL. LI.—SIG. 1.

The chief business of the "REGISTER" has been to preserve a faithful record of the events of the times, documents and facts, for present use and future reference, without regard to party or party men. That it has successfully accomplished this object, may be inferred, when we state, that it is supported by every class of persons—is found in most of the public and private libraries of this country and in many in the old world—is filed in the departments of this government and forms part of the out-fit of our foreign ministers—and is every where regarded as a faithful chronicle, indispensable to the historian and to all who desire to refer to events as they have occurred.* To maintain the well-earned reputation of the "REGISTER," I promise to devote every faculty of body and mind; and am induced to hope, that if I cannot bestow upon it my father's tact and industry, I will, at least, entitle it to public confidence—for I am resolutely determined to keep its pages free from all party or personal influence, and to record facts and events without fear or favor, partiality or affection,—in brief, to preserve its national character.

In addition to my own labors, I am flattered with the hope that I will yet derive great aid from my father, whose improving health has caused much pleasure to his friends, and encouraged them with a belief that it will soon be, measurably, re-established. But in the worst event, I am resolved to persevere—for it is not in my nature when I have once commenced a task, to be deterred from it by the difficulties which may impede its completion. All I ask is a continuance of that indulgence and liberal encouragement which have been extended to my father, and I will cheerfully abide the decision of those who have a right to make it.

To obviate an objection which has been preferred by many readers of the "REGISTER," I have dispensed with the small type and presented it in an enlarged form and new dress—and will soon have in operation an improved power press that I may more promptly supply the very numerous patrons of the work. These improvements have delayed the publication of this sheet for a single day, and it is probable a similar delay may occur in the succeeding week. After which the work will be issued with its accustomed regularity, and in a style of mechanical execution that will not discredit its national reputation. Very respectfully,
WM. OGDEN NILES.

Baltimore, Sept. 3, 1836.

*It may not be out of place here to remark, that we are waited upon almost every day, and frequently two or three times in that period, for permission to refer to our files for the purpose of establishing facts and dates. This is always cheerfully granted, and our personal services have been and will be afforded to assist enquirers after the truth.

SETS OF THE REGISTER.

Now is the time to obtain full copies of this work, or the supply of deficient volumes. The copies on hand are not numerous, being about two hundred and fifty in all, and they can never be re-printed. And as I am anxious to close my business with as much despatch as possible, I will dispose of one hundred and fifty complete copies at twenty-five per cent. discount from the subscription price,—retaining one hundred to supply future wants; which I am perfectly sensible will require a great many more, it being the only record of events made simultaneously with their occurrence, and a stock of matter that cannot be obtained in any other work. Particulars will be made known on application at the office.
H. NILES.

Baltimore, September 3, 1836.

✂ The present number of the "REGISTER" must not be regarded as a fair specimen of the style in which we intend to publish it hereafter, either in regard to matter or manner. Attention to the mechanical details and other business requiring our personal superintendence, have prevented us from devoting much time to the desk.

CREEK WAR. The latest intelligence from the scene of the late hostilities will be found under the proper head. We learn from the National Intelligencer that T. Hartley Crawford esq. has been appointed by the president of the United States one of the two commissioners constituted under a resolution passed at the last session of congress to investigate the causes of the recent hostilities of the Creeks, and the frauds alleged to have been committed in the transfer of their land reservations. Alfred Balch, esq. of Tennessee, is associated with him as commissioner, and John M. Wise, esq. of Maryland, appointed secretary to the commission.

LETTER FROM MR. WOODBURY. The following letter from the secretary of the treasury to Dr. Waterhouse having given rise to many rumors, particularly of determination on the part of the executive not to carry the provisions of the distribution bill into effect, in prospect of a war with Mexico, Dr. W. has been induced to lay it before the public.

Washington, 8th July, 1836.

Dear sir: Yours of the 2d inst. deserves my best acknowledgments for its numerous useful suggestions.

The naval bill, as to admirals, did not get through both houses, and our friend Elliott, with some other gallant fellows, must longer feel the pangs of hope deferred.

Our overflowing treasury, which is so often prayed for, will, I fear, prove a curse. But my best efforts will be given to execute the late law faithfully, though I have many misgivings as to its fatal influence on the sound relations heretofore existing between the states and the general government.

The president wishes me to express his thanks for your kind remembrance of him. He leaves this city in a few days for Tennessee.

I believe the ensuing presidential election is to be unusually quiet, and I will not allow myself to despair of the republic, however portentous may be some of the signs of the times.

Should we become involved in a real or quasi war with Mexico, the surplus may never be divided, or will be soon recalled. At all events, the whole will be wanted in 1842, if not earlier. Five millions are to come off the present tariff in 1841, alone.

Mr. Adams' health has not been good the latter part of the session; but I saw Mrs. Adams quite well at church last Sunday. Truly and respectfully, your obt' serv't,
LEVI WOODBURY.

Hon Benj. Waterhouse, Cambridge, (Mass.)

VENEZUELA. The annexed letter, published in the Philadelphia U. S. Gazette, contains information interesting to merchants and shipmasters trading to Venezuelan ports:

U. S. consulate, Laguayra, Aug. 10th, 1836.

To the editor of the United States Gazette:

Sir: I have just received a communication per mail, from our charge d'affaires at Caracas, J. G. A. Williamson, esq. informing me that an order or decree of this government, dated July 19th, ult. but not made known to him until the 6th instant, prohibits all neutral vessels bringing as passengers or otherwise, to the ports of Venezuela, any banished individuals, (expulsados) and such other persons as having fled the country, are not by law permitted to return. Any vessel bringing persons of this description, will not be allowed to discharge cargo or load, or even to anchor, in any port of this republic. This decree is to go into effect 40 days after this date, 19th July last. I think it of importance to our commercial interests, that publicity should be given to this notice. I am, sir, respectfully, your ob't serv't,

BENJ. RENSHAW,
U. S. consul.

P. S. I will forward in two or three days, a copy of said decrees, as also a list of persons comprehended therein.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES. More than 15 columns of the Washington Globe are filled with a mere summary of the appropriations made by the general government at the last session. The appropriations under the head of civil and diplomatic expenses for 1836 amount to

Army,	$4,210,546 77
Fortifications,	4,607,298 92
Naval service,	2,907,645 95
Pensioners,	6,276,312 10
Indian department,	455,454 00
Indian treaties,	1,862,108 74
Suppression of Indian hostilities,	6,381,454 67
Breakwaters, &c.	5,020,000 00
Harbor bill,	709,884 42
Miscellaneous,	493,100 41
Private claims (estimated)	5,398,492 73
	220,000 00

Total $38,542,298 71
Deduct, having been twice appropriated, for Wisconsin territory 25,000 00

Leaves actual amount of appropriations $33,517,298 71

Of this sum, however, $1,500,000 for the District of Columbia is not payable for a number of years, and $3,150,000 for the post office department is payable only out of the receipts of that department deducting these two sums, the amount appropriated is $33,866,798 71. [Jour. Com.]

THE TREASURY. From the following official document it appears, that the whole amount of funds in the treasury of the United States exceeds FORTY-TWO AND A HALF MILLIONS!

Treasury department, September 1, 1836.
In conformity with the resolution of the senate, passed 1st July, 1836, directing that "during the ensuing recess of congress, the secretary of the treasury cause to be published at the commencement of each month, a statement of the amount of money in the treasury subject to draft; and also the amount standing to the credit of the disbursing officers," the undersigned hereby gives public notice that "the amount of money in the treasury, subject to draft," as shown by the running account of the treasurer, reported to this department on the 31st ultimo, was $37,817,996 39, and "the amount standing to the credit of disbursing officers," as shown by the latest returns received, was $4,847,926 55.

LEVI WOODBURY, secretary of the treasury.

COTTON. The following comparative view of the imports and exports of cotton into and from Great Britain and Ireland, from the 1st of January to the 9th of July last, and of the imports and exports for the same period last year, is copied from the Liverpool Circular of the 16th of July:

IMPORTS IN 1836.

American,	bags 511,578
South American,	76,774
West Indies, Demerara, &c.	3,019
East Indies,	107,952
Egypt, &c.	10,112

Total of all descriptions, 709,435

IN 1835.

American,	bags 518,986
South American,	75,786
West Indies, Demerara, &c.	3,919
East Indies,	49,325
Egypt, &c.	9,836—657,902

Increase of imports as compared with 1835, bags 51,533

EXPORTS IN 1836.

American, 10,207; Brazil, 2,849; East India, 29,070; West India, 30; other kinds, 20.
Total in 1836,	bags 42,976
Same period, in 1835,	57,363

STOCK.

July 15, 1835,
Same time, 1836,

bags 234,590
287,870

REVOLUTIONARY RELIC. A gentleman left with the editors of the Charleston, (S. C.) Courier a few days since, an epaulette, in a good state of preservation, which was found on his premises, in a box, buried in the ground under the floor, which was taken up in order to make repairs. In the inside of the strap is the No. "1778," and the name of "MATHEWS." The house had been built about 40 years. It is more than probable that this epaulette is a revolutionary relic—and may have graced the shoulder of one of the heroes of '76, who battled for freedom in "days that tried men's souls." If so, would it were endowed with the gift of speech, to relate the hair breadth 'scapes, and trials, which its owner experienced—and cause our blood to warm, and our hearts to thrill, at the recital of events which contributed to the establishment of our national independence.

THE UNITED STATES SENATE. The term of service of the following senators expires on the 4th of March next.

John Page,	New Hampshire.
Gideon Tomlinson,*	Connecticut.
Samuel Prentiss,*	Vermont.
Silas Wright, jr.	New York.
James Buchanan,	Pennsylvania.
R. H. Goldsborough,*	Maryland.
W. P. Mangum,	North Carolina.
Wm. C. Preston,*	South Carolina.
Alfred Cuthbert,	Georgia.
Henry Clay,*	Kentucky.
Thomas Ewing,*	Ohio.
Alexander Porter,*	Louisiana.
Wm. L. Hendricks,†	Indiana.
Wm. L. D. Ewing,	Illinois.
Gabriel Moore,*	Alabama.
Lewis F. Linn,	Missouri.

WASHINGTON MONUMENT. The board of managers of the Washington National Monument society, invite DESIGNS for this structure, intended as a memorial of a NATION'S gratitude. It would be to fetter genius to prescribe any limits to the exercise of its powers, which should, however, in this case harmoniously blend durability, simplicity, and grandeur. Although it is impracticable at present to estimate the extent of the contributions that may be made, the designs may be predicated on an expenditure of not less than one million of dollars.

The board of managers will not offend American genius so much as to offer, in this instance, a pecuniary reward. The artist whose design shall be adopted will feel amply remunerated; and all the designs will be bound and carefully preserved—to which end it is requested that they be sketched, as near as may be, on paper of a uniform size, of the dimensions of sixteen by twenty-two inches. The designs to be directed to

GEORGE WATTERSON, secretary.

NAVAL LYCEUM. We had the pleasure, a few weeks since, of visiting the Naval lyceum, at Brooklyn, opposite New York, and were surprised at the valuable and various collections, which are there treasured up, for the inspection of every friend of the navy, who may be properly introduced. Two large apartments, one above another, open in the middle, the central section of the upper one exhibiting a fair view of the lower, being surrounded by a ballustrade, are crowded with curiosities and works of art of every description—the results of private and public donation. A volume would scarcely do justice to the entire collection. The mineralogical and entomological departments are particularly well stored. The actual costumes of different nations, and implements of war and peaceful pursuits belonging to them, are of great variety. Among other curiosities, a state paper of Napoleon, when he was first consul of the empire, with his signature attached, repaid our especial attention. A bust of Washington, by Greenough, executed at Florence, is admired by every observer. The library is comparatively large, and abounds with many excellent volumes.

The lyceum is worthy of all approval, and we trust that every high minded citizen, who regards with the proper spirit, one of the most honorable branches of our national service, will contribute to its stores. So numerous already have been the tributes tendered to this institution, that the rooms are already too small for their reception; and a new edifice will soon be required as a depot for those which are to come. Those who visit the lyceum properly commended—we speak from experience

*Whigs.

†Doubtful.

—will receive from the officers of the Brooklyn station, and others, every attention. [Phil. Gaz.]

CANAL TOLLS. From a statement published in the "Albany Argus," it appears that the tolls collected on the New York state canal for the two first weeks in August amount to the sum of $80,559 57—exceeding the collections for the corresponding two weeks in 1835, by the sum of $19,630 55. From a comparative statement of the sums collected for tolls on the several canals in each month from the opening of navigation to the 15th of August, in 1835 and 1836, we learn that the increase on the Erie canal is $33,476—increase on all the canals, $33,214. Navigation commenced on the Erie canal ten days later this year than last. From the 1st of May to the 15th of August the tolls have increased $103,705 on the Erie canal, over the receipts for the corresponding period in 1835.

The Oswego canal was not navigable as early by 20 days in 1836 as in 1835; and the Champlain and Seneca canals were also unusually delayed by the frosts and floods.

In 1835, about one half of the tolls of the season were collected previous to the 15th of August. If the same thing should be realized the present season, the aggregate revenue from tolls will amount to the sum of one million six hundred thousand dollars.

GREAT FRESHET. Thursday was a cloudy day, but not remarkably so. A little before day on Friday morning it commenced raining here, and rained nearly all day with steadiness—nothing, however, to alarm. On Saturday morning it was observed with great surprise that there was a fresh in James river. The river continued to rise until after night, and attained a height exceeding by three inches the fresh of last June. The fall of rain in a given time in the mountains must have been great beyond modern recollection, as from appearances here we give it but 24 hours, if so much, to have fallen in. It is the greatest fresh since August, 1814, at the very period that Washington city was occupied by the British.

We hear of much damage. Thirty feet of the rail road embankment, a couple of miles beyond Taylorville, has been swept away, and two miles from the north thus far missed. Ground Squirrel bridge, on the South Anna, that has withstood the floods of thirty years on that easily excited river, we understand has been carried away. So has been Beaverdam bridge, on Beaverdam creek, in Goochland, a newly erected and solid structure. The canal was broken in two places on Dr. Trent's farm, in Goochland, by the merely immense fall of rain. The tobacco on James river, and we doubt not on the Watercourses generally, has been swept fore and aft, just ready too for the knife. The corn we hope has escaped with less injury; to be materially injured, the water must have reached the ear.

This is the fourth distinct fresh in James river since the 28th May last. It looks as if the river gods were resolved upon destroying cultivation, and re-establishing their sylvan reign. We have never known in 30 years a rise in the river so totally unexpected. A spring fresh and a fall fresh, all in the same year, we believe unknown to experience or tradition. In the great fresh of 1772 it was slightly cloudy in this part of Virginia for three days, but not rain enough to wet a man in his shirt sleeves. Wind at the south east, as, unless it be, there is never a great fresh. We hear of great individual loss. There has been a good deal in tobacco and timber at the Rocketts.

A drowned man was taken out of the river yesterday morning at Mayo's bridge; understood to be a native of Ireland, who threw himself into the river in a state of intoxication, and refused the aid of planks, &c. which were thrown in to assist him. [Richmond Whig of the 29th ult.]

ASSAULT. Yesterday, about noon, considerable excitement was created in State street, in consequence of an assault committed upon the person of Samuel E. Sewall, esq. who has been the counsel for the abolitionists in the different slave cases which have been before our courts. It appears that Mr. Sewall used some language before the court during the examination respecting the two female slaves brought from Baltimore, which was supposed to affect the private character and did injury to the feelings of lieutenant George Adams, a cousin of Mr. Morris, their owner. Mr. Adams, about 12 o'clock, noon, yesterday, entered Mr. Sewall's office, and attempted to inflict corporal punishment with a cowskin. Mr. Sewall resisted, and a cry for help having been made by a person in the office, several persons entered and separated the combatants. Mr. Adams was allowed to escape, and Mr.

Sewall entered a complaint against him at the police court; a warrant was issued accordingly, but it was afterwards stated that Mr. Adams had left the city.

It is reported that Mr. Adams has sent a note to the police court, stating that he may be found at the Tremont House. [Boston Courier, Aug. 30.]

GALLANTRY AND ITS REWARD. An interesting incident took place the other day on board one of the steamboats which ply between this city and Newburgh; and we have great pleasure in recording it, as it shows that generous actions usually excite corresponding emotions in those who witness them, and that heroism is not always left to be rewarded by the consciousness only of the good deed.

At the moment of embarkation on board a Newburgh steamboat, a boy, apparently about twelve years of age, was accidentally pushed overboard by a person who was about to enter the vessel. Immediately on seeing it, the steward of the boat jumped from the deck, and rescued him, at the imminent peril of his life. His conduct upon the occasion, was the theme of conversation for but a few minutes, when a gentleman, who deservedly stands high in the estimation of his fellow citizens, made the following remark: "That is a brave fellow—he saved the life of that boy. I'll give five dollars to reward him—who'll give five more?" "I will," and "I will," and "I will," was immediately responded by every person within hearing; and in the course of a few minutes, the sum of $85 was contributed by passengers on board. The name of the man who rescued the boy, is Haven's, and the gentleman who first proposed the subscription, and so happily succeeded, is James C. Stoneall, the well known proprietor of the "Shakspeare" hotel, corner of Fulton and Nassau streets. [N. Y. Transcript.]

FROM TEXAS. The editor of the New Orleans Bee furnishes information from Texas to the 16th August, at which time the Texian army 2,200 in number were at Colet, near Copano. Several of the Texian citizens had left the army and returned to their farms, as it seemed to be well understood there would be no fighting until the winter.

The expedition to Matamoras by the Texans has been abandoned for the present. Santa Ana has been sent to the plantation of col. Phelps under a strong guard.

We had some wild rumors a few days ago, that Santa Ana had escaped, and that president Burnett had been impeached for his agency in assisting him.

A DEAD WARRIOR. Mr. W. W. Smith has published a work entitled "Sketches of the Seminole war, and sketches during a campaign," which is said to be a work of much merit. The following description of a dead warrior, extracted from it, is graphic and spirited:

"A fine specimen he was of the goodly handy work of nature—his limbs were cast in an almost perfect mould, but an evident difference was observed in the upper and lower part of the shoulder and arms, and of the rest of the body from the waist down to the toe. The former were small, and by no means remarkable for power; but strength, agility and grace distinguished the latter; the bone straight like an arrow; the compact thews of thigh and calf; the elastic sinews of knee and ankle, and the rounded symmetry that ended in the remarkable high instep, and firm, straight, handsome foot and heel; it was a study for the sculptor.

"But the face of that stern warrior, whose red brow so lately frowned with battle's terror; whose parted lip bespoke the bloody thought, and the demoniac cruelty of his race, now paled from his natural hue—livid with death—and quelled, scarcely softened into the silent, mute and petrified expression—he indeed was a model for the artist. I lingered, in spite of my repugnance to the unpleasantness of the scene, to gaze on the beautiful specimen of savage inflexibility before me; I had seen Indians before, and attempted fac similies and ideals which endeavored to pourtray the fierce lineaments of the legitimate savage, but not in any living originals, nor in any attempts of art, have I recognized so perfect a beau ideal of that savageness, which we are accustomed to consider as an inherent quality in the unhumanized son of the forest; an element in his nature, single, and whole, of which the tiger furnishes the aptest type, and which is not incompatible with beauty of physiognomy, as I realized in the countenance of this Uchee. There was a calmness and curl, as of scorn, on the divided lip; the muscles were relaxed with a subdued expression of fierce glee, as though the war yell had been suddenly cut short by the death stroke; and this feature, the compressed brow, and the haughty nose, evinced dauntless daring, resolution and contempt of death.

"It was, undoubtedly, a noble countenance; the features were regular and handsome, and I wished that I could have seen him when they were animated by the small, black, piercing eye, and heightened and set off by the long raven hair and plume of the warrior."

GUM ELASTIC CLOTHING, SHOES, &c. It is but a few years since we have heard of gum elastic over shoes, or known their value in wet and muddy streets; and it is scarcely one year since articles of clothing made of cloth so prepared with this substance as to be rendered impervious to water, have been known. Yet, short as the time has been, those articles are to be found in almost every town and village in the United States, and their manufacture is already an important and profitable branch of business of our country. We understand that there are now in existence six companies incorporated for the purpose of manufacturing various articles in which this substance forms an ingredient, with capitals amounting to $1,000,000. They employ at present 900 to 1,000 individuals, men, women and children, and are rapidly extending their operations. The company in Salem is understood to be one of the most profitably managed in the state. [Salem (Mass.) Gazette.]

FOREIGN SEGAR TRADE OF THE U. STATES. It appears from a treasury report submitted to congress at the least session, that the whole importation of segars from foreign ports, from the first day of October, 1834, to the 30th of September, 1835, was no less than seventy-six millions seven hundred and sixty-one thousand! of which seventy-five millions twenty-six thousand came from Cuba; the whole paying duty on the invoice valuation of eight hundred and thirty-six thousand seven hundred and forty-three dollars. During the same time the exports of foreign segars were nine millions six hundred and twenty-one thousand, valued at one hundred and nineteen thousand seven hundred and twenty-eight dollars.

Import,	76,761,000
Export,	9,521,000

Leaving for consumption and on hand of that year's importation,	67,140,000

[N. Y. Mercantile Adver.]

THE FOOD OF MAN. The Genessee Farmer gives this brief summary of the native countries of our most familiar plants:

The potatoe is a native of South America, and is still found wild in Chili, Peru, and Monte Video.—In its native state, the root is small and bitter. The first mention of it by European writers is in 1588. It is now spread over the world. Wheat and rye originated in Tartary and Siberia, where they are still indigenous. The only country where the oat is found wild is in Abyssinia, and thence may be considered a native. Maize, or Indian corn, is a native of Mexico, and was unknown in Europe until after the discoveries of Columbus. The bread fruit tree is a native of the South Sea islands, particularly Otaheite. Tea is found a native no where except in China and Japan, from which country the world is supplied. The cocoa nut is a native of most equinoctial countries, and is one of the most valuable trees, as food, clothing and shelter are afforded by it. Coffee is a native of Arabia Felix, but is now spread into both the East and West Indies. The best coffee is brought from Mocha, in Arabia, whence about fourteen millions of pounds are annually exported. St. Domingo furnishes from sixty to seventy millions of pounds yearly. All the varieties of the apple are derived from the crab apple, which is found native in most parts of the world.

The peach is derived from Persia, where it still grows in a native state, small, bitter, and with poisonous qualities. Tobacco is a native of Mexico and South America, and lately one species has been found in New Holland. Tobacco was first introduced into England from North Carolina, in 1586, by Walter Raleigh. Asparagus was brought from Asia; cabbage and lettuce from Holland; horse radish from China; rice from Ethiopia; beans from the East Indies; onions and garlic are natives of various places both in Asia and Africa. The sugar cane is a native of China, and the art of making sugar from it has been practised from the remotest antiquity.

NEWSPAPER STATISTICS. In Van Dieman's Land, with a population of about 40,000, we have nine journals, viz: The Gazette, Courier, Tasmanian Colonial Times, True Colonist, Morning Star, Launceston Advertiser and Cornwall Chronicle, or one in about 4,500 inhabitants, and if we take into account, that more than one-third of these belong to the prisoner class, and have no means of subscribing to or reading newspapers, we reduce the proportion to one in about every 3,000. In New South Wales they have seven journals, viz: the Government Gazette, Sydney Gazette, The Herald, Australian, Monitor, Commercial Journal and Colonist distributed among a population of about 70,000, which gives about a journal to every 10,000 people. But then it is to be considered that most of the Sydney journals are on the average twice a week, which in fact makes as far as number goes, but not as regards variety, the journals to be about one in 5,000. There is this remarkable difference to be observed with regard to the readers in these colonies and in Europe, that the country residents, and not those in towns, are the greatest readers, (we speak from our own experience, from the subscription list), the proportion in Van Dieman's Land being at least three readers in the country to two in the town. [Hobart Town Gazette.]

ELECTIONS.

INDIANA.

The Indianapolis Journal, published at the seat of government of the state, gives a complete list of the members elected to the two houses of the legislature the aggregate of which is as follows:

	Harrison.	Van Buren.
Senators	29	18
Representatives	55	44
	84	62

KENTUCKY—OFFICIAL RETURNS.

Vote for governor.

	1836.	1842.
	Clark.	Flour.	Buck.	Brea.
Adair,	336	828	868	541
Allen,	199	317	184	476
Anderson,	170	438	140	437
Bracken,	395	289	447	305
Bourbon,	737	399	1,104	534
Boone,	645	478	629	567
Butler,	160	219	94	275
Bullitt,	197	194	270	442
Barren,	965	955	979	903
Bath,	541	634	518	735
Breckenridge,	694	61	551	297
Clay,	356	136	353	149
Campbell,	396	667	475	859
Clarke,	943	138	849	521
Christian,	689	382	681	458
Cumberland,	562	94	538	543
Caldwell,	458	536	273	669
Calloway,	178	694	53	714
Casey,	187	213	296	299
Clinton,	199	159
Davies,	408	343	322	359
Estill,	455	337	221	312
Edmondson,	152	155	182	212
Fayette,	1,041	502	1,426	681
Franklin,	480	548	554	470
Fleming,	881	526	1,089	764
Floyd,	112	384	118	405
Garrard,	707	265	973	289
Greenup,	406	222	446	460
Green,	413	622	602	915
Grant,	186	242	197	232
Gallatin,	727	320	445	544
Grayson,	255	229	301	249
Graves,	175	388	40	318
Harrison,	438	686	535	902
Henderson,	384	404	374	327
Hardin,	805	855	826	799
Harlan,	249	171	204	145
Hickman,	327	522	137	605
Hopkins,	419	493	251	508
Henry,	576	799	532	755
Hart,	239	334	226	390
Hancock,	83	62	82	110
Jefferson,	561	484	1,768	1,783
Jessamine,	502	364	668	527
Knox,	479	53	432	146
Lewis,	320	319	322	439
Livingston,	256	473	212	385
Lincoln,	629	242	775	323
Logan,	935	256	705	547
Lawrence,	265	216	199	324
Laurel,	246	106	174	180
Louisville city,	1,248	605
Mason,	924	386	1,188	745
Mercer,	741	861	819	1,232
Madison,	1,041	397	1,103	737
Montgomery,	559	374	743	535
Muhlenburg,	406	263	369	333
Marion,	373	535
Monroe,	193	238	168	419
McCracken,	212	124	46	218
Morgan,	57	406	128	315
Meade,	362	66	364	158

Nelson,	786	218	886	377	Mecklenburg	869	1,095
Nicholas,	509	615	501	583	Martin	-	260 maj.
Ohio,	384	245	164	425	New Hanover	224	706
Owen,	265	443	216	528	Nash	102	679
Oldham,	305	602	408	744	Northampton	592	241
Pike,	57	291	35	254	Onslow	-	266 maj.
Pendleton,	133	201	166	291	Orange	1,237	1,132
Pulaski,	566	446	654	640	Person	230	498
Perry,	134	165	157	197	Pasquotank	490	260
Russell,	315	69	296	268	Pitt	483	511
Rockcastle,	388	82	299	141	Perquimons	430 maj.	-
Scott,	457	824	736	1,017	Rowan	1,642	117
Shelby,	924	414	1,163	733	Randolph	1,009	112
Simpson,	300	289	319	425	Rockingham	300	855
Spencer,	359	196	314	459	Robeson	408	507
Trigg,	262	233	276	439	Richmond	616	53
Todd,	517	225	590	288	Rutherford	890 maj.	-
Union,	193	269	190	366	Sampson	419	666
Woodford,	675	377	658	393	Surry	887	1,035
Wayne,	350	415	528	446	Stokes	828	802
Whitley,	356	49	228	186	Tyrrell	400	25
Warren,	704	348	667	581	Washington	377	34
Washington,	438	529	820	1,198	Wilkes	800 maj.	-
					Warren	92	673
					Wayne	180	716
					Wake	864	891
					Yancy	110	536
	88,587	30,491	39,421	40,681
	30,491			39,421
	8,096			1,260
						31,829	26,822
						26,822

RECAPITULATION.

For governor.

James Clark, (Whig.)	88,587
M. Flournoy, (Van Buren.)	30,491

Clark's majority, 8,096

For lieutenant governor.

Charles A. Wickliffe, (Whig.)	35,524
Elijah Hise, (Van Buren.)	32,186

Wickliffe's majority, 3,338

Of the senators elected, fourteen are said to be friendly to the present administration of the general government, and twenty-four against it. Of the representatives in the house, forty-two members are put down as friendly to the administration and fifty-eight against it. Whig majority, on joint ballot, twenty-six.

MISSOURI.

The St. Louis Republican says: "The whole of the returns from the different counties have not yet reached us; but enough is known to make it certain, that Mr. Boggs (Van Buren) is chosen governor, by five or six hundred majority; that Mr. Cannon, (also Van Buren), is elected lieutenant governor by a much larger vote; and that Messrs. Harrison and Miller are to be the representatives of the state in the next congress." Harrison and Miller are friends of Van Buren.

NORTH CAROLINA.

The following table, showing the result of the election for governor, is copied from the "Raleigh Register," which paper states that it has been carefully prepared.

Counties.	Dudley.	Spaight.
Anson	1,017	274
Ashe	383	438
Buncombe	1,194	533
Bertie	336	489
Bladen	-	27 maj.
Brunswick	359	123
Beaufort	755	236
Burke	1,257	516
Cabarrus	643	227
Columbus	210	185
Carteret	111 maj.	-
Currituck	-	150 maj.
Chatham	932	626
Chowan	145 maj.	-
Cumberland	500	800
Camden	400	12
Caswell	116	1,067
Craven	267	669
Duplin	-	250 maj.
Davidson	1,287	69
Edgecomb	71	1,191
Franklin	308	564
Granville	977	391
Gates	-	200 maj.
Greene	-	150 maj.
Guilford	1,145	475
Halifax	100 maj.	-
Hertford	376	264
Hyde	300 maj.	-
Haywood	-	200 maj.
Iredell	1,283	226
Johnson	364	672
Jones	228	120
Lincoln	695	1,674
Lenoir	192	389
Macon	275	450
Moore	842	505
Montgomery	782 maj.	-

Dudley's majority 5,007

The result of the election for members of the legislature is doubtful—and both parties claim a majority. The Raleigh Star states the whig majority in the state senate to be four; and classes col. McCormick, from Cumberland, as a whig, while the Fayetteville Observer claims him as a Van Buren man. The Star adds: "The senator from Person, it is understood, is pledged to vote against judge Mangum; but we have no reason to believe he is under any pledge to vote against any other person or to vote for a Van Buren man."

Mr. Graham, whose seat was declared vacated by the house of representatives last winter, has been again returned to that body over his old opponent. The following is the result of the contest.

Counties.	Graham.	Newland.
Burke,	1,080	708
Rutherford,	1,633	626
Buncombe,	1,082	716
Haywood,	257	373
Macon,	448	348
Yancy,	291	406
	4,791	3,177
	3,177

1,614 majority.

ALABAMA.

The National Intelligencer says—Returns from South Alabama give the following number of members elected by each party; whig 43, Van Buren men 19. Against these are 18 Van Buren men claimed, as heretofore stated, from the four great northern counties. We have satisfactory information that two of the eighteen so claimed are decided friends of judge White, and it may be that more of them are. But, admit all the remaining sixteen to be Van Burenites, the result of the election for the state legislature, as far as heard from, will stand:

	Whigs.	Van Buren.
Southern counties	43	19
Northern counties	2	16
Total, so far as heard	45	35

IMPORTANT DECISION.

The Boston "Mercantile Journal" of Saturday last contains the following decision in relation to the slave case, which has for some time been before the supreme court of Massachusetts, now sitting in Boston. The slave is a female about six years old, belonging to Mr. Slater of Louisiana, and was held by Mr. Thomas Aves, to be restored to Mr. Slater as soon as convenient. The peculiar circumstances under which she came into the possession of Mr. Aves are not stated. The case was argued, says the Journal, by the counsel for the respective parties with great eloquence and skill, by C. P. and B. R. Curtis, for Mr. Aves, the gentleman in whose possession the little girl now is, and against whom the writ of habeas corpus was issued—and by Rufus Choate and Ellis Gray Loring for the applicants for the discharge of the slave.

Chief justice Shaw delivered this morning the opinion of the full court, on the rights of slave owners bringing slaves into Massachusetts, which will be considered of extraordinary importance. The chief justice remarked, that a more elaborate opinion of the court would hereafter be drawn up, but at present he would state the result which had been arrived at, and the general reasoning which led to it. The case was one of high interest, and had been fully and most ably argued by counsel. The impression of the court and bar had long been, that a slave coming here by the consent of the master is thereby virtually emancipated, because there is no law by which he can be compelled to leave this state, and while here, as he owes allegiance, he must receive protection. The question was not before the court, and need not here be settled, whether a slave coming here by his master's consent, and afterwards returning to a slave country, would fall back into slavery. The court were clearly of opinion that the long settled impression referred to was sound.

The law of England and the law of Massachusetts were analogous. By both, slavery has been recognized as the local law of countries, which have chosen to tolerate it. Slavery is against justice and natural right, but other states and countries have a legal right to fix the condition of their own subjects, and must reconcile their acts with their own consciences, in their own way. Slavery cannot therefore be now considered against the law of nations, but being against the policy and settled law of Massachusetts, we here regard it not as matter of general law, so as to let in the principles of comity in the case of foreigners coming here with slaves, but only as local law, which we respect within certain limits, and to a certain extent. The judge went into a very able though brief analysis of the adjudged cases, on the subject of slave property, and showed that the doctrines now held were substantially in accordance with those cases.

The judge then stated, that prior to the adoption of the federal constitution, it became the universal settled policy of this state, that slavery was contrary to natural right, and was unlawful. The adoption to the constitution only varied this principle so far as it made express provision for the case of runaway slaves, &c. Where there is a general prohibition, and a particular exemption, the latter is to be construed strictly, particularly when that exemption is against natural right. The article of the constitution relating to fugitives might have been useful, and we cannot now object to it. But that article must be construed according to the plain and natural import of its terms. It must receive a strict construction, and does not apply to cases where slaves are voluntarily brought here by their masters.

The judge stated that the child must be discharged from the custody of the present claimant, and consigned, for safe keeping at present, to the petitioner's counsel. It was intimated that this was not to be understood as the case of a master, who is bringing his slave through this state by virtue of a warrant issuing under the act of congress respecting runaway slaves, nor to a necessary transitus from one slave state to another, through a free state, where there was no unnecessary delay. The latter case could hardly happen in this state, and neither were before the court, so as to make necessary any expression of opinion on them.

Upon the above decision the Boston Daily Advertiser makes the following remarks:

"It will be perceived that the court have decided that the slave having been brought by its master's consent to this state, becomes free, slavery being against the policy and settled law of the state; and that the provision of the constitution and law of the United States, in relation to fugitives, does not apply to a case in which they come with the master's consent. In some of the states there is, we believe, legislative provision for cases of this sort, and it would seem that some such provision is necessary in this state, unless we would prohibit citizens of the slaveholding states from travelling in this state with their families, and unless we would permit such of them as wish to emancipate their slaves to throw them, at their pleasure, upon the people of this state. Both these evils require to be guarded against, and the remedy lies not with the courts, but with the legislature."

Another Boston paper says—"the child has been taken from Mr. Aves' custody, and it put into the custody of Ellis Gray Loring, esq. until a guardian should be appointed. The opinion as delivered by chief justice Shaw, was lucid and satisfactory, under the special circumstances of this case. There was not only no excitement in or about the court room, but not a colored person was present. The questions arising in the case have been discussed argued and decided dispassionately, most learnedly and thoroughly, and determined upon careful considerations of the law of nature and nations, the constitutions of Massachusetts and the United States, the laws of congress, and the decisions of the English courts before the revolution."

ANOTHER SLAVE CASE.

From the New York American.

Jesse Collier, a colored man, claimed as a fugitive slave by Mr. I. B. Collier, of Maryland, was again up for examination yesterday, before the recorder—the Manumission society defend the alleged slave. A vast crowd collected, and after a short examination, the case was remanded until next Wednesday.

The claimant on the last examination having sworn positively that Collier left him in April, 1835, his honor presented the following subjects for the discussion of the respective counsel, previous to his giving a decision.

1st. After the claimant of an alleged slave fixes deliberately the time of his escape from servitude, and the alleged slave goes into his defence, can the judge, consistently with the law, allow the claimant to alter the time of his escape?

2d. Is the admission or confession of the alleged slave sufficient evidence to convict him as a slave; or, does the same rule of law apply as in case of felony, where the confession of guilt is sufficient without first showing the felony to have been actually committed?

His honor stated that he should wish them to discuss those points among themselves privately, and communicate the result of their investigation to him previous to his giving his decision, which decision, however short, would be given in writing, as he was of opinion it would differ from that of many other judges, who he was sure had frequently given up persons claimed as slaves, merely on their own confession.

THE ARMY.

GENERAL ORDER, No. 58.

Head quarters of the army, adj't gen. office, Washington, August 27, 1836.

I—In conformity with the system promulgated in "ORDER" No. 54, of 1827, the following general change in the stations of the several regiments of artillery, will take place as soon as their services in the field can be dispensed with. The general and other officers in command therefore, as soon as in their opinion the services of all or any portion of the artillery are no longer required in the field, will order the officers and companies to the posts and stations as below designated:

The first regiment of artillery, will garrison the following posts:

1. Forts in the harbor of New York.

Company F—Captain M. Mason, (bvt. major).

Company I—Captain F. Whiting, (bvt. major).

Company A—Captain G. Porter.

Company D—Captain J. Dimick.

Company C—Captain C. Dimmock.

2. Fort Mifflin, (Pennsylvania).

Company G—Capt. R. M. Kirby, (bvt. major).

3. Fort McHenry, (Maryland).

Company H—Captain D. Van Ness.

4. Fort Severn, (Maryland).

Company B—Captain D. Tompkins.

5. Fort Washington, (Maryland).

Company E—Captain H. Saunders, (bvt. major).

II—The colonel will take post at Fort Columbus, New York harbor, the lieutenant colonel at Fort Severn, and the major at Fort McHenry.

III—The second regiment of artillery, will garrison the following posts:

1. Fort Sullivan, (Maine).

Company H—Captain R. A. Zantinger, (bvt. major).

2. Fort Preble, (Maine).

Company B—Captain F. S. Belton.

3. Fort Constitution, (New Hampshire).

Company I—Captain N. Baden, (bvt. major).

4. Fort Wolcott, (Rhode Island).

Company D—Captain G. Drane.

5. Fort Trumbull, (Connecticut).

Company A—Captain T. S. Legate, (bvt. major).

Company F—Captain J. P. Taylor.

IV—The colonel will take post at Fort Wolcott, the lieutenant colonel at Fort Trumbull, and the major at Fort Constitution. This arrangement of the field officers of the regiment may be considered as temporary, or until Fort Independence, Boston harbor, and Fort Adams, Newport, R. I. are ready to receive their garrisons. And for the want of quarters at these posts, companies (G) brevet major J. Mountfort, (E) captain Merchant, and (C) captain Mellon, will join the garrison at Fort Monroe, Va.

V—The third regiment of artillery, will garrison the following posts:

1. Savannah, (Georgia).

Company C—Captain S. Ringgold.

2. St. Augustine, (Florida).

Company D—Captain R. B. Lee.

3. Key West, (Florida).

Company A—Captain T. Childs.

4. Fort Pickens, (Pensacola, Florida).

Company H—Captain E. Mackay, (bvt. major).

Company B—Captain J. P. Vinton.

5. Fort Morgan, (Mobile, Alabama).

Company G—Captain M. P. Lomax, (bvt. major).

6. Fort Wood, (Louisiana).

Company F—Captain W. L. McClintock, (bvt. major.)

7. Fort Pike, (Louisiana.)

Company E—Captain E. Lyon.

8. Fort Jackson, (Louisiana.)

Company I—Captain T. W. Lendrum.

VI—The colonel will take post at Oglethorpe barracks, Savannah, Geo. the lieutenant colonel at Fort Pickens, Pensacola, Florida, and the major at St. Augustine barracks, Florida.

VII—The fourth regiment of artillery, will garrison the following posts:

1. Fort Monroe, (Virginia.)

Company A—Capt. J. L. Gardner, (bvt. major).

Company B—Captain J. M. Washington.

Company H—Captain H. Brown.

Company D—Captain S. Cooper.

Company E—Captain H. A. Thompson.

2. Fort Macon, (North Carolina).

Company I—Captain J. Erwing, (bvt. major).

3. Fort Caswell, (North Carolina).

Company G—Captain J. Monroe.

4. Castle Pinckney, (South Carolina).

Company F—Captain L. Whiting, (bvt. major).

5. Fort Moultrie, (South Carolina).

Company C—Captain P. H. Galt.

VIII—The colonel will take post at Fort Monroe, the lieutenant colonel at Fort Moultrie, and the major at Fort Caswell.

IX—Officers and men not in the field, and those who are now unable to join the army for active service, will repair to the stations designated for them, without delay, whose duty it will be to take charge of the public property. Should any of the posts designated be so incomplete as not to afford quarters for the troops assigned to them, respectively, they will repair to Fort Monroe, and there remain until they can be accommodated at the several posts to which they have been assigned. In all such cases, the adjutant general will notify those concerned.

X—The marine corps will be relieved from duty in the field as soon as its services can be dispensed with, when the commander of that corps will give the necessary orders for the several detachments to resume their proper stations.

By order of ALEXANDER MACOMB, major general commanding-in-chief:

R. JONES, adjutant general.

THE CHEROKEE WAR.

From the Columbus (Geo.) Herald of August 16.

General Sanford and staff returned to this city on Thursday evening last from their trip to Baker county, in search of the Indians, they were absent seventeen days, in which time they thoroughly scoured Chickasahatchee, Echoenochowe and Kit-chalooney swamps, but without finding the enemy. In hunting, however, fresh trails were frequently discovered and it was well known that the Indians were scattered through the swamp, but in portions so small and so securely were they covered by the thickness of the swamp, that it was found impossible to ferret them out. No Indians were therefore found nor was a fight had, with the exception of the skirmish between the Indians and the scouting party under command of Col. Alford, which has previously appeared in the journals of the day. The visit of gen. Sanford and his men, to this section of the country, has had the effect at all events of alarming the Indians, and assuring them that the whites are fully bent on reducing them to submission, or driving them from the country altogether; and we are informed that they are struggling to concentrate their scattered forces and get away to Florida as soon as possible—poor devils, their route is circumscribed indeed, and their way hemmed in. Whither should they fly but to Florida? and why go there? They will find no resting place for the sole of their foot in that distracted land; in forty or fifty days at farthest, they will encounter a force of superior strength, and one that will uproot and drive them from even the everglades, should they retire to that untracked portion of the earth—if they return to the Creek nation then they will be promptly met by the U. S. troops and Alabama volunteers, who are still in waiting to slay them as they come, besides there are a thousand and six hundred brave volunteers from old Tennessee, who are quartered in the immediate vicinity of Montgomery, who would literally destroy an entire nation of savages, should they dare to cross their path. The truth is, the Indians are routed—broken up—scattered—distracted. They are flying in every direction, and doubtless as they run, will continue their depredations; consequently should be closely watched, and followed with the sword and bayonet to the end of the chapter. A body of Tennessee troops accompanied by Paddy Carr and some 8 or 10 friendly Indians, visited the Hatchachubbee and Cowagee Creeks, entered the swamps and drove for Indians—they "jumped up" a party with whom they exchanged a few shots, and finally succeeded in capturing twelve, which number they brought to Fort Mitchell and placed in confinement; if our commanding officers would enlist a few more friendly Indians in the cause of the country and place them under Paddy Carr as leader and commander, they would find this troublesome case soon swept from the docket, and the court now sitting for the trial of savage marauders might be speedily adjourned, sine die. There are scores of friendly Indians who are ready and willing for such enlistment. Gen. Sanford's command brought up and deposited at Fort Mitchell six women and children belonging to the hostile tribe. These squaws and their little ones, were found on the Kinchafoona creek, almost in a state of starvation. In flying from the whites, the men had left them to take care of themselves; and being of times closely pursued by our troops, they had killed 7 of their children, who were crying with hunger, to prevent them being overheard and discovered.

Gen. Sanford's command consisted of volunteer companies, from the following counties: Jasper, Jackson, DeKalb, Coweta, Pulaski, Troup, Muscogee, Stewart, Baker and Early. These troops are entitled to great credit; it is truly a severe exposure of health and life, to travel through the swamps of the lower country of Georgia at this season of extreme hot weather and prevailing epidemics, and frequently all day in mud and water waist deep; yet, we are gratified to learn, that general good health prevailed throughout the army during the tour. We notice among those who have arrived, maj. gen. Sanford, col. S. Rockwell, maj. W. S. Rockwell, maj. J. S. Patterson, lieut. col. Thomas and adj. Holland, all in fine health. From the order of the major general published below, it will be seen the disposition of the troops now in the low country. It will be recollected that the term of service for which these troops were mustered will expire on the first of September and they will have to leave their present posts at least a week before that time, in order to travel here and be mustered out of service.

The section of country now guarded by these faithful soldiers, will then be left entirely defenceless, and should the Indians return (than which nothing is more likely) should be laid waste and all the inhabitants murdered. We trust gov. Schley will make timely provision for its defence.

Four companies of marines, under command of col. Miller, arrived in town on Saturday, and have encamped in our vicinity. They have been engaged for a time in building bridges, and are yet to build causeways and otherwise repair the road leading to Montgomery. This service, we understand, is on their part, wholly gratuitous.

ORDERS—NO. 143.

First army corps of the army of the south, head quarters, camp Denard, August 6, 1836.

The major general from all the information he has been able to collect, is induced to believe, at that the several straggling parties of the enemy, the which have infested Chickasahatchee and the neighboring swamps in Baker, Randolph, Lee and Stewart counties have been compelled to take the back track, towards the Chattahoochee, except a small party of 15 or 20 who were yesterday driven from their camp in Chickasahatchee, by the scouting party under major Alford, and who have taken the course down the river. With the reduction and destruction of this party, captain Hentz is especially charged. He will collect and organize his company, in the stitute and maintain a rigid system of discipline, and take posts at some convenient distance from the swamp on its east side, send forth daily scouting parties and resort to every means to dislodge and destroy the enemy; he will report to major Alford, and make arrangements with lieutenant Vin up ton, United States army, for provisions and forage for the use of his company.

A regard for the health of the troops from the upper portions of the state now here imposes upon the major general the necessity of confiding the above duty to the troops of Baker county, under captain Hentz, and of ordering the other troops to move to healthy positions. Maj. Alford will therefore post one company of his battalion at Fort McCrary in its vicinity, and with the remainder of his corps, he will form flying camps so disposed, as will secure supplies, afford protection to the inhabitants and exterminate the enemy. For the present he will establish his head quarters at or near the head of Spring creek in Baker county, not far from the Fort Gaines road; he will take the command of the several posts and troops stationed in Baker, Randolph and Lee counties, and report to the major general from time to time. Captains Kendrick and Calhoun, will, until further orders, occupy their present position near Lawhon's in Lee county, capt. Bostwick will join captain Jernigan at Lumpkin, and act under his orders; that place and within a convenient distance thereto, will be their permanent post.

The assistant quarter master lieutenant Vinton, will take measures to have the troops furnished with the necessary supplies of provision and forage.

The utmost vigilance is especially enjoined on the commanders of posts in this section, and scouting parties constantly kept out.

The senior surgeon, Dr. Mills, will take charge of the hospital and sick, and furnish medicine and attendants. He will select some healthy point for his hospital, to which place, all the sick and wounded will be sent. By order of major gen. Sanford.

S. ROCKWELL, Inspector and acting adj. gen.

*Head quarters, 1st army corps,
Camp Jesup, Echienoochee, August 11.*

GENERAL: I have the honor to inform you, that after having performed a march of sixty miles, I arrived the day after I left you at Woolfolk's, in the neighborhood of the party of Indians, who were reported as having crossed the Chattahoochee on the 24th ult. The result of an engagement which took place on the same day, between that party and a detachment of Georgia volunteers, has already been made known to you, by the official despatch of captain Calhoun. Whilst on its march the day following, it was overtaken by captain Jernigan's corps of mounted men, and a sharp skirmish ensued, in which that brave and meritorious officer, after maintaining for a considerable time an unequal conflict with superior numbers, was compelled to retire with the loss of three of his troop killed and seven wounded. Not discouraged by his want of success, that energetic and enterprising officer determined upon renewing the fight, and having strengthened himself by a number of citizen volunteers, accordingly again made the attack on the 27th between 10 and 11 o'clock and in his turn compelled the enemy to give way, abandoning the whole of his plunder, and leaving fifteen of his warriors slain upon the field. This decisive advantage would have been followed up by an immediate pursuit, but a deep morass through which the enemy retreated into a thick cane brake, precluded all idea of being able to overtake them, in the then exhausted and debilitated condition of the troops. Every exertion, however has since been used and this now being made to come up with them, but the difficulties we have had to encounter in bogs and swamps, have as yet failed in that design; nevertheless we shall neither abate in our zeal nor cease the pursuit, until all hope is rendered desperate by their flight and dispersion.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your most obedient servant,

J. W. A. SANFORD, major general.
A. P. S. In the last engagement, capt. Jernigan, had three men killed and ten wounded.

Major general Thomas Jesup, Command'g army of the south, Fort Mitchell, Ala.

*Head quarters, 1st army corps,
Columbus, August 12th, 1836.*

GENERAL: I had the honor on the 1st inst. of addressing you a short communication, from Camp Jesup, upon the Echienoochee. Although it was known that the enemy had secreted themselves in the swamp that borders both sides of that stream, the difficulty of obtaining correct information relative to their movements, left me at that time, undetermined in my own. Subsequent developments, however, have fully satisfied me that my only object, since their defeat on the 27th ult. to be on to avoid our pursuit, and to guard against the danger of a second rencontre: indeed, so abating has been their anxiety upon this subject, that in many instances, they have abandoned, and destroyed their children rather than be engaged with them in their retreat! Regarding the desperate act as indicative of their intention to make another desperate struggle, to reach the place their original destination in the lower part of the State, or Florida, proper measures were taken to hasten their earliest movements, and to arrest their progress in that direction. In the mean time, troops were actively engaged in penetrating the swamp at every point where its intricacy seemed to offer a refuge for the enemy. The efficient manner in which this service was performed alarmed them for their safety, and as foreseen, caused them on the 31st ult. to abandon a situation no longer deemed secure against our approach. Upon being satisfied of this fact, by the discovery of their trails, and that their course was in the direction of Lee and Baker counties, the whole detachment was ordered in immediate pursuit, but the advantage which the fugitives had gained by decamping the overnight, and by separating into small squads, in which every one looked to his individual safety, placed them so far in our advance, that the attempt to cut off their retreat to the swamps which abound at short intervals in that section of the country, proved impracticable. The troops have in consequence again been compelled to resume the arduous labor of driving the swamps, and as their line of operations has been greatly extended by the dispersion of the Indians, I have (as will be seen by orders under separate cover) directed major Alford with captains Greer, Sledges, Byrnes and Hentz' companies of mounted men, to occupy some suitable position near Chickasawhatchee—captains Kendrick, Glover and Calhoun, near Kenchesnee—capt. Jernigan and Bostwick, near Lumpkin, and captain De Lapiere to reoccupy Fort McCreary. By this disposition of the troops, I flatter myself that the enemy will have but little opportunity of venturing abroad without encountering the risk of engagement and defeat. Already, I am credibly informed, that a considerable number, regarding the prospect, of remaining in the country or retreating to Florida, as having become hopeless by this arrangement, have commenced a retrograde movement towards the Chattahoochee, and have actually crossed that river. In all probability, the remainder equally well satisfied with the folly and temerity of their former project, will endeavor to follow the example, with the view perhaps of availing themselves of the overtures now extended to them by the government. I learn, however, by an express from major Alford, that he is in pursuit of a gang who still lurk in the Chickasawhatchee. That energetic and gallant officer, had a few days before, encountered and routed at the point of the bayonet a small party who may now have gained a sufficient strength by the addition of a few stragglers to their number to attempt the passage of Flint river. Should this be the case, an unbroken pine barren of many miles in length, will present a field in which their capture or destruction is inevitable. Of those who have crossed to the eastern bank of the Chattahoochee, in the last few weeks, the accounts are so various and discrepant, it is difficult to determine their number. From the best information I have upon the subject, it cannot exceed two hundred and fifty, including all ranks and conditions. These, if a large portion of them have not already returned to the nation, are scattered over an area of many hundred square miles, affording every facility for their concealment, and rendering their discovery utterly hopeless as long as they continue thus dispersed. Their ulterior arrangements, however, may require them to abandon that policy, and they may reassemble for the purpose of proceeding on their march; in that event they will be overtaken, beaten and expelled from the country. I feel that I hazard nothing in anticipating this result, when I consider the character of the gallant soldiery to whom this enterprise has been entrusted, and the chivalric spirit of the officers who lead them. I have the honor to be, your most ob't servant,

J. W. A. SANFORD, major general.
Maj. gen. Thos. Jesup, command'g army of the south, Tuskegee, Alabama.

It is stated in one of the Charleston papers that a vessel, commanded by a Spaniard and an American, recently touched at Indian Key, full of negroes, supposed to have been obtained of the Seminoles in exchange for ammunition. The people at the Key had not force enough to arrest the crew and commanders.

The mail had commenced running daily through the Creek country from Columbus to Montgomery, without a guard.

A body of hostile Creek Indians had been completely destroyed in Lowndes county, Georgia—being the last that was known to have crossed the Chattahoochee.

Columbus, Geo. Aug. 22. The United States marine corps had been ordered by general Jesup to leave Columbus for West Point, a station higher up the Chattahoochee, in order to aid in suppressing any difficulties which might arise among the Creek Indians who were not disposed to emigrate. Detachments of emigrating Creeks to the aggregate number of ten thousand, were to leave Tuskegee before the 28th inst.

WAR IN FLORIDA.
*From the National Intelligencer.
Assistant quartermaster's office,
N. Orleans, Aug. 16, 1836.*

SIR: I have this day seen a publication in the National Intelligencer of the 27th July, taken from the New York Star, on the subject of the campaign in East Florida. The writer, in speaking of the arrival of the army at Tampa Bay, says we there learned that the quartermaster at New Orleans, influenced by the representations made, or caused, as it was said, to be made by general Gaines, that the war was closed, had abstained from sending on provisions he had been ordered to forward from that place. The whole of this part of his statement is incorrect. Where or how he obtained this information, I know not. General Gaines, on his return to New Orleans, told me to continue to send supplies, which was done promptly. Every exertion was made, both by myself and the assistant commissary, to obtain and forward the subsistence and forage required. There was great difficulty in obtaining hard bread, and every barrel that could be had was immediately shipped.

On the 31st of March the assistant commissary at Fort Brooke forwarded a statement to the assistant commissary at New Orleans of the supplies on hand—216,750 rations of meat, 304,423 rations of bread and flour, and the small rations in proportion. At this time there were two vessels on the way laden with subsistence and forage, and the bills of lading show that they were received on the 6th of April, in good condition. Now it appears that the army arrived at Tampa Bay, the 3d, 4th and 5th April, and remained but a few days before they took their departure; and I cannot perceive where was the scarcity of provisions, unless it was in the hard bread. This was unavoidable, for it could not be obtained, that is, the quantity required.

My object in making this statement, is to correct the error that general Gaines had, in any way, contributed to the withholding supplies from the army in Florida; also, to show that there was no cessation on the part of the commissary or myself, in procuring and forwarding the supplies at the earliest period possible. The proofs of this are contained in my list of shipments now at Washington. I have the honor to be, sir, with high respect, your obedient servant,

J. CLARK,

*Assistant quartermaster.
To major T. Cross, acting quartermaster general,
Washington city.*

A letter has been received at Charleston, S. C. dated St. Augustine, August 12, which says there is nothing new or interesting respecting the Indian war. "The regular troops at Micanopy, (or the greater part of them), are sick, and there are not enough well to defend the stations, and furnish escorts for the baggage train, from one place to the other. Even from St. Augustine to Picolata, an escort had to be furnished to-day from the mounted volunteer company of this place. You no doubt have heard what arrangements are being made by our governor, who is commander-in-chief of the forces in Florida, to commence the campaign by the first of October. Two of the officers of the Tennessee volunteers visited Tallahassee a few days ago to make arrangements for the reception of the troops. Some persons in this place think that the governor will be in the field himself shortly, but I trust and hope that he will not undertake it during the summer as I am sure that the climate would kill more than the Indians would."

The following appalling picture of the sickness prevailing at Garey's ferry is derived from a letter from that place, published in the Eastport, (Maine) Sentinel, dated July 30. "You have seen by the papers that a great deal of sickness exists at this place. The half is not known. The people come in here for protection from all quarters, and there are now some 700 or 800; they had comfortable homes, and the conveniences of life, but were compelled to leave all behind: here they have built huts, which keep out neither the sun nor rain, and it rains every afternoon most violently. Added to this, the measles broke out among them, and their insufficient shelter caused colds; death has raged among them most frightfully; 80 or 90 have died within the last five or six weeks, and it is supposed that no less than 200 are now sick with measles, ague and fever, and cholera morbus; the latter takes off adults as well as children.

"I have to-day been in the huts of some 300 or 400 of these miserable creatures; my heart bleeds, and no tongue can tell the sufferings I have witnessed, and the tales of woe I have heard. In a hut ten feet square would be three or four places for beds, that is, four sticks driven in the sand, and poles laid across for boards to rest upon; on them some had beds, others nothing but a blanket. The occupants of these beds were the most distressing objects I ever saw; some emaciated with cholera morbus, some almost burning with fever; others again, having taken cold with the measles, were swollen most frightfully. There were from two to six sick in each of the huts that I visited. In one instance the father and mother were both dead, leaving five children, all sick, the oldest being thirteen, and these poor creatures were obliged to help each other as well as they could."

The Tallahassee "Floridian" of the 18th of August, contains the following horrible narrative.

A few days since, a party of Lowndes county, Georgia, volunteers, fell in with a party of Creeks near the Florida line, and killed ten warriors, and took eight women and children prisoners. The prisoners were taken to a house under guard. In the evening one of the squaws was observed to give her children drink from a coffee pot. Shortly after, she obtained leave of absence, and not returning, search was made for her, but she had made her escape. Her children were all found dead, from poison administered by their unnatural mother. On Wednesday, the 2d instant colonel Wood, of Randolph Georgia, with only thirty-eight men under his command, discovered a large party of Indians in a swamp—the savages challenged him to come into the swamp for a "fair fight." Notwithstanding his inferiority in numbers, he boldly charged upon them. After a desperate engagement, hand to hand, the savages fled in all directions. Twenty-seven warriors were found dead on the field of battle, and many more were supposed to have been killed and wounded. Before their flight they strangled their children by stuffing their mouths and nostrils with mud moss. The children were found in that condition after the battle was over.

THE PATENT OFFICE.

The select committee of the United States senate recently made a report on the subject of the patent office, accompanied by a bill for its reorganization and better government. We are indebted to the Newark Advertiser for the following synopsis of this document:

The present law was passed in 1793, authorising the secretary of state to grant patents subject to the revision of the attorney general. According to the practical construction of the law, the secretary has no power to refuse a patent for want of either novelty or usefulness. The grant is therefore a matter of course when the application is made in due form. As a consequence of this construction, patents have been constantly granted without examination into the merit or novelty of the invention—the secretary having little time or inclination, if indeed he were properly qualified, to make such examination. The evils which necessarily result from this course must continue to increase, until congress provide a remedy. Among these evils the committee enumerate the following:

1. A considerable portion of all the patents are worthless and void, and as conflicting with and infringing upon one another: arising either from design or ignorance of the state of the arts on the part of the applicant.

2. The country becomes flooded with "patent monopolies" embarrassing to bona fide patentees, whose rights are invaded; and perplexing to the community, leading to law suits and vexations, and injurious controversies.

3. Frauds are extensively practised. It is not uncommon for persons to copy patented machines in the model room: and having made some slight alteration, to apply in the next room for patents—the power of refusal not being exercised, the grant is almost a matter of course. Thus prepared, with the apparent authority of the government, adventurers go forth on a retailing expedition, selling rights to those who have no means of detecting the imposition. This species of speculation has become a regular business, and several hundred thousand dollars, it is estimated, have in this way been annually paid for void patents—leading in many cases to ruinous litigations.

The most obvious remedy for these evils is to establish a check upon the granting of patents, confining them to such only as are new and decidedly useful. To secure this the committee propose to create a commissioner of patents, who shall be selected for his special qualifications, with power to decide upon the merits of applications, giving the applicants the privilege of appeal from his decision to a board of examiners, and in certain cases to a court of law.

The increasing number of patents granted, afford some indication of the progress of improvement in the useful arts. The average number annually from 1790 to 1800 was 26; from 1800 to 1810 it was 91 from 1810 to 1820 it was 209; and for the last ten years it has been 535. During the last year there were granted 776; and there have been issued during the first quarter of the present year 274, (at the rate of 1,095 a year), being more in three months than were issued in the whole of the first period of ten years. At this rate the duties on patents this year will be upwards of $32,000. The whole number issued under the laws of the United States, up to the 31st of March last, is 9,731. This is more than double the number which have been issued either in England or France, during the same period. In England, for ten years preceding 1830, the average number of patents granted in one year was 145.

More commodious rooms for models are also needed. A great number, 500 at least, have been stowed away in a dark garret; and those which occupy the appropriate rooms are too much crowded together to be seen, and are without systematic or scientific arrangement. A suitable fire proof building is therefore also recommended. The building, the committee well suggest, should be such as to become an object of national pride. And it will be seen by the following extract from their report that it is thus as practicable as it is desirable for the American people to have a national museum of the arts and sciences.

The patent office, with such accommodations, containing the records of this age of inventions, displaying in its halls and galleries numberless models of ingenious and useful mechanism, and contrivances in almost infinite variety, adapted to the mechanic arts, to manufactures, to husbandry, to navigation, steam power, horse power, water power, rail road transportation, and, in fine, to all the common trades and mechanical pursuits of life, as well as to our rapidly multiplying and magnificent public works, would present an object of great interest and tend not a little to elevate our national character. It has been justly remarked that we can go into no mechanic shop, into no manufactory of any description, upon no farm or plantation, or travel a mile on our rail roads, or in steamboats, without seeing the evidence of our originality, and witnessing the fruits and effects of our ingenuity and enterprise. All the inventions and improvements in mechanism which have done so much towards advancing the useful arts and manufactures, should, as far as practicable, be exhibited in one view in the halls of the patent office. Such a display would attract the attention of the many thousands who annually visit the capital of the union from all quarters of the country, and all parts of the world. No other nation has yet any thing to be compared with it; neither England nor France has every required models to be deposited of patent machinery.

In additions to the models of machinery, it is proposed to embrace an exhibition of specimens of useful and elegant fabrics and of works of art, which manufacturers and artificers may place there for that purpose. It might too, embrace a cabinet of interesting minerals, which may be seen from time to time from the various parts of our widely extended country, with polished specimens of its beautiful marbles from their different locations, illustrating the geology and many of the natural resources of the country; and also a collection of Indian curiosities and antiquities, many of which are now in the possession of one of the departments, boxed up for want of some suitable place for exhibition.

In short, the halls of the patent office should present a national museum of the arts, and be a general repository of all the inventions and improvements in machinery and manufactures, of which our country can claim the honor; together with such other objects of interests as might conveniently and properly be placed under the superintendence of the commissioner. Such an institution, while it would be an object of just pride to every American, would have scarcely less in advancing and accelerating the progress of the useful arts and the improvement of our manufactures, than would even the encouragement afford by granting patents for inventions or establishing high tariffs of protection."

CANALS, RAIL ROADS, &c.

New York canals. The Albany Argus says that the following is a comparative statement of the number of boats which passed the lock three miles west of Schenectady, from the opening of the navigation to the first of August, in 1833, 1834, 1835 and 1836, viz:

	1833	1834	1835	1836
April,	566	1,013	1,281	505
May,	2,903	3,431	3,718	3,467
June,	3,079	2,943	3,509	4,085
July,	2,633	3,715	3,500	3,724
	9,181	10,102	12,008	11,781

The number of cribs of timber passing said lock for the same period, was, in 1834, 757 cribs, in 1835, 1,107 cribs, and in 1836, only 434 cribs.

Notwithstanding the decrease in the number of lockages, the tolls have increased, as before stated, more than 33,000 dollars. There has been an increase in the quantity of merchandise cleared at Albany, of 3,893 tons. There has also been an increase of the quantity of flour arrived at Albany, of 57,288 barrels—of lumber, 10,700,000 feet—of wheat, 115,000 bushels—of pork, 3,400 barrels—of beef, 33,463 barrels—of ashes, 6,847 barrels—of wool, 182,000 pounds—of butter, cheese and lard, 350,000 pounds—of flax and grass seeds, 200,000 pounds—of hops, 30,000 pounds—pig iron, 220,000 pounds—bar and pig lead, nearly 100,000 pounds, &c. The above increases are confined to articles which have arrived at Albany, comparing the business of the present with the preceding year.

Baltimore and Ohio rail road. From the Baltimore Gazette we learn, that while the receipts for travelling on the Baltimore and Ohio rail road, since the beginning of April last, exceed those of the last year during the same months by about fifty per cent. the receipts for freight during the months of April and May of the present year were less by ten per cent. than those of the last year. The receipts for passengers were as follows for the months of April, May and July in each year.

	Receipts in 1835.	in 1836.
For April,	$7,307 37	$11,755 51
May,	8,356 18	12,323 53
July,	10,512 52	15,149 92
	26,176 07	39,233 96
		26,176 07

Increased receipts, $13,057 96

From this statement it appears, that the receipts for travelling have increased since last year nearly fifty per cent. The receipts for freight in each year were—in 1835.	in 1836.

For April,	$18,357 05	$17,650 98
For May,	19,618 14	16,598 23
	37,975 19	23,249 21
	23,249 21

Deficiency $3,725 98

This falling off in the amount of freight, is attributed by the Gazette, in some measure, to the reduced rate of charges made for transportation on the Chesapeake and Ohio canal, which took effect in the beginning of July, 1835—and this opinion is confirmed by the fact, that the amount received for freight on the rail road in July last year was only $9,081 40—while in July last the amount was $10,441 86.

We see it stated that since the completion of the rail road from Utica to Schenectady, three lines of canal packets have been discontinued.

Sodus canal. The Ithaca N. Y. Journal says it is now placed beyond all doubt that this project of connecting Cayuga lake with Lake Ontario, by a canal sufficiently large for the passage of steamboats and schooners, will be carried into full execution within two or three years at the outside. The length of the canal is only twenty-two miles, and the water power which it will create at its termination at Sodus bay, will be sufficient of itself to pay all the expenses of construction, through so favorable a route.

During the week ending on the 27th instant, the tolls on the public works of Pennsylvania amounted to about $25,000. As an evidence of the active trade prosecuted on these works, the fact is cited that the tolls taken at the office at Columbia, since the 1st of April last, to the 20th inst. exceeded in amount the tolls taken the whole of the last fiscal year, at that office. It is added that the fall business has opened with spirit, and promises a prosperous trade.

The total receipts from tolls by the Schuylkill Navigation company this season, up to the 10th instant are $283,126. During the present season, up to the 18th instant, the number of boats which descended the Schuylkill with coal was 4,831, carrying 22,804 tons of anthracite and 965 tons of bituminous coal. So important has the coal trade on the Schuylkill river become, that a subscription has been opened, and a large amount of stock taken, for the purpose of building one or more steamboats to tow sea vessels up and down that river. A gentleman of this city, whose business carried him to the Schuylkill side of Philadelphia during a recent visit, informs us that he counted one hundred and fourteen vessels, including a ship and several brigs, lying there for coal freights. [Balt. American.]

Harlem rail road tunnel. This stupendous undertaking, it is expected, will be completed in about six weeks. The tunnel is already through the mountain 475 feet on the north side, and 60 feet on the south, and 60 feet more remains to be cut before the workmen meet. This tunnel, when completed, will be the largest, though not the longest, in the world, and cut through rock of as hard and firm a texture as can any where be found. The open cuts on either side of the tunnel are almost terrific to gaze at from the edge of the summit. They are through the solid rock, and that on the north side is 55 feet deep. The work is prosecuted under the direction of Mr. Rutter, the able and skilful superintendent, night and day. When completed, and connected with the adjoining scenery, it will form one of the grandest and most romantic sights to be found on the face of the globe.

[N. Y. Times.]

Chesapeake and Ohio canal. We learn from the Williamsport Banner, that the board of directors of the Chesapeake and Ohio canal company, returned to that place on Wednesday the 24th ult. from their explorations westward, and proceeded thence, on the same day, in the canal packet for the District. The board purpose to renew their visit in that quarter, in October next. The Banner states that the work now under contract on the line of the canal, is progressing favorably. There had been thus far it appears, some difficulty on account of scarcity of hands, but the influx expected with the approach of cool weather will do away that difficulty. Thus far the health of the operatives on the canal line had been uninterrupted.

Great performance. The new locomotive engine "George Washington," built by Wm. Norris, late of this city, for the Columbia rail road, drew over the road on Tuesday last, a train of 24 burthen cars, weighing 123 tons, weight of engine and tender not included. This performance is reported by the officers on the road as the best ever made over the same—stands unequalled both in this country and in England—taking into consideration the numerous steep grades and abrupt curves on said road.

[Philadelphia Nat. Gaz.]

POLITICS OF THE DAY.

L. Paynter, esq. recently nominated a candidate for congress by the Van Buren convention of the county of Philadelphia, gave that body the following pledge before he received the nomination.

PLEDGE. I am opposed to the United States bank, whether as chartered by congress or the legislature of the state; it has been put upon us by treachery and dishonesty, against the decided and expressed wishes of the people.

I deem Jesse R. Burden unworthy a seat in any representative body. I have ever advocated the principles and cause of democracy, so nobly sustained by Andrew Jackson; and in whatever situation I may be placed by the votes of the people, I pledge myself to support those principles or resign.

L. PAYNTER.

August 22, 1836.

John Fisher, esqr. of Westminster, Frederick county, Md. one of the Van Buren candidates for the office of elector of the state senate, published the following in the Westminster "Carrolltonian," in reply to certain categories addressed to him in the "Political Examiner."

From the Westminster Carrolltonian.

To "A REFORMER," in the Examiner.

I was brought out before the people of Frederick county, as an elector for senate, contrary to my wishes, and as I am now before the people, declare my determination not to be catechised by any person.

JOHN FISHER.

THE PROGRESS OF STEAM.

From the extent of our coast, the number of our navigable rivers and lakes, and the "go ahead" character of our population, it is evident that steamboats have a special adaptation to our wants; and as a matter of fact, we are, in this species of navigation, quite in advance of any other nation, quite in advance of any other nation on the globe. Not only are our steamboats, as a general remark, larger and more elegant, but their aggregate tonnage is greater. Its increase, for some years past, has been surprisingly rapid. In 1829 the whole steamboat tonnage of the United States was only 39,419 tons. At the end of 1834, beyond which the returns do not reach, it had increased to 122,274 tons, and is now doubtless at least 150,000 tons. This at an average of 300 tons to each boat, would give a total of five hundred steamboats. Their speed has increased almost as rapidly as their number. If we suppose each boat to carry on an average 100 passengers, the aggregate number would be 50,000. About this number, we presume, are constantly afloat in these moving palaces. In the vicinity of navigable waters, they supply to a great extent, the place formerly occupied by stages, private vehicles, and even legs. It may literally be said that where steamboat navigation is available, no man can afford to go on foot. The speed of the boats has increased almost as rapidly as their number. Fifteen or sixteen miles an hour, is now considered nothing extraordinary. Places which 25 years since were considered far distant, are brought so near together by this wonderful invention, that they are almost parts of the same town. The revolution which it has effected in business and property are very great. By the facility which it gives in the transportation of troops, ordnance and supplies, it adds immensely to a nation's defensive power; and not less perhaps, by the means it affords, of annoyance to a blockading squadron. It will in fact revolutionize the system of naval warfare. If the progress of steam is to continue in the ratio of the past ten years, it will require a forest per day to supply the consumption of fuel. In short, we see not but the expense of wood and the difficulty of obtaining it, would ultimately become so great as to diminish essentially the value of the invention. But fortunately, in this dilemma, we have another resource which is inexhaustible; the mountains of anthracite coal with which our country abounds. In a few of our boats this article is already used with success, and from its power of producing heat, we have no doubt it will ere long be preferred to wood. If there are any inconvenience or drawbacks attending its use, the inventive genius of our people will find a way to remove them. Much has already been accomplished in this respect, (chiefly by Dr. Nott), and the rest will be achieved in due time.

[N. Y. Jour. of Com.]

LIBERIA.

We inserted in our columns, some days since, an interesting letter from Liberia, written by an emigrant from Norfolk, Virginia. We give below another letter on the same subject, from an intelligent Mississippi emigrant, whose statements are equally favorable to the climate, healthiness and fertility of the colony. The letter was addressed to the rev. Mr. Butler, of Mississippi, and by him published in the Port Gibson Correspondent.

If the abolitionists, instead of agitating the country with their mischievous assumptions, and worse than vain abstractions, would employ their efforts in assisting to remove all the free and emancipated negroes to the land which nature has made their peculiar home, and which is their most suitable asylum, they would contribute at once to a work of practical philanthropy and public utility. The only effect of their present misguided efforts is to do harm to the negro, mischief to society and good to no body.

[National Intelligencer.]

Monrovia, April 24, 1836.

DEAR SIR: According to promise I undertake now to sit down to write you from my long-wished-for Africa; although I wrote you since I arrived, which I hope came to your hands, and that it, as well as this, may find you in the enjoyment of one of heaven's best blessings, health. I am glad to inform you that myself and family are well, and generally have enjoyed as good, if not better health than in the United States; indeed, our expedition has suffered very little with the fever of the climate, and the proportion of deaths among us has been less than if we were in America. I have been quite busy since we arrived in building, as well as in settling my farm, and I honestly believe that I shall be well repaid for my labors. I assure you, rev. sir, that I do truly thank my God and my kind friends who directed my feet to this land of liberty, together with its concomitant blessings. We have, although a few privations to undergo, many of nature's blessings, and I do expect in a few years to be able to say that we do then live in a land of unrivalled plenty and luxury, and, what's most cheering, we enjoy so many religious privileges. We have truly a goodly heritage; all we want here is proper men with a little beginning, and this place will convince the designing cavillers in America that we are not what they represented us to be. Although we have not as yet work animals, yet I have 8 acres of corn, some sugar cane, &c. planted. I intend to plant some cotton, which, when once planted, will bear for several years.

We want some of your good seed corn, cow peas, &c. However, they will do better after a few years. If an expedition comes from your part, you will confer a favor on us to send us a few such seed, &c. Gloster Simpson and family are quite well. His daughter Rhoda is just married. He has a thriving farm adjoining mine: our children are all going to school. I send you a few Liberia Heralds. I would be much gratified if you would send me a few of your Port Gibson papers, and any others. The health of this place since Christmas, has been better than most parts of America. Out of a population, in Monrovia, of near 1,400, we had but four deaths. The expedition from Louisiana has not lost one as yet. The expedition from Savannah lost 4 in eight months—3 children and one adult. If emigrants come over with means to render themselves comfortable, they are apt to do well. Emigrants ought to bring the kind of provisions which they have been most accustomed to with them. The thermometer ranges here from 72 to 87. I have more to write, but I must stop.

I have the honor, dear sir, of being your obedient servant,

DAVID MOORE.

WOODEN PAVEMENT.

From the New York Express.

The success which the experiment of paving a part of Broadway with wood, has met with, has brought in a flood of letters from all parts of the country, demanding information. To obviate the necessity of demanding further information, we have been furnished with a letter from the street commissioners, which our exchange papers in the different cities will find interesting to their readers:

SIR: Agreeably to your request, I have prepared the following statement in relation to the pavement of wood in Broadway.

The wood pavement in Broadway is composed of sawed blocks of hemlock. The blocks are twelve inches deep, of a hexagonal form, and cut from a circle of nine inches in diameter.

In the experiment three different kinds of foundation were used in one, the ordinary pavement of round stones; in the second one, of flag stones, four inches thick; in the third, the earth was excavated to the depth of two feet, and a layer of broken stone, such as is used in Macadamizing, was spread to the depth of one foot. On each of these foundations the blocks were placed; a coating of tar and pitch was applied, and over this, while yet warm, was spread a layer of gravel.

The cost per square yard of the wood pavement was about $2 50; the price of each block being 7 cents, requiring 23 to each square yard.

I am of opinion that future experiments will show, that pavements of wood can be done at much less cost than in these experiments. I believe that blocks may be obtained for 4 cents each, and that expensive foundations may be dispensed with.

In future experiments, it is our intention to employ square blocks, instead of hexagonal ones, and to form the pavement by two modes, as follows, viz:

1. To excavate to a sufficient depth, and spread a layer of gravel one foot deep; ram this well, and cover the surface with two inch boards; tar and pitch them, and set in the blocks; after which give the whole a coat of tar to fill up the seams.

2. The same as the preceding, omitting the boards and placing the blocks directly upon the gravel.

The advantages derived, or expected to be derived, by using blocks of wood in place of stone, are their adaptation to a smooth and uniform surface, and in streets of much travel, their greater durability.

In Broadway, stone pavement requires constant repairs, which are not only attended with expense, but found to be exceedingly inconvenient from the frequent interruption of vehicles. As far as our experiment has shown, these difficulties will be obviated by block pavement, while it continues undecayed, as the blocks are not subject to derangement.

The only question now to be settled to determine the expediency of using this kind of pavement extensively, is the durability of the wood—this, time alone will determine. It is supposed that it will last about eight years.

The wood makes a beautiful and clean pavement, and is pleasant to ride upon and free from noise.

Your's respectfully,

JOHN EWEN, jr. street commissioner.

NEW GRANADA.

From the Globe.

We have received a Bogata Gazette of the 25th of June, containing a notice that the offer of col. Biddle, and those associated with him, for making a communication across the Isthmus of Panama, has been accepted. Several of the natives, men of capital and of high standing, are concerned in the undertaking, and have subscribed largely, we understand. Some of the English, also, resident at Bogata, have become interested, and through them it is to be presumed that English capital will be liberally applied to the great and interesting work. American capitalists will no doubt, give their assistance too; and we cannot but think that, considered as a mere speculation, the stock will be as good, or better, than of some of the five hundred land companies, (more or less), that are now moving heaven and earth, and all the paper mills, to raise the means for monopolizing the public domain; leaving to the honest and industrious cultivator no part of it but what they consider too poor and unpromising to be turned to any profit, now or hereafter.

The distance across the Isthmus, that will require a canal or rail road, is about twenty miles; and the locality is not by any means of an unfavorable character, and presents no obstacles that may not be overcome easily and expeditiously, and without any very extraordinary outlay. Much greater difficulties are encountered and vanquished continually in the United States; and really, to suffer this narrow neck of land, which divides two great oceans, and interposes a barrier to commercial enterprise, to remain with no better means of communication than a mule path, is a disgrace to the canal digging, road making spirit of the times, and ought to be either wiped or dug away at once. And as the matter has been taken in hand by the New Granadians, North Americans and English, we think it probable that in less than three years a journey across the Isthmus will be performed in about the same time and the same manner that it is now performed across the state of Delaware by canal or rail road.

The government of New Granada seems much disposed to encourage every undertaking calculated to be beneficial to the country, and grants of various kinds have been made upon very liberal terms. Though the population is increasing very rapidly, and will continue to do so as long as there is peace, yet the government gives every encouragement to the emigration of foreigners, and pursues that enlightened policy pursued by the United States, of offering to the people of other countries every inducement to become part and parcel of us and of guarantying to emigrants protection, equal rights and citizenship.

GRINDING OLD GARMENTS INTO NEW.

Sir George Head, in his Tour through the Manufacturing Districts, gives the following account of a new trade carried on at Dewsbury; literally tearing in pieces fusty old rags, collected from Scotland, Ireland, and the Continent, by a machine called a "devil," till a substance very like the original wool is produced, this by the help of a small addition of new wool, is respun and manufactured into sundry useful coarse articles, such as the wadding which Messrs. Stulze and Co. introduce within the collars of their fashionable coats, and various descriptions of druggist, horse-sheeting, &c. The trade or occupation of the owner, his life and habits, or the filthiness and antiquity of the garment itself, oppose no bar to this wonderful progress of regeneration; whether from the scarecrow or the gibbet, it makes no difference; so that, according to the transmutation of human affairs, it no doubt frequently does happen, without figure of speech or metaphor, that the identical garment to-day exposed to the sun and rain in a Kentish cherry-orchard, or saturated with tobacco-smoke on the "back of a beggar in a pothouse" is doomed in its turn, "perfusis liquidis odoribus," to grace the swelling collar, or add dignified proportion to the chest of the dandy.—Old flannel petticoats, serge bunting, are not only unravelled and brought to their original thread by the claws of the devil, but this machine, by the way, simply a series of cylinder armed with iron hooks, effectually, it is said, pulls to pieces and separates the pitch-mark of the sheep's back—which latter operation really is a job worthy of the very devil himself.

Those who delight in matters of speculation have here an ample field, provided they feel inclined to extend their researches on this doctrine of the transmigration of coats; for their imagination would have room to range in unfettered flight, even from the blazing galaxy of a regal drawing room down to the night cellars and lowest haunts of London, Germany, Poland, Portugal, &c. as well as probably even to other countries visited by the plague. But as such considerations would only tend to put a man out of conceit with his own coat, or afflict some of my fair friends with an antipathy to flannel altogether, they are much better let alone. * * It is really extraordinary to observe, on taking a portion of shoddy in the hand as it comes from the mill, the full extent of its transmutation—how perfectly the disentanglement of the filament has been effected, although, notwithstanding its freshened appearance, time and temperance must have inevitably brought it nearer to the period of ultimate decay.

[London paper.]

GIRAFFES.

Several of these rare, beautiful and curious animals have recently been conveyed to England, and are now exhibited at the Zoological Gardens in London. The manner in which they were procured is thus detailed in the memoir addressed by M. Hirbault to the society:

"Having learnt, on my arrival at Malta, that you were desirous of information on the subject of the four giraffes which you have intrusted to my care, I regard it as a duty to transmit to you a short statement, by which you will become aware of the difficulties that I encountered in obtaining and preserving for the society these interesting animals, which are now, I hope, altogether out of danger.

"Instructed by col. Campbell, his majesty's consul general in the Levant, and desirous of rendering available for the purposes of the Zoological society the knowledge which I had acquired by twelve years' experience in travelling in the interior of Africa, I quitted Cairo on the 15th of April, 1834. After sailing up the Nile as far as Wadi Halfa, (the second cataract), I took camels, and proceeded to Dabbat, a province of Dongolah, where, on the 14th of July, I started for the descent of Kordofan.

"Being perfectly acquainted with the locality and on friendly terms with the Arabs of the country, I attached them to me still more by the desire of profit. All were desirous of accompanying me in my pursuit of the giraffes, which, up to that time, they had hunted solely for the sake of its flesh, which they eat, and for its skin, from which they make bucklers and sandals. I availed myself of the emulation which prevailed among the Arabs, and as the season was far advanced and favorable, I proceeded immediately to the south west of Kordofan.

"It was one of the 15th of August that I saw the first two giraffes. A rapid chase, on horses accustomed to the fatigues of the desert, put us in possession, at the end of three hours, of the largest of the two: the mother of one of those now in my charge. Unable to take her alive, the Arabs killed her with blows of the sabre, and, cutting her to pieces, carried the meat to the head quarters, which we had established in a wooded situation; an arrangement necessary for our own comforts and to secure pasture for the camels of both sexes which we had brought with us in aid of the object of our chase. We deferred until the morrow the pursuit of the young giraffe, which my companions assured me they would have no difficulty in again discovering. The Arabs are very fond of the flesh of this animal. I partook of their repast. The live embers were quickly covered with slices of the meat, which I found to be excellent eating.

On the following day, the 16th August, the Arabs started at daybreak in search of the young one, of which we had lost sight not far from our camp. The sandy soil of the desert is well adapted to afford indications to a hunter, and in a very short time we were on the track. We followed with rapidity and in silence, cautious to avoid alarming the creature, while it was yet at a distance from us. Unworn myself, and anxious to act in the same manner as the Arabs, I followed them impatiently, and at nine o'clock in the morning I had the happiness to find myself in possession of the giraffe. A premium was given to the hunter whose horse had first come up with the animal, and this reward is the more merited as the laborious chase is pursued in the midst of brambles and thorny trees.

"Possessed of this giraffe, it was necessary to rest some time, in order to render it sufficiently tame. During this period an Arab constantly holds it at the end of a long cord. By degrees it becomes accustomed to the presence of man, and takes a little nourishment. To furnish milk for it I had brought with me female camels. It became gradually reconciled to its condition, and was soon willing to follow, in short stages, the route of our caravan.

"This first giraffe, captured at four day's journey to the south west of Kordofan, will enable us to form some judgment as to its probable age at present, as I have observed its growth and its mode of life. When it first came into my hands, it was necessary to insert a finger into its mouth in order to deceive it into a belief that the nipple of its dam was there: then it sucked freely. According to the opinion of the Arabs and to the length of time that I had it, this giraffe cannot, at the utmost, be more than nineteen months old. Since I have had it, its size has fully doubled.

"The first run of the giraffe is exceedingly rapid. The swiftest horse, if unaccustomed to the desert, could not come up with it unless with extreme difficulty. The Arabs accustom their courser to hunger and to fatigue; milk generally serves them for food—and gives them power to continue their exertion during a very long run. If the giraffe reaches a mountain, it passes with rapidity; its feet, which are like those of a goat, endow it with the dexterity of that animal; it bounds over ravines with incredible power—horses cannot in such situations compete with it.

"The giraffe is fond of wooded country. The leaves of trees are its principal food. Its conformation allows of its reaching their tops. The one of which I have previously spoken as having been killed by the Arabs, measured twenty-one French feet in height, from the ears to the hoofs. Green herbs are also very agreeable to this animal; but its structure does not admit of its feeding on them in the same manner as our domestic animals, such as the ox and the horse. It is obliged to straddle widely; its two fore feet are gradually stretched widely apart from each other, and its neck being then bent into a semicircular form, the animal is thus enabled to collect the grass. But on the instant that any noise interrupts its repast, it raised itself with rapidity, and has recourse to immediate flight.

"The giraffe eats with great delicacy, and takes its food leaf by leaf, collecting them from the trees by means of its long tongue. It rejects the thorns, and in this respect differs from the camel. As the grass on which it is now fed is cut for it, it takes the upper part only, and chews it until it perceives that the stem is too coarse for it. Great care is required for its preservation, and especially great cleanliness.

"It is extremely fond of society, and is very sensible. I have observed one of them shed tears when it no longer saw its companions or the persons who were in the habit of attending it.

"I was so fortunate as to collect five individuals at Kordofan; but the cold weather of December, 1834, killed four of them in the desert on the route to Dongolah, my point of departure for Bedbah. One only was preserved; this was the first specimen that I obtained, and the one of which I have already spoken. After 22 days in the desert, I reached Dongolah on the 6th of January, 1835.

"Unwilling to return to Cairo without being really useful to the society, and being at Dongolah, I determined on resuming the pursuit of giraffes. I remained for three months in the desert, crossing it in all directions. Arabs in whom I could confide accompanied me, and our course was through districts destitute of every thing. We had to dread the Arabs of Darfour, of which country I saw the first mountain. We were successful in our researches. I obtained three giraffes, smaller than the one I already possessed. Experience suggested to me the means of preserving them.

"Another trial was reserved for me, that of transporting the animals, by bark, from Wadi Halfa to Cairo, Alexander and Malta. Providence has enabled me to surmount all difficulties. The most that they suffered was at sea, during their passage, which lasted twenty-four days, with the weather very tempestuous.

"I arrived at Malta on the 21st of November. We were there detained in quarantine for twenty-five days, after which, through the kind care of Mr. Bourchier, these valuable animals were placed in a good situation, where nothing is wanting for their comfort. With the view of preparing them for the temperature of the country to which they will eventually be removed, I have not thought it advisable that they should be clothed. During the last week the cold has been much greater than they have hitherto experienced; but they have, thanks to the kindness of Mr. Bourchier, every thing that can be desired.

EXTRACTS FROM FOREIGN PAPERS.

The name of Napoleon, though now only on the records of history, bears about it still an irresistible charm:

Tuesday was the second day's sale of the effects of the late Mr. Barry O'Meara. Most of the articles produced good prices, and all the undoubted relics of the emperor Napoleon sold extremely well. A few lines in the emperor's hand-writing sold, after much competition, for eleven guineas; a lock of his hair for 2l. 10s.; one of his teeth, extracted by Mr. O'Meara, for seven guineas and a half; a few articles of plate, formerly the property of the emperor, sold for about six times their intrinsic value.

In the article "France," of the Dictionnaire Geographique Universel, now publishing in Paris, by a geographical society, the following statement is given of the capital of the French soil and of the revenues of the empire: The arable lands, at a valuation of 30 francs the hectare, are worth 13,690,800,000 francs; the woods, vineyards, meadows and other lands, 2,828,800,000; ponds and marshes, 34,920,000; rustic buildings, 3,000,000,000; cattle, valued at the lowest price, 16,703,941,676; poultry, 51,600,000 head, at 1 franc, 51,600,000; swine, 3,900,000 head, at 40 francs, 156,000,000; asses, 2,400,000 head, at 25 francs, 60,000,000; farming utensils, 8,000,000,000; total, 39,522,061,676 francs. To this may be added the annual receipts—from manufactures, 1,820,102,000; agriculture, 4,678,708,000; colonies, 40,380,000; foreign countries, 346,020,000; in warehouse, 52,000,000; total, 6,987,210,000 francs. The produce of the taxes of every class is 924,410,000 francs.

The Paris Moniteur publishes the comparative view of the revenue for the first six months of this year, with the same period of 1834 and 1835. The indirect taxes have produced 297,698,000 francs, which is nearly twenty-three millions and a half more than the first six months of 1834, and nearly 12 millions more than the first six months of 1835. The only diminution has been in the duty on salt; all the others have increased. The duties on customs and navigation exceed by 2,231,000 francs the receipt of the corresponding half of 1835, notwithstanding a diminution of 2,069,000 francs in the duties on colonial and foreign sugars. To this loss of 2,069,000 francs must be added 1,700,000 for the increase in bounties in the exportation of refined sugar for the first six months of 1836, so that the loss on sugars for the first six months of 1836, is about 3,800,000 francs.

Conveyance of newspapers. The bill to consolidate and amend the laws relating to the conveyance of newspapers by the post, enacts:—

1. That all newspapers sent by the general post within the United Kingdom shall go free.
2. That all newspapers, sent through the general post, and delivered by the penny or twopenny post, and vice versa, go free.
3. That newspapers sent by the twopenny post only pay 1d. and may be sent within post towns at the like rate.
4. That newspapers sent from the United Kingdom by packets to the colonies, shall go free; as also newspapers sent by packets from the colonies to the United Kingdom.
5. That newspapers may be sent from any colony to another colony, via United Kingdom, by packet boat, free of postage.
6. That newspapers sent from the United Kingdom to the colonies by private ships shall pay 1d.
7. That newspapers brought into the United Kingdom from the colonies by private ships shall pay 1d.
8. That newspapers to or from foreign countries shall pay 2d; but that if any foreign state receives or send newspapers to or from the United Kingdom free of duty, then no duty shall be charged on newspapers to or from such state, if by packet boat; or if by other vessels, then only 1d.
9. That 1d be paid masters of private ships for each newspaper.
10. That newspapers be sent without a cover, or in a cover open at the sides, without writing or marks.
11. That they be put into the post office within seven days after date, if going out of the United Kingdom.
12. That the postmaster general shall be authorized to search and to charge treble postage, &c. The sender to be liable to treble duty, on attempt to evade the duty of postage.

By this act it is not compulsory to send newspapers through the post, and newspapers redirected are to be forwarded free of postage, if not opened.

English and French post office treaty. By the new arrangements between England and France, letters may be sent from one country to the other without paying any part of the postage in advance, or the whole postage may be paid. The English postage on such letters is also reduced nearly one-half.

Importance of the China trade. The tonnage engaged by the European and American nations to China, might, before the opening of the trade with Great Britain, have been estimated in round numbers at 85,000; but, in the very first year of the emancipated commerce, a number of shipping, nearly equal to this amount, cleared out from Canton for the United Kingdom alone. The native craft, that is, the junks carrying on foreign trade, is supposed to be about 80,000 tons; but the value of their cargoes, consisting for the most part of coarse manufactures and raw produce, is small, compared with those of the European and American shipping. From a tolerable intimate acquaintance with it, however, we are not disposed to estimate its value at more than $20,000,000. This added to the American and European commerce, will raise the value of the whole foreign trade of the empire to about $90,000,000, or, in round numbers, to nearly 20,000,000 sterling. This shows the great capacity of that country for foreign trade—which we repeat, is yet in its very infancy; it shows also the vast difference between the European and those even of the best governed of the Asiatic nations; for the estimate quoted, considerable as it seems, is, after all, not equal to more than one-fifth part of the foreign trade of the United Kingdom, of which the population scarcely amounts to one-fifteenth of that of China. [Edinburgh Cabinet Library, Historical and Descriptive account of China, vol. 8.]

According to a report from Dr. Pariset and Dr. Scipion Pinel, addressed to the council general of the hospitals, it appears that 458 insane female patients were received into the Salpêtrière during the first quarter of the present year. Of these, 25 were furious maniacs, 21 lunatics, or periodically mad, 17 with general paralysis and slight incoherence of ideas, 7 melancholy maniacs, 3 with religious monomania, 11 suicides, 3 homicides, 9 idiots and 11 epileptic patients. The two homicides were both mothers, who had attempted to kill their own children. The ages of the patients admitted were, for the most part, between 35 and 40 years. During the quarter, 76 patients were cured and set at liberty. The cause of insanity in these patients were in order of frequency, distress of mind, drunkenness, consequences of child-birth, jealousy, religious enthusiasm, old age, vicious habits and critical time of life. The average duration of treatment and cure was 55 days. There were 34 deaths, the greater part of which were of old, paralytic and infirm women.

The Frankfort journals state that a general meeting of the shareholders in the intended canal for uniting the Danube and the Marne was held on the 1st inst. at the villa of M. Rothschild. Subscribers from Munich, Kelheim-on-the-Danube, Nuremberg Bamberg, Aschaffenburg and other distant places, attended, and those of England and Belgium were represented by authorized agents. The count de Giech came from Wurzburg, as commissioner of the king of Bavaria. The success of the undertaking appeared to be certain, and it was resolved that it should be immediately commenced.

EFFECTS OF EMANCIPATION IN THE WEST INDIES.

From the New York Evening Post.

The results of the British emancipation bill, in a pecuniary point of view, are truly surprising. To the astonishment of even the most sanguine friends of abolition, the plantations of the colonies are more productive, more easily managed, and accepted as security for higher sums on mortgage than ever they were under the slave system. the following is an official statement of the comparative quantities of the great staples of West Indian produce exported from Georgetown (Demerara) and Berbice, in the first quarter of the present year, and the three preceding years:

From Georgetown, (Demerara)— Average exports of the 1st quarter of the three years preceding emancipation.		Export during corresponding quarter of present yr.	Increase since emancipation.	Decrease since em'n.
Sugar—Hogsheads	12,248	14,742	2,494
Tierces	68	779	711
Casks	1,379	1,099		208
Rum—Punchoons	5,510	5,510
Hogsheads	1,136	1,408	272
Barrels	301	358	57
Molasses—Hhds.	8,036	8,786	750
Coffee—Pounds	496,838	602,700	105,862
Cotton—Bales	805	718		87
Being an increase on the whole of about 20 per ct.

From Berbice—Average exports of the 1st quarter of the three years before emancipation.		Exports during corresponding quarter of present yr.	Increase since emancipation.	Decrease since em'n.
Sugar—Hogsheads	2,638	4,347	1,709
Tierces	200	444	244
Barrels	160	401	241
Rum—Punchoons	1,069	1,579	501
Hogsheads	1,526	248		1,278
Barrels	5	17	8
Molasses—Hhds.	797	1,308	511
Coffee—Pounds	286,500	596,400	309,900
Cotton—Bales	334	374	40

Being an increase on the whole of about 50 per cent. and on coffee upwards of 100 per centum!

The above statements are taken from the Standard, an English journal, which predicted nothing but ruin to the planters from the abolition of slavery.

The hundred million indemnity thus appears to have been a compensation of a novel kind, a compensation for being made richer.

TRIAL AND EXECUTION OF ALIBEAUD.

[In the "REGISTER" of the 20th ult. we briefly noticed the execution of Alibaud, who attempted to assassinate the king of the French. The following particulars of his trial and execution are from London dates recently received at Boston.]

This trial took place in the court of peers, on Friday, the 8th of July. Shortly after ten o'clock, the prisoner was introduced into the court, in custody of five municipal guards, two of whom held him under the arms, and led him to the box prepared for him. The prisoner walked to the bar with a firm step. His carriage was erect, though his face was pale, and his eyes cast down. As his advocate advanced, he rose and shook hands with him. The peers entered immediately afterwards. The president asked the accused the preliminary questions; to which the prisoner answered, that his name was Alibaud Lewis, about twenty-six years, and that his birth place was Nismes. The remaining answers of the prisoner were candid and animated. He attempted not to deny for one moment the motives by which he had been actuated. He confessed, with the calmness of one who had long contemplated and made up his mind to the situation in which he then stood, and that he had procured the cane gun, practiced with it, and bought the poignard, all with a view to take the life of the king on the first opportunity. His object, he said, had been to arrive at a republic, by a general overthrow of every thing. His project, he said, he had first conceived at Barcelona; which place he left for the purpose of taking the life of the king. Several witnesses, who had been on intimate terms with the prisoner, were called. It appears that the unhappy man has been a soldier in the 15th infantry, a shopman, and latterly, a commercial traveller. All the witnesses agree in giving him an excellent character. He was described as being honest, brave, generous and modest. On the first day the court adjourned at half past five. They resumed at a quarter to 11 o'clock on Saturday. He again exhibited the utmost composure of demeanor.

The appeal being concluded, the president observed that, all the witnesses having been heard on the preceding day, it now remained with the attorney general to present his requisitory.

M. Martin Du Mond accordingly rose, and said that he might abstain from adducing further proofs of the guilt of the prisoner, his avowal being sufficient for his conviction. M. Martin then blamed the conduct of M. Corbiere in the affair. He regretted that the legislation did not allow him to order the arrest and prosecution of that witness for not revealing Alibaud's intention to the magistrates. M. M. then endeavored to fasten on the factions, as well as on the miserable condition of the regicide, the crime he had perpetrated.

M. Ledru, Alibaud's advocate, said that when he was chosen by the president of the court for that difficult task, he had at first hesitated, but having at last accepted, he resolved to do his duty to the fullest extent. When he repaired to Alibaud's cell, he found him calm, and reading over the bill of indictment. Alibaud greeted him, and told him that he was guilty, and could not be defended: "But," said he, "my head alone will not suffice for my persecutors: they have pryed into my whole life: they must have my honor and that of my family; it is that and that alone you must defend." M. Ledru then read a note Alibaud had drawn out for his defence, &c. He was born of poor but honest parents. One of his uncles had received a sword of honor in the armies of the republic—the star of the brave had been placed on his breast by Napoleon, by whom he had been appointed commandant of cavalry. M. Ledru related a number of facts creditable to Alibaud. On two occasions he had saved, once a young girl, and another time a fellow soldier, who were on the point of drowning. In Strasbourg he defended alone three of his comrades assailed by a crowd of people, by whom they were being killed. The advocate concluded by an appeal in favor of the prisoner to the clemency of the court.

Alibaud afterwards rose and read, in a firm voice, his defence, which went to clear his honor. He condemned, in energetic terms, the conduct of the attorney general, who had, he said, debased himself by the vile manner in which he had conducted the prosecution against him. He then represented that the king had violated all his oaths and promises, that he was a tyrant, that the people had a right to put him out of the way. Alibaud then went on to justify the doctrine of regicides, which he maintained was a right invested in the people. The president, however, finding he was going on too far, ordered him to sit down, and refused to allow him to proceed with his defence. In vain did the prisoner insist on continuing; he was taken by two of the municipal guards, and forced to sit down. He anew protested against the violence offered him, and handing his manuscript to his counsel, he said, I confide to you this document. The president ordered it to be put into the hands of the officers of the court. M. Ledru, after some hesitation, gave it to M. Sajou, who handed it to the recorder.

M. Boujour, the second counsel of Alibeaude, rose and recommended his client to the humanity of the court, which Alibeaude disclaimed with indignation. The president asked Alibeaude if he had any thing to add to his defence?

The prisoner begged to be allowed to continue his MS.

The president said, that, if he abstained from the expression of regicide sentiments, he might go on with his defence.

The paper was then placed in the prisoner's hand, who, skipping over a few leaves, commenced reading anew. No sooner, however, had he read a few lines, in which he ascribed to the king all the sufferings of the people, and contended that it was a praiseworthy act to drain their source, by destroying their author, than the president interrupted him, and ordered him to sit down. As he was paying no attention to the president's injunction, but was proceeding with his MS. two municipal guards seized and compelled him to obey.

The president then announced, that the public debates were closed, and that the court would retire into the council room to deliberate. He next ordered the accused to be conveyed back to prison.

Two soldiers took him under the arms and led him off. On his way to the door, Alibeaude shook hands with a young lady and several other persons seated in the passage. He walked with a firm pace, and betrayed no symptoms of emotion.

As soon as the prisoner had been removed the court rose, and, at a quarter to one, retired into the council room.

At two o'clock the court returned, and the president, in the presence of the prisoner, proceeded to read the sentence. Louis Alibeaude was found guilty of having committed an attempt against the king's life, on the 25th of June last, and for that crime was condemned to the punishment of parricides. He was to walk to the scaffold barefooted, in his shirt, his head covered with a black veil, and the sentence to be read to him on reaching the place of execution, in presence of the people. He was, moreover, condemned to pay the costs of the trial—and to be executed as soon as the attorney general should think proper.

The Paris papers seem to say, that the speech must have made a great impression upon the peers, as the police agents were sent round to the several journals, forbidding its publication on peril of seizure of the papers. The Gazette de France and the Messenger both appeared without the speech; the latter having left a blank space intended for its insertion, and containing in its leading columns an energetic protest against this new violation of the charter. This threw the government into a fresh state of alarm. Messengers were sent round to make apologies, and the Moniteur was instructed to announce that the police agents had acted without the knowledge of the authorities. The trial created a wonderful sensation in Paris.

THE EXECUTION.

The execution of Alibeaude took place on Monday morning. The scaffold was erected between midnight and three o'clock. The troops on duty, consisting of four or five battalions of infantry, as many squadrons of cavalry, and several companies of the municipal guards, foot and horse, may be computed at thirty thousand men, besides a multitude of sergens de ville, by whom all the avenues to the Place St. Jacques was guarded; and the few persons who had obtained access to the Place were compelled to fall back. At two minutes before five, the prisoner arrived at the foot of the scaffold, the steps of which he ascended with a firm step. The prisoner was dressed simply in his shirt and trousers, his head enveloped in a black veil, which descended below his eyes. His feet were naked. He remained a few moments in conversation with his confessor, in prayer, at the foot of the scaffold, and was then seen to mount its steps firmly, but deliberately. The attending clergyman followed and stood by him while the sentence of the court was read—read—not in accordance with its own direction—"in the presence and in the hearing of the assembled people," but in the presence of the soldiers, by whom the people were removed and re-acted. This over, the executioner took off the veil from the prisoner's head. The latter exclaimed, "Farewell, my brave fellows." He was instantly seized by the executioner and his aids—made to stand on the ledge belonging to the plank—was strapped to it with the rapidity of thought—the plank descended—was pushed forward—the groove in which the neck is inclosed was too small, and, suffering from the pressure, Alibeaude uttered a slight shriek, which had scarcely escaped him, when the axe fell, and he was no more.

The mutilated remains of the wretched man were then placed in the usual receptacle—a huge oblong basket, and removed for interment to the cemetery of Mount Parnasse. The aids of the executioner poured several pails of water on the scaffold and on the pavement, while the executioner himself repaired to a wine shop, without the Barriere, to draw up his proces verbal. The guillotine was dismantled, and, with the scaffold, placed on the vehicle by which they had arrived, and at half-past five o'clock—that is precisely within half an hour from the moment of the execution—the guards, executioners and the horrible machinery of death had left the Place St. Jacques.

ARCTIC ENTERPRISE.

From the London United Service Journal.

Since the subject of northern research was last noticed in this Journal, the journey of capt. Back in quest of Ross, and the voyage of captain James Ross to search for the missing whalers, have added another deeply interesting page to the annals of Arctic enterprise. Both are alike creditable to this country and in the highest degree honorable to the British navy.

The journey of capt. Back—humane in its object, and admirable in its execution—is described with modesty and elegance. The author has long been known to the world as the intrepid companion of Franklin and Parry, and the sequel will show that he has fully justified an already high reputation.

It is unnecessary to remind the reader that in the year 1832 great alarm was felt throughout England respecting the fate of Ross and his companions, who had left this country for the polar regions in 1829. Capt. Back was travelling in Italy, but hearing of the general anxiety, and being of opinion that there was yet hope, returned immediately to England, and proffered his services, which were readily accepted, to conduct an expedition in quest of his unfortunate countrymen. Private individuals came forward to assist the government; and on the 17th of February, 1833, the commander sailed from Liverpool, accompanied by Dr. King and three other persons. Early in April they arrived at Montreal when, embarking in canoes, after a tedious and fatiguing inland navigation, and in spite of the inexpertness of the "mangeurs de lard," or greenhorns, who composed the crews, and of the mosquitoes that stung the whole party to madness, on the 8th of August they reached Fort Resolution on Great Slave Lake, the extreme station of the Hudson's Bay company, and the last outpost of civilization. Here commenced the plan which captain Back had been chiefly instrumental in forming, and on which he was directed by his instructions to act. It was to make preparations for passing the winter at the north eastern extremity of Great Slave Lake and to employ the previous autumn in endeavoring to ascertain the existence of the river Thlew-ee-chow, supposed, on very uncertain grounds, to take its rise somewhere contiguous to the lake, and to discharge its waters into the Polar Sea. It will be seen how judicious was the arrangement of this scheme, for not only did Back find the river in question, (now called after his name), but its course conveyed him to a spot at the debouchure, only fifty miles from the obelisk near the magnetic pole, that was erected by James Ross at the southern limit of his journey.

Embarking on the lake, and supplied with Indian guides, the expedition consisted of twenty-four persons, three only of whom, with Mr. King, had accompanied our traveller from England. The remainder consisted of four artillerymen, who had volunteered to accompany them at Montreal, of some experienced steersmen and voyageurs belonging to the Hudson's Bay company, and lastly of an Indian interpreter.

They were now in the country of the aboriginal tribes, whose character the commander has portrayed with much acuteness and infinite humor. Fickle and unsteady of purpose, they seem to be amiable and brave, their virtues as well as vices being the effect of impulse.

The descriptions of the discovery of the sources of Back's river is full of interest. Quitting the Slave Lake, under the uncertain guidance of Maufelly, an Indian, with great labor they effected the portage into the Cat Lake of Hearne. From thence he conducted them into Clinton Colden Lake; and eventually into one, which received the name of Aylmer. This seemed to be the head-water of the circumjacent inland seas, and great was the commander's anxiety respecting the event of his search.

"Twice he (Maufelly) went to adjacent heights to discover some object, which might remove his doubts; and the second time he returned with a light step, and a countenance betokening satisfaction and triumph. With renewed confidence he pointed to a bay from whence we might go to the Thlew-ee-chow (river Back), and on our landing turned to the interpreter, and showing him the well beaten tracks of the deer, exclaimed with a smile, that his old father loved to dwell on the feats he had performed there—"and though," added he, "I was but a child when I accompanied him, these places look familiar to me."

Shortly afterwards the commander himself, at some distance from the lake, discovered the object of his hopes and wishes. Crossing two rivulets, whose lively ripples ran due north, the thought occurred to him that these must be the feeders of the Thlew-ee-chow, and yielding to the pleasant emotion which discovers, "in the first bound of their transport, may be pardoned for indulging, I threw myself down," says he, "on the bank, and drank a hearty draught of the limpid water." A little rum had been reserved, which the bold travellers shared amongst them, in the midst of surrounding desolation.

Having ascertained that he was on the true track, he returned to the head of Great Slave Lake, where Mr. McLeod, an officer of the Hudson's Bay company, had commenced the building of a house, and where, in a short time, Dr. King with some of the party, which had separated at Cumberland house, arrived. The station received the name of Fort Reliance.

The preparations for the winter were admirable, and the account of the residence full of interest and amusement, though the description is heart rending of the sufferings which the improvident and famished Indians underwent during the severity of the winter. The party nearly starved themselves, in order to assist these wretched creatures, and the magnanimity of Mr. McLeod, in going to ascertain the fate of the main body of the tribe under Akaitcho, their friendly chief, is too striking not to be recorded. On the 18th of December, with a temperature 102° of Fahrenheit below the freezing point, did this humane and heroic person quit the shelter of the winter quarters. He soon wrote to say that the coldness of the weather had prevented the Indians from following the deer, but being a first rate rifle shot himself, he had, by his exertions, already assisted one party, and was on his way to visit another. During his absence the commander was occupied in making experiments on the intensity of the cold, but he had difficulty in recording the observations, as both ink and paint froze, with his table "as near the fire as he could bear the heat." On one occasion, after washing his face within three feet of the fire, his hair was clotted with ice before he had time to dry it.

On the 9th of February Mr. McLeod returned. The weather had made a visible alteration in his countenance, which had seven times been frost bitten; "nor was it to be wondered at, on such a wide unsheltered lake as he had been travelling over." Many Indians, he reported, had died of cold and starvation, and, but for his intervention, a whole family would have fallen victims, the unnatural monster of a father having abandoned them. Such instances of barbarity, however, appeared so abhorrent to the Indians themselves, that we may hope that they are of rare occurrence.

On the 23th of April news arrived that Ross and his companions had reached England. The announcement was received with joy that might have been expected; "and to me," says Back, "the intelligence was particularly gratifying, not only as verifying my previously expressed opinion, but as demonstrating the wisdom as well as the humanity of the course pursued by the promoters of our expedition, who had thereby rescued the British nation from an imputation of indifference which it was far from meriting. In the fulness of our hearts we assembled together, and humbly offered up our thanks to that merciful Providence which, in the beautiful language of scripture, hath said 'mine own will I bring again, as I did sometime from the depths of the sea.'"

The geographical and scientific object of the journey still remained to be performed; and the commander resolved, after reducing his party to the number of ten persons, to follow the course of the Back, as he hoped to the Polar Sea. Accordingly, on the 7th June, accompanied by Mr. King, and preceded by Mr. McLeod, who was to hunt before them and leave the produce "en cache," our intrepid travellers set out upon their journey; and on the 28th they picked up the boat that had been built for them by the carpenter of the expedition on Artillery or Cat Lake. The wood was found to be indifferent; and, when wet, was not supposed possible to carry her. "However, I trusted," said capt. Back, "to circumstances, my own resources, and the spirit and stamina of the crew, determining not to anticipate evil, or yield to fears that might never be realized."

On the 1st July they arrived at Musk Ox Rapid, the point at which they had stopped the year before, and the source of the river Back. Shortly afterwards they parted with Mr. McLeod, who returned to supply Fort Reliance with stores, and to make other arrangements for the next winter. It is unnecessary here to detail all the escapes and privations they endured in descending this tortuous and dangerous stream. The reader must refer to the book itself, which will amply repay the perusal. Suffice it to say, that passing the head of Coronation Gulf, at the distance of sixty miles, and that of Chesterfield inlet and Repulse bay, both within 90 miles—on the 31st of July they reached the salt waters of the Polar Sea. Five days before, they had fallen in with a party of Esquimaux, who were kindly disposed, and supplied some geographical information. At the mouth of the Back their further progress was arrested by the fields of drifting ice that occupied the great bay into which the river discharges itself. After waiting fifteen days upon these rugged and utterly desolate shores in the hopes of the sea becoming clear—on the 15th August the commander resolved to return home.

"I had," he says, "for some time cherished the notion of dividing the party, leaving four to protect the boat and property, whilst the remainder with Mr. King, would have accompanied me on a land journey towards Point Turnagain; but this scheme was completely frustrated by the impracticability of carrying any weight on a soil in which at every step we sunk half-leg deep; destitute of shrubs or moss for fuel and almost without water; over which we must have travelled for days to have made even a few miles of longitude, and where, finally if sickness had overtaken any one, his fate would have been inevitable. Thus circumstanced, therefore, and reflecting on the long and dangerous stream combining all the bad features of the worst rivers in the country—that we had to retrace, the hazards of the falls and rapids, and the slender hope which remained of our attaining even a single mile farther, I felt that I had no choice, and, assembling the men, I informed them that the period fixed by his majesty's government for my return had arrived; and that it only now remained to unfurl the British flag, and salute it with three cheers in honor of his most gracious majesty, whilst his royal name should be given to this portion of America by the appellation of William the fourth's land." The intimation was received with extreme satisfaction; and the loyal band performed the ceremony, with the cheering accompaniment of a glass of grog.

On the 31st August, opposite Chesterfield inlet they fell in with another party of Esquimaux—probably from that place; but as time was precious, they could allow themselves no communication with them. The ascent of the river was more dangerous and difficult than its descent: but surmounting all obstacles, the party, on the 17th September, came up with Mr. McLeod near the sources of the river; and on the 27th housed themselves at Fort Reliance for the winter. From thence, in the spring, captain Back, parting with his brave companions—(Dr. King returned from Hudson's Bay)—proceeded to England, where he arrived on the 8th of last September.

The extreme point seen by capt. Back is about thirty-three miles from the extreme seen by captain James Ross. The distance that separates them may, or may not, be occupied by a strait. On the one hand, there is the Esquimaux drawing to show that the land is continuous, and they seldom mislead us: on the other, there is the driftwood found by Back on the shores that he reached, which can hardly have come but from Cape Turnagain and the McKenzie river. The wood cannot, at any rate, have made the circuit of what sir James Ross has called the northern extreme of America. The point is full of difficulty and perplexity. This much is certain—that the passage, if there be one, must be useless, as far as the object of finding a north west passage is concerned. Blocked up with the western sea, and with a current enforcing and perpetuating the blockade, even sir John Barrow, in his letter to the Geographical society, does not recommend its use, nor will its existence, if ascertained, diminish one jot from the importance of the discovery by Ross, that Prince Regent's inlet is but a cul de sac, and totally unavailable as a passage to the north west of America. It cannot be penetrated by the north, as we have seen by the fate of the Fury and of Ross's expedition; and we have Parry's authority for saying that it is impossible to enter by the east through Hecla and Fury's strait. The westerly stream that sets through that passage would, he states, undoubtedly have the effect of keeping the ice close home upon the western mouth, so as to prevent the egress of a ship; and if such reasoning be conclusive in this instance, how much more so will it be in the case of the supposed strait between Boothia Felix and the continent of America.

It has just been announced that his majesty's ship Terror, the command of which has been given to captain Back, is immediately to proceed to Wager river, when our undaunted countryman will cross over with his boats to Prince Regent's inlet. There the party will separate—one boat to proceed in the direction of Turnagain, the other to the western mouth of Hecla and Fury's strait: the whole, returning, it is hoped, in the month of November to England. Having laid down the coast line, and thus made another most important addition to the geography of the north coast of our American possessions, the next step will be to ascertain the existence, now approaching to certainty, of an open sea between Coronation gulf and cape Walker, the north western extremity of Boothia.

When this shall have been accomplished, the question of the north west passage, which for ages has perplexed philosophers, will have been solved, and the voyage in detached portions actually made. "That there is an open, and at times a navigable passage," says that accomplished seaman, captain Beaufort, "between the straits of Davis and Behring, there can be, no doubt in the mind of any person who has duly weighed the evidence." Let the navigator once know the exact direction, and in a favorable season little danger or difficulty need be apprehended in sailing through it, impelled by the prevailing westerly wind, and assisted by the easterly current that sets from Behring's into Davis strait. His majesty's ship Sulphur is now surveying the coasts of California. Capt. Beechy has already penetrated into Behring's straits farther than any former navigator. We learn from his narrative that he is confident of the existence of a passage; and who shall say that the honor of returning to England by the north, shall not fall upon this enterprising and accomplished officer.

The next branch of our subject—and it is one which every Englishman may be proud to notice—is the departure of the expedition in search of the missing whalers. Alarm had begun to be felt so early as the beginning of last winter, when the eleven ships, which had been observed, to be beset in the ice, did not return at the usual period. About the month of November the cries of the friends and relatives of the unfortunate mariners found their way to the public ear, and on the 4th of December a memorial from a number of merchants and gentlemen of Hull was addressed to the admiralty. It was a touching appeal, and stated that although the ships were supplied with provisions beyond what was necessary for the purposes of the voyage, "yet they were not sufficiently provided with the means of supporting life through the severities of an Arctic winter, particularly as the crews of two wrecked vessels are added to their original number," and the memorialists feared that the crews, amounting altogether to upwards of 600 souls, would be exposed to "dreadful sufferings." It goes on to suggest that a ship might be sent to open a communication with them "over the ice," and to pray for the assistance of the government.

The admiralty, in reply, expressed regret for the unfortunate situation of the crews, but did not think it possible to afford them the required assistance. This answer called forth a yet more urgent appeal from the merchants, saying that the opinion of the oldest and most experienced masters of whale ships induced them to entertain hopes; and, moreover, intimating that, should the government decline to interfere, they, the memorialists, would feel it their duty to make the attempt. The petition was backed by a letter, published in the newspapers, from capt. Humphreys, the deliverer of Ross, calling loudly on the Christian love and disinterested benevolence of his fellow countrymen to "disregard all fears of probability," and at least to make the effort.

This was more than enough—a ship, the Cove, was fitted out by national subscription, the Trinity house of Hull voting £1,000. The government readily consented to officer and man her—volunteers from all quarters presented themselves—and capt. James Ross, having been first in the field, was selected to command; though captain Back was ready, in the cause of humanity, to lay aside the enjoyment of a repose which he had devoted to recording his adventures—a task at once honorable and profitable—and again to brave the dangers of the north.

In a very short space of time his majesty's ship Cove reached the Orkneys—on the 13th of January, the very depth of winter—she quitted Stromness to search for our unhappy countrymen, regardless of the severity of the late season, and of the storms that met her at the outset of her chivalrous attempt, and notwithstanding she was once driven back with the loss of her bowsprit, before the fury of an Arctic hurricane.

But Providence, as if to reward such public virtue and individual heroism, by one of those miraculous movements at her disposal, in the months October, November, and part of December, "with a mighty hand," poured out the mass of ice that occupied Davis's strait and Baffin's bay, and scattering it in the Atlantic, released ten, out of the eleven ships that were frozen up. Most of them reached home in a wretched state of destitution. The La Jane was the last that arrived, her numbers frightfully thinned, the survivors sick and exhausted. But the same kindness that dictated their preservation while afloat has been extended to them on shore, and hopes are entertained that all who have escaped will ere long be restored to their homes and families.

Capt. Taylor, of the Greenville bay, states that he was set upwards of 600 miles—that is, from the latitude of Home bay in Arrowsmith's map, to the mouth of Hudson's bay, into which he was driven by the current, which, however, eventually released him. It is most likely that the William Tell the missing vessel, which experienced the same fate, though she was not farther from shore when last seen, than her companions. If so, it is probable that she remain shut up, near the entrance of Hudson's bay. That Ross will fall in with her can scarcely allow ourselves to hope, but of this our countrymen will be confident, that all that seamanship and scientific knowledge can accomplish, that kindness and courage can effect, will be exhausted by this officer in the benevolent cause which he is still engaged.

EXTRAORDINARY OCCURRENCE.

Extract of a letter from Rome, dated June 20.

"A tragic event lately occurred at Canino, and is the subject of general conversation in this capital. The name of Bonaparte has given to it an increased interest, and excited public curiosity to unusual degree; but as yet it is difficult to ascertain the causes which led to this singular affair come to a correct conclusion upon the whole of circumstances.

"D. Pierre Napoleon and D. Antoine Lucien sons of prince Lucien Bonaparte, have been residing for the last few years at Canino, a country mansion situated in the pontifical states. Their taste for hunting and field sports, and the necessity of being constantly armed, so as to protect themselves from the attacks of robbers, so frequent in this country, had accustomed them never to leave their house without some fire-arms or other means of defence, and which every Roman prince is right to carry. This habit, which no doubt other respects appeared rather singular, soon gave rise to certain reports, which were taken advantage of in order to excite feelings of disquietude in the mind of the pope, as to their residence in his state and to obtain a decree of exile against these young princes.

"His holiness's determination was already known to them; they had been promised passports, were actually preparing for their departure from America, when they were suddenly attacked by a number of the pontifical carabinieri, without having received the slightest notice of an intention to arrest them! The two brothers were not together at the moment. The eldest, D. Pierre, walking quietly in the public square with the chief of the carabinieri; he was the first object of attack. Finding himself suddenly seized by several men, who did not even state their real intentions and naturally supposing that they came to take away his life, he defended himself most courageously. In an instant, however, he was surrounded by thirty or forty carabinieri, who rushed from adjoining houses, and commenced firing pistols dealing out bayonet wounds right and left. He encountered the officer of carabinieri was killed, a quartermaster dangerously wounded. Young Pierre (Napoleon) fell, in consequence of his getting entangled in his spurs, and whilst on ground received several musket shots, by one of which he was wounded in the head, and by another in the leg. Finding himself thus placed before the possibility of defending himself, his assailants rushed upon his brother (D. Lucien Bonaparte) who on hearing the report of guns ran down stairs. The first carabineer who advanced fired a pistol at him, upon which D. Lucien seized a fowling piece; several muskets were then discharged at him, but none took effect, and he was also successful in parrying off the bayonets which were thrown against him, but not without receiving some wounds in the hands. He then assumed a more determined aspect and succeeded, without firing a single shot from his gun, in keeping the carabinieri at bay; the latter, awed by his bravery and sang froid, thought it prudent to retire and him in quiet possession of his house. They, however, returned to D. Pierre Napoleon, bound him hand and foot, and conducted him to Rome, where he was incarcerated in the castle of St. Angelo under a strict guard. D. Antoine Bonaparte, the other brother, has, it is said, succeeded in making his escape, and has embarked for America.

"The question now is, why, at the moment that their passports were being made out, the authorities decided upon arresting them? Why was this order given? What was its object, or under what influence was it granted? Is it even certain that this order emanated from the pope? These interrogatories can only be answered by the proceedings which are about to take place. On the one part against D. Pierre Napoleon, and on the other against the carabineers, and by the relations and friends of the young emperor. As yet the suppositions and reports on this subject are vague and uncertain.

"The public take a great interest in the trial of D. Pierre Napoleon, and there seems to be no fear of his condemnation. The state prosecutor will endeavor to prove that it was D. Pierre who killed the officer of carabineers; but up to the present moment the various inquiries, investigations and depositions tend, on the contrary, to show that the officer in question fell from the musket shot of one of his own men. The mass of evidence is entirely in favor of the two young princes, and the anxiety which the inhabitants of Canino evince in coming forward to support their justification fully proves that they possessed the talent of making themselves beloved."

RESIGNATION OF JUDGE SAVAGE.

At a meeting of the court for the correction of errors, holden in New York, on Thursday the 18th ult. the following communication was received from chief justice Savage.

Albany, August 12, 1836.

To the pres't of the court for the correction of errors.

DEAR SIR: Having been for a number of years a member of the court for the correction of errors, and present at the commencement of its sessions, it seems to me proper that the reason of my present absence should be known. I beg leave therefore, through you, to present to the court over which you preside, the enclosed copy of a communication made by me to the governor on the 30th of July last.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your obt's serv't,

JOHN SAVAGE.

The hon. John Tracy, president, &c.

COPY.

Albany, July 30, 1836.

DEAR SIR: I inclose my resignation of the office of chief justice of the supreme court.

Enough—perhaps more than enough, of official life has fallen to my lot—certainly as much as could reasonably have been desired.

My present office was given unsolicited. Under a due sense of the honor conferred, it was gratefully accepted. It is now cheerfully resigned.

In tendering my resignation at this time, I have been influenced by two considerations. The first is, the business of the court is closed up about as perfectly as it ever can be. All the causes argued and submitted previous to the last term, have been examined and discussed, and all decided except a few in which a farther examination became necessary. The business of the last term is in as great a state of forwardness as is practicable. The unfinished business of the court will therefore not materially increase the labors of the remaining judges in consequence of my retirement.

The second consideration is, that as the senators will convene in a few days as a court for the correction of errors, the vacancy may be speedily filled.

I am, with great respect, your excellency's obedient servant,

JOHN SAVAGE.

His excellency gov. Marcy.

On motion of Mr. Tracy, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

This court entertaining the highest estimation of the learning, judicial talents, personal virtue and official services of the hon. JOHN SAVAGE, have received with sincere regret his communication of the 12th inst. announcing his resignation of the office of chief justice of the supreme court of this state.

Resolved, That in retiring from the station which he has for many years filled with signal benefit to the public, and to his own great honor, he carries with him the affectionate esteem and respect of every member of this court, and the grateful recollections of the people of this state.

Resolved, That the aforesaid communication be entered on the minutes of this court, and that the clerk communicate to the hon. John Savage a copy of the foregoing resolutions.

VISIT OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE U. STATES.

From the Jonesborough (Tenn.) Sentinel.

At an 7 o'clock on Monday morning, the various roads leading into town were thronged with people on horseback, and the favorable indications of a fine day gave promise of an unusually large concourse of citizens from the neighboring towns and country. At eight o'clock, a very large party of gentlemen, mounted upon fine horses, and arranged in military order by col. Willet (marshal of the day) and his assistants, left town to meet the president, having learned that he had sojourned the night previous with his old friend, Mr. Gammon of Sullivan county, and would start for Jonesborough after breakfast. At the distance of seven or eight miles from the town, the procession met the president, accompanied by the secretary, (major Donelson), and a number of the citizens of Blountville and vicinity. He was on horseback and seemed in fine health and spirits. The horsemen took open order on the right and left of the road, and when the president had reached the most central position, Mr. Kennedy advanced towards him, and in conformity with the appointment by the meeting of Saturday, delivered to him a brief, but feeling and eloquent address, of which we have been politely furnished with the following sketch:

"Gen. Andrew Jackson, president of the U. States:

"Sir: On behalf of many of the citizens of Washington county, I have been deputed to meet you at this place and give you a hearty welcome during the short sojourn you may make on your way to the Hermitage. I should not execute this commission acceptably to the great body of the people, or correspondent with my own judgment and feelings, were I to omit to state, that as we were amongst the first to invite you to become a candidate for the presidency, so from the commencement to the present, we have been the constant supporters of your administration; an administration which, we are proud to acknowledge, has been prompted by enlightened wisdom and patriotism, and which, in our history, will be distinguished for the benefits it has conferred on our beloved country.

"When you were inaugurated, our foreign relations were in a most perplexed condition. The commercial countries of Europe had committed depredations on our commerce, in violation of the laws of nations, and had, by one pretext or other, withheld indemnification; and it became your arduous duty, through the instrumentality of judicious treaties, to re-establish the harmony which had been interrupted between our own government and several of the European powers, and thereby obtain that justice which before that time had been withheld. We rejoice that we have lived to see these difficulties adjusted under your administration.

"At home we had a large amount of national debt to pay, which is now discharged. Intestine dissensions were subdued by your patriotic measures, and that hydra to civil liberty, in the form of a bank of the United States, with its hundred millions of bank paper, and its consequently corrupting influence, has been crushed, and we trust forever, by the wise and energetic measures that you have employed against it. We have heard it again and again stated, that a certain Mr. Whitney had by some means or other, obtained the command of some of the funds of the treasury without law, and against the plain rules of common honesty—this we cannot credit, and we claim it as due to your friends to know whether it is true or otherwise.

"We have now the happiness to meet you, under circumstances the most grateful to our feelings, whether in reference to an overflowing treasury and the peace and prosperity that prevail throughout our widely extended country, or in reference to that peculiar affection which has been entertained by the people of this country for you, for nearly half a century. If your patriotic services and sacrifices, through a long and eventful life, could cease to be felt elsewhere as having conferred singular benefits upon your country, they never can be forgotten in the county of Washington, where you first became a resident of the state, and, with many of our forefathers, one of the early pioneers of Tennessee.

"It can be hardly necessary to state, that as we have, when fairly represented, unflinchingly stood by you heretofore, we shall hereafter be found, so far as we are concerned, among your steady supporters during the remainder of your administration, of such measures as shall redound to the permanent welfare of our country, and your individual fame."

The president's reply was as follows:

"Sir: The cheering welcome given me on this occasion by the citizens of Jonesborough and its vicinity, is received with feelings of the deepest sensibility. Accompanied as it has been by the sentiments you have just declared it excites reflections in my bosom which I fear any language which I can employ will but inadequately express. Forty-eight years have passed away since I first came to this happy land. Forty years ago, I was its sole representative in congress; and now to learn through the many political tests to which my life has been since subjected, there has been no change in the confidence and partiality which its inhabitants so early and so generously bestowed upon me, is an honor which fills my heart with emotions of gratitude and thankfulness to that Providence in whose hands are the destinies of us all. Allow me, to assure you, sir, that at no former period have I been so deeply penetrated by the sense of my obligations to the country, in whose service I have spent a great portion of my life, and witnessed the most of those political events which have influenced its prosperity.

"Taking my views of public duty from the school of the revolution, by which we achieved our liberties, I have endeavored to follow the lights afforded by the examples of the patriots who founded and who reformed our system of government. If I have been so far successful as to have done nothing to impair their sacred work, and shall leave, at the close of my administration, our country and its free institutions in the happy state you have described, I shall feel myself fortunate far beyond my merits. The applause you have bestowed upon me will be due to the people whose firmness, intelligence and virtue, have upheld and stimulated my exertions.

"You have done me but justice, sir, in refusing to credit the declarations which have been made respecting the agency ascribed to Mr. Whitney in the management and possession of the public funds. These declarations have been contradicted by frequent official reports, and are known to be false by any one at all conversant with the proceedings of the session of congress which has just closed. The rumors which have prevailed on the subject are like many other fabrications which have been put afloat with the view of prejudicing the republican cause, and slandering the character of those who have been bold enough to expose the corruptions of the bank of the United States.

"I beg leave to repeat my hearty thanks for the cordial reception given me by the citizens of Washington, and to assure them that I meet them as an old friend, identified with all their fortunes by the most sacred of ties."

After this ceremony, the president rode forward to the right of the corps of escort, when the latter formed in the rear, and the procession in this order moved onward to the town. In the mean time, the number of people in the streets swelled to a vast throng—all glowing with impatience to welcome the immortal JACKSON. A well arranged alignment on foot was formed from the entrance of the Blountville road as far down the street as the post office, and as the president and escort approached, the "spirit-stirring drum and fife" announced the gratifying fact. Every head was uncovered—every heart spoke out its grateful welcome, as the venerable man passed in front of the line of citizens. At Dr. Chester's hotel, the escorting procession halted, and the president was conducted in by his friends. The indications of the popular feeling at this moment, were imposingly affecting. The moistened eyes of the old men told, in voiceless eloquence, of a deep emotion—and the flush of satisfaction plainly perceptible in the faces of the throng that surrounded the hotel; the heart dictated expressions, from hundreds, of love for the "old chief"—all found a sympathetic response in every generous bosom. Shortly afterward, the president appeared on the porch in front of the hotel, and the multitude advanced, in good order to enjoy a "hearty shake of the hand" with their excellent, age-worn friend and fellow citizen.

JOHN BELL, ESQ. OF TENNESSEE.

The following correspondence between Mr. Bell and a committee of his constituents, is published in the Nashville papers.

Davidson county, August 13, 1836.

SIR: Since the first existence of the political relations which you have borne, for several years, to your constituents, they have attentively marked your official conduct. The scrutiny has satisfied them that a genuine devotion to the interests of your country has been the governing motive of your public life. Of this conviction they have, at the ballot box, by unanimous re-elections, repeatedly given to you and to the world the ordinary evidence. Yet, having for the last eighteen months, witnessed the most extraordinary combination of efforts to tarnish your well-earned fame throughout the union, and even, if possible, to withdraw from you the confidence of your own immediate constituents, they feel desirous, after the accusations preferred against you have been dispassionately heard and deliberately weighed, to demonstrate that they are proud to claim you as their representative.

Your course has been marked by a lofty patriotism, which rebukes the petty schemes and strife of a selfish and sordid party devotion. Your constituents feel a pride, congenial with the elevated chivalry and republican independence which have ever characterized the people of Tennessee, that, while some of your competitors in the contention for political honors have contented themselves to seek distinction by fidelity to party organization and party plots, their representative has worshipped alone at the shrine of his country's glory and prosperity.

Boast who may fealty to a party, your constituents pride themselves on your fidelity to your country.

The undersigned, who act with the consent of a large portion of those constituents, do, therefore, invite you to accept, at such time as may be convenient to you, of a dinner, which they propose to give you at Pleasant Grove Seminary, as a testimonial of their unshaken confidence in your political integrity and talents, and as a token of their entire approval of your past conduct.

Respectfully, your friends and fellow citizens,

William Vaulx,	William Murphy,
John J. Gowen,	Hebert Towns,
John K. Buchannon,	Thomas S. King,
Samuel J. Carter,	William Simms,
Richard H. Barry,	Thomas Rutherford,
Blackman Hays,	Charles Hays.

Hon. John Bell.

Nashville, August 14, 1836.

GENTLEMEN: I have had the honor to receive your letter of the 13th instant, inviting me to partake of a dinner at Pleasant Grove Seminary, at such time as may be convenient to me.

This invitation you state, is given with the consent of a large portion of those constituents, as a testimonial of their unshaken confidence in my political integrity, and their entire approval of my past conduct.

You have been pleased to accompany your invitation with many other expressions of approbation and kindness, which, under recent and existing circumstances, are particularly grateful to my feelings, and will be long cherished and remembered with the profoundest gratitude and attachment to the authors. The conduct of every public man, whatever may be the purity and singleness of his intentions, is necessarily exposed to much misconception, even on the part of friends, and very often of successful misrepresentation by opponents and enemies. To be assured, after every effort of an interested and resentful opposition to abuse and mislead the public mind, in relation to my public conduct, has been exhausted, that my immediate constituents and countrymen—those who have attentively marked my course—are satisfied that a sincere devotion to the interests of my country has been the governing motive of my public life, affords me the highest and proudest gratification. To merit such approval has been the chief object of my ambition; and to receive the evidence of it, I esteem the greatest good fortune.

I accept, with pleasure, the invitation given to me under circumstances so gratifying; and, as I am informed that Thursday, the 1st day of September, will be the most agreeable to you, I can only say that it will be entirely convenient to me to partake with you of the proposed dinner on that day.

I am, gentlemen, with sentiments of the highest esteem and respect, your obedient servant and fellow citizen,

JOHN BELL.

To Messrs. Wm. Vaulx, John J. Gowen, John K. Buchannon, Samuel J. Carter, Richard Barry, &c.

MR. CLAY'S SPEECH,

At the public dinner given to him on his return to Kentucky, by the citizens of Woodford county.

MR. CLAY rose to address the company, but was so overpowered by the allusion to the remains of his mother being buried in Woodford, and probably by his recent heavy afflictions in the death of a beloved daughter, and his only sister, that he resumed his seat for a short time, when he proceeded. He spoke about two hours, in his accustomed manner, fervent, solemn, sometimes pathetic, sometimes playful, convulsing his audience with laughter. He touched a great variety of topics, and his speech abounded in interesting matter. We regret that we cannot even attempt to report it, and he has positively but respectfully declined writing it out. We can do no more than present a sketch of some of the most prominent topics. After returning his thanks, and making his acknowledgments, and paying a compliment to the young gentleman (Mr. Thompson) who had addressed him:

He spoke of the surplus in the treasury of the United States. That was an accumulation resulting mainly from the protecting policy, adopted after the termination of the late war with Great Britain. That system—too much abused and misrepresented—too little understood—beneficial, as he verily believed, to all parts of the union, injurious to none, had paid off the national debt, eminently contributed to the present prosperity of the country, and was the main cause of the vast surplus which had recently engaged the deliberations of congress. It was a system which had been indispensable to the larger part of the union, and furnished a growing home market, for the great staple of the residue, absorbing at this time about one-sixth part of the annual product.

When he was last elected to the senate of the United States, he saw the necessity of providing, in season, for a just disposition of the surplus, which it was then evident, the tariff would accumulate. Its friends had predicted that result, whilst its foes had foretold that it would give rise to a necessity to resort to direct taxation to supply the ordinary wants of government. The remedy for the surplus which occurred to him was the land bill. He had every right to suppose that the president would approve it, because it was substantially in conformity with his own recommendations. But instead of giving it his sanction, he, in an unprecedented and unconstitutional manner, pocketed the bill, thereby depriving congress of an opportunity to pass it against his veto. Had that bill then passed, there would have been no surplus at the last session to squabble about, as it would have previously passed into the hands of the several states, and been applied to local beneficial objects. At the last session, the land bill again passed the senate, and was transmitted to the house of representatives. There every means was resorted to, by the dominant party, to evade a direct vote, which they were afraid to encounter. Weeks passed away in controversies as to what committee it should be referred, whether it should be laid on the table, &c. The dominant party were desirous to place it in the hands of some committee, adverse to its provisions, that would smother it. They were desirous to spare the president the responsibility of again vetoing it, and yet they had not the moral courage to meet the bill by a direct vote. They knew that the people demanded the passage of the bill, and between their subserviency to the president, and their apprehensions of the people, they found themselves unable to settle the preliminary point of a mere reference of the bill!

Under these circumstances, the deposit bill was taken up. He (Mr. Clay) gave it his cordial support. He saw in it the same principles, substantially, as those contained in the land bill. Both bills were in fact bills for the distribution of the surplus: for although one was called a deposit bill, and contained a provision for the return of the money from the states to the general treasury, he did not believe that a single member of either house imagined that a dollar would ever be recalled. The two bills agreed as to the amount which would be respectively distributed by them. They differed as to their duration; but, then, approved as the principle of distribution was by the public voice, he had not a doubt that the land bill or another deposit bill would hereafter pass. They differed as to the amount which the new states would receive. They were entitled to ten per cent. more under the land bill than under the deposit bill; but this difference was a just punishment of those members from the new states who opposed the land bill. The land bill passed the deposit bill; for those who eluded voting directly on the land bill, were afraid to defeat both, and therefore voted for the deposit bill. To prevent a veto, an amendment in the house of representatives was introduced and passed, with the co-operation of the president, which did not vary, in the slightest degree, the principle of the bill. To this amendment he had readily assented; for he thought it of more importance to the country that the bill should certainly pass by general consent, than it was to gain a triumph over the president by having his veto vetoed.

Six senators only, embracing most of the administration leaders, voted against the deposit bill. It was amusing to witness their long faces and awkward predicaments. There stood Mr. Wright, one of them, with his project to dispose of the whole surplus by an investment of it in the debt of a few states which had issued stock. This would have conferred no benefit upon the states generally, and would have tended to aggrandize two or three states only (his own among them) or the foreign stockholders of the debt created by those states. There stood Mr. Grundy, another of the six, with his project to evaporate the surplus in locomotives on rail roads, under the honest administration of Amos Kendall. There stood the senator from Missouri (col. Benton) with his projects to exhaust the surplus in arms, armories, standing armies and fortifications, the latter planted on the coast so thick that, as was justly remarked by his colleague (Mr. Crittenden), you would never be out of hearing of a cannon from the bay of Passamaquoddy to the Balize. There stood the new senator from Mississippi, (Mr. Walker), not exactly a leader but a candidate to be a leader, with his project, which aimed rather to prevent the accumulation of any surplus hereafter, by reducing the price of the public lands to a mere nominal sum, at a period when the unexampled amount sold demonstrates that the price is not too high.

It was impossible to contemplate this woe stricken group of leading senators, without mixed feelings of pity and ridicule, the latter however greatly predominating. They stood alone with their glory. Their followers had all left them, to follow the people, who demanded the distribution. They reminded him of an anecdote which he had heard during the presidential contest between Mr. Adams and general Jackson; and, perhaps not in the most commiserating spirit, he could not resist the temptation to tell it to the senate. He would repeat it here. Whilst that contest was in progress, a convention had assembled in Baltimore to promote the election of Mr. Adams. A raw Irishman, who had just arrived in the United States, being near where they met, expressed a wish to go in and see what sort of looking persons the members were. He accordingly went in and remained some time, and on coming out, being asked how he liked their appearance, he said, by Jesus they are a set of very decent looking gentlemen, what a pity it is that they have not some constituents. Now, he could agree with the Irishman, in bestowing the compliment upon the personal appearance of the senators referred to, but he entirely concurred in thinking that they had no followers nor constituents in voting against the deposit bill.

It was repeatedly denied by one of those leaders, during the session, that there would be any surplus. But since its close, in an official document published by the order of congress, the secretary of the treasury admits that the surplus on the 1st of January next, will exceed twenty-seven millions of dollars. It ought to be near forty-six millions, if the amount due from the old bank of the United States is brought, as it may be brought, into the divisible fund. But supposing it only twenty-seven millions, the proportion of Kentucky will be about one million and a half.

Mr. Clay proceeded to speak of the constant tampering with the currency which marked the conduct of this administration. One rash, lawless and crude experiment succeeds another. He considered the late treasury order, by which all payments for public lands were to be made in specie, with one exception for a short duration, a most ill-advised, illegal and pernicious measure. In principal it was wrong; in practice it will favor the very speculation which it professes to endeavor to suppress. The officer who issued it, as if conscious of its obnoxious character, shelters himself behind the name of the president. And where is the authority for such an order? If, in contemplation of law, payments to the public treasury are to be made in specie, the law contemplates all payments. The law should be equal in its prescriptions, equal in its execution, equal in its administration. The distinguishing characteristic of republican government—of any government of laws—is the universality of their operation, without favor or partiality, without discrimination. The law no more requires payments for the public lands to be made in specie, than payments for custom house duties. Both should be demanded in specie, or neither.—Duties could be paid in specie without much inconvenience, as they are collectable in cities, where banks and specie abound. Lands cannot be paid for in specie without immense inconvenience. Yet the order exacts specie for the lands, and permits bank notes to be received for duties. The order, in effect, requires specie, at great hazard and expense, to be transported from the Atlantic cities across the mountains, that the pleasure may be enjoyed of transporting it back again in like vehicles, at similar expense and hazard. Or, what will be still more injurious to the western states, it subjects their banks to perpetual drafts of specie to meet the wants of purchasers of the public domain.

There is no authority of law for the discrimination between payments for the public lands, and payments for duties. There is no authority for the geographical discrimination which has been made between the western states and the Atlantic states. If the president may enforce the law upon some, and forbear to enforce it upon others, according to his pleasure, HIS WILL, in effect, becomes the law, and the law has lost its equal, general and impartial operation. If he may make a geographical distinction; if he may say, at his pleasure, that for some things specie shall be paid, and for others bank notes, to the government, he may make a personal discrimination, and order that his friends may pay in bank notes, but his opponents shall pay in specie. In principal there is no difference.

The measure will aid the very speculation against which it purports to be levelled. The speculators—that keen-eyed, watchful, sleepless class—will soon learn and know well enough how to accommodate themselves to the new state of things. They are large purchasers, requiring large means, and they will take care and provide the requisite masses of specie. But on the small purchasers—the saddle-bags men—on the poor, the operation of the measure will be most injurious. Many of them will hear of the order the first time at the land office, when they are about to pay for the lands which they wish to enter. They will offer good eastern notes, really worth a premium of from a half to two per cent. at any land office in the United States. These notes will be rejected, perhaps, and the very lands which they wish to enter, may be appropriated on the spot by some speculator. Or the land officer will turn them over to some neighboring broker (possibly with whom he may be concerned) to cash his premium notes at a discount. Or the purchaser finding that his notes will not be received by the public, some speculator present may offer to take them and accommodate him with land at an advanced price. Or the land officer, knowing that the notes are really worth more than the specie, if the purchaser be a friend or political partizan, may determine, the order notwithstanding, to receive them, to remit them to the eastward, have them cashed to his credit, and pocket the profit. The measure is fraught with abuses of all kinds. We shall hear of the loss on the road of wagon loads of specie from the land offices to the eastern banks, never transported; and the loss will be verified with all the forms of complete proof.

But the president and secretary had no right to promulgate any such order. The law admits of no such discrimination. If the resolution of the 80th April, 1816, continues in operation (and the administration on the occasion of the removal of the deposits, and on the present occasion, relies upon it as in full force) it gave the secretary no such discretion as he has exercised. That resolution required and directed the secretary of the treasury, to adopt such measures as he might deem necessary, "to cause as soon as may be, all duties, taxes, debts or sums of money, accruing or becoming payable to the United States, to be collected and paid in the legal currency of the United States, or treasury notes, or notes of the bank of the United States, as by law provided and declared, or in notes of banks, which are payable and paid on demand, in the said legal currency of the United States." This resolution was restrictive and prohibitory upon the secretary only as to the notes of banks not redeemable in specie on demand. As to all such notes he was forbidden to receive them from and after the 20th day of February, 1817. As to the notes of banks which were payable and paid on demand in specie, the resolution was not merely permissive. It was compulsory and mandatory. He was bound, and is yet bound to receive them, until congress interferences.

Mr. Clay animadverted upon the conduct of the present administration towards the Indian tribes. It had been productive of fraud, violence and injustice. By treaties or pretended treaties made with them, both the United States and the Indians had been defrauded out of lands of immense value, under the forms of reservations, which had gone to enrich individual speculators. By our ill treatment of them, they are goaded into acts of desperation; and then the sympathies of the white people, are appealed to on account of Indian depredations. The object of this policy, is, to remove them from one side of a river, where they are surrounded by the whites, to the other side, where they will soon be again surrounded by the whites. And before this process of removal is completed, whilst it is yet in progress, the states in whose neighborhood, west of the Mississippi, they are placed, are calling upon the general government for protection against the danger of Indian hostilities. Already two regiments of dragoons have been raised permanently for that purpose, and at the last session a bill passed the senate to augment the standing army by an addition of four thousand men, and the chief argument urged for it, was the concentration of the Indians west of the Mississippi. Thus a permanent charge of great annual amount, is fastened upon the country, to carry out this policy. Taking that in view, the cost of Indian treaties, of Indian wars, the consequence of the policy, and other expenses, Mr. Clay believed that the cost of this removing policy, would not fall much short of fifty millions of dollars before it was finally executed.

He spoke of the Cherokee treaty ratified at the last session of congress. No vote of the senate, since he had been a member, had given him more pain or excited more surprise. Gov. Carroll of Tennessee and parson Schemerhorn (a disgrace to the pious and honorable profession of which he was a member) had been jointly appointed to treat with the Cherokee nation, composed according to a report of the secretary of war, of about 18,000 souls. Governor Carroll could not attend, and the whole business fell into the hands of the parson exclusively. The Cherokees, in general council in September last, appointed a committee to treat. With them he did not treat. Instead of treating with them, for the purchase of the Cherokee country, he made a proclamation that he would at a specified day and place, within the Cherokee country, treat with any of the Cherokees who would attend and treat with him; and that all who did not attend should be considered as assenting and bound by the treaty which he might conclude. In the mean time, all practicable means at the command of the American negotiator, were employed to coax and coerce the attendance of the Indians. On the day appointed, out of the eighteen thousand, some five or six hundred, including men, woman and children, only presented themselves, and many of these formed no part of the Cherokees east of the Mississippi alone having right to sell the Cherokee country. With some seventy or eighty Indians, he patched up a treaty and sent it to Washington. It was submitted by the president to the senate. And it had not been there many weeks before the almost united voice of the Cherokee people was raised against it. Memorials, signed or subscribed with the marks of upwards of sixteen thousand Cherokees, were laid before the senate, denying the Indian authority upon which the treaty was negotiated, and solemnly protesting against its obligatory force upon the Cherokee people. In spite of these memorials—in spite of all the opposition which was made by himself and others to the ratification of such a treaty, it was ratified against the votes of fifteen senators, that of his colleague and himself being of the number.—And thus the Cherokees, a people who have been always friendly to the United States, and who were represented at Washington by delegates as civilized, as orderly and decent in their appearance as members of congress, are stripped of their entire country, and the people of the United States are subjected to the payment of five million six hundred thousand dollars. It is proper and just to mention that one senator who voted for the ratification of the treaty (and others are believed to have acted under the same impressions) declared in his place, that he did not believe the instrument was a treaty; and that he voted for it because he apprehended the Cherokees would be exterminated by the whites if not removed. Mr. Clay had believed that no consequences, however deplorable, could justify the ratification of an instrument, as a treaty, which was deficient in the essential requisite of the concurrence of two contracting parties. But he believed, also, that these consequences might have been averted by the proper exercise of the lawful authority of the United States.

Mr. Clay said, that he had again and again warned his countrymen of the danger, illustrated by all history, of elevating to the chief magistracy, a man possessing no other than mere military qualification. He never had contended or thought it improper to place at the head of public affairs, a citizen who united to a knowledge of the art of war and experience in conducting it, the requisite attainments for civil administration. On the contrary, such a union of qualifications constituted a great recommendation of the person in whom it might be found. It was desirable that the first officer of the republic should, if possible, be intimately acquainted with, and have experience in every branch of administration, civil, military, naval and diplomatic. The wider the circle of his knowledge, the better for the country, if it be united with virtue and integrity.

We have now had seven years experience of the administration of a chief magistrate who brought into the office no other than military pretensions. The time, or the occasion, was not suitable to review fully his administration of the civil government of the country. But all will admit, that we had a right to expect that the military affairs of the union would be administered with skill and ability; that any wars, in which we might be unfortunately involved, would be conducted with vigor, promptitude and success; and that under his auspices, our arms would acquire additional renown and fresh laurels. Has this expectation been realized? Let the miserable Black Hawk war tell, in which millions of dollars were expended, and so little efficiency was displayed, considering the amount of means employed. Let the more disgraceful Seminole war testify, in which the untutored Osella, with four or five hundred wretched outcast Indian warriors, has baffled the skill of three or four major generals of the United States, and all the immense force brought at a vast expense to operate upon him, cutting off or defeating corps of our troops, and besieging, with an inferior force, one major general with his army, reducing them to the shameful necessity of a revolting subsistence upon the flesh of horses and dogs, found in the same entrenchment with themselves! During the session, his colleague and himself had conversed about the expediency of offering to the administration to contract, in behalf of the state of Kentucky, to capture and deliver west of the Mississippi every Seminole Indian at five hundred dollars per head. The execution of such a contract would have saved a million or two of dollars to the treasury of the United States.

Mr. Clay next alluded to his intended retirement from the senate of the United States. One session of the term for which he was last elected, still remained. He felt the full force of the implied obligation which every man who accepted office contracted to serve during the period for which he was appointed, unless some strong reasons existed for his resignation. That consideration might possibly carry him back once more to the senate, although it was his real wish now to retire. He would, at all events, positively decide, in due season, that the state might be fully represented. But beyond that period he had no desire to continue in the senate. And, although he entertained the profoundest gratitude for the confidence so long and so often reposed in him by the state of Kentucky, and should ever feel a deep and thankful sense of the friendly wishes of his fellow citizens to retain him in that body, he could not consent to be again a candidate for a seat in it. And he hoped the state would turn its attention to some other citizen. He admitted that eminently prosperous as the whole union undoubtedly was in the general business and concerns of the people, its political condition was far from being safe or satisfactory. He was convinced that foul corruption had penetrated almost every branch of administration, and was gradually poisoning the whole government. He admitted it to be the duty of every citizen to employ, to his latest breath, all his abilities, and every energy he possessed, if necessary to serve his country; and he would willingly remain in the public councils, and exert himself hereafter, as he had faithfully done heretofore, to preserve our free institutions in the utmost purity, if he believed he could do any public good at all proportionate to the private sacrifices which he should make. But he had been a long time in public employment and needed repose. Perhaps his voice had been too often raised, was too familiar to the public ear; perhaps one less known, of more buoyancy and elasticity, may be heard with more salutary effect. He fervently hoped that the republic might survive all impending dangers. But it was not to be disguised that the people themselves must purify and preserve their free institutions, if they were to be supported. No people ever lost their liberty who resolved to maintain it. No people ever maintained their liberty who tolerated, sanctioned and upheld corruption and corrupt men in the government.

Mr. C. concluded by proposing the following toast:

The public lands. The common property of all the states, they should be administered for the benefit of all, exclusively for none.

*The following is a copy of the whole resolution referred to by Mr. Clay.

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the secretary of the treasury be, and he hereby is required and directed to adopt such measures as he may deem necessary, to cause as soon as may be, all duties, taxes, debts or sums of money, accruing or becoming payable to the United States, to be collected and paid in the legal currency of the bank of the United States, as by law provided and declared, or in notes of banks which are payable and paid on demand, in the said legal currency of the United States; and that, from and after the twentieth day of February next, no such duties, taxes, debts or sums of money, accruing or becoming payable to the United States as aforesaid, ought to be collected or received otherwise than in the legal currency of the United States, or treasury notes or in notes of banks which are payable and paid on demand in the said legal currency of the United States.

[Approved 80th April, 1816.]

FOREIGN CHRONICLE.

Caspar Hauser. Lord Stanhope, the friend and patron of Caspar Hauser, about whom there was so much mystery a few years ago, now admits that he was imposed upon, and gives a strong body of evidence to show that they who believed this young fellow's wonderful story, were made egregiously fools of. Touching the catastrophe, Lord Stanhope thinks that Caspar unwittingly killed himself when trying to inflict a slight wound, in order to carry out his romance, revive an interest in his fate, stifle investigation, and procure his being removed from the impending danger of detection.

The Poles. We have already announced that a decree has been promulgated by the Russian government at Warsaw, subjecting all medals, prints, drawings, and objects of art to censorship. The Swabian Mercury contains a letter from the frontiers of Poland, in which the cause of this decree is explained. It appears that since the regulations of the government have become so severe that no secret correspondence can be carried on between any of the Polish refugees and their friends in the country, a method has been devised of forming a kind of symbolical correspondence. Many houses in the engraving line, and dealers in hardware had received, almost simultaneously, from Paris, considerable quantities of works in bronze and marble sculpture, executed with much taste and at a moderate price. The police, however, found out the mystery, and the decree above alluded to was issued in consequence.

[Galignani's Messenger.]

"Nothing new." The resemblance between most of ancient and modern domestic articles, both of use and luxury, has been remarked by all who have seen those which have been dug from the buried cities near Naples. This resemblance, however, reaches to a more remote date. It is said that an Egyptian buffet or sideboard, with all its details, not excepting dishes, plates, knives, and spoons, near 4,000 years ago, bore a strong resemblance to the sideboards of our modern palaces and villas. The hunting cups were embellished, as at present, with heads of the animals of the chase; but the banqueting urns, instead of being supported by the forms of vanquished Carians, i. e. Cariatides, as at Athens, are supported by the forms of vanquished Bactrian, Chaldean, Scythian, or Ethiopian kings.

A letter from Smyrna, of the 17th June, received via Liverpool, states that such had been the severity of the last winter, that many of the fig trees had been destroyed, and consequently a very small crop was expected.

A letter from Rio Grande, dated 8th July, states that information had been received that a counter-revolution had broken out in Port Algero, and the vice president had, with several other officers, been imprisoned—which it was thought, would have a beneficial result.

The ex-empress of France. The Swabian Mercury gives the following from Vienna of the 24th ult.—The archduchess, Maria Louisa, visited yesterday, in the convent of the Capuchins, the tombs of her father and her son. The count de Bombelles and a lady of honor accompanied the princess. The venerable Capuchins had prepared the same morning in the church for the duke of Reichstadt (the son of Napoleon) a requiem, followed by a mass for the dead, with which the archduchess mingled her tears. She then was conducted into the vaults, and knelt with a fervor of grief before the tombs of her father and son.

Romantic incident. The New York Advertiser has received a copy of the "Algemeine Zeitung," a newspaper published at Vienna, which gives an account of the upsetting of a pleasure boat, by which the princess Adelaide Sophia was precipitated into the water, and would have drowned if it had not been for the exertion of Mr. Bell, a young American gentleman, son of Dr. Bell, of Charleston, S. C. who, happening to be near in another pleasure boat, immediately plunged into the river (without knowing the quality of the lady) and rescued her from a watery grave. He was the next day invited to the imperial palace, where he was presented by the princess herself with a breastpin, studded with diamonds, and valued at twenty thousand dollars.

Honor to Bozzaris. The French sculptor, David, has executed and presented to Greece, a statue representing a youthful figure holding in one hand a crown of laurel, and with the other pointing to the name of Bozzaris. It is erected over the tomb of the warrior at Missolonghi. King Otto has sent the artist, the cross of the order of deliverance.

Nettles. In Scotland I have eaten nettles, I have slept in nettle sheets, and I have dined off a nettle table cloth. The young and tender nettle is an excellent potherb, and the stocks of the old nettle are as good as flax for making cloth. I have heard my mother say that she thought nettle cloth more durable than other species of linen.

[T. Campbell in the New Monthly.]

Halifax. Halifax papers to the 20th ult. have been received—They recommend to the people to return at the ensuing election, those who are friendly to agriculture and the fisheries, as these pursuits are the foundation of colonial hope and prosperity. They complain that the principal resources of their colonial wealth languishes and decays, while the pecuniary laborers of other nations, American and French, whiten their shores with canvass, and exhaust the wealth of the waters that flow at their feet.

A leak lately took place in the Thames Tunnel at London, which threatened to overflow the entire work, but was fortunately stopped by some experienced miners before any serious damage was done.

"In our country," exclaimed an Italian, "in our country, sir, we have the ever burning Mount Vesuvius."

"Have you, indeed," replied a son of America, "and in our country, we have the Falls of Niagara, which would put it out in five minutes."

Vaccination. Before the introduction of vaccination it was estimated that between 70 and 80,000 people died a day, upon the whole globe, of the small pox.

Portugal. On the 14th of July, the treasury building in Lisbon took fire and was entirely consumed. The public documents were, for the most part, saved. The loss to the government is about £70,000.

Ancient coins. Lately, a girl, employed in picking up stones in a field adjoining the church at Savignia in the Jura, found an old oak box very much decayed, in which were 212 pieces of money, part silver, and partly mixed metal, of the reigns of the emperor Charles V. and his son Philip IV. It is believed that in or near this spot the victims of the plague in 1639 were buried. Here also at the same time was carried on the disastrous war in these mountains by Guebriant, lieutenant of the duke de Weimar, in the same time of Louis XIII, when it is not doubted the pieces of money in question were hidden.

German literature. Alluding to the literary fair at Leipsic, a recent writer says "the wagons of printed paper which leave this mart of the brain exceed in number an Indian caravan." The same authority adds that at least 10,000,000 of new volumes are printed annually in Germany; that every year furnishes 1,000 new writers, and that there are at least 50,000 persons living in Germany who have written a book.

Eugene Aram. A late provincial paper, (says one of the London papers), contains a notice of the death of Edward Day, at Knaresborough, aged one hundred and one years, one of the constables who arrested the celebrated Eugene Aram, 80 years ago.

DOMESTIC CHRONICLE.

Paupers and prisoners. A New York paper says—The alms house office is continually thronged with application for admissions by foreign paupers, most of them recently landed on our shores, and even now in the summer season, when the alms house is usually comparatively empty, there are 1,880 paupers therein. In the penitentiary there are 330 female and 237 male prisoners—557 in all—sentenced for longer or shorter periods; and in the Bridewell, there are on an average constantly 100 persons, committed for trial, making of paupers and prisoners, convicted and unconvicted, 2,537 persons. From the rapidity and increasing number of the applications for admission into the alms house, by foreign paupers, it is apprehended that the present accommodations will not be half sufficient in the winter to contain all that will struggle for admission, and the erection of more extensive buildings will be inevitably necessary!

An English pauper, recently imported, attempted to sell his wife in the streets of New York, a few days since, for the purpose of raising money to support three small half starved children who followed the miserable parents! The circumstances becoming known, nearly six dollars were collected from the spectators and given to the wretched pair, which sum they considered a large fortune. Another collection to send them back to the parish authorities of Bristol who sent them hither, might prevent the public from witnessing another similar spectacle.

Our French relations. We are gratified to learn, through a gentleman of high standing in Paris, and one intimate with the councils of the king, that a minister is shortly to be sent to this country, to restore our diplomatic relations and at the same time the cordial and kind feeling which ought always to subsist between the two nations. [Globe.]

The United States brig Porpoise, lieut. commandant Ramsey, sailed a few days since from New York with the commissioners appointed to locate a naval depot in Florida.

Centennial celebration. A meeting has been held in Norfolk, at which, Miles King, esq. presided, to take into consideration the propriety of celebrating the 15th day of September next as the centenary anniversary of the incorporation of that borough. The following resolution was adopted.

Resolved, That we will observe Thursday the 15th of Sept. ensuing, being the centennial anniversary of the creation of our borough into a body politic and corporate, as a day of thanksgiving to Almighty God, for past and present blessings and mercies, and of supplication to Him, for his continued care and favor; and also as a day for public rejoicing for all the social happiness and prosperity which our fathers and ourselves have enjoyed from the first establishment of our corporation to the present time; and for the hopes which we may justly entertain of the future enlargement and improvement of our borough, and the more distinguished success which may hereafter crown the virtue, industry and enterprise of its citizens, for years and ages to come.

Pure water. A vote of the citizens of Boston was recently taken—"whether the city government should assume the responsibility of introducing pure water into the city, instead of vesting it in a private corporation," and decided in favor of vesting it in the city by a vote of 2,207 to 156.

Convoy. Information was received in this city yesterday from commodore Dallas, at Pensacola, dated August 9th, that he should in a few days despatch a vessel of war to stop at the passes of the Mississippi, and take in convoy all the vessels bound for the ports of Matamoros and Tampico, and would prevent, as far as he was able, any hindrance to the commerce of the United States with Mexico. Said vessel will take charge of any specie that may be intended for this city on its return. [N. Orleans American.]

Incendiarism. The clerk's office of the United States court, at Clarksburg, Va. was partially consumed by fire on the night of the 12th ult. The Wheeling Times states that extensive frauds had been committed on the treasury by pension agents through forged papers. Suspicion had been aroused, prosecutions entered, and the documents were on file in the clerk's office. The loss of individuals from the destruction of valuable papers has been great, and deep excitement pervaded the community.

A letter in a Georgetown (South Carolina) paper of the 5th of August, relates that a deer was lately shot in that neighborhood, and out of the animal was taken a piece of wood about one and a half inches in length, and about the fourth of an inch in diameter. The wood appeared to be oak, was perfectly well preserved, and from the appearance of the liver, which was healthy and sound, had been lodged there a long time. The writer accounts for the phenomenon by supposing that the deer had been staked, as it is termed—a mode sometimes resorted to, and a very barbarous one, for the destruction of deer that are troublesome to fields.

Flour. The New York Express of Monday says, "It will be seen by the report of the market, that flour had advanced considerably up to the close of Friday's market. Wheat, western, there was in market Saturday has been sold at $8 37½ a 80. On the 20th, western flour sold at $7 3-8—10-day the same brand sold at $8 50. We learn that a house which contracted to deliver about this time 2,000 barrels at 7 3-8, is now buying at $8 50 a 8 62 to complete the contract. No new wheat had been received at the western mills at last advices.

Wheat. Prime new white wheat has sold recently in the Baltimore market at $2 15 to $2 16 per bushel, and prime red at $2 05.

Jersey flax. The Hunterdon county Gazette mentions that a gentleman of Flemington has adapted a horse-power thrashing machine to the purpose of thrashing flaxseed from the stalk; and that it will, with one horse, do the work as fast as it can be done by six men in the usual way. Flemington is in a flax growing district.

Broom corn speculations have been made in this region: some evidence touching the fruitfulness of the crops. Large lots have been sold in the field, in anticipation of the coming harvest, at 6 and 7 cents per pound. [Northampton Courier.]

Capt. B. L. E. Bonneville of the U. S. army returned to this city on Sunday morning from a tour to the Rocky Mountains, where he has been (with the exception of a few months) for the last five years. We are happy to learn that the captain, in connection with Washington Irving, esq. contemplates compiling a narrative of his travels, together with an account of the various tribes among which he sojourned, and a geographic account of the country through which he passed. We await with impatience the appearance of this work. [St. Louis Observer.]

The Virginia springs. The Lewisburg, Alleghanian of the 19th ult. states the number of visitors at the White Sulphur and neighborhood, at more than 720 ladies and gentlemen—besides from 60 to 80 boarders at the White Sulphur hotel kept by Mr. Martin—at the Salt Sulphur, 250—at the Blue, 200—and between one and two hundred white persons at the Street springs. It estimates the whole number of visitors at all the springs within 40 miles square, as at least 2,000.

The Alleghanian also states, that "general Harrison had arrived at the Blue Sulphur springs.

In New York, last week, there was 209 deaths. In Philadelphia, same period, 124 deaths.

NILES' WEEKLY REGISTER.

FIFTH SERIES. No. 2.—Vol. I.]

BALTIMORE, SEPTEMBER 10, 1836.

[Vol. LI.—Whole No. 1,303.

THE PAST—THE PRESENT—FOR THE FUTURE.

EDITED, PRINTED AND PUBLISHED, BY WILLIAM OGDEN NILES, AT $5 PER ANNUM, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

Our abstract of foreign news will be found to be more than usually interesting—especially the accounts from Spain and Mexico.

The present sheet contains a letter from Mr. Van Buren, and one from gen. Harrison, in reply to certain queries propounded to them by Mr. Sherrod Williams, of Kentucky. They will be read with interest at this particular crisis.

The secretary of war, who has been recently appointed minister to France, left Washington on Sunday last for New York to make arrangements for his approaching departure. He is expected to return in time to receive the volunteer companies from Baltimore on their visit to Washington next Monday.

Mr. Butler, attorney general of the United States, will be (it is stated in the Georgetown Metropolitan), placed at the head of the war department during the remainder of the present administration.

We learn from the same paper, that Mr. Forsyth, secretary of state, is too much indisposed to attend to the duties of his station.

Rothschild, the celebrated London banker, died at Frankfort on Thursday, July 28, aged fifty-one years. He was at Frankfort on a visit to his son, when attacked, and his illness was of several weeks duration. This event has caused a great sensation in the financial and political world, and will be felt in all quarters. He was the great head of the firm, and the principal projector of all its financial schemes—and swayed princes and ministers by the power of immense wealth.

THE ARMY. By the adjutant general's report published in the present sheet, (page 21), it will be seen that, in the 1st regiment of dragoons, and in the 1st, 2d, 3d, and 4th regiment of artillery, and in the 2d, 4th, 5th, 6th and 7th regiments of infantry, there have been, since July 6, 54 promotions, 25 resignations, and 4 who have declined appointment.—Of the resignations, 7 were captains, 8 1st lieutenants, and 10 2d lieutenants. During the same time there had been but five deaths among the officers who are enumerated in this list.

THE PRESIDENT. A public dinner was given to him in the vicinity of Nashville. A large multitude present. George V. Campbell and Dr. Felix Robertson presided, assisted by 9 vice presidents. The toast in honor of the president, was as follows:

"Our illustrious guest: The president of the United States. By maintaining the true principles of republicanism, and a sound construction of the constitution, he has disappointed his enemies and fulfilled the most sanguine expectations of his friends. The great measures of his administration will continue to be supported by the people."

After the enthusiastic shouts of approbation with which this toast was received had subsided, the president, in his usual dignified and feeling manner, returned his acknowledgments for the favorable sentiments expressed in the toast, and concluded by offering the following sentiment:

REPUBLICAN TENNESSEE: Her motto, "principles not men"—She will never abandon her good old Jeffersonian democratic republican principles which she has so long maintained and practiced, to throw herself (on any occasion) into the embraces of the federalists, the nullifiers or the new born whigs.

This sentiment was received and cheered by deafening thunders of applause.

[Richmond Enquirer.

MARVELLOUS ESCAPE. The Philadelphia Gazette states that the hon. Henry Clay recently had a marvellous escape from death. He was riding on horseback in one of his fields, surveying his cattle, when a furious bull, maddened from some cause or other, rushed towards him, and plunging his horns with tremendous force into the horse on which Mr. Clay was seated, killed the poor animal on the spot. The distinguished rider was thrown to the distance of several feet from his horse, and though somewhat hurt by the fall, escaped without material injury.

CHIEF JUSTICE OF NEW YORK. The senate met at New York on Tuesday last, when the nominations by the governor of judge Nelson as chief justice and E. Cowan as associate judge, were confirmed. Mr. Nelson was the senior judge, and as such, received the appointment of chief justice in accordance with invariable usage.

Vol. LI.—Sic. 2.

SURPLUS REVENUE. The editor of a West India paper, called the "Bermudian," thus speaks of the bill for the distribution of the surplus revenue. He says: "We believe it is a singular instance for a government to acknowledge it has more money than it rightfully can dispose of, and an extraordinary state of things when that power which is generally viewed as an extortioner of the means of the country, should be seen pouring back on the people its stores of treasure to be disposed of by them as they should seem fit."

CHOLERA. By the following official communications, it will be seen that the cholera has made its appearance in Charleston, S. C. The disease appears to be chiefly confined to the colored population and persons of intemperate habits. Charleston, it will be recollected, was one of the cities which were almost entirely exempted from the disease in 1832.

Office board of health, Charleston, Aug. 31.

At the joint request of the committee of council and a special committee of the board of health, Dr. T. Y. Simons submitted the following report, which was accepted, ordered to be recorded and published. Extract from the minutes.

A. G. HOWARD, M. D. clerk.

The board of health having pledged themselves to give immediate notice to the citizens, should sufficient evidence be exhibited of the existence of cholera asphyxia in our city, feel it their duty to report that eleven cases of that disease have been announced to their special committee, since yesterday, (Tuesday), at 1 o'clock, P. M. of which two have terminated fatally. The board will hereafter give a faithful statement every day, of all cases which shall have been reported to the committee during the previous twenty-four hours; and in order to insure the fullness and accuracy of that statement, they earnestly request every medical practitioner of the city and neck, to furnish their clerk, Dr. A. G. Howard, with a daily account of the cases under their treatment, and also of the result of such cases before 12 o'clock, M. The board would, therefore, advise the citizens to place confidence only in the report which their special committee will publish daily; and to give no credence whatever to the exaggerated rumors that are now and will probably hereafter be promulgated. The board would again endeavor to impress upon the public mind the absolute necessity of attending to cleanliness, in the removal of filth and the purification of out-houses and premises by a liberal use of lime and the chloride of lime. To those who may be unable to purchase those articles, they will be supplied gratis on application to any member of the board.

THOS. Y. SIMONS, M. D.

Chairman medical committee board of health.

One o'clock P. M. Sept. 1.

The special committee of the board have to report for the last twenty-four hours, three cases of cholera; two under treatment, the other dead; of the eleven cases reported yesterday, four more deaths have occurred. The cases reported to-day are all blacks; of the eleven cases reported yesterday, two were whites and nine blacks. By order,

THOS. Y. SIMONS, M. D.

Chairman special committee.

Sept. 2, 1 o'clock, P. M.

The special committee of the board have to report for the last twenty-four hours, seven cases of cholera; six under treatment—the other dead, one white the remainder blacks. Of the three cases reported yesterday as under treatment, all have died.

Sept. 3, 1 o'clock, P. M.

The special committee of the board have to report for the last twenty-four hours, seventeen cases of cholera; two whites and fifteen blacks—two dead, the others under treatment. Of the seven cases reported yesterday, two more have died—the others are convalescent. By order,

THOS. Y. SIMONS, M. D.

Chairman special committee.

A. G. Howard, M. D. clerk.

The city council of Charleston has passed an ordinance imposing a penalty of $500 on every physician who neglects or refuses to report such cases of cholera as arise in his practice in that city.

THE CORN TRADE. The N. Y. Journal of Commerce of a late date, says: "Bread stuffs have hitherto constituted one of our principal articles of export, amounting in 1831 to within a small fraction of $12,000,000. In 1835, (we speak, in both cases, of the commercial year, ending the 30th September), the quantity was reduced one half, and the value about the same proportion. In 1831, the value of bread stuffs imported was only $1,032, whereas in 1835 it had increased to $311,116. The year ending 30th of the present month will show still smaller exports of these articles, and larger imports. And the ensuing year from present appearances, will very possibly show an amount of imports equal to the exports. Should the corn crop be cut off in the northernmost states, as it is now very liable to be by the early appearance of frost, the extraordinary phenomenon will probably occur, of the greatest grain-growing country in the world becoming dependant upon foreign countries for a portion of its bread."

From the following extract from the British agricultural report for July, it will be seen that an abundant harvest is anticipated, notwithstanding the confident predictions which were made about a failure, a few weeks ago.

British agricultural report for July. The wheat is now in full ear, the barley beginning to ear, and both are miraculously covered. It has been remarked that "a dry stunt is more easily overcome than a wet stunt," and this appears to be the almost universal case this season. Up to this moment, when a gentle dew-like rain is falling (June 21,) the alternations of sun and shower have been exactly of that kind which constitutes, in farming language, "growing weather;" and coming just at this precise time, it rescues the scalds of the light soils from that disastrous destructive heat which often burns up the produce about mid-summer. This must be taken in addition to the set-off against the failure of the coming harvest. That opinion is thoroughly against a greatly deficient crop, mangle the four predicted plagues—less sown—a late harvest—thin in quantity, and bad in quality—is shown by the markets perseveringly declining. The buyers hold off, and though factors reluctantly give way, price falls.

At most of the country markets, wheat was lower last week, for the second time during the past month; and in Mark lane, the centre of information, it fell from 1 to 2. The last prices are in their range as last month, the fall being limited to particular qualities. Imperial averages, June 10,—wheat, 51s.; barley, 33s.-2s.; oats, 24s.-7s.; rye, 35s.-2s.; peas, 41s.-7s.

WEST INDIA ISLANDS. The New York Journal of Commerce has extracted the following statistical items from late files of Kingston papers.

The value of exports and imports during the last year in the islands of Antigua, Barbadoes, Dominica, Grenada, Jamaica, Montserrat, Nevis, St. Kitt's, St. Lucia, St. Vincent, Tobago, Tortola and Virgin islands, Trinidad, Bahamas, Bermudas, Demarara, Berbice, Honduras, are, for imports, £9,087,194. The exports during the same time, were £5,521,169. Increase of exports over the imports, £3,566,025.

Productions. Sugar, coffee and rum are the three principal articles imported from the British West Indies into the United Kingdom. For the year 1830, the quantity exported in the above named islands, is as follows:—Sugars, 2,912,628 cwt. 2 qrs. 12 lbs. The number of lbs. of coffee exported, was 27,428,877. The rum (proof gallons) were 6,751,796.

The population during the same year, and in the same places, was (males and females), 836,527.

The currency of the West India islands is peculiar to itself, being an imaginary money, and different in different colonies. The following are the values of £100 sterling, and of a dollar, in the currencies of the different islands:—

	Sterling.	Currency.	Dollar.	Currency.
Jamaica,	£100	£140	1	6s. 8d.
Barbadoes,	£100	£135	1	6s. 8d.
Windward islands, (except Barbadoes),	£100	£175	1	8s. 3d.
Leward islands,	£100	£200	1	9s.

VALUE OF REAL ESTATE IN NEW YORK. From the New York Daily Advertiser. We have obtained the following highly interesting article, from an abstract of the assessors' books, by which it will be seen that the taxable real estate, of this city, has reached over 226,000,000 dollars—an increase of $82,000,000 over that of last year. This sum was considered so low, that the assessors raised it over $70,000,000—making it upwards of $300,000,000. Notwithstanding the fire in the "Burnt District," the value of property in the first ward is 10,000,000 dollars above what it was last year; second ward, 6,500,000 dollars; third, three and a quarter; fourth, one and a half; fifth, three and a half; sixth, three; seventh, three and a half; eighth, four and a half; ninth, four; tenth, three; eleventh, ten; twelfth, nearly forty; thirteenth, three; fourteenth, two and a half; fifteenth, six; sixteenth is taken off the twelfth. The growth of this city is truly unparalleled—last year the real estate was valued at $144,000,000, this year at over $300,000,000. An increase, we believe, that cannot find a parallel in the history of the world. What the amount of personal property will be, we are unable to say—indeed the books have not yet been made up.

	Last year.	This year.
1st ward	$26,064,500	$36,270,500
2d do.	13,800,000	19,712,600
3d do.	10,904,200	14,229,850
4th do.	7,740,800	9,152,300
5th do.	8,951,000	12,602,100
6th do.	6,366,958	10,330,134
7th do.	8,553,037	11,964,190
8th do.	8,501,115	13,127,300
9th do.	6,204,825	10,144,200
10th do.	4,825,500	7,613,700
11th do.	8,796,100	18,716,300
12th do. including the 16th ward last year.	15,870,400	10,163,140
13th do.	2,993,300	4,920,550
14th do.	5,314,720	7,779,450
15th do.	9,635,750	15,536,300
16th do.		23,963,690
	$144,321,805	$226,246,404

On the real estate, in addition to the above assessments, the 1st ward had 3 per cent. added; the 3d, 11 per cent. the 4th, 15 per cent. the 5th, 8 per cent. the 6th, 8 per cent. the 7th, 2 per cent. the 8th 4 per cent. the 9th, 8 per cent. the 11th, 3 per cent. the 12th, 140 per cent. the 13th, 21 per cent. the 14th, 18 per cent. the 15th, 11 per cent. the 16th, 4 per cent. By the order of the board of assistants.

BRITISH HARDWARE AND CUTLERY. The following return of British hardware and cutlery, exported from the United Kingdom, is copied from the New York Express.

Countries to which exported.	Declared value.	Quantity. tons.
United States of America,	$978,491	11,062
Asia	105,300	1,003
British West Indies	93,661	1,134
Brazil	85,096	1,143
British colonies in N. America	84,259	1,202
Mexico and states of S. America	74,893	815
Germany	74,430	570
Foreign West Indies	43,329	721
France	43,272	315
Italy	42,959	372
Holland	36,195	303
Portugal, Azores and Madeira	33,162	290
Africa	30,567	386
Russia	24,033	197
Spain and the Canaries	19,608	148
Belgium	16,691	142
Guernsey, Jersey, Alderney & Man	10,058	75
Turkey and Continental Greece	7,106	55
Gibraltar	5,940	60
Norway	3,646	46
The Ionian Islands	3,459	33
Prussia	3,451	48
Malta	3,432	22
Denmark	2,266	27
Morea and Greek Island	1,400	11
Sweden	1,271	9
	$1,833,042	20,197

That is, in good round numbers, more than one-half of the whole cutlery and hardware exports of Great Britain are to the United States.

The exports to France—where the population is more than 33 millions—is only equal to one 35th part the quantity exported to the United States, with a population of 15 millions. The French, as well as ourselves, can make their own cutlery and hardware, but choose to use the home made article, (though dearer) in preference to the cheaper article made in England. France refuses to have free trade—to exchange their wines and silks against English hardware, cutlery and muslin. The same principle extends to other parts of Europe, and the result is that the exports of cutlery and hardware to ALL parts of Europe are not equal to one quarter of what England sends to the United States.

In 1835 there were exported from England 2,810 tons of unwrought steel—of which the U. States took 1,386 tons: in 1824 the export was only 570 tons, of which 174 tons went to America.

In 1833 the total value of the exports of hardware and cutlery amounted to £1,434,431—in 1834, to £1,466,361, and last year to £1,833,042—being an increase of 23 per cent. over 1834. For the same time the increase in our other ports was,

Cotton goods	7 per cent.
Silk	6 do.
Woolen	18 do.

Since 1820 the amount of all sorts of hardware and cutlery had more than doubled.

MEXICO. The population of the Mexican states consists of about 9,000,000 of freemen. Of these about 4,000,000 are unmixed Indians; 2,500,000 are Mestizos, or the mixed offspring of Spaniards and Indians; 1,500,000 are Creoles, or the unmixed offspring of Spaniards; 1,000,000 are Washingangoes, or offspring of Indians and negroes, including also the mulattoes; 100,000 are negroes; 10,000 Spaniards born in Spain, and about 30,000 strangers, consisting of emigrants from various nations. From this estimate, it seems that the Indians and Mestizos form the bulk of the population. But it is said that they are in many respects superior to the Spaniards and Creoles. They are honest, industrious and peaceable, and generally cultivators of the soil. Those only are addicted to vicious habits who live in the vicinity of large towns. They are of a ruddy complexion—small of stature, and have in general well formed features. Some of them are no smaller than the Spaniards, and many of their women superior in beauty to the Creole women account of their rosy cheeks. The Indians are excellent soldiers, well civilized, though still idolaters, and they will undoubtedly form the democracy of the country, and being nowise inferior to the other races, are probably destined to rule the nation. The Mexicans, before they were conquered by the Spaniards, had already advanced very far in the arts of government and civilization. The conquest has undoubtedly hastened their march of improvement, and if they do but retain their freedom, they will, in less than a century, in all probability be one of the greatest nations of the earth. [Boston Post.

CURIOUS SPANISH RELIC. One of the most characteristic relics of the Spanish dominion in Louisiana is to be seen at the bureau of Mr. Ramos, register of births and deaths in St. Anne street. It is a picture well known to the inhabitants of New Orleans, as having formerly belonged to Mr. Pedesclaux. It exhibits the termination of a long law suit which had been carried on with a ravenous spirit, and resulted in the enriching of the judge, and the total ruin of both suitors. The scene is the judge's audience room; in the midst is his worship—fat, lazy and beastially selfish—on his table is a pile of gold. On either hand are the parties, both naked, one has under his arm the title papers or other documents which are the trophies and fruits of his long misery. He exclaims with woe-begone exultation: "yo gane," (I have won); the other asks "que has ganado," (what have you won); the judge replies: "lo que tiene del brazo," (what he holds under his arm). The picture has some marks of the Spanish school in drawing and coloring, though it has small pretensions to merit as a piece of art. The solemn satire conveyed in it is truly Spanish. Possessed, as Spain and her colonies were, of the best code of laws in the world, yet the custom of giving gratifications to the officers of the court, especially to the judges, is notorious wherever a Spanish tribunal exists. The fable of the judge who took the oyster and gave each party a shell, is too often almost true in the colonies. Some think that this picture relates to a real process (the name of which is written on the bundle) which was once heard in Louisiana. The artist is unknown. [New Orleans Advertiser.

ASSAULT ON AN EDITOR. Great excitement prevails in Danville, Virginia, on account of an attack made by James M. Smith and Marcellus Bell, upon Thomas A. Terry, jr. editor of the Danville Reporter. The cause of the outrage was, certain editorial comments on the delinquencies of a relation of the first named gentleman, who was a mail contractor in that district. At the tavern of the place, one of the aggressors assailed Mr. Terry, (who was unarmed, not expecting any violence to be offered him), with a heavy cane, while the other with a pistol in each hand threatened death to any one who would approach to relieve their victim. This defiance however was disregarded, and the prostrate man was rescued from their murderous hands wounded severely but not fatally. The same desperate spirit was manifested by the offenders, when the civil authorities attempted to take them into custody. The town sergeant, captain Townes, with the aid of some citizens, effected their capture, at the imminent hazard of their own lives, being themselves without arms, while Smith and Bell had various weapons. Smith attempted several times to shoot Dr. J. B. Campbell, one of the sergeant's temporary assistants, who warded off the pistol, and George White, esq. received a ball, aimed at his heart, through his hand, coat and waistcoat. His active presence of mind in avoiding the direct aim, was his preservation. The decision and bravery of the gentlemen who seized the aggressors are highly commended. Smith and Bell are both in jail, awaiting their trial. [Nat. Gaz.

CARRIER PIGEONS. When a trained carrier pigeon is tossed, after making one or more circles, it rises in a rapid spiral to an enormous height, before it takes its departure, and at that height it is supposed to make its journey. The speed of the Antwerp birds which are lighter and more finely made than the English breed, is supposed to be a mile a minute. They are more extensively used than is supposed in financial transactions; one eminent speculator at Antwerp keeps 1,200 pigeons. The value of a pair of well trained Dutch birds is £5. [Sporting Magazine.

[Carrier pigeons have been seldom used in this country. The first on record or in memory, were those of sir John Wentworth, governor of the province of New Hampshire, who, previous to the revolution, retired each summer from the government at Portsmouth to his country seat at Wolfborough, on the border of the Winnepisseogee lake, where in cases of emergency, he dispatched a pigeon charged with instructions to Portsmouth, a distance on a line of about forty miles. He brought many of these birds from England, and their errands were performed with singular fidelity.] [N. Y. Gaz.

ELECTIONS.

RHODE ISLAND.

The Providence Morning Chronicle of Monday states, that the house will stand 40 administration and 32 whigs, or 8 majority. All the senate are administration. The majority in the house at the April election was six.

MARYLAND.

The senate of the state of Maryland is elected for five years by a college of electors chosen by the people. The electoral election was held on Monday last and resulted as follows:

Baltimore city.

Wards.	Ridgely, (whig).	Vansant, (V. B.)
First ward	291	351
Second "	335	390
Third "	289	542
Fourth "	279	601
Fifth "	429	406
Sixth "	333	633
Seventh "	481	260
Eighth "	266	563
Ninth "	444	324
Tenth "	291	514
Eleventh "	421	576
Twelfth "	310	650
	4,169	5,810
		4,169

Vansant's majority 1,641

Baltimore county.

	(Whig.)	(Van Buren.)
	Harryman, Tuggart.	Ellicott.	Bell.
1st district	57	320	$15
2d "	132	132	140
3d "	198	198	76
4th "	41	41	141
5th "	122	124	125
6th "	31	31	175
7th "	144	143	196
8th "	123	117	173
9th "	39	35	143
10th "	60	68	63
11th "	102	99	105
12th "	48	48	97
13th "	35	31	170
	1,132	1,112	1,924
			1,930

Kent county.

Whig.	Van Buren.
Vickers,	565	Ringgold,
Gale,	545	Miller,
		458

Montgomery county.

Whig.	Van Buren.
Gaither,	669	Duvall,
Harbin,	640	Chiswell,
		663

Calvert county.
Whig.	Van Buren.
Kent,	403	Wailes,	324
Dalrymple,	393	Mackall,	318
Somerset county.
Whig.	Van Buren.
Williams,	1,022	Long,	701
Handy,	1,012	Teackle,	683
Worcester county.
Whig.	Van Buren.
Spence,	1,107	Parker,	1,041
Franklin,	1,103	Whitelock,	1,041
City of Annapolis.
Whig.	Van Buren.
Brewer,	148	Harwood,	162
Anne Arundel county.
Whig.	Van Buren.
Kent,	855	Sellman,	1,017
Ridgely,	855	Linthicum,	1,015
Alleghany county.
Whig.	Van Buren.
Beall,	845	Frantz,	786
Bruce,	805	Matthews,	744
Washington county.
Whig.	Van Buren.
Kershner,	1,147	Wason,	1,586
Seibert,	1,136	Macgill,	1,519
Frederick county.
Whig.	Van Buren.
Bantz,	2,658	Fisher,	3,168
McKinstry,	2,647	Quynn,	3,144
Harford county.
Whig.	Van Buren.
Moore,	880	Hope,	1,066
Arnos,	874	Sutton,	1,059
Charles county.
Whig.	Van Buren.
Merrick,	401	Stone,	264
Browner,	409	Mitchell,	267
Talbot county.
Whig.	Van Buren.
Dickinson,	593	Lloyd,	567
Dudley,	591	Stevens,	568
Caroline county.
Whig.	Van Buren.
Charles,	545	Keene,	598
Ford,	539	Fountain,	570
St. Mary's county.
Whig.	Van Buren.
Leigh,	566	Key,	515
Hearn,	529
Dorchester county.
Whig.	Van Buren.
Hicks,	925	Breerwood,	780
Lake,	927	White,	798

☞ We have not yet received complete returns from Cecil, Prince George's and Queen Anne's counties. They shall have a place in our next.

RECAPITULATION.
	Whig.	Van Buren.
Alleghany,	2	0
Annapolis city,	0	1
Anne Arundel,	0	2
Baltimore city,	0	1
Baltimore county,	0	2
Calvert,	2	0
Caroline,	0	2
Cecil,	0	2
Charles,	2	0
Dorchester,	2	0
Frederick,	0	2
Harford,	0	2
Kent,	2	0
Montgomery,	1	1
Prince George's,	2	0
Queen Anne's,	0	2
St. Mary's,	2	0
Somerset,	2	0
Talbot,	2	0
Washington,	0	2
Worcester,	2	0
	21	19

ALABAMA.

The Mobile Advertiser of the 25th ult. contains full returns from the whole state. From this statement, it appears that the state of parties in the next legislature will be as follows:—

	Whig.	Van Buren.
Senate,	18	12
House of representatives,	46	44
	64	56
Majority on joint ballot,	8

NORTH CAROLINA.

The "Raleigh Register" of the 6th inst. contains a corrected list of the senators and members of the house of commons, recently elected—from which it appears, that the senate is composed of 26 whigs and 24 friends of Mr. Van Buren. The senator from Cumberland, it is said, will vote for the whigs in all leading questions. In the commons there are 59 whigs and 61 friends of Mr. Van Buren. This, observes the "Register," gives a Van Buren majority of 2 in the house, which, taken from the whig majority of 4 in the senate leaves a whig majority of 2 on joint ballot. But we learn from good authority, that col. Stockard, of Orange, will vote with the whigs. If so, it will tie parties in the house, and still leave the whigs the benefit of their 4 majority in the senate.

FROM FLORIDA.

The most important event which has transpired in Florida, since our last notice, is detailed in the following official communication from maj. Pierce, of the U. S. army, which we copy from the "Globe."

Micanopy, August 21, 1836.

SIR: I have the honor to report to you that I arrived here yesterday, and learning that there were Indians lurking about Fort Drane, ten miles from this post, I determined to make an expedition against them. For this purpose I marched, at two o'clock this morning, with 110 men and a piece of ordnance, fifty men commanded by captain Childs of the 8d artillery, and lieutenant Spalding of the 2d dragoons; fifty men by lieutenant J. R. Irwin and lieutenant Herbert of the 1st artillery. I arrived at Fort Drane about sunrise, attacked the Indians, who proved to be numerous, say 300, Micasucky Indians, commanded by Powell. Lieutenants Irwin and Herbert on the right, captain Childs and lieutenant Spalding on the left, the artillery in the centre, commanded by lieutenant Pickell, all attacked them with great vigor and spirit, drove them three-fourths of a mile into an extensive hammock, and in a hurried passage over the field counted ten dead.

This engagement was well contested by the Indians, who fought with determined bravery for more than an hour. The recesses to which they retired could not be penetrated by our exhausted and inferior force. I therefore marched the detachment back to Micanopy, leaving no killed or wounded on the field. Our loss was one killed and sixteen wounded, viz: lieutenant Betts (my adjutant) slightly wounded in the thigh; sergeants Dustin, (C) 4th artillery; Ares, (A) 3d artillery, wounded; corporals McKnight, (C) 4th artillery; North, (I) 3d artillery; Dennis, (A) 3d artillery, wounded; artificers Skiffington, (6) 4th artillery; Sinclair, (E) 1st artillery, wounded; musician, Alexander Heer, (G) 1st artillery, wounded; privates, Shisler, (E) 1st artillery; Treat, (A) 3d artillery; Coppinger, (C) 4th artillery; Story, (A) 8d artillery; Ribbold, (A) 8d artillery; Bennet, (D) 1st artillery, wounded, none thought dangerous; wagon master, Jackson, severely; killed, Sykes, private, (G) 1st artillery.

The officers of my command were captain Childs, 3d artillery; lieutenant Pickell, 4th artillery; lieutenant J. R. Irwin, 1st artillery; lieutenant Spalding, 2d dragoons; lieutenant Herbert, 1st artillery; lieutenant W. H. Betts, (adjutant), 1st artillery; surgeons Tripler and Bevy.

The officers and men all justified my most sanguine expectations.

I deem it due to captain Childs to state, that he contemplated the same movement previous to my arrival, and was awaiting the return of the train to accomplish his purpose.

Jackson, a wagon master, well acquainted with the localities of Fort Drane, volunteered his services, and as a guide on the march, or a soldier in the engagement, was brave and useful. He received two severe wounds, lost a valuable horse, and deserves a liberal reward. Very respectfully, your ob't servant, B. K. PIERCE, maj. command'g.

Fort Drane, it will be recollected, had been abandoned, in consequence of its being unhealthy, and the troops removed to Micanopy. It is, however, the intention of the medical director of the army, Dr. Hawkins, to establish St. Augustine as a general hospital, to which the sick will be removed as soon as they can be transported by water. More than 120 sick remained at Micanopy.

An officer of the U. S. army in Florida, in a letter to the editor of the Norfolk Herald, dated on the 22d ult. writes thus:—

"Such have been the ravages of the climate on our northern constitutions, that 300 would measure the army of the United States at this theatre of war! Is not the population of the United States at this time about 15,000,000? Is not ours a wealthy country? Are you a good arithmetician? If so, please to tell me what chance 300 or 400 men, exhausted by a year's residence and more in this climate, and broken down in spirits from utter neglect and indifference, have to conquer, in a summer campaign, an enemy now increased in number and animated by success, in their own climate and country, who could not be conquered by 5,000 in the most favorable season of the year? Or, to ask a better question, is not this state of things shameful to the nation and cruel to our poor little abused but gallant army?"

The gallant conduct of capt. Dimmock of the U. S. army, in a skirmish with the Indians, which took place some months ago, near St. Augustine, is thus narrated in the Fredericksburg (Va.) Arena.

"In the midst of the action, whilst capt. Dimmock on horseback, was directing, and by his coolness and courage, animating his little party, he was suddenly, as if by concert, set upon from different directions by two Indians of huge stature. They fired simultaneously and wounded captain Dimmock in the leg, at the same time bringing down his horse. Disengaging himself from his horse, with great activity, he gained his feet in time to bring down one of his antagonists, as with fearful yells, they rushed to take his scalp, thinking their fire had killed him. On seeing his companion fall, the other Indian took to flight, but not in time to save himself. Captain Dimmock wheeled about, and, with great coolness, shot him dead with the other barrel of his fowling piece. In the mean time, the wounded Indian, though unable to rise, had seized a gun, but before he could use it, captain Dimmock despatched him with his sword. We are gratified to be able to state that the casualties of the service have presented an opportunity of promoting this gallant officer, and that he is now a full captain in the 2d artillery."

FOREIGN NEWS.

From foreign papers to the 2d of August inclusive.

GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.

The Irish church bill was passed in the house of lords on the 28th of July. Their lordships' amendments were to be considered in the other house, on the 2d of August. They rejected the appropriation clause.

The newspaper stamp duties bill was passed on the 25th, in the house of commons, by a vote of fifty-five to seven.

The friends of Mr. O'Connell, in Derby, were making preparations to give him a splendid dinner.

Sir Robert Liston, baronet, one of his majesty's privy council, died at his seat near Edinburgh, on the 15th of July. He was in the 94th year of his age, and the oldest of the whole diplomatic body of Europe. About ten years since he was minister at the court of Turkey.

The proprietors of the Manchester and Liverpool rail road had a meeting at Liverpool on the 27th of July, at which the directors announced a dividend of £5 per share for the preceding six months. The net profits of the rail road for the six months were £39,402. The company has a mortgage debt of £427,500 to pay off.

In the house of lords on the 30th July, that body had under discussion the subject of slavery in India. Mr. F. Buxton inquired what steps had been taken relative to the abolition of slavery in India, and was informed by Sir J. C. Hobhouse that the subject was left entirely in the hands of the local authorities in India, who could apply the operation of the clause in the act with better effect than those at a distance.

Count Survilleiers, Joseph Buonaparte, who took passage in the Philadelphia packet at N. York had arrived out, and with his suit, was established in London.

FRANCE.

The king of France and his ministers had resolved that there should be no review on the 29th July—the last of the "three days"—and the preparations making therefor were countermanded. Much agitation existed in Paris, and rumors were current of a widely extended conspiracy, in which several regiments of the line were involved. A society was also spoken of, having the menacing title of "Avengeurs of Alibeu." Another account says—King Louis Philippe was very unwilling to give up the review, and was only prevailed on by a unanimous assurance from his ministers, that if he persisted they would resign in a body.

Paris, July 27. The fetes of July have commenced under impressions and feelings of gloom and dissatisfaction. They will terminate without any serious incident, for the king will not quit the Tuilleries, and all the precautions ordered in anticipation of his appearance in public—if it were indeed contemplated—are strictly observed. Very great uneasiness, and very serious complaints are, however, expressed at this concealment of the king, and every moment one hears his conduct on this occasion contrasted with the resolution shown by his majesty on the 5th and 7th of June, 1832, and on the 18th April, 1834, when armed bodies of men were in open insurrection, and actually fighting with the troops and national guards in the streets of Paris.

Paris, July 28. Plots against the life of Louis Philippe. The Messenger of Tuesday states that the authorities were first made aware of the existence of new regicide projects, by the incorporation into companies of the national guard of several suspicious individuals, destitute of means of subsistence, who, nevertheless had found money to equip themselves agreeably to the new ordonnance. It adds that those men were to have profited by the confusion, which usually prevails in the ranks of the national guard before the review, to choose their station among them, so as to be as numerous as possible when filing by the king. A telegraphic despatch denounced a non-commissioned officer of a regiment of the line, in garrison at Metz, as going to Paris with the intention of meddling in political intrigue. This young man, named Hocquart, was accordingly arrested on Saturday, and brought to the prefecture of police, where he was put into solitary confinement.

The Droit announces that 113 new arrests had been made on Saturday and Monday, 77 of which were grounded on political reasons. The day and night reserve detachments were doubled in all the barracks of Paris. Police agents repaired on Monday to the house of a M. Olanier, in the Passage Brady, for the purpose of apprehending him, when they learned he had been dead two years! On Monday morning, M. Montalivet, Gasparin, Gisquet, remained a long time closeted with the king. In the afternoon, prince de Talleyrand had himself carried to the Tuilleries.

M. Armand Carrel, principal editor of Le Nationale, died at Paris on the 24th of July, of a wound received in a duel with M. Girardin, editor of the new journal La Presse. M. Persat, the responsible editor of La Nationale has been fined 1,000 francs and sentenced to three months imprisonment for publishing an article reflecting on the king for signing the order for the execution of Ali-beaud. The editor of La France was fined 1,000 francs and sentenced to two months imprisonment for copying the same article.

Information had reached Paris, by telegraph, that general Bugeaud had gained a signal victory over Abdel Kader, near Tremecen, on the 9th of July. The loss of the Arabs, in wounded and prisoners, was upward of one thousand. The Arab chief had made overtures for negotiation, but the French general would not receive them, and set out immediately in pursuit of the enemy.

A rigid non-intercourse is still kept up between France and the Swiss canton of Basle; a large military force is employed.

SPAIN.

An insurrection took place at Malaga on the night of the 25th of July, which resulted in the massacre of the civil and military governors of that city, and the complete triumph of the partisans of M. Mendizabal.

It seems that the partisans of the royal statute, and of the former prime minister, M. Mendizabal, had respectively made out lists of candidates of representatives to the cortes, which was to convene in August. Although defeated in the capital, the former were successful in other towns in the electoral district. On this news reaching Malaga, the adherents of Mendizabal made preparations for a revolutionary movement. They succeeded in corrupting the military, eight hundred men, recently brought to Malaga to cause the authority of the governors to be respected, who were both known to be firm supporters of the royal statute, and in consequence had been repeatedly insulted by the populace. On the evening of the 25th, the national guards took umbrage at some change, which it was reported the military governor intended to introduce; reinforced the detachment on duty at the main guard, and as the crowds began to collect in the streets, ordered the generale to be beat.

The military governor, a veteran covered with scars, whose valor had been often tested in the field, immediately proceeded to the main guard, accompanied only by an aid-de-camp—and exclaimed, "gentlemen what is this? What is the meaning of such strange proceedings?" Upon which one of the national guard who stood near him, presented a pistol, which, however, flashed in the pan. "Pistols do not frighten me," exclaimed the veteran, and entering the guard room, he called loudly for assistance. Some of the guards immediately levelled their muskets at him. "National guards," cried the governor, "is this the way you reward the victory I obtained at Puente de la Reyna?" He was answered by a discharge of muskets, and his body was afterwards run through in twenty places by the bayonets of the national guard.

In the mean time, the civil governor, the distinguished count Donadio, hearing the generale beat, repaired to the convent where the troops were quartered, and put himself at their head; but he soon found that they were not to be depended upon in a contest with the national guard. And upon the approach of a large body of national lancers shouting loudly "the constitution forever!" "Death to tyrants!" "Death to the pastorales!"—(seeming friends, but real foes to liberty)—"Down with the royal statute!" &c. he retired within the walls of the convent, and ordered the gates to be closed. A large body of the insurgents now collected, beating drums, firing muskets, and uttering obstreperous cries of "down with the republic!" &c. A short parley being held between the regular troops and the national guard, the former left the convent and joined the insurgents, shouting "union forever!" and on pointing out to the guards the governor, who was attempting to make his escape, disguised in the dress of a common soldier, he was instantly shot dead, and his body dragged into the public square, where it was exposed until the next morning.

On the 26th instant, the constitution of 1812 was solemnly proclaimed and sworn to, and a new junta, or board of government established, the president of which was the same commandant of carabineers, who presided over the provisional one. The new governor had forcibly recommended the maintenance of the public tranquillity.

The internal condition of the kingdom is represented to be very unsettled and even alarming. The populace in Madrid and the other principal cities are discontented and weary of the protracted war. In the suburbs of the capital their discontent had occasioned riots and bloodshed. In Segovia it had been necessary to adopt strong measures, to secure the city against a coup de main.

Two Carlist expeditions had been despatched on Arragon and Castile—and it was apprehended that one object of these movements, was to make an attack on Valladolid. Subsequent accounts, however, stated that the troops had been met and dispersed among the mountains.

Mina has issued a proclamation, threatening severe punishment to the inhabitants of the towns and villages, which may in future assist the enemy, or comply with any of their requisitions for supplies, unless they can prove that the enemy's superior numbers left them no chance of successful opposition or resistance.

M. Mendizabal has been elected a procurador, or deputy, from Malaga, Xeres and Madrid. Senor Isturitz from Medina-Sidonia and Cadiz.

A letter from Bayonne, dated July 27, states that all the public offices, &c. had been removed from Vittoria to Miranda-on-the-Ebre; doubtless under apprehension that the city might fall into the hands of the Carlists, gen. Cordova having withdrawn from Vittoria with his forces.

Recruiting for the French legion, serving in the ranks of the queen's army, was going on very actively in the neighborhood of the frontier.

General Aldama, governor of Barcelona, had gone to Figueras with a strong body of troops, to execute justice upon the murderers of brigadier-general Tena, late governor of Figueras, who, it will be remembered, was slain in a late tumult.

It is stated that some important advantages had been gained by the queen's troops. Another account says the queen's troops are dispirited and in some instances have laid down their arms.

M. Rayneval, the French ambassador at Madrid, had applied for his recal, and at the same time demanded the appointment of a general of high reputation to succeed him, whose opinions may have weight in the queen's councils. Marshal Molitor is said to have been nominated, in pursuance of this demand.

BRAZIL.

The imperial government had latterly succeeded in gaining advantages over the insurgents in the provinces of San Pedro de Sal, (Rio Grande) and that it was hoped that all would be restored to tranquillity. Com. Grenfell has been appointed to the command of a squadron of 11 or 12 brigs and schooners.

No further accounts from Para. Rumors were circulated that the rebels had been beaten. Considerable opposition had been manifested in the chambers against the administration of regent Feijó, but on the whole his government appeared to be popular.

MEXICO.

We learn from the editors of the New Orleans "Bee" of the 22d ult. who have received files of the Diario del Gobierno of Mexico, to the 30th of July, inclusive, that the republic is agitated by domestic commotions. The liberal party or federalists, (i. e. those opposed to centralism) are making rapid advances; they have made a bold attempt to abolish the present order of things, and restore the government to its former features; but whether their force was insufficient to obtain the success they calculated upon, or whether the government anticipated their designs and frustrated them by timely organization, we cannot tell; however, they were completely routed at Ella in the engagement which took place between 900 government troops under the command of gen. Canalazo, and 600 federalists commanded by col. Miguel Acevedo.

From Canalazo an official despatch or bulletin appears in the Diario of the 24th—which states that the federal party had 100 men killed, and 228 taken prisoners. Among the latter are Acevedo, chief of the revolutionists, Andreas Castenada, brevet commandant of the battalion, Ramirez, commanding the company of Tacachi, and a foreigner named Laprelladi, captain of artillery. The remainder of their force were entirely routed. The loss on the part of the government was 3 killed and 6 wounded.

The day succeeding this engagement, Acevedo, Castenada, Ramirez and Laprelladi were shot. A council of war had been held upon the other officers, but the result has not yet transpired.

The commandant of artillery of the federal troops succeeded in making his escape from Ella, and has arrived in this city. He informed us, that the greatest agitation prevails in the interior of Mexico, occasioned by the revolutionary movements of Oajaca; disturbances are hourly anticipated.

The official accounts from the states, on the other hand, directed to the general government, and published in the Diario, declare most directly, that the greatest tranquillity prevailed throughout.

The Mexican fleet, consisting of the brig Fama and the schooner Bravo, were at Vera Cruz on the 9th. They were preparing to make a cruise.

By a decree of the general government, published in the official paper of 17th July, an annual contribution of $3 upon every thousand dollars' worth of property has been declared upon all rural estates.

The Diario, of the 24th July, informs us that a pamphlet is circulating in the capital, entitled "The Ministry Made Known," said to have been printed at Oajaca, in Valde's office, but which was really printed in Mexico. This document is wholly occupied with censuring the acts of the cabinet. M. Maugino is accused of being the cause of all the troubles and dissensions which have formerly existed. The secretary of war, Tornel, is called a coward, and unworthy of the place he occupies. This pamphlet appears to have given great uneasiness to the ministry, if we may judge from the articles published in the official papers against it.

From the official proclamations relative to the conspirators of the state of Oajaca, and the southern provinces, and the movements of the federalists in Mexico, received by the general government, it appears that numerous arrests have been made since the battle of Ella. Two individuals belonging to Lauareigas' band (the companion of Caberilla Melendes) have been arrested and imprisoned, on the charge of exciting the people to revolution, by proclaiming a new government, and crying long life to federation. One of these individuals in defending himself was wounded. Three muskets and four shot guns were found on his premises.

At San Felipe (Guanajato) a lieutenant colonel of the name of Louis Gonzales made efforts to excite the patriots there to revolt, but not completely succeeding, he decamped for Zacatecas, where a party of troops have been sent to arrest him.

An official letter from Lonja says that the Gonzales party, of which we have spoken in the preceding paragraphs, has been reduced to six men, the balance having abandoned him. He will have to make his escape from that department, or run the risk of being arrested or killed.

Another official note from the same city, under date of the 24th of July, states that the detachment of troops sent in pursuit of Gonzales and his accomplices, are making every endeavor to ferret them out, and that but little doubt is entertained of the whole of them being taken.

On the 25th the official account of the arrest of these individuals, amounting to twenty-two, was received.

Later news.

The New Orleans Bee of the 24th ult. gives copious extracts from a file of the Cosmopolita a liberal journal of Mexico, on the subject of the affair at Ella. The execution of Acevedo and others at that place by the commandant of the government troops, Canalazo, is denounced as a repetition of the bloody scenes of the despotic reign of Bustamente. These excesses are compared to the conduct of Danton and Robespierre, but the day of retribution as then is prayed for, in the occurrence of another 18th Brumaire, which shall put an end to the reign of terror.

The Cosmopolita avers that such is the distracted state of the government that it cannot procure money for a single campaign. That the same fate awaits the present system of centralism and consolidation as that which overwhelmed Bustamente. There are neither statesmen nor warriors; even the army was better off under the tyrant Bustamente.

The following articles from the same paper, show the extent of the disaffection:

Congress, on account of the penury of the public treasury, speak of new contributions. Is there a representative or a senator, if asked, who can tell what has been disbursed for the war in Texas? Is there that individual living who can make a recapitulation of the sums spent, soi desant, for secret expenses?

Mr. Fonseca, who has pronounced in the city of Folooca for federalism, is augmenting his followers, and seems disposed to march upon Michoacan.

A. Teutillilan and gen. Gomez have pronounced in favor of federation.

On the 18th at 7 o'clock in the morning, an extraordinary courier arrived at Gradelaria from Calunia, bringing intelligence that in the latter city a rising had taken place in favor of federalism.

They write from San Louis: "Every day we have the arrivals of the unfortunate officers and soldiers from Matamoras, the army having been entirely disbanded. The war department of the republic will shortly present in the most imposing manner a loss of its maritime force."

At Cohuli, Tamaupilis and San Louis, great complaints are made about the contributions, and great anxiety prevails to know how the money which goes into the treasury is disposed of.

FROM NACOGDOCHES.

The public has heard scarcely any thing from gen. Gaines' head quarters since his letter of the 10th of July, announcing his intention to march a part of his army to Nacogdoches; and from that post itself we have not, until now, heard a word. If the government has been any better advised, their information has not been worth publishing, or they have thought proper to keep it to themselves. This long silence had, indeed, begun to create doubts in the minds of some people whether gen. Gaines had, in fact, compromised the neutral obligations of his country, by a military movement into the Mexican territory; but the annexed extract from a letter received yesterday by one of our citizens, from an officer at Nacogdoches, settles the question, and shows that a detachment of our army is in actual occupation of that Mexican town: [Nat. Intel.]

Extract of a letter from an officer of the U. S. army, dated camp Nacogdoches, Aug. 4, 1836.

"Since I last addressed you from Fort Towson, I have performed another march of near two hundred miles, and now, on a small hill which terminates, or rather on which Nacogdoches partly stands, our encampment is spread. We were two weeks accomplishing the march, which was truly fatiguing. Part of the country over which we passed had never been travelled before, except by men on horseback; and as we were encumbered with ox teams, a road had necessarily to be cut as we advanced, which caused great delay, even when no river was to be crossed, and the trouble incident to building bridges and rafts did not occur to detain us. We reached this place about a week ago, and the firing of a small piece of artillery on our approach told of a favorable reception. The inhabitants are extremely polite and obliging, but many of them have left the town in consequence of the hostile attitude of the Indians, who are said to be so numerous that some do not consider the town safe now, notwithstanding the presence of the U. S. troops.

"Yesterday evening the roaring of artillery and the sound of martial music announced the arrival of gen. Houston and staff. He seems to have suffered in health, and the wound received at the battle of San Jacinto confines him still to his crutches.

"Reports said a week or two since that ten thousand Mexicans were on their march to Texas, but, like most reports of the kind, it proved to be incorrect, though it is yet believed that about two thousand are embodied at Matamoras. The Texian army is daily increasing in strength and confidence, and will doubtless be able successfully to oppose any force that can be brought against them."

It is stated in the Pensacola Gazette, that general Gaines having sent an officer into Texas about the middle of July, for the purpose of reclaiming some deserters, he found them to the number of 200 already enlisted in the Texian service. They were in the uniform of the American army, but refused, of course, to return with the officer. On application to the commander of the Texian forces, that officer replied that the soldiers might go if they chose, but that he had no authority to send them back against their will. It is not stated whether these men belonged to the regular army or were volunteers called into the service of the United States.

THE ARMY.

GENERAL ORDER, NO 59.

Head quarters of the army, adjutant general's office, Washington, August 29, 1836.

1. Promotions in the army since the publication of "general order" No. 46, dated 6th July, 1836.

I—PROMOTIONS.

First regiment of dragoons.

1st. lieu. Abraham Van Buren, to be captain 4th July, 1836; vice Hunter, resigned.

2d lieu. Gaines P. Kingsbury, to be 1st lieu. 4th July, 1836; vice Van Buren, promoted.

Brevet 2d lieu. Lloyd Tilghman, to be 2d lieu. 4th July, 1836; vice Kingsbury, promoted. (Bvt. 1st July, 1836.)

Brevet 2d lieu. Thomas McCrate, to be 2d lieu. 31st July, 1836. (Bvt. 1st July, 1836.)

First regiment of artillery.

1st lieu. Charles Dimmock, to be captain 6th August, 1836; vice Gates, deceased.

2d lieu. Jacob W. Bailey, to be 1st lieu. 6th Aug. 1836; vice Dimmock, promoted.

Brevet 2d lieu. Alex. P. Crittenden, to be 2d lieu. 31st July, 1836; vice Allen, resigned. (Bvt. 1st July, 1836.)

Brevet 2d lieu. Peter V. Hagner, to be 2d lieu. 6th August, 1836; vice Bailey, promoted. (Bvt. 1st July, 1836.)

Brevet 2d lieu. Martin J. Burke, to be 2d lieu. 31st August, 1836; vice Sitgreaves, resigned.—(Bvt. 1st July, 1836.)

Second regiment of artillery.

Brevet major Matthew W. Payne, captain of the 4th regiment of artillery, to be major 27th June, 1836; vice Heileman, deceased.

2d lieu. Andrew A. Humphreys, to be 1st lieu. 16th August, 1836; vice Locke, resigned.

Brevet 2d lieu. Henry H. Lockwood, to be 2d lieu. 20th July, 1836; vice Loughborough, deceased. (Bvt. 1st July, 1836.)

Brevet 2d lieu. Muscoe L. Shackelford, to be 2d lieu. 31st July, 1836; vice Burnett, resigned.—(Bvt. 1st July, 1836.)

Brevet 2d lieu. Robert Allen, to be 2d lieu. 16th August, 1836; vice Humphreys promoted. (Bvt. 1st July, 1836.)

Third regiment of artillery.

Brevet captain Richard B. Lee, 1st lieu. to be captain 31st August, 1836; vice Ansart, resigned.

Brevet captain Samuel Ringgold, 1st lieu. to be captain 31st August, 1836; vice Thurston, resigned.

2d lieu. Wm. R. McKee, to be 1st lieu. 13th August, 1836; vice White, resigned.

2d lieu. Benj. Poole, to be 1st lieu. 31st August, 1836; vice Lee, promoted.

2d lieu. Edwin Rose, to be 1st lieu. 31st August, 1836; vice Ringgold, promoted.

Brevet 2d lieu. Christopher A. Greene, to be 2d lieu. 13th August, 1836; vice McKee, promoted. (Bvt. 1st July, 1836.)

Brevet 2d lieu. Christopher Q. Tompkins, to be 2d lieu. 31st August, 1836; vice Poole, promoted. (Bvt. 1st July, 1836.)

Brevet 2d lieu. Israel C. Woodruff, to be 2d lieu. 31st August, 1836; vice Rose, promoted.—(Bvt. 1st July, 1836.)

Brevet 2d lieu. William Frazer, to be 4d lieu. 21st August, 1836; vice Vinton, resigned. (Bvt. 1st July, 1836.)

Fourth regiment of artillery.

Brevet captain Henry A. Thompson, 1st lieu. to be captain 31st August, 1836; vice Ward resigned.

2d lieu. Joseph E. Johnston, to be 1st lieu. 30th June, 1836; vice Hopkins, resigned.

2d lieu. Frank E. Hunt, to be 1st lieu. 31st July, 1836; vice Barnes, resigned.

2d lieu. Simon H. Drum, to be 1st lieu. 15th August, 1836; vice Ewing, resigned.

2d lieu. Samuel C. Ridgeley, to be 1st lieu. 31st August, 1836; vice Thompson, promoted.

Brevet 2d lieu. Charles B. Sing, to be 2d lieu. 1st July, 1836.

Brevet 2d lieu. John W. Phelps, to be 2d lieu. 28th July, 1836; vice Brush, resigned. (Bvt. 1st July, 1836.)

Brevet 2d lieu. Wm. B. Arvin, to be 2d lieu. 31st July, 1836; vice Hunt, promoted. (Bvt. 1st July, 1836.)

Brevet 2d lieu. George C. Thomas, to be 2d lieu. 15th August, 1836; vice Drum, promoted.—(Bvt. 1st July, 1836.)

Second regiment of infantry.

1st lieu. Samuel L. Russell, to be captain 28th June, 1836; vice Johnson, resigned.

1st lieu. Carlos A. Waite, to be captain 3d July, 1836; vice Ranson, deceased.

2d lieu. Silas Casey, to be 1st lieu. 28th June 1836; vice Russell, promoted.

2d lieu. Abner R. Hetzel, to be 1st lieu. 28th June, 1836; vice Gallagher, resigned.

2d lieu. James W. Penrose, to be 1st lieu. 3d July, 1836; vice Waite, promoted.

Brevet 2d lieu. J. R. D. Burnett, to be 2d lieu. 28th June, 1836; vice Casey, promoted. (Bvt. 1st July, 1836.)

Brevet 2d lieu. Henry W. Wessells, to be 2d lieu. 28th June, 1836; vice Hetzel, promoted.—(Bvt. 1st July, 1836.)

Brevet 2d lieu. James W. Anderson, to be 2d lieu. 3d July, 1836; vice Penrose, promoted.—(Bvt. 1st July, 1836.)

Brevet 2d lieu. Thomas Johns, to be 2d lieu. 31st July, 1836; vice Brown, resigned. (Bvt. 1st July, 1836.)

Fourth regiment of infantry.

2d lieu. Charles H. Larned, to be 1st lieu. 7th August, 1836; vice Hood, resigned.

Brevet 2d lieu. Stephen T. Tibbatts, to be 2d lieu. 7th August, 1836; vice Larned, promoted.—(Bvt. 1st July, 1836.)

Fifth regiment of infantry.

Brevet 2d lieu. Alex. H. Tappen, to be 2d lieu. 31st July, 1836; vice Collingsworth, resigned.—(Bvt. 1st July, 1836.)

Sixth regiment of infantry.

1st lieu. Levi M. Nute, to be captain 31st July, 1836; vice Rogers, resigned.

2d lieu. Nathaniel J. Eaton, to be 1st lieu. 31st July, 1836; vice Nute, promoted.

2d lieu. Robert Sevier, to be 1st lieu. 10th August, 1836; vice Linden, deceased.

Brevet 2d lieu. Jacob E. Blake, to be 2d lieu. 31st July, 1836; vice Eaton, promoted. (Bvt. 1st July, 1836.)

Brevet 2d lieu. John P. Center, to be 2d lieu. 10th August, 1836; vice Sevier promoted. (Bvt. 1st July, 1836.)

Brevet 2d lieu. George H. Ringgold, to be 2d lieu. 15th August, 1836; vice Drayton, resigned. (Bvt. 1st July, 1836.)

Seventh regiment of infantry.

1st lieu. Washington Seawell, to be captain 31st July, 1836; vice Tillinghast, resigned.

2d lieu. Roger S. Dix, to be 1st lieu. 31st July, 1836; vice Seawell, promoted.

2d lieu. Richard C. Gatlin, to be 1st lieu. 31st August, 1836; vice Mather, resigned.

Brevet 2d lieu. Wm. H. Griffin, to be 2d lieu. 31st July, 1836; vice Dix, promoted. (Bvt. 1st July, 1836.)

Brevet 2d lieu. James M. Wells, to be 2d lieu. 31st August, 1836; vice Gatlin, promoted. (Bvt. 1st July, 1836.)

II—CASUALTIES.—(34.)

Resignations.—(25.)

Captains.—(7.)

David Hunter, 1st dragoons, 4th July, 1836.

Brevet major Felix Ansart, 3d artillery, 31st August, 1836.

Charles M. Thurston, 3d artillery, 31st August, 1836.

Charles Ward, 4th artillery, 31st August, 1836.

Seth Johnson, 2d infantry, 28th June, 1836.

Jason Rogers, 6th infantry 31st July, 1836.

Nicholas Tillinghast, 7th infantry, 31st July, 1836.

1st lieutenants.—(8.)

J. W. Shaumburg, 1st dragoons, 31st July, 1836.

Joseph L. Locke, 2d artillery, 16th August, 1836.

Edward B. White, 3d artillery, 19th August, 1836.

M. C. Ewing, 4th artillery, 15th August, 1836.

James Barnes, 4th artillery, 31st July, 1836.

Joseph S. Gallagher, 2d infantry, 28th June, 1836.

Washington Hood, 4th infantry, 7th August, 1836.

Wm. W. Mather, 7th infantry, 31st August, 1836.

2d lieutenants.—(9.)

Lorenzo Sitgreaves, 1st artillery, 31st August, 1836.

Robert T. P. Allen, 1st artillery, 31st July, 1836.

Ward B. Burnett, 2d artillery, 31st July, 1836.

Francis Vinton, 3d artillery, 31st August, 1836.

Thomas J. Lee, 4th artillery, 31st August, 1836.

Alfred Brush, 4th artillery, 28th July, 1836.

Jacob Brown, 2d infantry, 31st July, 1836.

John T. Collingsworth, 5th infantry, 31st July, 1836.

Thomas F. Drayton, 6th infantry, 15th August, 1836.

Brevet 2d lieutenant.—(1.)

Wm. H. Price, 1st infantry, 31st August, 1836.

Deaths.—(5.)

Bvt. lieu. col. Julius F. Heileman, major 2d artillery, 27th June, 1836.

Bvt. maj. Owen Ransom, captain 2d infantry, 3d July, 1836.

Captain Lemuel Gates, 1st artillery, 6th August, 1836.

1st lieutenant Henry St. James Linden, 6th infantry, 10th August, 1835.

2d lieutenant H. Loughborough, 2d artillery, 20th July, 1836.

Declined.—(4.)

Captain John Dougherty, 2d dragoons.

1st lieutenant Thornton Grimsley, 2d dragoons.

1st lieutenant Horatio Grooms, 2d dragoons.

Brevet 2d lieutenant John W. Judson, 2d artillery.

2—The officers promoted will report accordingly, and join their proper stations and companies without delay—those on detached service, or acting under special orders and instructions, will report by letter to their respective colonels.

"III—Rule to be observed in ordinary cases of promotion."

3—"If a field officer, the officer promoted will join the regiment and station of his predecessor; if a company officer, he will join the particular company where the vacancy to which he succeeds, may have occurred."

By order of ALEXANDER MACOMB, major general, commanding-in-chief.

R. JONES, adjutant general.

COTTON MANUFACTURES.

From the Lowell (Massachusetts) Journal.

The first cotton mill in Lowell was erected in 1822, and put in operation the next year; as late as 1826, there were but 2,500 spindles in operation there. The business, however, went on so successfully from that time, that on the first of January, 1836, there were 27 mills in that place containing 129,828 spindles. The water power in that place, is now all or nearly all occupied, and new sites must be sought in other places for the increasing capital flowing into this branch of business.

The progress of cotton manufactures will be further developed by some other facts. In 1790, there was but one cotton mill in the United States. This was erected by Slater and Brown, in Providence, and contained but 70 spindles. In 1805, there were but eight or ten mills containing 4,500 spindles; two of these mills were in Massachusetts, one in New Hampshire, one near Philadelphia, and the remainder in Rhode Island. In 1806 and 1807, and during the war of 1812, there was a rapid increase in manufacturing business, caused by restriction on imports. These commercial embarrassments gave the first decided determination to manufacturing in this country, and practically illustrated the prophetic wisdom of Jefferson and Hamilton, of the necessity of making the United States independent of all other nations for the supply of the immediate wants of her people. At the close of the war in 1815, the number of spindles was 130,000, and so great an impetus had now been given in this direction, that in 1825, 800,000 spindles had been put in operation, which were increased in the next ten years to 1,750,000, requiring about 54,000 looms.

Still these are not sufficient to supply the wants of the community; it is estimated that about 73,000 spindles should be annually added to meet the demand of the present yearly addition to our population. This is sufficiently shown by the state of the market; for notwithstanding the great increase in the number of spindles, the price of goods has not only been maintained but advanced, and the manufacturing establishments have made large dividends of profits. It has been said upon undoubted authority that capitalists in Boston have received in the last four years sixty per cent. in dividends on stock in some of the Lowell mills. This fact comes home at once to the understanding, and needs no comment.

We find a prejudice existing in some quarters, against manufacturing stock in consequence of a great depression and loss in that kind of property, which took place some years ago. But the principles upon which those losses are explained, give new confidence and support to the system on which the business is now conducted. In the early progress of our manufactures, the pioneers had to pass through difficulties and embarrassments hardly to be conceived of by people of the present day: with a jealousy natural to England, and not surprising in regard to an interest of such vast importance to her, the exportation of machinery, and the emigration of machinists were prohibited under very severe penalties; our own machinists were few and very unskilful, and labored under immense disadvantages, having to grope their way by such uncertain light as they could obtain by stealth, or their ingenuity strike out. The consequence was that the expense of putting a mill into operation at that time was more than double its present cost, while, at the same time, the machinery was much inferior to that now in use. This difference has alone produced much loss; we could not come in competition with the British manufacturers in an open contest, and at the close of the war our market was flooded with every species of British goods which severely pressed upon the American manufacturer and produced disastrous results.

But how are the tables now reversed? At this time American machinery is actually superior to the British, and some of our improvements as well as our goods, have been introduced into England. The American throstle spindle, for instance, in 1833, revolved 7,500 times in a minute, and the British but 4,500, which was afterwards increased to 5,400. But to show still further the progress of improvement, we may observe that the spindle which formerly revolved but 50 times in a minute, now moves with the amazing velocity of 8,000 revolutions in a minute. The result of these various improvements is, that the spinning of No. 100 thread, for example, which cost in 1786 $2 40 a pound, now costs but 16 cents. The cost of making species of yarn has been reduced since 1812 about one half, and that of weaving by power loom still more; and threads that formerly broke at the rate of thirteen per cent. now break only three per cent. Besides all these advantages, machinery can be erected and put in operation at an expense not exceeding one half the amount it cost in 1820.

MR. RATHBUN TO HIS CREDITORS.

The annex letter from Benj. Rathbun to his creditors, is taken the Buffalo Commercial Advertiser of the 1st inst. That paper says that if the creditors in schedule C. will accept the real estate in payment of their demands, they will be amply secured and have the certainty of ultimately realizing a handsome advance.

The Buffalo Journal regrets to say that some of the mortgage creditors manifest a disposition to press their claims most inconveniently upon the assignees, and urges forbearance. The assignees have published a card to the same effect.

TO MY CREDITORS.

You have already been apprized, through the medium of the public prints, that owing to circumstances beyond my control, and to which it is not necessary now to allude, I have been compelled to suspend for the present, the payment of my debts. To close my estate in a manner that would render justice to every creditor—and secure to his benefit all the property which I possessed—I executed an assignment of my effects, real and personal, to Messrs. Pratt, Allen, Clary, Love and Fillmore of the city of Buffalo. By that assignment my creditors were divided into two classes—to the first a preference was given, in the payment of their demands—a preference called for—by feelings of gratitude toward some of that class, from whom I had received much friendly assistance in the transaction of my business; and by a sense of the obligation which was imposed on me, to protect the mechanics, laborers and clerks in my employment.

The real and personal estate inventoried by me amounted at the valuation which I made of the property, to two millions six hundred and eighty-one thousand dollars—and this valuation subsequent reflection has convinced me, was not exaggerated. The whole of my debts of every kind and nature, will not exceed one million eight hundred thousand dollars. It is obvious, therefore, that unless my estate is improvidently managed, it will furnish ample means for the extinguishment of every debt and demand against me. And it is my earnest wish that in the settlement of this estate, such measures may be adopted, as will save the property from loss or sacrifice, and insure to every creditor the full amount of his claims.

Unfortunately the assignment was not sufficiently considered, previously to its being signed, and its defects and want of particularity in its details are now discovered and felt by the assignees in the execution of their trust. Many powers essential to the due and proper management of the estate—powers which were intended to be conferred—and without which serious losses must and will accrue, have been omitted in the instrument conveying my estate to the assignees; and those gentlemen now find exigencies daily arising, calling for the exercise of such powers; while the instrument under which they act, and by which they are circumscribed, does not confer them.

For instance: on several parcels of the real estate, mortgages have been given, which are existing liens. Many of these mortgages have yet a considerable time to run—provided the interest, and some small payments mentioned, are punctually met.—But in case of failure to meet such payments, then the condition is—that the entire sum secured by the mortgage shall be due immediately, and the mortgagees have a right to foreclosure for the whole amount. Now the assignees find that they have no power, under the assignment, to make such payments—no discretion is allowed them in this particular—consequently, they cannot avoid the failure of the condition of the mortgage.

In some instances, the mortgagees have already instituted proceedings to foreclose—and if permitted to proceed, and the property be forced off—it cannot fail to be attended with ruinous sacrifices. Again, there are contracts for lands, to a large amount, from which great profits may be confidently anticipated; and on these, advances to the amount of $100,000 have already been made. Unless such contracts are fulfilled, the estate will not only be deprived of the profits which can be realized, but the payments already made will be forfeited. Yet in these, and in like cases, the assignees have no power to act.

When the assignment was executed, I supposed that it conferred ample powers on the assignees—it was my intention that such powers should be conferred—and their omission is attributable to the haste with which the instrument was drawn, and not to design. To indulge in regrets for this omission, would be idle—it only remains to apply a remedy, if one can be suggested. Such a remedy the creditors themselves can furnish; and as matters are now situated, they alone possess the power to close the estate in a manner to secure themselves from loss. If the second class of creditors would assume the payment of the first, and take the entire property into their own hands and under their own control—or, if both classes would, by mutual arrangements among themselves, receive property in payment of their demands, all the claims against me could be discharged.

To such arrangement, the assignees, I am justified in saying, would cheerfully accede, and I beg leave to add, that I would with pleasure release my residuary interest, and join in any conveyance to accomplish the ends proposed. Although I believe that my property is more than sufficient to satisfy my creditors, I yet have no wish to reserve any share for myself. All that I now desire, so far as property is concerned, is, that every creditor of mine should be paid the utmost cent to which he is entitled. Whatever may be my fate or future condition in life—whether I be convicted or acquitted of the charges preferred against me—to know that by me, no one has been injured—that all my liabilities have been faithfully discharged—will, in every situation, furnish me with infinite comfort and consolation.

With a view, therefore, of ascertaining the wishes and feelings of my creditors, and of effecting an united and vigorous action on their part, I respectfully request them, wheresoever they may reside—to meet in person, or by agents fully empowered to act in the premises, at the Eagle tavern in the city of Buffalo, on Monday the twelfth day of September next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon. On that day the sale of the personal property is advertised to take place, and if any course be adopted by the creditors, different from the one now pursued—to be effectual it must be prompt and decisive.

BENJAMIN RATHBUN.

Buffalo, August 31, 1836.

THE LATE BISHOP CHEVERUS.

From the Salem Gazette.

The last arrivals from Europe bring intelligence of the death of John Cheverus, formerly Roman Catholic bishop of Boston, and at the time of his decease, a cardinal of the Romish church. M. Cheverus was born at Mayence, in the province of the same name, on the 23rd of January, 1768. His family were highly respectable. At an early age he entered into the ecclesiastical state, and in two or three years afterwards, when thirteen or fourteen years of age, was preferred to a benefice, by Louis XVIII, then Monsieur.

M. Cheverus was ordained December 18th, 1790, at the last public ordination in Paris, before the revolution. Soon after entering into priest's orders, he was appointed pastor of the church in his native parish, and vicar-general of the diocese. These early distinctions gave him a celebrity not acquired by many, venerable for their age and virtues, among the ecclesiastics at that time. He had not long resided at Mayence, when the persecutions of the clergy commenced, and M. Cheverus repaired to Paris, where he was concealed on the second and third of September, the memorable days of the massacre of the clergy. In a few days after this bloody scene he left Paris, disguised in a military dress, and succeeded in escaping to England. On his arrival at Dover he could not speak a word of English, but, in January 1793, he took up his residence in the house of a Protestant clergyman, who, in addition to his pastoral duties, had five or six young men with him, preparing for the university. M. Cheverus was employed in giving these scholars lessons in the languages and mathematics, and found the conversation of these youths the best instructor in the English language.

In 1795 he was invited by Dr. Matignon, with whom he had been slightly acquainted in Paris, to join him in Boston, where he arrived October 3d, 1796. The Catholics were increasing at this time in Boston, and many gentlemen subscribed liberally, to assist in erecting a church for them, which was consecrated on the 29th of September, 1803. In the year 1810 he was appointed the first Roman Catholic bishop for the New England states, and was consecrated at Baltimore.

The literary and scientific acquirements of bishop Cheverus were of a high order. He read Greek and Hebrew with great readiness; he spoke and wrote Latin as a vernacular tongue, and repeatedly declared, that if he were to make an argument for his life, he should prefer, before competent judges, to use the Latin, believing that his thoughts would flow more readily in that language than in French or English. He was a good citizen of his adopted country, and never lost an opportunity of teaching his flock the blessings flowing from the government under which they lived, and kept alive in their breasts a warm and constant patriotism. In the last war with England, when Boston was threatened with an attack from the enemy, and voluntary contributions of labor became necessary for making arrangements for a proper defence, bishop Cheverus several times went out to work at the head of his flock, to assist in building ramparts and breastworks for defence. He was a minister of peace, but instructed his followers that self defence was not only a law of nature but a principle of religion.

After the death of Dr. Matignon, the duties of bishop Cheverus increased, and he labored indefatigably, until his health sank under his exertions. In 1822, on the return of baron de Neuville to France, who had been residing in this country, as minister from the court of France, the state of the bishop's health was represented to Louis 18th, and his talents being well known, he was nominated by an ordinance, dated January, 13, 1823, to the bishopric of Montauban. He left Boston in September, 1823, for New York, whence he embarked for Havre, on board the Paris, and on the 21st of October suffered shipwreck in a violent tempest on the coast of France. Thus, after an absence of more than thirty years, he was thrown upon his native shores, where the highest honors awaited him. He was soon raised to the dignity of archbishop of Bordeaux, and a few months since was appointed a cardinal. It is not improbable that he would have been called to fill the pontifical chair, if he had survived the present incumbent.

COAL TRADE.

From the New York Journal of Commerce.

We often hear of the progress of steam, the progress of improvement, the progress of the age, &c. but the progress of coal in this country is scarcely less remarkable, as will be seen from the annexed schedule, derived from a more particular statement in the Philadelphia Commercial List and Price Current. The first column of tons shows the whole quantity in the Philadelphia market from year to year, the quantity remaining on hand at the close of each year being included in the stock of the year next succeeding.

Year.	Tons in market.	Sold.	Remaining.
1820	364	364	none.
1821	1,073	1,073	none.
1822	2,440	-	little.
1823	5,823	-	do.
1824	9,541	-	do.
1825	85,536	85,536	none.
1826	47,515	42,546	5,000
1827	68,365	60,365	8,000
1828	90,302	72,302	12,000
1829	125,815	107,815	18,000
1830	192,934	192,934	40,000
1831	214,971	214,971	none.
1832	364,051	294,051	70,000
1833	560,000	425,000	135,000
1834	514,936	394,936	120,000
1835	680,750	677,435	none.

Some attempt has been made lately to get up a panic in regard to the supplies of the present year; but the writer in the Commercial List assures us that it is without foundation. To the same effect is the testimony of the Minor's Journal at Pottsville, which states that a greater quantity, by at least 75,000 tons, has been or will be forwarded from that vicinity to Philadelphia this year than last. Nevertheless the price of the article is uncommonly high, resulting partly from the increased price of labor, and partly perhaps from other circumstances. It is, however, some consolation to know that we are not likely to be frozen out, as well as starved out, the coming winter, though, in truth, at the prices which almost all articles relating to the sustenance and comfort of the body command, we do not well see how people in moderate circumstances will be able to make the two ends of the year meet.

An English writer, after speaking of the great manufacturing advantages of America and the rapid progress of our manufactures and commerce, which he thinks may endanger the prosperity of England, says:—

"The writer has been surprised at the little knowledge that exists here with respect to the mineral resources of America. In nothing does that country surpass Europe so much as in its rich beds of coal. By a government survey of the state of Pennsylvania, it appears that it contains twenty thousand square miles of coal, with iron in proportion. This is one state only!—while the whole of the Mississippi valley is more or less enriched with this valuable combustible. Several of his neighbors have been astonished by the inspection of a specimen of bituminous coal which the writer procured from a pit at Brownsville, on the Monongahela river, above Pittsburgh, and which is pronounced equal to the very best qualities produced from the mines in Yorkshire. The mode of working the pits is to drive an adit into the sloping banks of the navigable rivers, and at a few yards distance the coal stratum is usually found, six feet in thickness; and as the miner is always able to work in an upright posture, one man will frequently produce as much as 100 loads a day.

The steamboat in which the author went from Brownsville to Pittsburgh, stopped at one of these pits' mouths, and took in a supply of fuel, which was charged at the rate of about 3 farthings a bushel. These are facts which bear more directly upon the future destinies of this country than the marriages of crowned heads in Portugal, the movements of savage forces in Russia, and similar proceedings to which we attach so much importance."

TRADE WITH TUSCANY.

OFFICIAL.

By the president of the United States.

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas, by an act of congress of the United States, of the twenty-fourth of May, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-eight, entitled "an act in addition to an act entitled 'an act concerning discriminating duties of tonnage and impost,' and to equalize the duties on Prussian vessels and their cargoes," it is provided that, upon satisfactory evidence being given to the president of the United States, by the government of any foreign nation, no discriminating duties of tonnage or impost are imposed or levied, in the ports of the said nation, upon vessels wholly belonging to citizens of the United States, or upon the produce, manufactures or merchandise, imported in the same, from the United States, or from any foreign country, the president is thereby authorized to issue his proclamation, declaring that the foreign discriminating duties of tonnage and impost, within the United States, are, and shall be, suspended and discontinued, so far as respects the vessels of the said foreign nation, and the produce, manufactures or merchandise, imported into the United States, in the same, from the said foreign nation, or from any other foreign country; the said suspension to take effect from the time of such notification being given to the president of the United States, and to continue so long as the reciprocal exemption of vessels belonging to citizens of the United States, and their cargoes, as aforesaid, shall be continued, and no longer:

And whereas satisfactory evidence has lately been received by me from the government of his imperial and royal highness the grand duke of Tuscany, through an official communication of baron LEDERER, the consul general of his imperial and royal highness in the United States, under date of the 6th day of August, 1836, that no discriminating duties of tonnage or impost are imposed or levied in the ports of Tuscany upon vessels wholly belonging to citizens of the United States, or upon the produce, manufactures or merchandise, imported in the same, from the United States, or from any foreign country:

NOW, THEREFORE, I, ANDREW JACKSON, president of the United States of America, do hereby declare and proclaim that the foreign discriminating duties of tonnage and impost, within the United States, are, and shall be, suspended and discontinued, so far as respects the vessels of the grand dukedom of TUSCANY, and the produce, manufactures or merchandise, imported into the United States, in the same, from the said grand dukedom, or from any other foreign country; the said suspension to take effect from the sixth day of August, 1836, above mentioned, and to continue so long as the reciprocal exemption of vessels belonging to citizens of the United States, and their cargoes, as aforesaid, shall be continued, and no longer.

Given under my hand, at the city of Washington, the first day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirty-six, and of the independence of the United States the sixty-first.

ANDREW JACKSON.

By the president:

JOHN FORSYTH, secretary of state.

GEN. HARRISON'S OPINIONS.

Washington, April 7, 1836.

To Gen. William H. Harrison:

SIR: I consider it the right of every citizen of the United States to ask and demand, and to be fully informed of the political principles and opinions of those who are candidates for the various offices in the gift of the people, and the imperious duty of the candidate to frankly and fully avow and declare the opinions which he entertains. I, therefore, as a voter, a citizen and an individual, feeling a deep and abiding interest in the welfare and prosperity of our common country, and an ardent desire to see the perpetuity of our free and happy form of government, take the liberty of asking you to give me your opinion and views on the following subjects:

1st. Will you (if elected president of the United States) sign and approve a bill distributing the surplus revenue of the United States to each state, according to the federal population of each, for internal improvements, education and to such other objects as the legislatures of the several states may see fit to apply the same?

2d. Will you sign and approve a bill distributing the proceeds of the sales of the public lands to each state, according to the federal population of each, for the purposes above specified?

3d. Will you sign and approve bills making appropriations to improve navigable streams above ports of entry?

4th. Will you sign and approve (if it becomes necessary to secure and save from depreciation the revenue and finances of the nation, and to afford a uniform sound currency to the people of the United States) a bill (with proper modifications and restrictions) chartering a bank of the United States?

5th. What is your opinion as to the constitutional power of the senate or the house of representatives of the congress of the United States, to expunge or obliterate from the journals the records and proceedings of a previous session?

A frank, plain and full answer to the foregoing inquiries is respectfully and earnestly solicited.—Your answer is desired as soon as possible. I intend this and your answer for publication.

I have the honor to be your humble and obedient servant,
SHERROD WILLIAMS.

GEN. HARRISON'S LETTER.

North Bend, May 1, 1836.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 7th ultimo, in which you request me to answer the following questions:

1st. "Will you, if elected president of the United States, sign and approve a bill distributing the surplus revenue of the United States to each state, according to the federal population of each, for internal improvement, education, and to such other objects as the legislatures of the several states may see fit to apply the same?"

2d. "Will you sign and approve a bill distributing the proceeds of the sales of the public lands to each state, according to the federal population of each, for the purposes above specified?"

3d. "Will you sign and approve bills making appropriations to improve navigable streams above ports of entry?"

4th. "Will you sign and approve (if it becomes necessary to secure and save from depreciation the revenue and finances of the nation, and to afford a uniform sound currency to the people of the United States) a bill, (with proper modifications and restrictions,) chartering a bank of the United States?"

5th. "What is your opinion as to the constitutional power of the senate or house of representatives of the congress of the United States, to expunge or obliterate from the journals the records and proceedings of a previous session?"

From the manner in which the four first questions are stated, it appears that you do not ask my opinion as to the policy or propriety of the measures to which they respectively refer; but what would be my course, if they were presented to me (being in the presidential chair of the United States) in the shape of bills, that had been duly passed by the senate and house of representatives.

From the opinions which I have formed of the intention of the constitution, as to the cases in which the veto power should be exercised by the president, I would have contented myself with giving an affirmative answer to the four first questions; but, from the deep interest which has been, and indeed is now, felt in relation to all these subjects, I think it proper to express my views upon each one separately.

I answer, then, 1st. That the immediate return of all the surplus money which is or ought to be in the treasury of the United States, to the possession of the people, from whom it was taken, is called for by every principle of policy and indeed of safety to our institutions and I know of no mode of doing it better than that recommended by the present chief magistrate, in his first annual message to congress, in the following words: "To avoid these evils, it appears to me that the most safe, just and federal disposition which could be made of the surplus revenue, would be its apportionment among the several states, according to the ratio of representation."

This proposition has reference to a state of things which now actually exists, with the exception of the amount of money thus to be disposed of—for it could not have been anticipated by the president that the surplus above the real wants or convenient expenditures of the government would become so large, as that retaining it in the treasury would so much diminish the circulating medium as greatly to embarrass the business of the country.

What other disposition can be made of it with a view to get it into immediate circulation, but to place it in the hands of the state authorities? So great is the amount, and so rapidly is it increasing, that it could not be expended for a very considerable time on the comparatively few objects to which it could be appropriated by the general government; but the desired distribution amongst the people could be immediately effected by the states, from the infinite variety of ways in which it might be employed by them. By them it might be loaned to their own banking institutions, or even to individuals—a mode of distribution by the general government which, I sincerely hope, is in the contemplation of no friend to his country.

2d. Whilst I have always broadly admitted that the public lands were the common property of all the states, I have been the advocate of that mode of disposing of them which would create the greatest number of freeholders, and I conceived that in this way the interest of all would be as well secured as by any other disposition; but since, by the small size of the tracts in which the lands are laid out, and the reduction of the price, this desirable situation is easily attainable by any person of tolerable industry, I am perfectly reconciled to the distribution of the proceeds of the sales as provided for by the bill introduced into the senate by Mr. Clay; the interest of all seems to be well provided for by this bill; and as from the opposition which has hitherto been made to the disposition of the lands heretofore contemplated by the representatives of the new states, there is no probability of its being adopted, I think it ought no longer to be insisted on.

3d. As I believe that no money should be taken from the treasury of the United States to be expended on internal improvements but for those which are strictly national, the answer to this question would be easy but from the difficulty of determining which of those that are from time to time proposed would be of this description. This circumstance, the excitement which has already been produced by appropriations of this kind, and the jealousies which it will no doubt continue to produce if persisted in, give additional claims to the mode of appropriating all the surplus revenue of the United States in the manner above suggested. Each state will then have the means of accomplishing its own schemes of internal improvement. Still there will be particular cases when a contemplated improvement will be of greater advantage to the union generally, and some particular states, than to that in which it is to be made. In such cases, as well as those in the new states, where the value of the public domain will be greatly enhanced by an improvement in the means of communication, the general government should certainly largely contribute. To appropriations of the latter character there has never been any very warm opposition. Upon the whole, the distribution of the surplus revenue amongst the states seems likely to remove most if not all, the causes of dissension of which the internal improvement system has been the fruitful source. There is nothing, in my opinion, more sacredly incumbent upon those who are concerned in the administration of our government than that of preserving harmony between the states. From the construction of our system there has been, and probably ever will be, more or less jealousy between the general and state governments; but there is nothing in the constitution—nothing in the character of the relation which the states bear to each other—which can create any unfriendly feeling, if the common guardian administers its favors with an even and impartial hand. That this may be the case, all those to whom any portion of this delicate power is entrusted should always act upon the principles of forbearance and conciliation; ever more ready to sacrifice the interest of their immediate constituents rather than violate the rights of the other members of the family. Those who pursue a different course, whose rule is never to stop short of the attainment of all which they may consider their due, will often be found to have trespassed upon the boundary they had themselves established. The observations with which I shall conclude this letter on the subject of the veto power by the president will apply to this as well as your other questions.

4th. I have before me a newspaper, in which I am designated by its distinguished editor "the bank and federal candidate." I think it would puzzle the writer to adduce any act of my life which warrants him in identifying me with the interest of the first, or the politics of the latter. Having no means of ascertaining the sentiments of the directors and stockholders of the bank of the United States (which is the one, I presume, with which it was intended to associate me) I cannot say what their course is likely to be in relation to the ensuing election for president. Should they, however, give me their support, it will be evidence at least that the opposition which I gave to their institution in my capacity of representative from Ohio in congress proceeded, in their opinion, from a sense of duty which I could not disregard.

The journals of the second session of the thirteenth, and those of the fourteenth congress, will show that my votes are recorded against them upon every question in which their interests were involved. I did, indeed, exert myself in the senate of Ohio to procure a repeal of the law which had imposed an enormous tax upon the branches which had been located in its boundaries at the request of the citizens. The ground of those exertions was not the interest of the bank; but to save what I considered the honor of the state, and to prevent a controversy between the state officers and those of the United States.

In the spring of 1834, I had also the honor to preside at a meeting of the citizens of Hamilton county called for the purpose of expressing their sentiments in relation to the removal of the public money from the custody of the bank by the sole authority of the executive. As president of the meeting, I explained at some length the object for which it was convened; but I advanced no opinion in relation to the recharter of the bank.

A most respectful memorial to the president in relation to the removal of the deposits was adopted, as were also resolutions in favor of rechartering the bank; but, as I have already said, this was not the purpose for which the meeting was called, and not one upon which, as presiding officer, I was called upon to give an opinion, but in the event of an equal division of the votes.

As a private citizen, no man can be more entirely clear of any motive, either for the rechartering the old institution, or creating a new one, under the authority of the United States. I never had a single share in the former, nor indeed in any bank, with one exception; and that many years ago failed, with the loss of the entire stock. I have no inclination again to venture in that way, even if I should ever possess the means. With the exception above mentioned, of stock in a bank long since broken, I never put out a dollar at interest in my life. My interest being entirely identified with the cultivation of the soil, I am immediately and personally connected with none other.

I have made this statement to show you that I am not committed to any course in relation to the chartering of a bank of the United States; and that I might, if so disposed, join in the popular cry of denunciation against the old institution, and upon its misconduct predicate an opposition to the chartering of another.

I shall not, however, take this course so opposite to that which I hope I have followed through life, but will give you my sentiments clearly and fully, not only with regard to the future conduct of the government on the subject of a national bank, but in relation to the operations of that which is now defunct.

I was not in congress when the late bank was chartered, but was a member of the thirteenth congress, after its first session, when the conduct of the bank in its incipient measures, was examined into; and believing from the result of the investigation that the charter had been violated, I voted for the judicial investigation; with a view of annulling its charter. The resolution for that purpose, however, failed; and shortly after, the management of its affairs was committed to the talents and integrity of Mr. Cheves. From that period to its final dissolution, (although I must confess I am not a very competent judge of such matters), I have no idea that an institution could have been conducted with more ability, integrity and public advantage, than it has been.

Under these impressions, I agree with gen. Jackson in the opinion expressed in one of his messages to congress, from which I make the following extract: "that a bank of the United States, competent to all the duties which may be required by the government, might be so organized as not to infringe on our delegated powers, or the reserved rights of the states, I do not entertain a doubt." But the period for rechartering the old institution has passed, as Pennsylvania has wisely taken care to appropriate to herself the benefits of its large capital. The question then, for me to answer, is, whether, under the circumstances you state, if elected to the office of president, I would, sign an act to charter another bank, to answer, I would, if it were clearly ascertained that the public interest, in relation to the collection and disbursement of the revenue would materially suffer without one, and there were unequivocal manifestations of public opinion in its favor. I think, however, the experiment should be fairly tried, to ascertain whether the financial operations of the government cannot be as well carried on without the aid of a national bank. If it is not necessary for that purpose, it does not appear to me that one can be constitutionally chartered. There is no construction which I can give the constitution which would authorize it, on the ground of affording facilities to commerce. The measure, if adopted, must have for its object the carrying into effect (facilitating at least the exercise of) some one of the powers positively granted to the general government. If others flow from it, producing equal advantages to the nation, so much the better; but these cannot be made the ground for justifying a recourse to it.

The excitement which has been produced by the bank question, the number and respectability of those who deny the right to congress to charter one, strongly recommend the course above suggested.

5th. I distinctly answer to this question, that, in my opinion, neither house of congress can constitutionally expunge the record of the proceedings of their predecessors. The power to rescind certainly belongs to them; and is, for every public legitimate purpose, all that is necessary. The attempt to expunge a part of their journal, now making in the senate of the United States, I am satisfied could never have been made but in a period of the highest party excitement, when the voice of reason and generous feeling is stifled by long protracted and bitter controversy.

In relation to the exercise of the veto power by the president, there is, I think, an important difference in opinion between the present chief magistrate and myself. I express this opinion with less diffidence, because I believe mine is in strict accordance with those of all the previous presidents to gen. Jackson.

The veto power, or the control of the executive over the enactment of laws by the legislative body, was not unknown in the United States previously to the formation of the present federal constitution. It does not appear, however, to have been in much favor. The principle was to be found in but three of the state constitutions; and in but one of them (Massachusetts) was the executive power lodged in the hands of a single chief magistrate. One other state (South Carolina) had, indeed, not only adopted this principle, but had given its single executive magistrate an absolute negative upon the acts of the legislature. In all other instances it has been a qualified negative, like that of the U. States. The people of South Carolina seem, however, not to have been long pleased with this investment of power in their governor, as it lasted but two years; having been adopted in 1776 and repealed in 1778; from which time the acts of the legislature of that state have been entirely freed from executive control. Since the adoption of the constitution of the United States, the veto principle has been adopted by several states, and, until very lately, it seemed to be rapidly growing into favor.

Before we can form a correct opinion of the manner in which this power should be exercised, it is proper to understand the reasons which have induced its adoption. In its theory, it is manifestly an innovation upon the first principle of republican government—that the majority should rule. Why should a single individual control the will of that majority? It will not be said that there is more probability of finding greater wisdom in the executive chair than in the halls of the legislature. Nor can it possibly be supposed that an individual residing in the centre of an extensive country, can be as well acquainted with the wants and wishes of a numerous people, as those who come immediately from amongst them—the partakers, for a portion of the year, in their various labors and employments, and the witnesses of the effects of the laws in their more minute as well as general operations. As far, then, as it regards a knowledge of the wants and wishes of the people, wisdom to discover remedies for existing evils, and devising schemes for increasing the public prosperity, it would seem that the legislative bodies did not require the aid of an executive magistrate. But there is a principle, recognized by all the American constitutions, which was unknown to the ancient republics. They all acknowledge rights in the minority, which cannot rightfully be taken from them. Experience had shewn, that in large assemblies, these rights were not always respected. It would be in vain that they should be enumerated, and respect for them enjoined in the constitution. A popular assembly, under the influence of that spirit of party which is always discoverable in a greater or less degree in all republics, might, and would, as it was believed sometimes disregard them. To guard against this danger, and to secure the rights of each individual, the expedient of creating a department independent of the others, and amenable only to the laws, was adopted. Security was thus given against any palpable violation of the constitution, to the injury of individuals, or of a minority party. But it was still possible for a wilful and excited majority to enact laws of the greatest injustice and tyranny, without violating the letter of their charter.

And this I take to be the origin of the veto power, as well in the state governments as that of the United States. It appears to have been the intention to create an umpire between the contending factions which had existed, it was believed, and would continue to exist. If there was any propriety in adopting this principle in the government of a state, all the reasons in favor of it existed in a tenfold degree for incorporating it in that of the United States. The operations of the latter, extending over an immense tract of country, embracing the products of almost every clime, and that country divided too, into a number of separate governments, in many respects independent of each other, and of the common federal head, left but little hope that they could always be carried on in harmony. It could not be doubted that sectional interests would at times predominate in the bosoms of the immediate representatives of the people and the states, and combinations formed destructive of the public good, or unjust or oppressive to a minority. Where could a power to check these local feelings, and to destroy the effects of unjust combinations, be better placed than in the hands of that department whose authority, being derived from the same common sovereign, is co-ordinate with the rest, and which enjoys the great distinction of being at once the immediate representative of the whole people, as well as of each particular state?

In the former character, the interests of the whole community would be rigidly supported, and, in the latter, the rights of each member steadfastly maintained. The representation from the state authorities in the electoral colleges, I consider one of the most felicitous features in the constitution. It serves as an eternal memento to the chief magistrate that it is his duty to guard the interest of the weak against the unjust aggressions of the strong and powerful. From these premises, you will conclude that I consider the qualified veto upon the acts of the legislature, conferred by the constitution upon the president, as a conservative power, intended only to be used to secure the instrument itself from violation, or, in times of high party excitement, to protect the rights of the minority, and the interests of the weaker members of the union. Such, indeed, is my opinion, and such we must believe to be the opinion of nearly all the distinguished men who have filled the executive chair. If I were president of the United States, an act which did not involve either of the principles above enumerated, must have been passed under very peculiar circumstances of precipitancy for opposition to the known public will, to induce me to refuse to it my sanction.

If the opinion I have given of the motives of the framers of the constitution, in giving the veto power to the president, is correct, it follows that they never could have expected that he who was constituted the umpire between contending parties should ever identify himself with the interest of one of them, and voluntarily raise himself from the proud eminence of leader of a nation to that of chief of a party. I can easily conceive the existence of a state of things by which the chief magistrate of a state may be forced to act upon party principles; but such a course is entirely opposed to all the obligations which the constitution imposes on a president of the United States. The immense influence he possesses will always give to his party the preponderance, and the very circumstance of its being an executive party will be the cause of infusing more bitterness and vindictive feeling in these domestic contests. Under these circumstances, the qualified veto given by the constitution, may, if the president should think proper to change its character, become as absolute in practice as that possessed by the kings of England and France. From the great variety of local interests acting upon the members of the two houses of congress, and from the difficulty of keeping all the individuals of a large party under the control of party discipline, laws will often be passed by small majorities adverse to the interests of the dominant party; but if the president should think proper to use the veto power for the purpose of promoting the interests of his party, it will be in vain to expect that a majority so large as two-thirds in both houses would be found in opposition to his wishes. In the hands of such a president the qualified veto of the constitution would in practice become absolute.

I have, upon another occasion, expressed my views upon the danger of a dominant executive party. It may perhaps be said that the chief magistrate will find it impossible to avoid the influence of party spirit. Several of our chief magistrates, however, have been able to escape its influence; or what is the same thing, to act as if they did not feel it. As one mode of avoiding it, it would be my aim to interfere with the legislation of congress as little as possible. The clause in the constitution which makes it the duty of the president to give congress information of the state of the union, and to recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient, could never be intended to make him the source of legislation. Information should always be frankly given, and recommendations upon such matters as come more immediately under his cognizance than theirs. But there it should end. If he should undertake to prepare the business of legislation for the action of congress, or to assume the character of code maker for the nation, the personal interest which he will take in the success of his measures will necessarily convert him into a partizan, and will totally incapacitate him from performing the part of that impartial umpire, which is the character that I have supposed the constitution intends him to assume when the acts passed by the legislature are submitted to his decision. I do not think it by any means necessary that he should take the lead as a reformer, even when reformation is, in his opinion, necessary. Reformers will never be wanting when it is well understood that the power which wields the whole patronage of the nation will not oppose the reformation.

I have the honor to be, with great consideration, sir, your humble servant, W. H. HARRISON.

To the hon. Sherrod Williams.

MR. VAN BUREN'S OPINIONS.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Washington city, April 7, 1836.

Hon. Martin Van Buren, vice president:

SIR: I consider it the right of every citizen of the United States to ask and demand and to be fully informed of the political principles and opinions of those who are candidates for the various offices in the gift of the people, and the imperious duty of the candidate to frankly and fully avow and disclose the opinions which he entertains. I therefore, (as a voter, a citizen and an individual feeling a deep and abiding interest in the welfare and prosperity of our common country, and an ardent desire to see the perpetuity of our free and happy form of government), take the liberty of asking your views on the following subjects:

1st. Will you, (if elected president of the United States), sign and approve a bill distributing the surplus revenue of the United States to each state, according to the federal population of each, for internal improvements, education and to such other objects as the legislatures of the several states may think fit to apply the same?

2d. Will you sign and approve a bill distributing the proceeds of the sales of the public lands to each state according to the federal population of each, for the purposes above specified?

3d. Will you sign and approve bills making appropriations to improve navigable streams above ports of entry?

4th. Will you sign and approve, (if it becomes necessary to secure and save from depreciation the revenue and finances of the nation, and to afford a uniform sound currency to the people of the United States), a bill (with proper modifications and restrictions), chartering a bank of the United States?

5th. What is your opinion as to the constitutional power of the senate or house of representatives of the congress of the United States, to expunge or obliterate from the journals the records and proceedings of a previous session?

A frank, plain and full answer to the foregoing inquiries is respectfully and earnestly solicited. Your answer is desired as soon as possible. I intend this and your answer for publication.

I have the honor to be, your humble and obedient servant,
SHERROD WILLIAMS.

Washington, April 20th, 1836.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a letter from you, asking my opinions and views upon a series of public questions. You have accompanied the submission of your interrogatories with a reference to the existing relations between us of voter and candidate, and a declaration of your sense of the rights and duties growing out of the same.

Concurring, as I do, in the principle which inculcates and secures the most liberal interchange of sentiments between the elector and the candidate, I think it nevertheless, just and reasonable to protect myself against the inference of having assented, without limitation, to the general proposition you have advanced. The duty of a candidate for the suffrages of the people to answer fully all inquiries made by an elector undetermined as to his course, and seeking, in good faith, information as to the opinions of the candidate, touching the appropriate duties of the office to be filled, is one which I cheerfully acknowledge, and will, upon all proper occasions, faithfully discharge.

The rights of an elector on the other hand, who has already determined to oppose the individual to whom his inquiries are addressed, and who makes them with the sole view of exposing, at his own time, and the mode he may select, the opinions of the candidate to unfriendly criticism, and the candidate himself to prejudice in the estimation of portions of his fellow citizens, stand, in my judgment, upon a different footing. To such inquiries I hold the candidate to be at liberty to reply or not, as justice to the country, and to his own character may, in his opinion, dictate.

My personal acquaintance with you is, as you know, very limited, and without stopping to inquire as to your objects in this particular, I cheerfully assume them to be such as I have first described. I do this the more readily, as your character and situation assure me that if this impression is erroneous—if your course in regard to the presidential election, so far as I am concerned, is settled, and the information you seek is not asked with a view to your own conduct, you will say so frankly.

Acting upon this assumption and belief, I will cheerfully give you my "opinions and views" upon the subjects which you have submitted to my consideration. In your lists of questions, I find several which are now under discussion in congress, and upon which it may become my duty to vote, as president of the senate, before the termination of the present session. My reply to your letter will, therefore, be delayed for a short time; but I will embrace an early moment after congress rises, and in abundant season for the purposes of your inquiry, to send it to you.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
M. VAN BUREN.

The hon. Sherrod Williams.

Washington, June 9, 1836.

Hon. Martin Van Buren:

SIR: I addressed you a letter on the 7th of April last, asking your opinions in relation to the several subjects therein specified. I done so in good faith for the purpose of knowing your opinions on those points, and for the purpose of determining upon the course that I would take in the coming contest for the presidency. I had the honor, on the 20th of the same month, to receive a letter from you acknowledging the receipt of mine, and in which you say you will answer the questions propounded in my letter, but that that answer would be deferred until after the adjournment of the present session of congress, because some of the subjects upon which I asked your opinion were pending before the senate, and perhaps you might have, (in the event the senate was equally divided), to give the casting vote. I must be permitted to say that the reason given by you for not answering my questions is wholly and entirely unsatisfactory. I have always considered it the duty of a candidate for office, in the gift of the people, to inform those whose suffrages he seeks, of his views and opinions as to the constitutionality and policy of those measures in which they may be interested, and particularly when the candidate shall be called upon, by those who have the right to ask his opinion, and not to decline giving his opinion before his election, because, perhaps and perchance, he might have to vote upon those subjects or some one of them. If the people knew in advance the opinion of the candidate, they might not place him in a condition to vote.

If the reason you assign, for not answering my questions until the adjournment of the present session of congress, be a good one, the same reason will continue to exist and apply with equal force until the fourth of March next; for at the next session of congress, (whether you shall be elected president of the United States or not), you may be called upon as president of the senate to vote upon all or some one of the subjects mentioned in my letter. I am in good faith anxious to obtain your opinion upon the points submitted in my letter, and therefore again most earnestly and respectfully solicit your answer as soon as practicable.

I have the honor to be your obedient and humble servant,
SHERROD WILLIAMS.

—
Washington June 14, 1836.

SIR: I find nothing in your last letter to change my decision in respect to the time at which I proposed to reply to your first. It is however due to both of us that I should correct an error into which you have fallen.

I have already informed you that I would embrace an early moment after congress rises and in abundant season for the purposes of your inquiry, to send you my answer. That determination remains not only unchanged, but is confirmed by the statements you have now made. You may therefore dismiss from your mind all apprehensions of not receiving it in full time for the object you have in view. I am, sir, your obedient humble servant,
M. VAN BUREN.

—
Albany, August 8, 1836.

To the hon. Sherrod Williams, representative in congress from the state of Kentucky:

SIR: I embrace the earliest convenient moments, after the adjournment of congress, to give you "my opinions and views" on the various subjects to which my attention was called by your letter of the 7th of April last.

The first of these subjects relates to the propriety of a law for the distribution of the surplus revenue of the United States among the states, according to their federal population, for internal improvements, education and such other objects as the legislatures of the states may see fit to apply the same.

In my opinion, congress does not possess the power, under the constitution, to raise money for distribution among the states; and if a distinction can be maintained between raising money for such purpose, and the distribution of an unexpected surplus, (of which I am not satisfied), I think it ought not to be attempted without a previous amendment of the constitution, defining the authority and regulating its exercise. Apprehending danger to the union from the course of federal legislation upon the subject of internal improvements, and fearing that it could not otherwise be arrested, I was inclined, at the commencement of president Jackson's administration, to favor the idea of a distribution annually among the states, of the surplus revenue, and an amendment of the constitution conferring on congress authority to make it. President Jackson, entertaining similar apprehensions, submitted suggestions to this effect to the consideration of congress. They met with approbation in some quarters, but were denounced in others, with extraordinary severity, as encouraging a policy particularly unjust and ruinous to a part of the union, and subversive of the principles upon which it was founded.

Time and circumstances have worked changes of opinion on the subject, from which my own mind has not been exempted. The intelligence and patriotism of the people proved adequate to the desired reform, in the legislation of congress upon the subject of internal improvements, without resorting to the proposed distribution: and the experience of the last session has fully satisfied me of the impropriety of any such measure. "The support of the state governments in all their rights, as the most competent administration of our domestic concerns, and the surest bulwarks against anti-republican tendencies;" and "the preservation of the general government, in its whole constitutional vigor, as the sheet anchor of our peace at home and safety abroad," were described by Mr. Jefferson as among the essential principles of our government, which ought always to shape its administration. The experience of more than thirty years has attested the wisdom and justice of these sentiments—and it behooves those who are entrusted with the management of public affairs, to beware how they disregard the admonition. They who can yet allow themselves to hope that these great principles can be maintained under the operation of any of the proposed systems of distribution, have looked upon the signs of the times in a different light from myself. It is my firm conviction, that any system by which a distribution is made among the states, of moneys collected by the federal government, would introduce vices into the legislation of both governments, productive of the most injurious effects, as well upon the best interests of the country, as upon the perpetuity of our political institutions. I sincerely hope, therefore, that the good sense and patriotism of the American people, will prevent the adoption of any such plan.

The deposit bill (recently passed) will remove any pretence of a speedy necessity for such a step, and give time to provide against the recurrence of a redundancy of revenue. It would, indeed, be a great misfortune, if that law were regarded by the country as pledging the future course of its legislation to the policy to which you refer. The circumstances under which it was passed, were of an extraordinary character, and cannot well again occur. To give a legislative organization to the fiscal agency for the collection and disbursement of the public revenue, which had been established through the treasury department by executive authority, as a substitute for that of the bank of the United States, was an object of the very highest importance. It was the successful winding up of one the most arduous conflicts between the well understood will of the people on the one side, and the moneyed power of the nation acting in concert with a formidable portion of its political power on the other, that has ever taken place, certainly that has ever resulted in the triumph of the popular will in any country. To accomplish this by the assent of all parties, to make all responsible for the future working of the system, by consulting liberally their opinions and wishes in its formation, and to put an end to those fierce and incessant assaults upon the management of the fiscal affairs of the government, by means of which every interest was disturbed, was a result which could not be too ardently desired. The president had for several sessions called the attention of congress to this subject without effect, and the opposition party in congress, by availing itself of partial diversities of opinion among the friends of the administration, acquired the power to prescribe conditions to its final settlement. That to which their demands were ultimately reduced, was a distribution of the deposits of a portion of the public moneys among the states.

After ineffectual efforts in both houses, on the part of the great mass of the supporters of the government in each, to separate that part of the bill which provided for the regulation of the deposit banks from the sections which made a different disposition of the surplus revenue, the friends of the administration, differing among themselves in regard to details and construction, but with the same general object in view, yielded their support, by large majorities, to the bill, in the modified form in which it came from the house of representatives. The amendment of the house, although it did not strip the bill of all its dangerous tendencies, made an essential change in its character in respect to the question of constitutionality. In its previous form, it took the money by appropriation out of the treasury, and thereby necessarily raised the question whether the use which was proposed to be made of it, was amongst the "expenditures" authorised by the federal constitution. By the bill, as amended, no money is drawn from the treasury, but the state treasuries, like the state banks, are, to a limited extent, made places of deposit; of the constitutional power to do which, with the consent of the states, there can be no question. The president, assuming, as he was bound by a proper respect for the institutions of the country to do, that good faith would be kept in the dealings which it authorised between the federal and state governments, gave his assent to the measure. I would have given to the bill a similar direction, if it had become my duty to decide on the question of its passage or rejection.

It now remains for public opinion, to the efficacy of which we all have so much reason to look with confidence and hope, to determine the character of the ultimate results to be expected from it. That the subject is of the first importance, all must admit; and I participate fully in the apprehensions so extensively entertained and so freely expressed as to its effects. But I do not despair. Often as we have seen our political horizon overcast with portentous clouds, and the safe conduct of public affairs beset by combinations which, to all appearance, could not be overcome, we have never yet seen the time when those doubts and difficulties were not finally and satisfactorily cleared away by the operation of this powerful corrector. Such, I doubt not, will be the result now; and such, in the nature of things, must it always be, as long as the people are uncorrupted and our institutions free. Prejudice, passion and selfishness, may rule the hour, and give a direction to public questions, when the controlling power rests in a single head, or in a few individuals whose position exempts them from the injurious effects of official errors; but this can seldom happen, when that power exists only, as is the case with us, in the great body of well informed and virtuous communities, who are to bear the consequences, whether for good or for evil, of public measures.

It is now for the majority of the people to decide whether the measure referred to shall only be tolerated as a temporary expedient, forced upon the country by a conjunction of extraordinary circumstances; and rendered less objectionable in consequence of its effect in removing beyond the reach of party contention and factious misrepresentations, disturbing questions in relation to the public moneys, at a moment when the public mind is, from other causes, peculiarly liable to be unduly influenced by sinister and unfounded imputations, or whether the distribution of the public deposits shall be the parent and forerunner of future distributions of the public revenue. That the decision of this interesting question will be honestly made, we all know, and I do not doubt that it will also be wisely made.

I hope and believe, that the public voice, will demand, that this species of legislation shall terminate with the emergency that produced it—that early and efficient steps will be taken to prevent the recurrence of a state of things calculated to furnish an excuse for any measure of distribution, by the adoption of the only natural, safe and just remedy for an excess of revenue, a reduction of the taxes, effectual in its results, equitable in its details, and wisely adapted to the circumstances of the country—that we shall be content to continue the action of our complicated but admirable system of government, state and federal, in the course that has conducted our country to its present palmy state of prosperity and renown—and shall eschew in future those schemes of improvement in their administration, with which the country is from time to time inundated, the results of which, to say the best of them, are extremely hazardous, and which too often have quite as much in view the individual advantage of the projector as the good of the nation.

The next subject embraced in your inquiries, is the distribution of the proceeds of the sales of the public lands amongst the states according to the federal population of each, for similar purposes.

My views in regard to several public questions, and amongst them the proper distribution of the public lands, were asked by a portion of the citizens of my own state shortly after my nomination for the presidency. They were given in August, 1835, and upon the latter subject expressed in the following words: "In respect to the public lands, I need only observe, that I regard the public domain as a trust fund belonging to all the states, to be disposed of for their common benefit. Ample authority is for that purpose conferred on congress by an express provision of the constitution. In making such disposition, that body should in my opinion act upon the principle, that the people of the United States have a greater interest in an early settlement and substantial improvement of the public lands, than in the amount of revenue which may be derived from them. To accomplish this object, the accumulation of large tracts in few hands should be discountenanced, and liberal facilities afforded to the acquisition of small portions by such of our citizens, wherever residing, as are in good faith desirous of possessing them as homes for themselves and families."

"The particular measures by which these results are to be secured, is matter of detail to be settled by congress, in the exercise of a sound discretion, aided by the lights of experience, and having reference to the general interests of the country. The disposition of the public lands proposed by the bill to which president Jackson refused his assent, was, in my opinion, highly objectionable. I therefore approved of its rejection by him at the time, and all my subsequent reflection has confirmed me in that opinion." I have watched the discussions which this subject has since undergone, with all the attention which its importance demands and with an earnest desire to arrive at conclusions in regard to it which shall best answer the requirements of justice, and promote the interests of all the states, I have seen no cause to doubt the correctness of the views. I am of opinion that the avails of the public lands will be more equitably and faithfully applied "to the common benefit of the United States," by their continued application to the general wants of the treasury, than by any other mode that has yet been suggested; and that such an appropriation is in every respect preferable to the distribution thereof among the states, in the manner your question proposes. Entertaining these views, I cannot give you any encouragement that I will, in the event of my election to the presidency, favor that policy.

You next ask me whether I will approve bills making appropriations to improve navigable rivers above ports of entry.

I am not aware that there is any question in reference to the subject of internal improvements by the federal government, upon which my opinions have not been fully expressed in a letter written by me in October, 1832, when a candidate for the vice presidency, to the Shocco Springs committee of N. Carolina, and in a letter from the attorney general of the United States to Mr. Garland of Mechlenburgh, in 1835, in which he was authorised to speak my sentiments in the matter. These documents have been frequently and extensively published.—Upon referring to them, you will find that from the first action of president Jackson upon this particular portion of his official duties, which happened while I was a member of his cabinet, until the time when those letters were written, there has been co-operation in action and a general correspondence in opinion between him and myself upon the whole subject. In the views expressed by him upon the particular question to which your inquiry extends, in his annual message to congress in December, 1834, I fully concur. They were as follows:

"There is another class of appropriations for what may be called, without impropriety, internal improvements, which have always been regarded as standing upon different grounds from those to which I have referred. I allude to such as have for their object the improvement of our harbors, and the removal of partial and temporary obstructions in our navigable rivers, for the facility and security of our foreign commerce. The grounds upon which I distinguished appropriations of this kind from others, have already been stated to congress. I will only now add that at the first session of congress under the new constitution, it was provided by law, that all expenses which should accrue from and after the 15th day of August, 1789, in the necessary support and maintenance and repairs of all light houses, beacons, buoys and public piers, erected, placed or sunk before the passage of the act, within any bay, inlet, harbor, or port of the United States, for rendering the navigation thereof easy and safe, should be defrayed out of the treasury of the United States; and further, that it should be the duty of the secretary of the treasury to provide by contracts, with the approbation of the president, for rebuilding when necessary, and keeping in good repair, the light houses, beacons, buoys and public piers in the several states, and for furnishing them with supplies. Appropriations for similar objects have been continued from time to time to the present without interruption or dispute. As a natural consequence of the increase and extension of our foreign commerce, ports of entry and delivery have been multiplied and established, not only upon our seaboard, but in the interior of the country, upon our lakes and navigable rivers. The convenience and safety of this commerce have led to the gradual extension of these expenditures; to the erection of light houses, the placing, planting and sinking of buoys, beacons and piers, and to the removal of partial and temporary obstructions in our navigable rivers, and in the harbors upon our great lakes, as well as on the seaboard.

"Although I have expressed to congress my apprehension that these expenditures have sometimes been extravagant and disproportionate to the advantages to be derived from them, I have not felt it to be my duty to refuse my assent to bills containing them, and have contented myself to follow in this respect in the footsteps of all my predecessors.—Sensible, however, from experience and observation, of the great abuses to which the unrestricted exercise of this authority by congress was exposed, I have prescribed a limitation for the government of my own conduct, by which expenditures of this character are confined to places below the ports of entry or delivery established by law. I am very sensible that this restriction is not as satisfactory as could be desired, and that much embarrassment may be caused to the executive department in its execution, by appropriations for remote and not well understood objects. But as neither my own reflections, nor the lights which I may properly derive from other sources, have supplied me with a better, I shall continue to apply my best exertions to a faithful application of the rule upon which it is founded. I sincerely regret that I could not give my assent to the bill entitled 'an act to improve the navigation of the Wabash river;' but I could not have done so without receding from the ground which I have, upon the fullest consideration, taken upon this subject, and of which congress has been heretofore apprized, and without throwing the subject again open to abuses which no good citizen, entertaining my opinions, could desire."

President Jackson has no where given us his views as to the particular provisions of the federal constitution, by which he conceives expenditures of this character to be authorised. Upon referring to the early proceedings of the government, we find that general Hamilton, while secretary of the treasury, contended that they were warranted by the authority given to congress to regulate commerce. Mr. Jefferson, on the other hand, whilst he deprecated their liability to extravagance and abuse, assumed that they could be justified under the power to maintain a navy. President Jackson has left the question of constitutionality in the state in which it was left by his predecessors.—But having had actual proof of the tendency of these appropriations to the abuses which Mr. Jefferson apprehended, he has endeavored to apply to the subject a practical remedy. With this view, he refused his assent to all appropriations above ports of entry or delivery—not that he held the mere fact of the establishment of such ports by congress, decisive of the question of constitutionality, but because the constitution, under the general discretion it confers in regard to the approval or disapproval of bills, gives him the right to do so without reference to the constitutional question, and because he thought its exercise would be highly conducive to the public good.—No one, I believe, contends that the president ought, so far as it depended upon him, to have arrested all appropriations of this character, nor could it with any show of propriety be insisted that he should have given his consent to the extension of them to objects of a character altogether different from those which have been promoted by grants from the federal treasury, since the commencement of the federal government. That the rule he adopted for the regulation of his conduct in the matter, is free from objection, is not contended. I am, however, satisfied that it has been productive of much good, and will, until a more satisfactory one is suggested, give it my support.

You next ask whether I will sign and approve (if it becomes necessary to secure and save from depreciation, the revenue and finances of the nation, and to afford a sound uniform currency to the people of the United States,) a bill (with proper modifications and restrictions) chartering a bank of the United States.

In the published letter of Mr. Butler to Mr. Garland, which has already been referred to, he thus states my opinions upon the subject of the bank: "Mr. Van Buren's opinions in regard to the bank of the U. States, were expressed in the senate of the U. States in 1828; repeated in his letter to the Shocco Springs committee, whilst a candidate for the vice presidency, and have been so freely uttered by him, that there cannot, I think, be occasion to say much upon that subject. But to close the door to cavil, I state, 1st. That he holds that congress does not possess the power to establish a national bank in any of the states of the union, nor to establish, in any such states, the branch of any bank located in the District of Columbia; and 2d. That he is, therefore, decidedly opposed to the establishment of a national bank in any of the states; and is also opposed to the establishment of any such bank in the District of Columbia, as unnecessary and inexpedient, and as liable to a great proportion of the abuses which have in his opinion, been practised by the existing bank."

This declaration, with other uniform, repeated and published avowals of my sentiments, in regard to a United States bank, would, I had supposed, be sufficient to save me from further interrogation on that subject; but as you have thought proper to push the inquiry further, and to that end, to place the matter before me in a form studiously adapted to present the question in its most favorable contingent aspect, you will, I am sure, be neither surprised nor dissatisfied, if I deem it due to myself as well as to the subject, to give it more particular and enlarged consideration than I have heretofore felt it necessary or proper to do.

I am induced to embrace for this purpose the opportunity you have presented to me the more readily, from a deep conviction for the incalculable importance to the people of the United States, that this long agitated and distracting subject should be finally settled, and from a hope that what I have to say upon it may, from the situation in which the partiality of my fellow citizens has placed me, to contribute in some degree to so desirable a result.

I greatly fear, that whilst there is in any quarter reason to hope that a charter for a new bank can in any condition of the country be obtained from the federal government, there will be neither order nor stability in the pecuniary operations of the country. If it can be ascertained that a discredited currency and pecuniary embarrassments will bring a charter, what security have we that such a state of things will not be produced? Is it doing violence to truth and justice to attribute to expectations of this character, the crusade which we have witnessed for the last two years against the deposit banks, against the efforts of the administration to restore a specie currency, and against all the fiscal arrangements of the treasury? Will any candid and well informed man pretend that such things would have been, if it had been considered as settled that the bank of the United States is not to be revived? I think not. The settlement of the deposit question, by the bill of the last session, will, doubtless, cause a suspension of this destructive career—but is there not reason to apprehend that it will recommence with the first appearance of any thing like a reasonable chance for the re-establishment of a national bank? Every thing therefore, which may serve to arrest or prevent the agitation of this subject, if only for a season, is of great value. In the published opinions to which I have already referred, my opposition to the establishment of a United States bank, in any of the states, is placed on the want of constitutional power in congress to establish one. Those who concur in denying this power, nevertheless differ among themselves in regard to the particular views by which their respective opinions are sustained. Some admit that congress has a right to create such an institution, whenever its establishment becomes necessary to the collection, disbursement and preservation of the revenue; but insist that no such necessity existed when the charter of the old bank expired, or has arisen since. With this class, the considerations to which you allude would be essential, and might have a controlling effect; for such persons make the power to establish a bank dependent upon them. My objection, on the contrary, is that the constitution does not give congress power to erect corporations within the states.

This was the main point of Mr. Jefferson's celebrated opinion against the establishment of the first national bank. It is an objection which nothing short of an amendment of the constitution can remove. We know it to be an historical fact, that the convention refused to confer that power on congress, and I am opposed to its assumption by it upon any pretence whatever. If its possession shall at any time become necessary, the only just way to obtain it to ask it at the hands of the people, in the form prescribed by the constitution. Holding this opinion, and sworn to support that instrument as it is, I could not find in the circumstances to which you refer, either warrant or excuse for the exercise of the authority in question; and I am not only willing, but desirous that the people of the U. States should be fully informed of the precise ground I occupy upon this subject. I desire more especially that they should know it now, when an opportunity, the best our form of government affords, will soon be presented, to express their opinion of its propriety. If they are in favor of a national bank as a permanent branch of their institutions, or if they desire a chief magistrate who will consider it his duty to watch the course of events, and give or withhold his assent to such an institution according to the degree of necessity for it that may in his opinion arise from the considerations to which your question refers, they will see that my co-operation in the promotion of either of these views cannot be expected. If, on the other hand, with this seasonable, explicit and published avowal before them, a majority of the people of the United States shall nevertheless bestow upon me their suffrages for the office of president, scepticism itself must cease to doubt, and admit their will to be, that there shall not be any bank of the United States, until the people, in the exercise of their sovereign authority, see fit to give to congress the right to establish one.

It is because I cannot doubt that the expression of the popular will, made under such circumstances, must have a tendency to arrest further agitation of this disturbing subject, for four years at least, and most probably, from the great moral influence which the often expressed opinion of the majority of the people in a republican government is entitled to, for a much longer period, that I am thus full and explicit upon the point to which you have called my attention. However much we may differ upon the abstract question involved in this controversy, no reflecting man can doubt the healthful and invigorating effects which any thing that looks like a settlement of this question must have upon all the business, as well as political relations of the country. The public mind has been long and painfully agitated by it, and needs repose. The fruits of this agitation have been bitter and abundant. Men of business require to be put in a situation that they may adapt their affairs to a state of things which promises permanency. That character is alone necessary to give success to the present system. No rational plan for the regulation of the fiscal affairs of the country, can fail to succeed, if the mass of our industrious and enterprising population, without regard to local, sectional or political distinctions, are only sincerely desirous for its success.—Once satisfy them that things are in this respect to remain stable, and it is not, in the nature of things, possible that they can refuse their aid and support to that which concerns them so nearly, and upon which their prosperity, private as well as public, is so essentially dependant. If our correspondence shall have the effect to contribute in any degree to bring about a state of things in which we all have so deep an interest, and which should be desired by all, I will rejoice that it has taken place.

But whilst I so confidently entertain and so readily promulgate these sentiments in regard to the want of power to establish in any of the states a national bank, I am, at the same time, equally desirous that it should be fully understood that I am decidedly opposed to the creation of any such institution in the District of Columbia. I do not believe that any national bank there, or elsewhere, is necessary to secure either of the advantages to which your question has reference. The principal grounds relied upon by the advocates for a bank, to establish its utility and necessity, as I understand them, are,

1st. That such an institution is necessary for the transmission and safe keeping of the public moneys.

2d. To secure a safe, cheap and convenient system of domestic exchange; and

3d. To make and preserve a sound currency.

The limits of this letter will not admit of a full discussion of these points, but I cannot refrain from referring to a few of the facts which belong to them. I say facts, for after the many speculations and anticipations in regard to the currency, the public revenue and the public prosperity, with which the country has been surfeited for the last two years, to which thousands have trusted, and by which thousands have been deceived, I may say, I think, without offence, that it would be the surest, because the only safe course, to regulate our opinions in future, somewhat more than heretofore, by ascertained facts. How, then, do the facts stand upon the first point, viz: the necessity of the bank, as a place of safe keeping for the public moneys, and as an agent for their transmission, to answer the wants of the government?

The official reports of the secretary of the treasury show first, that the average amount of money annually transferred by the bank of the United States, from 1820 to 1823, was from ten to fifteen millions of dollars; and the amount transferred by the deposit banks, from June 1835 to April 1836, or about ten months, over seventeen millions of dollars. In both cases the operation has been without loss, failure or expense. And it further appears, from the same source, that at no previous period has the safety of the public moneys been more carefully or securely provided for. An examination of the official documents will, I am well satisfied, fully sustain these positions. What foundation, then, was there for the assumptions, upon this part of the subject, which were put forth with so much solemnity, and insisted upon with so much earnestness, in the early discussions upon the subject of the bank? If so much has been done in this respect, whilst the substituted agency has had to contend with the most powerful opposition that was ever made upon any branch of the public service, what may we not expect from it now, when it has received the legislative sanction—and if there be not gross dereliction of faith and duty—when it must also receive the support of all parties?

In regard to domestic exchanges, the following facts are also established by the same authentic source, viz: that the amount of domestic exchanges performed at the last returns by the deposit banks, exceeded thirty-five millions of dollars, and at no return for months has it been less than twenty-five millions—which, at an average of thirty millions at each return, would be in a year one hundred and eighty millions, if each bill of exchange run on an average sixty days. On the contrary, the amount of domestic exchanges performed by the United States bank, did not for many years equal twenty millions at any one return, and seldom exceeded it, being quite one third less than what is now done by the deposit banks. It further appears, that these exchanges have in many cases been effected at lower rates by the deposit banks than by the United States bank. Indeed, can it be doubted, that even if there was not a single bank, state or national, in the country, it would nevertheless be quite easy to place its domestic exchanges upon an advantageous and safe footing, so long as there is a sufficiency of solid capital to be employed in the business? From the nature of the thing itself, and from the experience of Europe, we may be assured that the profits and necessities of trade would invite and obtain ample facilities for the business of exchange from other sources, so long as the commercial community with one accord desire to see it successfully carried on, and assist in good faith in effecting it.

Lastly, the currency. The proportion of our whole circulating medium that was composed of the notes of the bank of the United States, during the existence of that institution, was much smaller than was generally supposed. The circulation of the United States bank, as I am informed, ranged, for some years before it expired, at about twenty millions, often below that amount, which was not over one-fourth of the paper circulation of the United States. Some think it has been less than one fifth. The great mass of the business of the country was, therefore, even then carried on, so far as money was employed in it, by means of the notes of state banks and specie. The beneficial effects that were claimed to be rendered by that institution in respect to the currency, consisted—

1st. In supplying bills that were current throughout the union, and

2d. The salutary effects of its supervision over the state banks, in preventing over issues and compelling them to keep on hand larger supplies of specie for the redemption of their notes.

The transactions in which it became necessary, or was usual to carry bank notes from one state to another, were very limited in their amounts; large sums being then, as they are now, and ever will be, transmitted through the medium of bills of exchange. It will not even now, I think, be seriously denied, that the increase of the gold coinage, and the facilities of getting that species of coin, together with the large denomination of notes issued by the leading state banks, are abundantly sufficient for those purposes, and that they can be quite as conveniently employed in them.

As to the benefits alleged to have been rendered by the bank of the United States, in checking excessive issues by the state banks, and in compelling them to maintain an adequate supply of specie, whilst by no means disposed to undervalue them, I yet think the same objects can be accomplished, not only without the agency of any such institution, but to a much greater and more useful extent without than with it; provided a proper policy be pursued by the federal and state governments; by the former, through the mint and the treasury department; by the latter, by suppressing small bills, by discouraging the extension of the paper system, and by subjecting existing banks to wholesome restraints and to a rigid supervision.

That gold and silver should constitute a much greater proportion of the circulating medium of the country than they now do, is a position which few are disposed to deny. How great the increase, and how rapidly it ought to be effected—are questions in regard to which a difference of opinion may from time to time arise amongst men having the same general object in view. No beneficial reform in the affairs of the world was ever accomplished, in which similar diversities of opinion were not found among its advocates. But it is a consolation to know that embarrassments arising from that source have been overcome, and may be again. To protect the working classes, (who generally speaking, have no control over a paper currency, and derive no profit from bank stock) against losses arising from depreciation by securing a metallic currency sufficient at least for all minor dealings—including the payment of labor, the most important as well as the most pressing use there is for money—to furnish a more substantial specie basis for that part of the currency which consists of paper, and thereby save the whole community from loss in consequence of any sudden withdrawal of confidence—should be our first object, as it is our imperative duty. Other countries are wiser than we are in this respect. England prohibits the circulation of all bank notes under £5, equal to about $25; and France, all under 500 francs, equal to about $90; and there is scarcely a village or even an inn, in England, in which you cannot, without the slightest inconvenience, change a five or ten pound note, and even those of a higher denomination, into gold and silver; and in France there are like facilities.

Our situation has for a long time past been widely different; a fact easily to be accounted for when we reflect upon the past course of the federal government. The constitution gave to congress express power "to coin money and regulate the value thereof and of foreign coin," and it as expressly prohibits the exercise of a similar power by the states. It was to the federal government therefore, and to that only, that the framers of the constitution looked for whatever of a domestic metallic currency the interests of the people of the United States, and the security of property within the same, should be found to require; and as they also refused to congress the power to create corporations, and expressly prohibited the states from emitting bills of credit, and from making any thing but gold and silver coin a tender in payment of debts, it is equally obvious that they intended as a general rule, that the currency of the country should be a metallic and not a paper currency. Whether they also designed to divest the states of their antecedent right to incorporate banks, it would now be more curious than useful to inquire. That matter, so far as it relates to the mere question of power, must be regarded as settled in favor of the continued authority of the states. Assuming that this was contemplated by the framers of the federal constitution, it is then most evident that their hopes of a sound currency must have been based upon their expectation that the respective governments would faithfully discharge their peculiar duties, and as faithfully confine themselves to their respective spheres: that the federal government would exert all its constitutional powers, not only by creating and diffusing a metallic currency, but by protecting it against a paper circulation of the same nominal value, whilst the states supplied such emissions of paper as might be actually demanded by the necessities of commerce, and not at variance either in denomination or amount with the existence of an adequate specie currency.

Had such a policy been pursued, there is the best reason for believing that a just proportion between paper and specie might have been preserved, and a sound currency uniformly maintained. But instead of pursuing this course, the federal government at an early period authorised the issuing of paper money, and with the intermission of a very few years, continued to do so until the expiration of the charter of the late United States bank, and as if anxious to contribute their share to this inroad upon the policy of the federal constitution, the state governments have not only created swarms of banking institutions, but, until recently, most of those institutions were authorised to issue notes of as low a denomination as a single dollar. The consequences of this departure from the wise policy of the framers of the constitution, and from the appropriate functions of the federal and state governments, have been extensively injurious. We have seen them in the almost total exclusion of gold, and to a great extent of silver also, from the circulation of the country; in the enormous issues of paper which have been made whenever business was inviting and public confidence strong; the contractions which have followed an adverse state of things, and the mischiefs which these fluctuations have occasioned, in the frequent depreciation, and in numerous instances, the utter worthlessness of bank paper; in the temptations held out to the crime of forgery and the general prevalence of that crime; in the injurious collisions which have occurred between the state banks and the bank established by federal authority; and above all, in the daring attempt of the latter, first to control the public will through the medium of elections, and after this effort had been rebuked by the intelligence and virtue of the people, to extort a reversal of that decision by a reckless warfare on the business of the country.

It is time, high time, that we should return to the constitutional policy, and the first step in the way of reform, is that the federal government confine itself to the creation of coin, and that the states afford it a fair chance for circulation. Can any one assign even a plausible reason why the United States cannot maintain as stable a currency as either France or Great Britain? None, I imagine, other than that it has not been the policy of the government that it should be so. In all material respects, so far as I can judge, we are in an equally favorable, if not a superior condition. Whilst both those countries must rely on importations from abroad for gold for their mints, we derive three-fourths of a million annually from our mines, and are besides nearer the great supplies of it in South America. Nothing, therefore, but a faithful prosecution by the general government and the states, of the policy of the present administration in regard to a specie circulation, is necessary to place us on a footing of equality in this respect with other nations. Such a result once accomplished, it will require no labored argument to prove that more will have been done for the permanent interests and improvement of the currency, than was ever accomplished by the bank of the United States, or than ever could, in the nature of things, be accomplished by such an institution. We may find in what has already been done, the greatest encouragement to a vigorous prosecution of this policy.

In the years 1826, 1827 and 1828, the gold coinage amounted to only $154,655 annually. Since that period it has been as follows: in 1829, $295,717; in 1830, $643,105; in 1831, $714,270; in 1832, 798,435 dollars; in 1833, $978,550; in 1834, $3,954,270; in 1835, $2,186,175; and for the first six months of 1836, $1,006,575; and in the remaining six months of the present year, it is expected to be much larger, there having been coined in the month of June alone, over one million of dollars. The next year our means to coin will be greatly increased, by the completion of three branch mints. And under what circumstances has this extraordinary and regular increase of the gold coinage been accomplished? In the midst of an incessant and unprecedented violent struggle on the part of the bank of the United States for a recharter; that institution and its advocates correctly regarding the free circulation of every piece of gold coin as an argument against the alleged necessity of a national bank.

I do not now allude to what has been done with any view to crimination; but the argument requires us to deal with facts as we find them. It is well known that in addition to the difficulties that arose from the immense means of the bank to obstruct the circulation of the gold coin by collecting and hoarding it, the question whether we should have a gold currency or not became involved in the fierce political contentions of the day, and all the efforts of a well organized and powerful party, were applied to enforce the negative of the question. If, under adverse circumstances like these, so much has been done, what may we not accomplish in the new state of things now opening to the country? When all hopes of the establishment of a national bank are given up, the principal obstruction to the circulation of the gold coins will cease to operate—the leading motive for discrediting this species of currency will have been done away—politicians will no longer find an inducement to engage in such efforts; nor will the people allow a matter in which their welfare is so vitally concerned to be any longer mingled up with party strife. The slightest reflection must convince them that they have no interest in the party conflicts of the day, which can justify so suicidal a course. The passage of the deposit bill will also be regarded by the people as a pledge from all parties to give to the existing system, which excludes the idea of a national bank, a fair trial. The country moreover desires repose, and we may reasonably hope that the whole community will be disposed to encourage rather than to discourage a specie currency. This object will also, as before observed, be greatly promoted by the new stimulus which it will receive from the recent legislation of congress. Three additional mints have been established, and the president is authorized by the deposit bill to keep them amply supplied with bullion, and the secretary of the treasury is empowered to require an increase of specie in any deposit bank, and is restricted from employing as an agent for the government any state bank which issues bills under the denomination of five dollars.

By another general law the notes of such banks are prohibited from being received for debts due to the United States of any description; and it has also been provided by law, that no note shall hereafter be offered in payment by the United States or post office department of a less denomination than ten dollars, and after the third day of March next of a less denomination than twenty dollars, nor any note, of any denomination, which is not payable and paid on demand in gold and silver at the place where issued, and which should not be equivalent to specie at the place where offered, and convertible upon the spot into gold or silver, at the will of the holder, and without loss or delay to him. Nor have the states lagged behind in their efforts to improve the currency by infusing into it a greater portion of the precious metals. Already are the issuing of bills under the denomination of five dollars prohibited by the states of Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, Georgia, Tennessee, Louisiana, North Carolina, Indiana, Kentucky, Maine, New York, New Jersey and Alabama—and of one and two dollars by Connecticut. That this policy will become general and gradually extended, cannot be doubted. To what precise extent it may be carried with advantage to the country, it will be decided by time, experience and judicious observation. Evasions of it may for a season take place, and some slight inconveniences arise from the change, but they will both be temporary. The Union committee of the city of New York, confessedly combining some of the best business talents of our great commercial emporium, regarded it as an improvement of the currency of great importance to all classes of the people; legislative bodies have shown great unanimity in its favor; it is approved by the people, and must prevail.

The banks can neither be so blind to their interest or disloyal to their duty, as to seek to defeat directly or indirectly a policy, by the success of which their own security and permanent interests will be promoted, and the failure of which, through their fault, would certainly excite, deeply, the prejudice of the community against them. But even if it were otherwise, the legislatures have the power to compel them to do their duty, and with the possession of the power will be also the obligation to exercise it. The single consideration that it is the denomination of money in respect to amount in which the labor of the country is paid for, and most of the laborer's dealing transacted, will be sufficient of itself to consecrate what has been done to exempt that portion of the currency from the possibility of depreciation. The administration of the general government confiding in the stability of a measure so extensively adopted by the states, and with such unanimity in the respective legislatures, has based its own measures in relation to the currency on its supposed continuance. The general government will not assuredly be abandoned by those states in the prosecution of a wise policy, the adoption of which they have themselves invited. It is not to be apprehended that a course of legislation so vacillating and unnecessary, will become the reproach of any of them.

That the result of all these measures must be a large and healthful infusion of gold and silver into the circulating medium of the country, doing more good to the currency than was done by the old, or than can be expected from a new bank, no one can doubt. Independent of all this, the treasury has it in its power to exert a salutary influence, first over the deposit banks, which will always be selected from the principal banks in the states, and through them over the residue. Whatever check was exercised by the United States bank on the issues of the state banks, was done by either refusing to take their notes in deposit, or if taken, by returning them quickly for specie; if it believed their issues to be excessive. The deposit banks have a right to do the same thing, and are in the habit of exercising it, when in their opinions an occasion for its exercise exists. Over the deposit banks themselves, the secretary of the treasury has liberal supervisory powers. He may in his discretion direct, as before remarked, an increase of their specie, when it appears by the returns which they are obliged to make to him at short intervals, that their issues are large and disproportionate to their specie on hand; and a constant and great check is exercised over them by the actual public knowledge of their condition obtained through their reports, and the regular publication of them.

I am for exercising this supervision in a just, but at the same time in an inflexible spirit. If the supervision of the treasury prove inadequate to their due restraint, I have an abiding reliance on the intelligence and virtue of the people. Temporary inconvenience may result from the folly or fraud of these institutions, but the remedy will soon be applied. A people like those of the states composing this confederacy will not long stand by and see the currency of their respective states corrupted, the value of property unsettled, and all their interests deranged, by the imprudence or cupidity of these incorporations, without finding and enforcing an effectual, and at the same time a constitutional remedy. These observations do not proceed from a de-

Few public men occupy a position in regard to their less likely to be a temptation to a course of conduct savoring either of undue partiality on the one hand, or unjustifiable severity on the other. In the course of my eight years service in the senate of this state, a very large proportion of its banking capital was incorporated, and the journals of that body will show that I took an active part in all the questions which arose upon the subject. Most of the applications for banks that were rejected, will be found to have been so disposed of on my motion; and every application, save one, will be found to have my vote recorded against it. The exception was that of a bank established at Buffalo at the close of the war. It was established with the avowed design of enabling the inhabitants the more speedily to rebuild the town after it had been burnt by the enemy. That my vote in that particular case would be governed by that consideration and should not be construed into a departure from the course which I had prescribed to myself, was stated in my place. The motive proved in that instance as delusive as usual. Finding it impossible to prevent the undue increase of banks, I introduced a proposition to repeal the restraining law, and resire to deal harshly with the state banks. Al though I have always been opposed to the increase of banks, I would nevertheless pursue towards the existing institutions a just and liberal course—protecting them in the rightful enjoyment of the privileges which have been granted to them, and extending to them the good will of the community so long as they discharge with fidelity the delicate and important public trusts with which they have been invested. But all experience having shown that there is no delegated power more liable to abuse than that which consists in chartered privileges of this description, I would be astute in watching the course of the banks, and vigilant and prompt in arresting the slightest aspiration on their part to follow a bad example, by seeking to become the masters, when they were designed to be the servants of the people.

Sincerely believing, for the reasons which have just been stated, that the public funds may be as safely and conveniently transmitted from one portion of the union to another, that domestic exchange can be as successfully and as cheaply effected, and the currency be rendered at least as sound, under the existing system, as those objects could be accomplished by means of a national bank, I would not seek a remedy for the evils to which you allude, should they unfortunately occur, through such a medium, even if the constitutional objection were not in the way.

But, sir, there are, in my opinion, objections to the re-establishment of a national bank, of a character not inferior to any that I have stated. The supremacy of the popular will is the foundation of our government. If we allow it to be prostrated, either by corruption or fraud, the republican principle, which gives life and character to our system, will be broken down. It is only by rigidly and manfully upholding that supremacy on all occasions, that we can hope to resist the perpetual efforts of a spirit which is inherent in all societies; which has never ceased to maintain a powerful foothold in these states, and which is ever at work to subvert those features of our system which place the political rights of the people upon an equal footing. I hold it to be sufficiently certain that a vast majority of the people of the U. States were opposed to the late bank, and are equally opposed to a new one. They have had fearful proofs by overt acts of the correctness of Mr. Jefferson's opinion, that "this institution is one of the most deadly hostility existing against the principles and form of our constitution;" and of the reasonableness of his apprehensions, that "penetrating by its branches every part of the union, acting by command, and in phalanx, it might, in a critical moment, upset the government." To suppose that the people of this country can ever again consent to place so great a power as that recently wielded by the bank of the United States—a power which could agitate at pleasure the elements of society, and carry terror and embarrassment to every corner of the land—in the hands of any body of men, is to suppose them alike indifferent to the lessons of experience, the calls of interest, and the principles of freedom; to have neither the capacity to understand their duty, nor the firmness to carry out their own determinations.

The re-establishment of the United States bank would therefore, under whatever plausible pretences effected, be an infraction of the well understood will of the people, and a fatal blow to the cause of self-government. So strong are my convictions upon this subject, and so imperative my sense of duty in regard to it, that I cannot conceal from you my surprise, as well as regret, that the idea of accomplishing that object is still, as would seem from your letter, kept on foot in any quarter.

Your last question seeks to know "my opinion as to the constitutional power of the senate and house of representatives to expunge or obliterate gulate private banking; and, in co-operation with Mr. Van Vechten, a distinguished citizen of this state, and others, succeeded in getting it through the senate, but was lost in the house. Believing the system of incorporated banking to have acquired too deep a hold upon the public mind, and to be too extensively entwined with the business affairs of the state, to be overthrown, I availed myself of my brief administration of the government of this state, to invite attention of the legislature to a consideration of the proper means of securing the community against the frauds and failures of those institutions. Our present safety fund system is the result of the wise labors of that and succeeding legislatures. For myself, I am not now, nor have I been for nearly twenty years, the owner of any stock in any bank, or, within my recollection, in any incorporated company whatever, though often invited to become so, under circumstances which promised and ultimately yielded great profits.

from the journals the records or proceedings of a previous session."

You will, I am sure, be satisfied upon further consideration, that there are but few questions of a political character less connected with the duties of the office of president of the United States, or that might not with equal propriety be put by an elector to a candidate for that station, than this. With the journals of neither house of congress can he properly have any thing to do. But, as your question has doubtless been induced by the pendency of colonel Benton's resolutions to expunge from the journals of the senate certain other resolutions, touching the official conduct of president Jackson, I prefer to say, that I regard the passage of col. Benton's preamble and resolutions to be an act of justice to a faithful and greatly injured public servant, not only constitutional in itself, but imperiously demanded by a proper respect for the well known will of the people.

This reply to your numerous questions, has unavoidably extended to a much greater length than I could have wished. I have given you, without reserve, my "opinions and views" upon the various subjects which you have presented to my consideration; but you can hardly intend, as your questions would seem to imply that I should enter into any engagements with you as to what particular bills relating to these subjects I would or would not approve in the event of my election to the presidency. In the cases where I have avowed constitutional objections to the measures alluded to, any thing further would be superfluous; for can I think it consistent with the respect due from me to the people of the United States, and especially to that portion of them who have made me a candidate for the chief magistracy, to tender to you on the present occasion any other pledge than such as is necessarily implied in the foregoing avowal of my sentiments, and as you may find in the history of my public life.

I am, sir, your obedient humble servant,

M. VAN BUREN.

SHIP BYRON—THE ICEBERGS.

A perilous encounter with an iceberg near the banks of Newfoundland. On the 30th June last the ship Byron left Liverpool for New York heavily laden with iron, salt, &c. and having on board, in passengers and crew, 119 or 120 souls. On the morning of the 3d of August, 34 days out, in lat. 44 22, lon. 48 50, a scene occurred which can never be effaced from memory. It was the watch of the first mate, a man of great fidelity; but being indisposed his place was taken by another. An unusual degree of levity and thoughtless security among the passengers, had just taken place to sleep. And now all was still, save the tread of the watch on deck, or the occasional toll of the bell to warn fishing crafts, if near, of our approach: but we had more need to be warned ourselves than to give warning to others of approaching danger. About 2 o'clock, A. M. a hurried step awoke the writer of this sketch; and the rapid whispering of some created the suspicion that all was not right. Springing from his berth, he asked one of the men near the cabin door, what was the matter. "We are in the midst of ice," said he: "Will you inform the captain and mate?" The captain was instantly on deck; he ran forward to look out. In a moment the vessel, going at the rate of five knots, struck as against a solid rock. It was an island of ice! It lifted its head above the water more than one hundred feet, and leaned over, as if ready to fall down upon us. The word was given to put up helm and back the sails. As the sailors were hastening to obey the latter order—as the terrified passengers were rushing on deck and looking up at the immense, overhanging, freezing mass, the ship struck again with increased force. O what a shock! Crash! crash! it seemed as if the masts were falling one after another on the deck. The second mate entered the cabin and clapping violently his hands together exclaimed, "my God! our bows are stove in—we're all gone." An awful death appeared now inevitable. In this movement of general panic, the commanding officer gave orders to "clear away the boat." Then, while the knife was being applied to the cordage fastening her alongside the ship, a rush was made to her by men and women. That small boat was in a moment filled with thirty or forty persons. It seems utterly marvellous that she did not break down, precipitating every soul into the deep. Had this taken place, our commanding officer must have shared the same fate; for, from a desire to gain possession of her for himself and crew, or to save the miserable crowd that had got into her from destruction—it may be from both motives—he entered the boat and stood in her until he drove out every one at the point of the sword. Then was a scene of terror! In front of the cabin the passengers were collected, half naked—some on their knees calling for mercy—some clapping their hands, and uttering the most appalling shrieks. Nothing distinctly could be heard. All was confusion and horror. It was enough to penetrate a heart of stone. Some more collected, were dressing themselves preparing to resist the cold, if perchance they should survive on the wreck. Others were looking for something to which they could lash themselves for support for a time in the water. Here, you might see one with a safety-belt slung over his shirt, endeavoring to fill it with air; there, another, pale and agitated, inquiring, "is there any hope?" And there, one standing as if in sullen despair, saying, "it is no use to do any thing. We must die." "Are we sinking, uncle!" cries a dear boy. A child running to a brave sailor, says, "won't you save me?" And the loud wailing and lamentation from the crowd rose higher and higher. Then, as if to close the painful scene, the ship struck again on her quarter. The shock reverberated like thunder, making every joint of the vessel shake as if coming apart. Hope now fully fled; all hearts were dismayed; the despairing cry was renewed, and the most calm braced themselves in preparation for immediate death. Even the dogs cowered down on the deck in silence.

It appeared that at the first shock against the mountain, the jib-boom was broken and thrown over the bows into the vessel. The second shock carried away the bowsprit, head and cutwater, lodging the timbers across the bows. Had it struck us on either side, or had it struck the hull, we must have perished, but by the mercy of God, the hull was uninjured. After the bowsprit was carried away, the stem of the ship must have been held down for an instant by the overhanging column; and her not immediately rising in front, gave the idea to the most experienced that she was stove in, and was filling with water. This created the panic. But the sails being backed, the helm put hard up, she turned off from her enemy, and swinging clear, received the last shock on her larboard quarter, which, though its sound was terrible, did no injury. That instant she was free. And now was the contest between despair and hope. The carpenter reported that the hull was sound and the bowsprit could be repaired; but then she may have sprung a leak, and the foremost is in danger of falling! The word was "to the pump." The pump was rigged and wrought. It was a moment of painful suspense, until the pump sucked showing that all was tight. Then hope gilded the countenance of our captain, and all hearts began to live in its radiance. Still we waited to hear the crash of the foremost as the vessel was rolling in the sea, but it stood firm. Daylight, ever delightful to those on the deep, and peculiarly grateful to us, soon appeared. We found ourselves going on our way, alive, and with every reasonable confidence of future life.

We stood amazed at our deliverance. The most careless among us were constrained to attribute our preservation to a kind and merciful Providence; while the multitude cried out unhesitatingly, "it is the Lord who hath saved us; thanks and praises to his holy name." Then every countenance was lighted up with joy; every heart was full of gratitude to God, and love to one another, and many purposes were formed of reformation in future. The next day we saw three mountains of ice. We passed near to one of them. We gazed with the deepest interest on the fellow of that which had so greatly endangered our lives. Before the close of the second day, a new bowsprit was fitted up, which stood the trial of winds and waves the remainder of the voyage. In all this business the officers and crew showed great skill and energy.

[Observer.]

SCENE IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Reduction of the tax upon newspapers.

Mr. Roebuck addressed the house amidst loud and prolonged cries of question, divide, and general interruption, jeering, cheers and buzzing from both sides of the house, which rendered him almost inaudible. We understood him to say that the question was made one of party, not of justice. (Divide, divide.) The gentlemen opposite wished to prevent the people from the opportunity of acquiring knowledge. If they could get newspapers to give them sound knowledge, the system of the gentleman opposite would soon be abolished. (Oh! Oh! laughter and general confusion.) The pretence set up for opposition to the reduction of this newspaper duty, was a paltry one. It was the pretence of consulting the interests of the agriculturists that made the hypocrisy more glaring. Talk of tallow. (A laugh.) If it was proposed that the reduction of this duty could be a benefit to the agricultural interest, it was a gross delusion. It was idle and futile to say so. The agriculturists were only put in the van to screen the objects of the opposition.

Neither farmers nor landlords can be benefitted, by the repeal of the soap tax, to any extent. The farmers could have no benefit; but the landlords might be in a condition of putting some five pounds in their pocket by increasing the sale of tallow. But look to the benefit of having a free press. (General bursts of laughter and ironical cheers.) He would maintain that more sound information, more morality, was conveyed by the unstamped press, than could be found in the stamped. (Reserved laughter.) The unstamped papers did not contain one-tenth of the obscenity, and immorality, and profligacy of manners that the licensed papers did. (Laughter and jeering acclamation for some minutes.) He could prove it. In one of the Dublin stamped papers, it had been gravely debated, whether the honorable member might or might not be shot. (Oh! Oh!) Yes; it had been gravely debated, whether it were not lawful to kill a fellow citizen. Look at the Times paper, for instance; it had the baseness to say, that Mr. O'Connell, the big beggarman, ought to be exhibited as a show. (Laughter.) Was that to be borne? The higher classes delighted in, and their tastes were familiar to, obscenity, immorality and profligacy of phrase and sentiment, that were to be found in the stamp papers. (Oh! Oh! and laughter.) What could be more filthy and impure, than the paper generally disseminated as the parson's paper? (Laughter and cheers, which resembled a prolonged huzza.) Why, no man would retain a servant, if he uttered half the foulness contained in that paper. The freedom of the press would put down aristocratic dominion, as it would teach the people the full extent of their rights, and the proper mode of exerting them. He thought his opinions, though true, might not prevail. (Laughter.)

Mr. Kearsley rose and said that he did not rise to reply to the honorable member for Bath; for he would assure that honorable member that he would not condescend to reply to any thing that fell from him. But as the other honorable member opposite, who addressed the house on the same side of the question, has such a sweeping way with him of getting through the argument, (cheers and laughter), he would say a few words in reply, although he felt indignant when he heard the disgusting speech of the member for Bath. (Loud cheers from the opposition, and cries of "chair, chair," "order, order!" for some minutes.) [Galignani's Messenger.]

NORTH WEST PASSAGE.

We learn from the English newspapers that captain Back, already well known to the public for his expedition in search of captain Ross, will soon proceed on another expedition to the Arctic Seas. The ship selected is a bomb vessel, and therefore well fitted to navigate in icy seas, and her first lieutenant, Mr. Smyth, is well acquainted with the northern seas, having been with captain Beechy in the Blossoms in Behring's straits, a few years since. Proceeding to Wager bay, captain Back will lay up his ship, and from thence will proceed in boats, constructed for the purpose, to complete the survey of the coast, from Cape Turnagain to Victoria Headland, the point which he reached in his last expedition, and where he discovered the open sea. It is supposed that this expedition will occupy about two years, and may probably result in the discovery of the long sought north west passage.

But admitting this passage to be discovered, and we have very little doubts of its existence, what benefit is to result to the world from the discovery? It would only be used for a brief season of the year, and even then, it would be very uncertain. It is not probably open for more than one or two months in the year, of every year for that period. This would confine the sailing of all vessels from Europe and the United States for China and India, to certain seasons of the year, to the great embarrassment and interruption of commerce. Besides this, the chances of finding the passage open at all are not always certain, and the danger to vessels of being icebound, and consequently lost, always is great. If a vessel from either side of the Atlantic should attempt to reach China by the north west, and find the passage impracticable from the ice, as would be the case if they came a fortnight too early or too late, and as might be the case through the whole summer, what would it gain? It would be obliged to return and make the usual passage, by either of the capes, with the loss of all the time expended in the north western attempt. For nearly two hundred years, have navigators sought this in both the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, and have hitherto been invariably arrested by the ice. This fact is sufficient to show that if a passage from one ocean to the other be discovered, the use of it, on account of the ice, must be extremely precarious. If the ice has so invariably presented an obstacle to the discovery, it will continue to present the same to its use, after the discovery shall be made.

The navigation to the Pacific round the capes is by no means dangerous. India and China vessels are rarely lost, and never, we believe, near either of these points. Therefore if a longer time be required for a voyage, than would be by a north west passage, admitting it to be successful, yet nothing is lost, but much gained, when we consider certainty and safety.

Hereafter, probably, all voyages to the Indian or Pacific oceans, from either side of the Atlantic, will be across the Isthmus of Darien: If all the time and money that have been expended in vain attempts to find a north west passage, had been applied to cutting a canal across the Isthmus, the two oceans would have long since been united, by a canal large enough for first-rate line of battle ships.

[Pennsylvania Sentinel.]

THE EUPHRATES EXPEDITION.

From a supplement of the London Gazette of Friday, July 29, 1836.

India Board, July 28, 1836.

A despatch has been received at this office from col. Chesney, R. A. in command of the Euphrates expedition, dated Euphrates steamer, Anna, May 28, 1836, of which the following, with its enclosure, are copies:—

Euphrates steamer, Anna, May 28, 1836.

SIR: It is with feelings of the deepest regret, that I do myself the honor of informing you that the Tigris steamer was totally lost during a hurricane of indescribable violence, which, after the short struggle of about eight minutes, sent a fine vessel to the bottom in five fathoms water, and deprived his majesty of fifteen valuable men, with five natives in addition.

My reports up to the 17th instant, at Deir, will have informed you that all was going on as successfully as the most sanguine could possibly desire.—We found the Arabs well disposed, and quite ready to form depots for us of wood, charcoal, bitumen and lignite coal, all met in abundance, and tried with complete success. In addition to these marked advantages, the survey has been carried 509 miles down the Great River, which seemed in all respects favorable; in short, all was continued prosperity up to the afternoon of the 21st instant, when it pleased God to send the calamitous event of which it is my duty to give a feeble sketch.

A little after one P. M. on that melancholy day, the flat boats being a little ahead, and the Tigris leading the Euphrates, a storm appeared, bringing with it, high in the air, clouds of sand from the west north west quarter. At this moment we were passing over the rocks of Is Geria (deeply covered,) and immediately after we made a signal for the Euphrates to choose a berth, and make fast; which was done more as a matter of precaution, on account of the difficulty of seeing our way through the sand than from apprehension that the squall would be so terrific. The Tigris was immediately directed toward the bank, against which she struck without injury, but with so much violence as to recoil a distance of about eight yards, leaving two men on the bank, who had jumped out to make fast. The wind then suddenly veered round, drove her bow off, and thus rendered it quite impossible to secure the vessel to the bank, along which she was blown rapidly by the heavy gusts, her head falling off into the stream as she passed close by the Euphrates, which vessel had been backed opportunely to avoid the concussion.

The engines were working with full power, and every endeavor made to turn the vessel's bow to the bank. One anchor was let go, but the heel of the vessel made it impossible to get the other out, and she was then nearly broadside to the wind, with the engines almost powerless, and the waves, rising to four or five feet, forcing their way in at the windows. Lieutenant Cockburn, the Messrs. Staunton, and some of the men made ineffectual attempts to keep out the water, for the fate of the vessel was already decided; and the fore part of the deck being under water, lieutenant Lynch came to report that the Tigris was sinking, and the word was immediately passed for all to save themselves. At this very instant a momentary gleam of light faintly showed the bank at the apparent distance of eight or ten yards; and, as there seemed every probability that the stern would touch it before she went down, lieutenant Lynch encouraged the people to remain steady until they reached the land. All were on deck at this critical moment, some clinging to the ropes of the awning, the paddle boards and funnel; but the majority were close to the tiller, and all behaving with the most exemplary obedience, until the vessel went down all at once, and probably within half a minute, after we had seen the bank for an instant.

Lieutenant Lynch, who was at my elbow, dived out underneath the starboard ridge rope, at the moment when there was about four feet water on the dock, and I had the good fortune to get clear, in the same way, through the larboard side, and also to take a direction which brought me to the land, without having seen any thing whatever to guide me through darkness worse than that of night. When it cleared a little, I found around me lieutenant Lynch and Mr. Eden, (both greatly exhausted), Mr. Thompson, the Messrs. Staunton and several of the men. The hurricane was already abating rapidly, and as the distance from the vessel to the shore was very short, we indulged the hope that the rest of our brave companions had reached the bank lower down. For an instant I saw the keel of the Tigris uppermost, near the stern. She went down bow foremost, and, having struck the bottom in that position, she probably turned round on the bow as a pivot, and thus showed part of her keel for an instant at the other extremity; but her paddle beams, floats and parts of the sides were already broken up, and actually floated ashore, so speedy and terrific had been the work of destruction.

From the moment of striking the bank until the Tigris went down it scarcely exceeded eight minutes; while the operation of sinking itself did not consume more than three; indeed, the gale was so very violent that I doubt whether the most powerful vessel, such as a frigate, could have resisted it, unless she were already secured to the bank; and, for this there was, in our case, little or no time, as it was barely possible, in the position of our consort, to make fast and save the vessel.

I had little, or rather no hope, that the Euphrates could have escaped, but the intrepid skill of lieutenant Cleaveland and Mr. Charlewood enabled them to get out two anchors in the very nick of time; and by the united means of two hawsers, and the engines working at full power, the vessel maintained her position at the bank, until the storm abated, as the inclosed letter* from capt. Estcourt will explain more fully; and as it required all the powers of a fifty horse engine in the case of the Euphrates, to keep her hawser from snapping, I infer, that the twenty horses of the Tigris would not have been sufficient to enable her to keep the position at the bank, even if the officers had succeeded in securing her along side of it.

Lieutenant Lynch and Mr. Eden continued cool and collected until the last moment, nor were any efforts wanting that skill or presence of mind could suggest to save the vessel in the first instance, and the lives in the second, when the former had failed; nor could any thing be more exemplary than their conduct, and that of all on board: scarcely a word was spoken, not a murmur was heard, and death was met with that exemplary degree of intrepidity and resignation which have been displayed by every individual throughout the arduous and trying service in which we have been engaged since January, 1835.

Having already given a faithful account of the short, but eventful period of about twelve minutes occupied by the beginning, the progress and termination of the hurricane, I will conclude the painful part of my task, by referring you to the inclosed return of the names of the valuable men who have been lost to his majesty and their country for ever.

Very different was the result when a similar, but less violent gale, sent my little vessel to the bottom of this river in 1831; for I had not then the misery of deploring the loss of a single life, and my little schooner was afloat and continuing the descent in less than twelve hours; whereas, all our efforts, as yet, have failed even to find the remains of the vessel; not a ripple, or the slightest trace of the unfortunate Tigris, marks the spot where she went down; but our search has not yet terminated, and if she should be found without having been dashed to pieces, I shall take measures to recover her with the assistance of the diving bell, and other means; especially as there are many valuable instruments on board, in addition to the hull and machinery, and particularly as the Arabs here are well disposed.

I am happy to say that the survivors of the expedition remain as much unshaken as ever in their confidence regarding the final success of this undertaking, as well as the manifest advantages, facilities and cheapness of this line of communication. The hurricane has been, it is true, a most trying and calamitous event; but I believe it is regarded by all, even at this early day, as having no more to do with the navigation of the Euphrates in other respects, than the loss of a packet in the Irish channel, which might retard, but could not put an end to, the intercourse between England and Ireland.

We are therefore continuing our descent and survey to Bussora, hoping not only to bring up the mail from India, within the specified time, but also, if it please God to spare us, to demonstrate the speed, economy and commercial advantages of the river Euphrates, provided the decision of ministers shall be in the true spirit of Englishmen, to give it a fair trial, rather than abandon the original purpose in consequence of an unforeseen, and, as it proved, an unavoidable calamity. I have the honor to be, &c.

(Signed)

F. R. CHESNEY,

Colonel, commanding the expedition.

The right hon. sir John Cam Hobhouse, bart. president of the board of control.

Euphrates steamer, Anna, May 26, 1836.

SIR: The very unexpected nature of the hurricane in which this vessel was taken on Saturday last, the 21st inst. and the extreme violence with which it was accompanied, render it necessary that I should acquaint you with the circumstances as they affected this vessel, and that I should lay before you the conduct of lieutenant Cleaveland and Mr. Charlewood, to whose united exertions and skill, supported by the active exertions of a most willing crew, added to the great power of the engines with which this vessel is propelled, her safety is to be attributed.

Scarcely had we cast off from the bank, when at mid day on Saturday last, we in company with the Tigris, had stopped to take in wood, when a dense cloud of dust was seen to rise high into the air, on the right bank. For some minutes it was doubtful whether it would not pass off to our right, but soon it was apparent that it would be otherwise. Preparation was made to meet the squall by furling the awnings, &c.

As soon as the Tigris, which was leading, as usual, had cleared a reef of rocks, at this season far under water, she made a signal to choose a berth, and make fast. Hardly was the signal answered, when the gale began. The Tigris was rounding to bring up to the left bank; the Euphrates followed; but, as we neared the bank, I saw that the Tigris could not stem the gale and the current. She had failed to make the bank, and now was falling off with her head outward. The Euphrates was compelled to back her paddles to give room. Our operation, as you will at once see, was full of danger; for it could scarcely be expected that she would afterward be able to gather way upon herself against the violence of the elements and current. However, the Tigris having passed across her bows, we worked the engines with all power. The vessel took the bank with some violence, but did not recoil off. Instantly, Mr. Charlewood was ashore, followed by many men, bearing a hawser and light anchor. Within a few seconds a second anchor and chain cable had been got ashore, and these were followed rapidly by a second chain cable and anchor. Lieutenant Cleaveland kept the engines working the whole time; notwithstanding which, and the anchors and cables fixed ashore, the vessel still drove. However, the gale was soon over, and the vessel was safe.

The density of the cloud of dust excluded from my view the Tigris from the moment she crossed our bows; Mr. Fitz James, in the midst of the storm, reported to me, first that she was upset, that then she had gone down. As soon, therefore, as our danger had ceased, and that the Euphrates was secured, I sent off a party ashore, under lieutenant Murphy, to render what assistance he might be able, to the crew of our consort, while Mr. Charlewood pressed me to allow him to go by boat; this I did as soon as it was safe.

Of the remainder of this melancholy tale, of the total loss of the Tigris, and the few who escaped to find a shelter on board the Euphrates, you are yourself well acquainted.

I have only to repeat, that to lieutenant Cleaveland and Mr. Charlewood, and indeed to the whole crew of the Euphrates, the highest praise is due.

I have the honor to be, &c.

(Signed) J. W. BUCKNALL ESTCOURT,
Captain 43d light infantry.

Colonel Chesney.

Return of officers and men who were lost:—Lieutenant R. B. Lynch, 26th regiment; Ben, native infantry, passenger; Ensaff Sadee, carpenter; John Strathers, engineer.

Royal artillery—Lieutenant R. Cockburn; acting sergeant R. Clark; T. Jones, gunner; Robert Turner, James Moore, James Hay, do.

Sappers and Miners—Achibald McDonald, private; seamen, Benjamin Gibson, John Hunter, Thomas Booth, Thomas Batty, George Liddell; natives, Abou, Wasoo, Jacob, John, Manuel, Pedro.

*The last depth sounded; and we have since found three and a half fathoms on one side of the spot, and five on the other.

*26th May.

FOREIGN CHRONICLE.

Professor Klipstein has found, near Eppelchium, the head of that wonderful fossil animal, the dinothorium gigantum, probably the largest antediluvian species whose remains have hitherto been found. The head is 6 feet long and weighs 500 lbs. The upper part of the fore leg was 6 feet.

In Switzerland there is a law for indemnifying those who have been acquitted of crimes for which they were indicted. A man named Caples accused, at Berne, of being an incendiary, lately received 229 francs for 78 days imprisonment.

The manufacture of beet root sugar is making considerable progress in Belgium.

There are 50 rail roads in France; in England 300 miles completed, and 513 in progress; in America about 3,000 miles completed or in progress. It is stated that 63,000 francs were collected from the Brussels and Antwerp rail road in 20 days.

Unaccountable fact. It has been ascertained that most of the suicides among military men at Paris, have taken place among those whose pecuniary circumstances were easy.

The widow of the immortal astronomer, La Place, has founded in the academy of arts and sciences, a perpetual prize of 215 francs to the first student leaving the Ecole Polytechnique.

Mad. Sebastiani, the mother of Napoleon's favorite, the count who is French ambassador at London, died recently at Cappellini, near Corsica, her residence.

Speed of pigeons. A society of amateurs at Anvers, in France, lately despatched 35 of these birds from that place for Paris. Several prizes were to be awarded to the fleetest of the number. The first was won by the pigeon general Chasse, which accomplished the distance, 190 miles, in 4 hours and 35 minutes. The second by the prince Talleyrand, time 4 h. 35 m. The third by marshal Gerard, 4 h. 40 m. The fourth by Roi-de-Reme, 4 h. 41 m. The fifth by general Mina, 4 h. 50 m. The sixth by Tiger-cat, 4 h. 51 m. The seventh by Willem, 4 h. 52 m.

Rail roads in Belgium. A letter from Antwerp, dated June 24, gives the following favorable description of the rail road system in Belgium:

"Yesterday the last train of carriages that left Brussels by the iron rail road, consisted of 35 carriages, drawn by two steam carriages; with at least 1,000 passengers. This immense train performed the journey in less than an hour and a half. It is estimated on a calculation, which cannot be far from the truth, that the number of persons who left Brussels by the iron rail road on Sunday and Monday last, was 17,000; supposing that the number of persons who returned was equal, we have 34,000 passengers in two days. The conveyance of 17,000 persons by the ordinary means would require above 1,000 diligences."

Americans abroad. The Boston Post states that the two most distinguished lawyers in London were born in Boston, viz: Lord Lyndhurst and Sargent Talfourd, (author of the new popular tragedy of Ion). The latter, we believe, has two sisters in that city now, while the former has a sister, the widow of the late Gardiner Green, esq.

Expeditious travelling. People now go from Paris to Brussels in nineteen hours. Estafette carriages of extremely light construction, carrying the mail and two passengers, commenced running between these cities about the middle of July.

The Allgemeine Zeitung. The Allgemeine Zeitung or the Universal Gazette, is one of the ablest daily prints in Europe, and probably contains the fullest and most accurate summary of political intelligence of any newspaper in the world. It is published daily, and printed by a steam press. It was first established at Ulm, in Bavaria, but was subsequently removed to Augsburg. It employs four or five persons in the work of translating from the French and English journals.

Mad dogs. There is an act of parliament said to be still in force in England, which has the following provision: "If any person shall keep at large any dog, mastiff or bull dog, within fifty yards of any public road or street, without a log of wood of the weight of five pounds attached to his neck, such person for every such offence shall forfeit the sum of 10s. and every constable may kill such dog."

Steam navigation across the Atlantic. A Liverpool paper announces the fact that a steam vessel of 1,200 tons, with engines of 400 horse power, is building in that city for the "American and Colonial Steam Navigation company," with the express design of being a pioneer in this new undertaking. By the help of steam, N. York and Liverpool may easily be brought within 12 days distance from each other.

A curious circumstance is mentioned in the accounts from Hamburg. The captain of the Liverpool, while on her voyage from Bahia to Hamburg, amused himself with fishing, and succeeded in capturing a large shark. Upon cutting it open, the greater part of the body of a man was discovered in the belly of the fish.

The account states that the captain had in his possession the head of the body at Hamburg.

Utility of an English colony. No person looking at the situation of Gibraltar would suppose it to be the seat of so great a trade as it is. An immense quantity of English goods is landed here. They are purchased by Spanish or other dealers, of whom the seller asks no questions; they soon disappear from the town, and are secretly conveyed through various channels, not only to every part of Spain, but across the Atlantic to the Spanish colonies of the new world.

Salt. A foreign paper says—The whole of the salt used throughout the world is equal to about six millions of tons and one quarter. The commercial navies of America, England and France, (60,000 vessels), could not convey a single year's consumption of salt at £2 a ton. The yearly outlay for salt is £30,000,000.

Mexican mint. A gentleman of Massachusetts, Dr. Jennison, of Northampton, has been appointed chief director of the Mexican mint, and is about to return to the United States, for the purpose of procuring the necessary machinery for coining.

The king of Sardinia has ordered the frigate Eurydica on a cruise on the coast of America; and has directed that the royal academy of sciences shall have every opportunity for the improvement of science.

Messrs. Schafhaentel and Boehm, iron founders of Munich, have discovered a process by which the very worst descriptions of iron can be made equal to the best Swedish. The discovery is in the process of puddling. The inventors have taken out patents in England, France and other kingdoms.

DOMESTIC CHRONICLE.

Health of New Orleans. The True American of the 27th ult. presents a detail of the weekly reports of interments, at the different burying grounds of that city, from the 1st of May until the 20th of August. From this report, as compared with that of last year, it appears that the number of interments have considerably decreased this year. The whole number for the period mentioned (being nearly four months) we find to have been in 1835, 1,016,—and in 1836, 765. Showing a decrease of 251, for the four months of the present year.

Corn from the northern part of New Hampshire, where the summers are about the shortest of any part of our country, was planted on the 1st day of June last, near Germantown, Pa. and on the 1st inst. it was harvested—eight acres having produced nearly 400 bushels!

Anthracite coal trade. From a statement in the Philadelphia Price Current, we learn that, from the opening of the navigation this season, up to the 15th of August, 55 brigs, 1,095 schooners, 14 barges and 281 sloops cleared from the Schuylkill, laden with anthracite coal, making a total of fourteen hundred and sixty vessels, carrying an average of upwards of one hundred tons coal each.

From the opening of the navigation to the 1st inst. the quantity of anthracite coal that passed Fairmount locks, at Philadelphia, amounted to 252,461 tons, brought to market from the mines in 4,969 boats.

A writer in the same paper states that the canals which have been constructed for the purpose of reaching the great anthracite coal fields of Pennsylvania, have cost upwards of twelve millions of dollars.

Naval. Pensacola, August 20. The U. States sloop of war Concord sailed on Monday last on a cruise, it is said, off the Balize and the Texian and Mexican coasts. The sloop of war St. Louis sailed on a cruise yesterday. The United States cutter Jefferson, captain Jackson, sailed hence for Tampa Bay on Thursday last. Passengers, majors Wilson and Zantinger, of the army. The United States cutter Washington, Day, commander, arrived here yesterday from Indian Key.

The president of the United States left Nashville on the 22d August, for Florence, Alabama.

The president who has been in this city since Saturday, among his friends and relations, leaves to-day for Florence, Alabama, by way of Franklin and Columbia, on a visit of business, and to the family of his friend and kinsman, the late gen. Coffee.

Nashville Union.

A large brig called the Manhattan has been launched at Detroit, from the yard of O. Newberry. Her keel is 93 feet in length, her depth of hold is 12 feet, and her breadth of beam is 28 feet. All the inhabitants of the place were present to witness the beautiful sight, which was unattended by any accident calculated to mar the pleasures created by the excitement of a launch.

New York post office. Mr. Barnabas Bates has resigned his situation as deputy post master of the city of New York. He retires "because the compensation is inadequate to the duties and responsibilities," and in perfect friendship with the postmaster and the department.

Dreadful accident. The Salem Landmark adds one more to the long list of dreadful deaths which have occurred by incautious approach to the rapidly gyrating wheels of manufactories. We learn from that paper that an accident of the most distressing nature occurred a short time ago, at Putnam's machine shop, in Mill street in that city. Mr. Jewett Maxfield, while engaged in turning a drum, upon the shaft of a steam engine, was killed instantaneously. He was at work near the balance wheel, which was situated very close to a square post or standard. It is supposed that he made some misstep, by which his head was thrown between the balance wheel and the post. His head was mangled in the most shocking manner, one side of his face and the top of his head being almost severed from his body. He left a wife and two children.

Execution at sea. A sailor was hung on board the U. S. sloop of war John Adams, at sea, near Naples, July 3d. He murdered one of his fellow seamen in a drunken frolic at Mahon, as he afterwards confessed. He was tried by a court martial. The event produced a melancholy sensation on board the ship.

Mob law at Troy. We understand (says the Albany Evening Journal of Saturday) that a number of citizens of Troy, becoming indignant at the universal destruction of the dogs in that city, assembled together on Thursday evening, went in search of and found the persons to whom the corporation had delegated that duty, seized them and took them to a place agreed upon, and there furnished them with an entire suit of tar and feathers! Some of the persons were arrested, but they were immediately bailed.

In respect to the indictment, which it was stated had been found against the captain and pilot of the steamboat Boston, which run down the ferry boat in the harbor of New York, the New York Courier and Enquirer says—No such proceeding has taken place, and could not have taken place, as there has been no grand jury in session since the event. Those individuals have been held to bail at the police, to appear before the court of sessions.

Public lands. P. T. Crutchfield, the receiver of public lands, at Little Rock, Arkansas, in a note to the editor of the Arkansas Gazette, gives the following statement of the sums received at his office for lands sold during the present year to the 1st of August last.

In January,	$10,116 46
February,	8,656 13
March,	32,725 03
April,	38,593 23
May,	118,152 38
June,	83,217 83
July,	11,481 33
	<hr/> $302,943 38

Coal. The Miner's Journal, of Pottsville, Pa. says that the whole supply of coal will probably amount to 700,000 tons; being an increase of 170,000 over last year's supply. It also says that the apprehension of a scarcity of this article is without foundation.

The corn crop. The Williamsport Banner, published in Washington county, Md. states that the prospect of the corn crop in that region is highly favorable, and gives it as the prevailing opinion of intelligent farmers of the neighborhood, that a couple of weeks of moderately warm weather will place the corn out of danger.

The Maryland Republican says, "The appearances of corn and tobacco, in the lower district of Anne Arundel, are very promising."

Mineral wealth of Virginia. Every day affords additional evidence of the great mineral wealth of the Old Dominion. There are several rich gold mines in successful operation, and within a short time past, several rich veins of copper ore have been discovered, and the brightest prospect held out to the enterprising proprietors of valuable results. The books of subscription for the sale of 2,500 shares in the Phoenix copper mine in the county of Fauquier, were opened on Tuesday last, and the whole amount taken in one day by twenty-two subscribers.

[Richmond Whig.]

Growth of New Orleans. It is said that Madame Pontalba, a wealthy lady of New Orleans, but now residing in France, is about to construct on some lots on the public square, a building in the style of the Palais Royal in Paris, with an arcade, galleries, open space, &c. She has asked permission of the corporation to occupy the side walks for the colonnade, not having sufficient depth without.

A lunar rainbow was witnessed at Princeton, Mass. about half past 9 on the evening of August 19th. It had been raining moderately, and the moon was about 4 hours past its first quadrature, and nearly 15 deg. from the western horizon. The highest point of the arch was between 25 and 28 degrees above the horizon.

NILES' WEEKLY REGISTER.

FIFTH SERIES. No. 3.—VOL. I.]

BALTIMORE, SEPTEMBER 17, 1836.

[VOL. LI.—WHOLE No. 1,304.

THE PAST—THE PRESENT—FOR THE FUTURE.

EDITED, PRINTED AND PUBLISHED, BY WILLIAM OGDEN NILES, AT $5 PER ANNUM, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

Our pages contain a great variety of useful and interesting papers, for present use and future reference.

We this week publish a letter from Geo. M. Dallas, esq. of Pennsylvania, formerly a senator in congress from that state, "to the democratic corresponding committee of Smithfield, Bradford county, Pa." who inquired his views upon the question and the mode of annulling the charter recently granted to the bank of the United States. The letter assumes the ground, that this can be done by a convention of the people of Pennsylvania, which, Mr. Dallas says, may "reorganize an entire system of social intercourse, terminating and proscribing what is deemed injurious and establishing what is preferred—restore the institution of slavery among us—make our penal code as bloody as that of Draco—withdraw the charters of the cities—supervene a standing judiciary by a scheme of occasional arbitration and umpirage—prohibit particular professions or trades—permanently suspend the privileges of the writ of habeas corpus and deprive the people of the right of trial by jury—and therefore, recommends the subject to the convention to be elected in November next to revise the constitution of Pennsylvania.

Many reflecting persons ridiculed the doctrines of nullification and secession, notwithstanding the ability and plausibility of the arguments by which they were maintained. Thus, too, did they treat the new doctrine of a popular interpretation of the constitution of the United States. But how will they regard the ultra ground assumed by Mr. Dallas, that there is power in a convention of the people of a single state to nullify the constitution and trample upon its most sacred privileges? The subject is not worthy of grave discussion, unless in distrust of the public virtue and intelligence; for Mr. Dallas' propositions are diametrically opposed to those opinions of the powers of the constitution, entertained and acted upon by the people from its formation to the present time,—and, indeed, to the very causes which brought it into being. The letter will, however, elicit many answers—one of the most able of which we will place on record.

COL. AARON BURR, died at Staten Island, on Tuesday afternoon the 13th inst. in the 81st year of his age. Few men in this country have excited more of the public attention than the deceased, in despite of the dark cloud which shrouded his once fair fame; for all admired the bravery and talents which rendered him such an important auxiliary in the early struggles of our country, and lamented that they were perverted by unhallowed ambition. His fate is not without its moral, and may accomplish benefits which his talents could not. For the last three years he has been engaged in preparing his papers for the press. They are said to contain some new and important facts in relation to our early history—but especially in reference to his Mexican expedition, which may lessen the odium which has so long been associated with his name. These papers are in the possession of Matthew L. Davis, esq. of New York, under whose direction they will be published. They could not have been confided to better hands, and are looked for with anxiety.

The following brief sketch of colonel Burr's life, is copied from the New York Daily Advertiser—"He was born 6th February, 1756, joined the American army under general Washington, then before Cambridge, as a volunteer, in August 1775. He marched from Penobscot with gen. Arnold, through the wilderness to Quebec, one of the most fatiguing marches ever recorded. The sufferings endured by this band of American troops has hardly a parallel. He was aid to general Montgomery, on the ever memorable night of the 31st December, 1775, when the assault was made on the city of Quebec, and at which that distinguished officer fell. After serving with fidelity and honor in the campaign of Canada, he returned to New York and entered the family of general Washington, at his (general Washington's) request. He was soon appointed aid to general Putnam, and fought bravely in the battle of Long Island, after which he was made colonel in 1777 and remained in the army, and was a conspicuous officer in the battles of New Jersey. In 1780 he retired in consequence of ill health, arising out of his fatigues at the battle of Monmouth. As soon as peace was declared he was appointed a judge of the supreme court of this state, which honor he declined. He served as attorney general until he was chosen United States senator, which he held from 1793 to 1799. In 1801 he was chosen vice president, which office expired in 1805. The 4th of July 1804, he killed general Hamilton in a duel, which put an end to his political career, and in fact drove him from his country. He then engaged in the celebrated Burr's expedition destined to Mexico—was taken, tried and acquitted at Richmond in 1807. He soon left the country, and returned in about 1811, and commenced his profession as counsellor at law. He has been engaged in a number of important causes which have reached our highest courts.

"Within the last few years he has enjoyed an annuity of about fourteen hundred dollars and a pension of six hundred, in all about two thousand, so that he has been comfortable in his circumstances."

A SECRET ORDER. The New York Journal of Commerce, stated a short time since, that a secret order had been addressed by the treasury department to the western deposit banks, requiring them to hold the specie they receive for public lands, subject to the orders of the government. In other words, that the specie paid for lands is to be accumulated in the form of special deposits, so that the government may have at its disposal the identical specie paid in, or at any rate an amount of specie equal to all which has been paid in—and asked the "Globe" to state the facts. In reply it says that, the whole story is a gross fabrication—that no order of the above character, either secret or public, has been issued, and none whatever on the subject of money, except what has been officially published in that paper.

MEXICO AND THE UNITED STATES. The report of the debate in the British parliament, published in the present sheet, shows how closely the movements of the citizens of this country in the affairs of Texas are watched by foreign nations—and that notwithstanding the aid they have afforded to the Texans, the British government has full faith in the respect of this nation for treaty obligations and the assurances of gen. Jackson in his last message to congress! The following from the New Orleans "Courier" of the 25th of August, is an excellent appendix to the debate, for it admits the inference that, notwithstanding the apprehensions of foreigners, there are at least two parties in this country on this question—one that would aid Texas, another that would assist Mexico; and both, doubtless, formed with a view to "uphold the interests of trade!" in land and by water.

The Warren and Mexican vessels. Some of the friends of Texas complain of the part which commodore Dallas takes in relation to Mexico. It is alleged, as a charge against him, that he has given convoy to the Venus and other Mexican vessels which lately sailed from this port; that, for the part which he has heretofore taken, he has incurred the censure of the executive, and that his conduct throughout the struggle of the infant republic is highly reprehensible, inasmuch as protection has been afforded to vessels carrying munitions of war and provisions to her enemies; thus aiding in the subjugation of a power, which, although not officially recognized, is virtually so; and instructions to that effect have been received by the collector of our customs, of which fact commodore Dallas is well aware.

If the circumstances here narrated be true, and that the commodore has had instructions to give convoy only to vessels wholly American, it would seem to give color to the accusation that his conduct has been strange and unnatural, and he may involve himself in serious difficulties.

As far, however, as we are enabled to form an opinion, our impression is, that the American commodore knows full well the duty he owes to his country and to himself, and that upon an investigation of his actions, it would be found he has not deviated from either, but pursued the course pointed out by his government. Abiding by this rule, it is not surprising he should, in observing a strict neutrality, have a watchful eye over the commercial intercourse between the United States and Mexico, and that he should sternly uphold the interests of trade.

Upon inquiry, we have been informed that, at the request of the master of the Venus, com. Dallas consented to convoy that vessel as far as the jurisdiction of the United States extended, but would not be responsible beyond those limits. In so doing, so far from transcending the line of duty, he performed the part demanded by his station, and instead of censure, is entitled to the thanks of his country, whose greatness and prosperity essentially depend upon free and unobstructed maritime trade. Our citizens, and all merchants, should rejoice at the spectacle presented by our government, in upholding the laws and facilitating the business operations of nations.

TEXIAN COMMISSIONER. Henry M. Morfit, of Washington city, is the commissioner, appointed by the president, to gather information respecting the present state and prospects of Texas. He was, by the last advices, at Brazoria. We have never seen his appointment announced in any of the Washington papers.

Though not announced in the papers, and intended probably to be secret, we have no doubt, from uncontradicted rumor, that Mr. Morfit, who has been for some weeks absent from the city, has gone into Texas, under authority from the executive of the United States, to examine and report, &c.

[Nat. Intel.

CHOLERA IN CHARLESTON. On the 4th inst. 10 cases of cholera were reported—2 whites and 8 blacks—one dead. Of the 17 cases reported on the day before, 4 more had died. On the 5th 27 cases were reported—6 dead, 21 under treatment—5 whites 22 blacks. Of those previously reported 2 had died. On the 6th 23 cases were reported—3 whites, 20 blacks, 3 dead. Of the cases reported on the day before, 3 had died. On the 7th 15 cases were reported—4 whites, 11 blacks, 5 dead—of the cases reported on the day before 3 had died. On the 8th 22 cases were reported—5 whites, 17 blacks, 3 dead. Of the cases reported on the day before 3 had died. On the 9th 10 cases were reported—3 whites, 7 blacks, 3 dead. Of the cases reported on the former day 3 had died. On the 10th 30 new cases were reported, 9 whites, 21 blacks, 5 dead; of the cases reported on the former day 3 had died.

EXPRESS MAILS. We are requested to state, that the new post office act of 2d July last requires, "that every proposal for the transportation of the mail shall be accompanied with a written guaranty, signed by one or more responsible persons, to the effect that he or they undertake that the bidder or bidders will, if his or their bid be accepted, enter into an obligation in such time as may be prescribed by the postmaster general, with good and sufficient sureties, to perform the service proposed. No proposal shall be considered, unless accompanied by such guaranty." Notice of this requirement, and the form of the guaranty, are given in the postmaster general's advertisement for proposals. There is no exception in favor of old contractors or rail road companies, as some erroneously suppose. The guaranty, as well as the bid, must be handed in before the expiration of the time set for their reception—to wit 12 o'clock, noon, this day. Where bids have already been put in, the guaranties may be handed in separately.

[Globe.

AN EDITORIAL SPEECH. At a literary party in Philadelphia, given on the occasion of the annual trade sale of the booksellers of the United States, Joseph R. Chandler, esq. editor of the United States Gazette, being called up by a toast in compliment to the newspaper press of the country, made a very neat and handsome address, from which we make the following extract:

"On such a subject, so productive of matter for thought, and so calculated to draw out an expression of that thought, it was impossible for him to refrain from a few observations—especially when he remembered that from the 'Gaceta of Italy,' that primary penny paper, through succeeding generations down to the new penny prints of the present day, the freedom of the press had been progressive; and he was proud to add, that the American press, both hebdomadal and diurnal, proclaimed its liberty by the size and contents of its sheets; and American citizens their intelligence by the liberality which they supported them. (Cheers.)

"Whenever the political or religious institutions of America were attacked, the public press stood forth as their defender; whenever public liberty and the constitution were attacked, the press was their champion. And the newspaper press, expanded as it was, presented itself not only as the ægis of the republic, but almost as a cover for the people; indeed, such was the size of some of the journals, that a whole family could sit down simultaneously at the same newspaper sheet. And if that were not a sufficiently cheap mode of communicating knowledge to all the domestic circle, why, they could resort to that by far too common plan, of 'borrowing' from their neighbors. But he was rejoiced to have lived to a period when he might truly say that the black crape and riband hung on the outside of a door was no surer sign of mourning, than was the newspaper, when seen twisted every morning round the knob of the knocker, a proof of the intelligence, taste and refinement of the dwellers in the house." (Much cheering.)

Richard Peters, esq. having been called on for a toast, pronounced a short and most eloquent eulogium upon the character and worth of Mathew Carey, esq. who was not present, and proposed a toast complimentary to that distinguished philanthropist and estimable citizen. The remarks were warmly applauded, and the toast received with enthusiasm.

A REVOLUTIONARY VETERAN. We had a conversation yesterday, at the Planters' and Mechanics' bank, with one of the heroes of the revolution, Mr. Thomas Garrett, of Sumpter district, aged one hundred and five years and eight months, who came to this city on horseback, alone, for the purpose of receiving his pension. The old gentleman appears to be in the perfect possession of all his faculties, answers questions readily, and is quite humorous in his conversation. He served for a considerable period under Gen. Sumter, the "game cock of the south," as he termed him, and was profuse in his praise of that brave and chivalrous commander. He was also at the battle of Fort Moultrie and at the siege of Savannah; at the storming of the latter place, he stated that while viewing a wounded fellow soldier, who lay among heaps of slain, the gallant Pulaski rode up, and remarked, "my brave fellow take care, you are in a dangerous position," to which Garrett made answer "general, if you intend to be in a place of safety, I'll keep near you." Pulaski, put spurs to his horse and rushed into the thickest of the fight; but a few moments only intervened, when Garrett saw the noble foreigner fall from his horse, mortally wounded. Mr. Garrett informed us that his mother attained the extraordinary age of 120 years, and his grandmother 115.

[Charleston Courier.]

ELECTIONS.

MARYLAND.

The following completes our return of the counties, in the late election for electors of state senate.

Cecil county.

Whig.	Van Buren.
Stites, 550	Evans, 896
Nowland, 549	Thomas, 894

Prince George's county.

Whig.	Van Buren.
Duval, 720	Somerville, 589
Pratt, 716	Keech, 567

We have not seen the return from Queen Ann's. The Van Buren majority is, however, stated at 60 votes.

VERMONT.

We have not received full returns of the election in this state. One hundred and thirteen towns had been heard from which give the following vote for governor:

Silas N. Jennings, (anti-Van Buren)	12,114
Wm. C. Bradley, (Van Buren)	9,681

There are more than two hundred and thirty organized towns in the state: Returns received from 177 gives for representatives in the legislature:

Anti-Van Buren	102
Van Buren	55

William Slade, Horace Everett and Hiland Hall (all anti-Van Buren) have been re-elected representatives to congress. Gen. Fletcher, (Van Buren) has been chosen in place of Mr. Janes, the present anti-Van Buren representative.

FOREIGN NEWS.

There have been several arrivals at New York and Boston, but the news brought by them chiefly relates to the affairs of Spain, and is given below.

The house of commons, by a majority of 29, have resolved not to consent to the alterations made in the Irish church bill by the house of lords. The bill therefore is lost—and hence the Irish Episcopal clergy will be left for another year without any support.

SPAIN.

Capt. Farran, of the brig Monte Video, which arrived at New York on Saturday last, in a very short passage from Cadiz, having sailed on the 6th of August, has informed the editors of the New York Courier and Enquirer, that on or about the 28th of July, a rising of the whole population of Cadiz took place, who loudly demanded the proclamation of the constitution of 1812, and being joined by a newly raised regiment of 1,200 men strong, they went in search of the colonel in command of it, who had secreted himself; but being discovered, and seeing the military had made common cause with the populace, he consented to comply with their demands, and with all the public functionaries took the oaths required of them. The population of Port St. Mary's and Xerres were preparing to follow the example of that of Cadiz.

It will be remembered that to overthrow the constitution of 1812 was the object of the duke D'Angouleme's march to Cadiz, several years ago.

The queen's government, we are told, has become extremely unpopular, and to such a height has the dissatisfaction at her course of policy arisen, that no concession she can now make will restore her to public confidence. Isturitz, the new prime minister, is loudly denounced by the public voice. General Cordova is styled a traitor; and it is said his object is to deliver the English auxiliaries, under general Evans, into the hands of Don Carlos. The movement above mentioned took place under cries of "death to the ministers" and "death to Cordova."

By an arrival at Boston, bringing Lisbon papers to the 13th ult. We learn that disturbances continue to arise throughout the kingdom—and that the constitution of 1812 had also been proclaimed at Seville, Badajoz and Malaga. In Seville, on the receipt of a despatch sent to the authorities by the civil government of Cadiz, they called together the superior officers of the national guard, and made them acquainted with what had occurred in that city. It was then agreed that all the corps in Seville should be drawn up, in order to ascertain the spirit they were animated with. The result was, that commissioners were appointed by them, who expressed the following wishes as those of their constituents, viz:

1st. That the ministers should be dismissed, as well as general Cordova, and a commander-in-chief appointed, worthy the confidence of the nation.

2d. That a constituent cortes be convened, upon the principles laid down in the constitution of 1812.

And 3dly, That obedience no longer be paid to the existing government.

As far as related to the two first articles, the civil government had given way. And as to the third, the open rupture with the existing government, it was still under consideration.

We gather from these papers that Madrid is in a state of revolution. The Revista, a Lisbon paper, of August 9th says, that intelligence had been received that a revolution had taken place which caused considerable bloodshed, the result of which was the dismissal of Isturitz and the appointment of Mendizabal as prime minister; the queen promising to give to Spain a constitution with two chambers. This, however, is denied by the Lisbon journal of the 13th, which says, "we regret to find that M. Mendizabal is not in office, and on the contrary that the present ministry are continuing their career of mischief and anarchy, and have now declared Madrid in a state of siege." One cause of the tumult in Madrid is said to have been the postponement of the meeting of the cortes from the 11th to the 15th of August.

Madrid, Aug. 5. We are assured that the French ambassador at this court has declared, that if, in consequence of the insurrectionary movements which have already commenced, the existing fundamental laws should be supplanted by the constitution of 1812, all diplomatic relations will immediately be stopped with the government thus established, and passports demanded.

Isturitz, the president of the Spanish ministry, is confined to his bed with a violent inflammatory fever.

These papers contain intelligence of the death of lieut. gen. Evans, the commander of the English division in the north of Spain. He died from a sickness under which he had been a long time lingering. Every thing was quiet in Portugal.

TEXAS.

The latest intelligence from Texas is contained in New Orleans papers of the 31st ult. but the items are unimportant. The blockade of Matamoras has been abandoned, and the Mexican troops were still lying quietly there. The Texans were getting in their crops in the eastern department of that country, which, it is said, will exceed those of any previous year. The season throughout the country had been unusually favorable, and could the citizens have cultivated their lands the crops, in all parts, would have been abundant.

Mr. H. M. Morfit, who was sent by the president of the United States to ascertain the political situation of Texas, and who had just returned from the Sabine, took passage in the Julius Cæsar from the Balize, on her trip to Brazoria. He has had an interview with the president of Texas.

Summerville, the secretary of war, has resigned in consequence of pecuniary embarrassments.

A corps of between two and three hundred cavalry is now being raised in Texas, to act as independent rangers in the west. They are to receive an additional compensation of one dollar per day when on active duty.

The town of Bostrap, on the Colorado river, was burnt by the Indians, and 200 government troops had been despatched to prevent further depredation.

Several persons had been arrested on suspicion of being engaged in a plot for the liberation of Santa Anna, in consequence of which he had been put in irons; the crew of the schooner Passaic, F. C. Gray, formerly publisher of the Texas Republican, and his wife, and a Frenchman by the name of Bartholomew, are among the number arrested; they were to have been examined on the 20th.

Mr. Peter Suzeman, who had arrived at New Orleans from Matamoras, says that the Mexican army has, by desertion, been reduced to about 2,200 men; that they are in a miserable situation. Urrea was still in command. Andrade had left for the south. He confirms the report of a revolution having broken out in the interior, and says that general Valencia had been proclaimed dictator by the military. He also states that generals Sesma and Filasola had been arrested and tried by a court martial, for cowardice and mismanagement in the Texas campaign, and that the latter had been condemned to be shot.

MEXICO.

The editor of the New Orleans Bee has been favored with the sight of a letter from the interior of Mexico, in which it is said that a project is on foot to unite the northern states of the republic of Mexico with the republic of Texas under one independent government. The letter is dated Zacatecas, July 28th, 1836, and states that the disaffection through the northern provinces of Mexico is great and still increasing, and speaks of the advantages of an independent state like that of Texas. The states said to "appear" to be in favor of an alliance with Texas, are Tamaulipas, San Luis, Zacatecas, a part of Jalisco, Nuevo Leon, Coahuila, Durango, Sinaloa, Chihuahua, Sonora, the territory of California and New Mexico.

REMOVAL OF THE CREEKS—OFFICIAL.

Erwin's settlements, Aug. 14, 1836.

GENTLEMEN: I take pleasure in informing you of our arrival so far, with comparatively few losses by death among the Indians, although we laid eight days at Racrot, waiting until the wagons could be collected, where they obtained a great deal of green fruit and corn, which I could not prevent their purchasing, and which occasioned much dysentery and cholera amongst them. I have had only between forty and fifty deaths since we left Fort Mitchell, and those among the very young and very old. The proportion is thirty-five children; the balance old people and a few men. Much sickness still prevails from their eating every thing green they can find on the road, but, fortunately, it is not of a very fatal character, and yields to remedial means.

I can but ascribe the success of our remedies to the dietetic means furnished by the agents of the contractors; the sick being supplied with rice through the entire course of the disease, if necessary, and by my preventing that any thing injurious should be given them, in which I encountered much opposition and difficulty, I had the satisfaction of seeing many bad cases recover.

The transportation for the sick has been satisfactory to me; and the size of the party, as well as the time of the year being taken in consideration, we have been much favored in having so few deaths.

Doubtless lieutenant Barry has informed you that an assistant has been furnished me at Montgomery, which was then very necessary, two boats being required to carry the party to New Orleans. He has been continued in the service from the many sick and the great labor attending our attendance upon them, the camp being extensive, and the necessity we are under of visiting every tent to find the sick.

Early this morning we broke up our camp, with the hope of experiencing no more delays. If so, the party will enjoy good health from the constant excitement of motion, and from their inability of obtaining articles of food that may be hurtful to them.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient servant,

(Signed) E. H. ABADIE, M. D.
To gen. Gibson, com'y gen. of subsistence.

THE INDIAN WAR.

From the Columbia (Geo.) Sentinel, of the 1st inst.
ORDER } Head quarters, army of the south,
NO. 50. } Fort Mitchell, July 25, 1836.

Par. 1. A band of friendly Indian warriors will be immediately raised and organized for special service under instructions from the commanding general. They will be mustered into service, mounted, equipped, supplied and paid as "mounted volunteers" for twelve months, unless sooner discharged. Captain J. F. Lane is appointed to raise, organize and command them. He will be mustered in for the same period as colonel, subject to the approval of the president of the United States.

Par. 2. Six companies of mounted men are required to act in concert with the Indian force. As the proposed service is both honorable and arduous, the commanding general prefers that the force required to be formed of volunteers from the troops already in service, rather than of new levies.

He relies with confidence upon the known and prompt gallantry of the Tennessee troops, for the greater portion proposed to be raised. Brigadier general Armstrong is requested to ascertain the number in his command willing to enter upon the service indicated, and to give the necessary directions for detaching them (should they volunteer) in such manner as not to affect the organization of his brigade.

The thanks of the country will be merited, and received by those who advance fearlessly to the post of danger and honor.

Par. 3. When the detachment shall be formed, brig. gen. Armstrong will direct it to report to captain J. F. Lane, who in consequence of the capacity, military skill and energy, which he has displayed during the present campaign, has been selected to command and conduct the enterprise. He has received detailed instructions from the commanding general and will carry them into full effect. He is authorized to make all necessary arrangements, and the officers of the several staff departments will furnish on his requisitions whatsoever may be necessary to prepare the corps for the most efficient service.

By order of major general JESUP.

HENRY STANTON,

Lieut. col. and adj. gen. army of the south.

Extract of a letter to the editor of the Alexandria Gazette, dated Gary's Ferry, (E. F.) Sept. 2, 1836.

DEAR SIR: In order to do justice to those officers and men of the regular army who have shed their blood, broken their constitutions, and many who have laid their cold bodies under this barren sand, I take up my feeble pen. I intend asking, through your paper, a few questions of those having authority, and to show to the public what arduous and unnecessary duties have been imposed on a devoted portion of the sick officers and men of this part of the army. I, myself, thank God, although I have been seven months in Florida, constantly, I may say, on the most arduous duties of the interior, (for I have been but three weeks on the seaboard during the whole time), and for the last five weeks have been almost daily in the saddle, and have ridden 350 miles through the country, have kept my health, and therefore, of course, do not intend these remarks to apply to myself. But it is to defend those of my brother soldiers who have been compelled by the absence of company officers, who have been for years from their companies, and on duties wholly civil, to perform arduous duties while laboring under the burning fevers of this deadly climate.

A short time since, at Micanopy, there were ten companies. These ten companies are entitled to a captain, two 1st lieutenants, two 2d lieutenants, and one brevet 2d lieutenant, each, making, in all, sixty officers. The complement of men to each company, is fifty-five, making, in all, five hundred and fifty men, if they were full. Now, Mr. Editor, what was the actual state of the case? It was this: there were but seven out of sixty officers, present, and but one of them able to do duty, the rest were down with fever. Of the rank and file of the companies, seven men to a company was a large average, and some of the companies could not muster three!—the rest were either down with fever or with wounds. Some have been discharged and no recruits sent to fill their places.

Now, Mr. Editor, where are these officers?—The echo from the Florida pines answers where? Where is the effect of that sweeping general order, No. 43, of the 28th of June, sending officers, "without favor or affection," to their companies and regiments? The same reverberation answers, where?

But, sir, examine the file of special orders in the department, and the mystery is solved. The return of the same breath which poured forth that order to the winds, has silently and quietly countermanded the whole, almost, by a series of the small "specials." Now, sir, with regard to these poor fellows, "the spring of hope is broken"—"the last glimmering has passed from the vista of the imagination" which has so long cheered them in their difficulties, with the hope of relief. Is it a wonder that they resign? When the government, to save a few dollars, which would be expended by employing citizens on the civil duties now performed by officers, absent from their companies, thus devote to certain ruin, of the constitution at least, a large portion of the elite of the army. Many have already fallen victims to the fever and now lay cold in their graves. And as to the poor common soldier, his fate is worse; he has fewer comforts than the officers, and frequently, while the ague is on him, the scarcity of men has rendered it necessary for him to shoulder his musket and take up the line of march. I witnessed many cases of this kind, coming down with the train from Micanopy, every trip of which diminished our force about thirty men by fever. Thank God, the troops have fallen back, where they can be supplied with provisions with less destruction of the regular force. I estimated, in my last letter to you, the regular force, for field service, too largely; for there are not more than two hundred men, north of Tampa Bay, fit for garrison duty; and two-thirds of them is a large estimate of those fit for active field service. With the earnest hope that these facts may be attended to, I remain, your very obdt. servant,

H.

P. S. With eleven companies that are at this post now, there are but four officers for duty—the rest are down with fever. This is the case to-day, at the healthiest post of the interior. What it will yet be, the last of this month must show. We leave here to-morrow with 160 men, part militia, to go in pursuit of a large party of Indians, said to be in the vicinity of Newnansville.

Letters from Florida, published in the Richmond Enquirer, represent the situation of the whole territory as terrible in the extreme—they state that large parties of Creeks have joined the Seminoles—that Oseola is perfectly acquainted with all the movements of the whites—that he receives and reads regularly the Florida newspapers—that the courage of the Indians is daily increasing, and that help must be sent or the whole country will fall into the hands of the red men again. There has been some difficulty about the Tennessee volunteers, who, if they would now march into the territory would be of most essential service.

POSTSCRIPT. Yesterday's southern mail removes all doubt upon the subject. The Tennessee volunteers are about to carry relief to our suffering brethren in Florida. We have before us, the "Montgomery (Geo.) Advertiser" of the 3d inst. It lets us into all the movements of the Tennessee troops, and gives us copies of general Armstrong's first letter to general Call—the correspondence between Jesup and Armstrong—and the last general order of the 30th August, calling upon the volunteers to march! It appears at first, that Armstrong's corps of 1,500 men, was directed by an order from the secretary of war, to be divided into two detachments; 1,000 to march to Florida, forthwith, while the other 500 were to be stationed in the Creek country, under Armstrong himself. Armstrong objected to this separation of his command—and, besides, preferred to postpone the Florida campaign till October or November. In the meantime, he despatched a special messenger to the president, expressing his own views, and consulting his. A few days after, and before the messenger's return, some difficulty arose on another point. Jesup was raising a band of friendly Indian warriors, to be equipped as mounted volunteers, and to be commanded by captain Lane, as colonel—and Jesup applied to Armstrong for six companies out of twenty of his mounted men, to accompany and be commanded by Lane. Armstrong appealed to his men. Not a man in his whole brigade volunteered. They would not be separated either from each other, or from Armstrong. On the 30th August, the general order appears, from head quarters, Camp Jordan, Alabama. This is decisive of their movement. It tells them, that "The time has at length arrived when it is necessary and proper that the Tennessee brigade should march to Florida. A savage foe, emboldened by his former success, has approached within twenty miles of Tallahassee, the seat of government of that territory, burning and murdering as he went. To stay his further progress, and to punish him for the depredations he has committed, is a duty to which the Tennessee brigade will advance with alacrity. Public expectation demands the performance of this duty, and the character of Tennessee requires that we should not shrink from it.

"The detachment commanded by colonel Trousdale, now at Fort Mitchell, will take up the line of march, at as early a day as practicable. The specific time is left to the judgment of colonel Trousdale himself. He will proceed by Fort Gaines, along what is termed the upper road, across Flint river, to Tallahassee."

It then details the routes of the other corps of the army, and concludes as follows:

"The commanding general is much gratified at the unanimity which prevails in the brigade on the subject of the Florida service. This service is alike arduous and honorable, and requires both stout and willing hearts. The foe we have to contend with is resolute and daring—skilful beyond the usual Indian character, and, if possible, more savage. To subdue such a foe, who has heretofore bid defiance to, and foiled large forces of brave men, commanded by skilful officers, will be no ordinary glory. Prove but true to yourselves, to the character of your sires, and of the state to which you belong, and that glory will be yours."

A communication from "An officer in the Tennessee brigade," appears in the Montgomery Advertiser of the 3d, detailing the above particulars, and adding as follows:

"In obedience to this order major Meador's detachment took up the line of march for Tallahassee on Thursday last, and col. Bradford's will follow on to-morrow. Col. Trousdale is probably under way by this time, and the whole brigade will, it is expected, reach Tallahassee by the 17th inst.

"It is due to gen. Armstrong to state, that this movement is more speedy than was anticipated a week or two since, or than was expected by the president. But intelligence had been received of constant and almost unchecked aggressions on the part of the Seminole Indians, and, well knowing the character of his brigade, and their readiness to render aid where it was needed, gen. Armstrong applied some days since to gen. Jesup for permission to march to Florida. This permission was granted, and the Tennessee brigade, it is hoped, will be on the banks of the Wythlacoochee by the time it was first expected they would leave the vicinity of the Creek country."

Glory go with them! They carry, if not peace, at least safety to Florida.

An express arrived at St. Augustine on the night of the 30th ult. from fort Gilleland (Newnansville) and reported that the Indians had invested that post, and it was badly supplied with provisions. Colonel Crane with commendable promptness ordered to that point, all the mounted troops that could be spared, both regulars and militia and a supply of provisions to last them until the 1st of Nov.

Major Pierce also left St. Augustine on the 31st with 100 mounted regulars for Newnansville, and capt. Curry's company of mounted volunteers had been ordered to the same spot. The force of the Indians is stated at from 3 to 400. Newnansville is the last remaining post now occupied by our troops in the territory of Florida between Black creek and the Suwanee river. It is distant about 80 miles from St. Augustine.

There are now about 300 men sick at St. Augustine, which were brought from the interior. Lieut. Dancy, who recently arrived at Charleston, from that place, states that of a company of 85 U. S. dragoons, who arrived in Florida in March last, there were but six reported capable of duty; and of his own company, consisting of between 60 and 70, there were only four who, when he left, were not on the sick list.

The same officer states that the troops have returned from Micanopy to Gary's Ferry.

Major Pierce had abandoned his intention of renewing the attack on the Indians at gen. Clinch's plantation, from the exhausted state of the troops, &c. and the superior force of the enemy.

Captain Ashby had entirely recovered from his wounds.

The Tennessee troops had marched for Florida, but the campaign would not be opened as early as was expected.

The Tallahassee Floridian of August 27 states that, from the information received at that place, it appears that the Creeks are dividing themselves into small parties of from ten to fifty in number, in order to elude the vigilance of the Georgia troops, and make good their escape to Florida, where they hope to battle to better advantage. Hundreds, the Floridian adds, have already made their way to the Seminoles, where, prompted by the almost universal success of that nation, and in conjunction with them, they will make a bold and daring stand. At present the Indians are divided into gangs of fifty or sixty, and are continually passing into the Seminole country; and when interrupted by the whites, they hastily collect together, fly to a hammock and dare them to come on.

From the Creek country we learn that a skirmish occasionally takes place between flying parties of the Indians and the militia, and fear that the latter have causelessly shed much blood.

Error corrected. It appears that it was captain Dummet, not Dimmock, who behaved so gallantly in a skirmish with the Indians, near St. Augustine, a few months ago. Capt. Dummet was the only commissioned officer present, and modestly restrained him from speaking of himself. His conduct was, however, divulged by the sergeant of the company. Lieut. Dymock is a quarter master in Georgia, and has not been engaged in the Florida war.

REQUISITION OF GENERAL GAINES ON ARKANSAS.

From the Little Rock (Arkansas) Gazette.

We have been politely furnished, by gov. Fulton, with the following new orders, received by him, by the mails on Friday last:

War department, July 20, 1836.

SIR: In consequence of information received from the acting superintendent of the western territory, I have been instructed, by the president, to request that you will call into service, upon the requisition of brev. brig. gen. Arbuckle, such portion as he may deem necessary of the volunteers authorised to be raised by the letter from this department to you of May 25th.

This authority to gen. Arbuckle is not intended to revoke the power given to gen. Gaines, on the 11th inst. of which your excellency was advised on the 18th inst. But you will please to place them under the order of gen. Gaines or gen. Arbuckle, as either of these officers may be compelled by the state of affairs to make the first application for them. Gen. Arbuckle has been instructed to communicate with gen. Gaines in relation to this matter. Very respectfully;

C. A. HARRIS, acting sec'y of war.

His ex. W. S. Fulton, Little Rock, Arkansas.

Head quarters, detachment 3d infantry,

Fort Towson, 6th Aug. 1836.

SIR: I have received information from maj. gen. Gaines, that he had made requisition on the governor of Arkansas for a regiment of mounted gunmen, to be ordered to this post; and I have seen, by your proclamation, that the regiment required is now being raised, and may probably soon be expected here.

We shall be prepared to furnish the troops, on their arrival, with an ample supply of subsistence, stores and forage for their horses. A boat load of flour and pork is now on the way up, and may be expected in the course of a month. The quarters at this post are hardly sufficient for the infantry now stationed here, and we have but very few tents on hand, and those nearly worn out. There is fine timber in the vicinity of Fort Towson, which would enable the volunteers to hut themselves, in a very comfortable manner, in the course of 15 or 20 days. Tools we can supply. Gen. Arbuckle has informed me, that he shall order a quantity of arms and ammunition from Fort Coffee to this post, provided the volunteers are not otherwise furnished.

Your excellency may rest assured, that every thing will be done, in my power, to render the situation of the volunteers both comfortable and pleasant, while stationed in this vicinity.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. H. VOSE, lt. col. 3d inf. commanding.

His ex. Wm. S. Fulton, governor of Arkansas.

FOREIGN ARTICLES.

The pyramids of Egypt. It is mentioned in an extract of a letter from a French officer of the squadron at Alexandria that the pyramids of those gigantic monuments of a former age have been on the point of being demolished.

It was proposed to Mehemet Ali, that they should be taken down, and their materials used in forming the embankments of the Nile. But through the interference of the French consul, M. Mimaut, the gothic project has been abandoned.

State of Newgate. The select committee on prisons have reported as their opinion "that it is expedient to provide means for the separate confinement of prisoners committed for trial before the central criminal court. That, for this purpose, it is advisable either to reconstruct Newgate, or build a new prison adjoining the place of trial." Government have adopted the plan of reconstruction, at an expense of £80,000, only one-half to be borne by the city.

Smithfield market, London. Curious statistics.—The number of cattle sold in this celebrated mart in 1830, was 150,907; of sheep 1,287,070. A century ago, the numbers were, cattle 76,210, sheep 514,700. Subjoined is a statement of the amount, &c. for 1830, as per returns:

		Average weight.	No. of lbs. consumed.
Cattle,	150,907	656	90,994,992
Sheep and lambs,	1,287,070	90	115,836,400
Pigs,	254,672	96	24,448,512
Calves,	22,500	144	3,240,000

Number of lbs. consumed 242,519,904

The above estimated at 6d. per lb. would amount to £6,210,595 2 0

At 8d. per lb. to 8,268,293 9 4

This calculation is exclusive of bacons, hams and salted provisions, which from Ireland alone was 500,000 cwt. in 1830. The average consumption of each individual in London, 170 pounds per annum, or nearly half a pound per day, about double that of Paris or Brussels. It should also be remembered that there are other markets in the metropolis, and private sales, which have nothing whatever to do with Smithfield.

The Chinese. Notwithstanding the singular qualities which distinguish the physical geography of China, the chief object of interest is the remarkable people by whom that country is possessed. They have, indeed, labored to overcome, and, as it were, to obliterate nature; to bring its boldest scenes under the control of industry and art. Not only has the indigenous vegetation been every where suspended by culture, but the highest mountains have been levelled and terraced almost to their tops; cities have been built upon them, and extensive ranges of wall erected along their summits. They practise upon a vast scale all the industrial arts, whether rural or manufacturing, and maintain a population the most numerous that is any where united under one system of rule. Five hundred years ago, they were undoubtedly the most civilized nation on earth, with the doubtful exception of the Hindoos; and if the latter display intellectual powers of a higher order, the attainments of the Chinese appear to be more substantial and practical. Since that time, indeed, the Europeans, by their rapid advances in science and in the arts, both useful and ornamental, have far surpassed all the inhabitants of the east. Still the Chinese seem fully entitled to stand next in order, while they have the additional right to boast of a much more ancient improvement. Their civilization, too, has been developed under peculiar forms, altogether differing from those which are presented by the nations of the west. The dissimilarity is perhaps as wide as can possibly exist between two races of beings having the same common nature and wants. A people, among whom inventions which are esteemed the pride of modern Europe—the compass, gunpowder, printing—were known and practised many centuries earlier—who probably amount to more than two hundred millions, united in one system of manners, letters and polity—who in every province have towns that rival the greatest capitals in our part of the world—who have not only covered every spot of earth with inhabitants, but have streets and cities on the waters—such a nation must indeed occupy a conspicuous place in the history of mankind; and the study of their institutions cannot fail to throw an important light on the progress and arrangement of the social system.

[Edinburg Cabinet Library.

The population of Austria is at present 35,400,000, and the extent of Austrian territory is 12,153 square miles, which space is divided into 45 provinces.—Of these Hungary is the largest, and has a population of 11,223,587; the next largest province is that of Galicia, which has a population of 4,217,791 only, and then follows the various provinces of Bohemia, Lombardy, Moravia, Silesia of the Venitian states, Transylvania, Syria, Upper Austria, Tyrol, Carinthia, Littoral, Delematea, and a very inferior amount of population. The proportionate population of Austria as compared to Russia is as 173 to 101 and to that of France as 208. Vienna, as to population, is the 6th city in Europe.

Le Droit, a Parisian journal, in making some remarks in regard to the difference between the functions of English and French juries, relates a curious anecdote connected with an inquest over the body of an aged female who had come to a violent end. It appears that in the discharge of their duty eleven of the jurors had approached and examined the body, and, owing to the nature of the wound which was in the front of the throat, with the absence of any other appearance of violence, had come to the conclusion that the deceased had died by her own hands, particularly as a razor wet with blood was lying on the carpet, and seemed to have fallen from her right hand. In this opinion they were sustained by two surgeons who were in attendance.

The twelfth juryman, an honest farmer, who had shown great repugnance at approaching the body was at length compelled to make the examination, required by law. No sooner had he come near to the body than he exclaimed, to the surprise of all the by-standers, "murder, murder! this woman has been assassinated. She is a brunette, but do you not see these pieces of red hair in her nails? She has been assassinated, and has struggled with a person having red hair." In a moment all eyes were turned upon the son-in-law of the deceased, whose hair was red; his confusion was evident, and he was committed for trial at the next assizes. Le Droit remarks, in conclusion, what judge, what salaried commissary would have shown more observation, more sagacity, than this gratuitous judge? The above is an abstract made by us of an article selected from the journal above named, by the New York "Courier des Etats Unis." [Balt. Amer.

Singular custom. A letter from Moscow, published in a Paris paper, says: "On the 17th May was celebrated the holiday called the inspection of the betrothed." The young men who wish to marry are drawn up in a row on the sides of the public walk, and during the space of five or six hours, they behold the processional walk along their ranks, as at a review—the young women, decorated in their best attire, brilliant with their natural graces, and ornamented with diamonds mixed with flowers. On the following day proposals are made to the parents of those young women who have attracted the notice of the bystanders."

New scheme of emigration. The English speculators and philanthropists together have formed a plan, which, if carried into effect, will diminish in part the apprehension felt in this country of an excessive emigration from Great Britain. The project is to encourage emigration to the eastern coast of Central America. Twelve millions of acres have been secured to the new colonists by the government of Guatemala. Here, it is said, all the fruits of temperate and tropical climates may be cultivated together in a region so elevated as not to be exposed to extreme heat. The first settlement is to be made on a tract of fourteen thousand acres, on the south bank of the Cajabon, running through the lake Duce into the bay of Honduras. The land is to be sold at 10s. the 40 acre lot—uncleared land at half price.

Mail coaches in England. In England there are 56 four horse and 45 two horse mails. In the four horse mails the rate of travelling varies from 8 to 10 miles per hour. There is one exception, the Davenport and Falmouth mail, which goes only 7 miles 2 furlongs. The average is probably about 9 miles 3 furlongs. They all carry four inside passengers, and either 3 or 4 outside, except one which carries 6 outside and two which carry 8. In the two horse mails the rate varies from 6 miles to 9 miles two furlongs, and will probably average about 7 miles 6 furlongs. The passengers are almost invariably 4 inside and 4 outside. The average speed travelled by both classes is 8 miles 7 furlongs.—The average mileage for 4 horse mails is 17-8d. per mile, for 2 horse mails 13-4d. The rate of the London and Holyhead mail is 10 miles 1 furlong per hour; the London and Edinburg, 9 miles 6 furlongs. The difference of 3 furlongs per hour is equal to 1-26th part of the time.

Portuguese elections. In Portugal every person who receives 100 milreas, that is about eighty dollars per annum, whether he obtains it as income from his property, or as the gains of his industry, is an elector. These electors meet in their parishes, and elect delegates in the ratio of one to a thousand houses. The delegates so chosen must have an income from property or industry of 200 milreas; or about 160 dollars per annum. They assemble in the capital of their province and elect to the national legislature the number of members allotted to that province, which is in the proportion of one member to 25,000 inhabitants. Lisbon sends forty-six members, or deputies. The deputy must have an income of 400 milreas, or about 320 dollars.—An English writer, in remarking on this subject, says that the body of electors in Portugal is more democratic than that of the electors of members of parliament in England.

The season in Europe. It appears from notices in the English and French papers, that the season has been much more favorable for the purposes of agriculture, than in this country. We copy the following paragraph from a Paris paper, in which it is copied from a paper of Lyons:

It is, perhaps, late to notice the unusual state of prosperity which the agriculture of our department and the neighboring ones, this year presents. We hasten to break a silence on this subject which may be misinterpreted. In the first place, the harvest of silk, which offers elsewhere so favorable an asspect, has surpassed our most sanguine expectations. Letters from the places where it is produced, announce that the success has been the most complete in every branch, and if it is borne in mind, that since then, the cocoons have sold at nearly double the common prices (from 2 francs to 2 francs 50 centimes) it may be asserted that this year is the finest, and the most productive which we have enjoyed since the mulberry tree has been cultivated among us. It is calculated that Herault and Gard have produced silk to the amount of from 25 to 30 millions of francs. All this having been already sold for cash, it may be judged what an immense movement in the funds this single branch of agriculture has caused. On the other hand, wools have sold extremely well. Every one also extols the magnificent promise of the corn harvest, which has been so much benefitted by the late rains. The vines, however, which suffered from the severity of the last winter, promise but half a crop; but in return, as this effect has been general, (whatever may be said of some places in the interior), the wines are gradually rising, and go off rapidly. Soon all those which remain in the cellars of the producers will be disposed of, and the new wines will come in under the most favorable auspices. It may be said therefore, that agriculture among us has never presented itself under a more smiling and favorable aspect.

In consequence of the obstacles which the Bavarian government have thrown into the way of marriages among the Jews, by requiring the possession of a sum of money by the contracting parties, and a large fee for a license, not less than nine couple of that persuasion, the men all mechanics, have arrived here to be married under our laws, and to reside here in future. The confidence and constancy manifested by the young women, in venturing across the ocean to a new world with their lovers, where Hymen's torch burns bright and free, is worthy the best days of olden time, when seven years was deemed light servitude for a good wife. One of the females is a capital engraver of visiting cards.

Some of them were in the market on Friday, making their purchases of poultry, lamb, fruits, &c. for their wedding dinners yesterday.

Talking of these marriages reminds us of suing for a breach of promise, so familiarly known in our country and in Europe.

Such an event has never been heard of among the chosen people. Betrothing is deemed as sacred as marriages, and a man may as well run off with the wife of another, as to seek to win the affections of a maid betrothed. Hence the confidence between the affianced, who traverse oceans together with mutual respect and affection, until time and circumstances make it convenient for them to marry. The Mosaic law of divorces is known to have been loose and very unsafe for women, arising from the custom of the Orientals, and never could be adopted in extenso in other countries, but there is one branch of the law which is admirable, and is also but little known. He who seduces a woman and afterwards marries her, can never be divorced from her; likewise, the man who falsely accuses his wife of infidelity, can never claim the benefit of a divorce. These are points indicative of the philosophy and wisdom of the great legislator, and his entire love of justice. [N. Y. Star.]

TALK OF HO-POE-THLE YO-HO-LO,

CHIEF OF THE CREEK NATION.

The Mobile "Register" of the 26th ult. contains the following report of a talk of the chief of the Creek nation of Indians with governor Clay of Alabama, which is stated to have been faithfully made: Substance of a "talk" between his excellency Clement C. Clay, governor of the state of Alabama, and Ho-poe-thle Yo-ho-lo, chief of the Creek nation, in the presence of the following officers: Major general Patterson, colonels John B. Hogan, John A. Campbell, Albert J. Pickett and James A. Belser, judge Benson, majors T. J. Abbott and Donegan, and other gentlemen; together with the undermentioned chiefs of Tercharchie town, Young-king, Little Doctor, Yarla, Sich-e Colonels, Mad Blue, Mad Deer, Osoo-che Fixico and others, on the 30th May, 1836.

Ho-poe-thle Yo-ho-lo said, at the city of Washington in the winter of 1832, he saw and conversed with the president of the United States, gen. Andrew Jackson. The president there informed him after the making of their treaty, that by the terms of it, at the expiration of five years from the date of its conclusion—if his people, the Creeks continued to reside where they then were—they must necessarily become subject to the jurisdiction of the state of Alabama, and be governed by its laws, otherwise they must move beyond the bounds of the Mississippi, and settle themselves in a new home—which course he thought, would be most beneficial for them. Before the expiration of this term of five years however, the whites had come in, in great numbers among them, and thenceforward there had been much trouble and confusion. In consequence of this state of things, he had in the mean time, in accordance with the counsel of friends, gone to look a home beyond the Mississippi: during his absence greater troubles had grown up, and more confusion among his people arisen, on account of the transfer and sale of their reservations, for, on his return, he found that the whites were swindling them out of them; on that account he had requested Dr. McHenry, at that time certifying agent, to forbear from certifying to contracts for the sale of them, for he had discovered that it was no uncommon thing for one Indian to be instigated to assume the name of, and personate another, and sometimes to sell and stand up to be certified to several tracts of land, of not one of which he was in reality the owner. He had written to the president on this subject: he had asked for an investigation and desired inquiry to be made into it; he had also, in order to prevent a repetition of such conduct, requested the president not to permit of certifying to contracts, except in the presence of discreet chiefs, and was much gratified to find that latterly that course had been adopted.

The land speculators, in order to get the Indians' reservations of land, would harden the people against the counsel of the chiefs, and sell to the Indians, pistols, powder, knives and lead, would give bad counsel to them, and say to them, "if the chiefs attempt to restrain or interfere with you, kill them;" and that in this way the late depredations and disturbances, that had so suddenly and in so unlooked for a manner broken out in the nation, had been created and produced.

At the time of the meeting that had been appointed to take place at Dr. McHenry's, for the holding of the investigation asked for, concerning the frauds that had been committed upon the Indians in the sale of their lands, he was himself sick and unable to attend, but sent word that the chiefs, generally, and for the most part were apprised of the affairs of their people, and therefore knowing who among them had actually sold, and who not, could assist in making a proper report of them. Tuskehenehaw of Tuckabatchee, was present at this meeting, hiding about in the bushes, and general Woodward and captain Walker were also there, putting it into Tuskehenehaw's head to make the Indians believe, that those among them who went before the agent to make complaint about the fraudulent sale of their lands, would be the very persons who would be taken, and sent immediately off to Arkansas.

Walker and Woodward were furthermore at the same time making papers also, out in the bushes for the Indians there, telling them that what the agent might do for them would be of no account, but that the papers they were making for them would secure them.

By their treaty made with the president it remained with their people, after the expiration of the five years, either to stay upon their lands under the law of the state, or remove westward to a new home: in either event he had been anxious for the people to be allowed the benefit of what was rightfully their own, and to this end, the investigation was desired by him, and it had been his earnest hope that it would have effected it. He had oftentimes attempted to procure a general meeting of the tribe of Tallassee, having a desire to talk with them, but was as often foiled, they appearing to have an idea of what he wished to converse about: and being also more immediately under the influence of Tuskehenehaw, anxious to avoid it. An opportunity being at length afforded, he appeared unexpectedly at their meeting, and finding Tuskehenehaw with them, remonstrated with him about the evil course he was pursuing, telling him that the pernicious talks he was making to the Indians, were not his own talks and did not originate with him, but were derived from others of whom he was the dupe, and that if he thus obstinately persevered in such course it must necessarily end in consequences that would be ruinous, and that all would be afflicted with sorrow for. Tuskehenehaw notwithstanding continued stubborn, and afterwards proceeded in the same way he had begun, disregarding his friendly remonstrance; and the events which he had so much feared on account of it, had unhappily of late become realized. Flying rumors of contemplated disturbances had occasionally passed amongst his people, but they were considered by them as unworthy of their belief: they did not open their ears to them—now, indeed, the astounding facts had broken out upon them. He had received information of a matter which he had been unable properly to comprehend: it was concerning a paper, or letter, said, or pretended to have been sent from people beyond the seas; this it was said, had been circulated in some of the Indian towns; he had heard that it had been sent to Kunchar-te-Micco, to Enehah-Marthlooche, to Neah-Micco, and that Tuskehenehaw, had also received it: he was informed that runners had come from Nehar-Micco to Tuskehenehaw bringing four broken sticks to him, and word that "they were ready," and it appears that it was about the time of the last of these broken sticks that hostilities had commenced among them.*

The circumstance of the paper said to have been circulated he could not, as he has before said, well understand; it could not have been the work of Indians, for they cannot read or write—the only way in which he can account for it is, that white people must have been at the bottom of it. His people had agreed with colonel Hogan, the superintendent and agent, that they would emigrate with him during the present spring; some of them, however, had been desirous of making a crop first and putting off going until fall afterwards; this had been suggested to col. Hogan, but he would not listen to it, and said they must not defer the time of their removing beyond the spring, that the grass would be sufficiently grown then to feed their poney upon—they must prepare to start by that time; it would be the best season for them and they ought to avail themselves of the advantage of it and be off. That to facilitate their removal he had promised to interest himself in the procuring if possible, the payment of their annuity for the present year by that time, but although as they had been informed, he had endeavored to do so, he had not been successful—no law having then been passed authorising and appropriating it. The time contemplated for their removal had passed—the people in expectation of it had not planted and were already in a state of great want on account of it; they were generally both willing and desirous of emigrating, and would go into camp if the opportunity was afforded them: that owing to that diversity of sentiment ever entertained by men in regard to the propriety of particular measures, it was not to be expected that all would be unanimous in the matter, but he thought that those who had hitherto said they would not go, might by possibility be influenced by the example of the others going into camp, if camps were opened for them: and although some of this mind might be reluctant, yet, he did not think they were spoiled—that is, that their repugnance to emigrating was invincible, but might by such means be overcome.

He wished to make particular remarks on one subject which deeply affected their condition as a people, and interests; it was in regard to the quantity of ardent spirits that was continually introduced among them—beyond doubt it was one of the leading causes of their debasement and misery, and tended infinitely to the procreation of mischief and disturbance. He was desirous in the event of their going into camp that the dealers in the commodity might not be allowed to bring or sell it among them: in the absence of the cause they would of course be relieved from the baneful and destructive effect.

Another subject too, he would also invite attention towards. Claims were not unfrequently set up by their white brethren against the Indians: these too often were founded neither in truth nor justice; often where not a cent was due on account of them. To satisfy such demands, their horses were sometimes seized upon, sometimes their money; this too arbitrarily and without sanction of law; at other times they were threatened with the consequences of the law, or the confinement of a jail, and in such manner their substance was extorted out of them. Oak-fus-ke Yo-ho-lo the prisoner, lately killed in Tallassee while attempting to effect his escape, he had every reason to believe had been excited to anger and made mad by some circumstance of this kind.

To proceedings so arbitrary, and the introducing and selling such floods of liquor amongst them, he thought a stop should be put; they could then in more order and quiet, complete their necessary arrangements for going away.

*The paper alluded to by Ho-poe-thle Yo-ho-lo, was, after the talk, ascertained to be some old proclamation, issued during the last war with England, by sir George Cockburn, commanding the English fleet, and was highly inflammatory. It was addressed to the Creek Indians, and was no doubt the cause at that time of exciting them to make war on the whites. Where these old proclamations could have been lying all this time, is not yet discovered, but an Englishman, who is a silversmith, and resided for some time in Columbus, Geo. was the man who rode among the Indians, and read and explained these papers, but took care to conceal the date; he is now in prison in Montgomery jail. This man says he is the natural son of Francis the prophet, hung by order of gen. Jackson, and was born in London at the time Francis visited England.

When the late hostilities broke out, his people were engaged in gathering up their cattle, that were dispersed in the woods, in order to dispose of them in expectation of their departure; they had not finished this gathering when news of the hostilities reached them, nevertheless they immediately quit hunting their cattle and hastened to the relief of their white friends; nor did they cease from aiding them until by their exertions, most of the deluded and guilty depredators upon the lives and property of the whites in that section of country, had been either made prisoners and turned over to the custody of the whites, or expelled the neighborhood through fear, to places remote and unknown to them, and where as was supposed the main body of their enemies had secreted themselves and absconded.

(Ho-poe-thle Yo-ho-lo being here asked by the governor whether he would be willing to continue to lend his useful aid to the commanding general Patterson, then present at the interview, answered) Neah-Micco and Tus-ke-he-ne-haw are responsible for the influence of the evil counsels they have been instrumental in disseminating among the red people; by their conduct they have become deeply involved in the creating of the present passing events, have been actors in them, and ought theretofore to be chargeable with some of the troubles and burdens of allaying them. He thought it was in the power of these by proper exertion to cause the apprehension and delivery of the murderers and other depredators who had been concerned in the late rash and lamentable outbreak upon their white brethren of the Creek nation; this exertion ought to be first required and demanded of them, after which, if they turned a deaf ear and refused, and the general called upon him, although the horses belonging to his people, were much worsted by the fatigues of their late service and enterprize, they would again nevertheless cheerfully turn out to his assistance, and help to subdue and take them.

(Reverting to the subject of their removal beyond the Mississippi, Ho-poe-thle Yo-ho-lo said) captain Walker, one of the company of contractors who had engaged with the government to emigrate them, had conversed some time back with him about their emigration, and had offered to open camps for them to assemble in, upon condition, that they should only remain in camp one week prior to the commencement of their journey, saying, that he could not keep them in camp and feed and furnish provisions for them longer than that space; that his people would not agree to go into camp upon such conditions, the time limited to them was too short to make their needful preparations in, therefore they were unwilling to agree to it: lately capt. Walker had again made his people similar proposals, but, as before, they could come to no understanding about it. On that occasion col. Hogan being absent they had obtained an interview with capt. Page; at this interview mention was made to him about the state of land matters, which, although investigations had already been had about them, it appeared by the order of the government were to be had over again: capt. Page on that occasion had said to him that there were so many agents sent by the government amongst them to hold investigations about the stolen lands they made complaint of, and for other purposes, that he did not think it was going to do them any good:—they would be kept by them until fall before their business would be settled; that his people therefore had better sell their claims to these controverted lands for whatever they were able: even though they might not be able to get the worth of them, they had best get something; something was better than nothing. Then a man with whom at that time he was unacquainted, middling height, and rather thick, came up and accosted him, saying, he had heard what had been said in the matter of their land claims by capt. Page, and if he liked the talk and would sell him the claims he would buy them, doubtful as might be the chance of their recovery; nevertheless he said in the event of their selling to him, that he would incur the risk of this. Here capt. Walker who was then present interfered and counselled his people to agree to this proposal, and sell their claims as was desired, and it was at this period that he made his second offer as last mentioned to open camps for emigration.

(Being asked what towns he thought were now willing to emigrate, he replied) the town of Tuck-a-bat-chee, for the most part—these were his people, they were in general willing, except those about Tus-ke-he-ne-haw, and under his influence—these objected. The other towns so far as he could learn were those of An-to-see, Cle-wal-la, Tuskegee, Coosawda, Ki-o-if-gee, Hatchee-chub-ba, Aufou-ga, To-war-sa, part of U-fau-la, on Tallapoosa, Hickory Ground, Little Oak-choi, We-wu-ko, Woc-koy, Pok-en-tal-la-has-see, We-o-guf-ka, Hil-labee, part of Fish Pond and part of Taladega.

Ho-poe-thle Yo-ho-lo added in conclusion—that some of the Creeks had passed over among the Cherokees, they were composed principally of Sok-a-pa-toy, Kun-char-tee, Tallasse Hatchee and a portion of Talladega.

MILITARY VISIT.

On the 12th inst. the Baltimore light division, comprising eighteen companies of as well drilled and efficiently organized volunteers as are to be found in the union, visited Washington city, via the rail road, where they were cordially received and kindly entertained. In Baltimore their fine military appearance was greatly admired, and they also made a deep impression upon the citizens of Washington, as we learn by the following article

From the Intelligencer of Tuesday last.

A more brilliant spectacle never has been witnessed in the city of WASHINGTON, than that exhibited yesterday on the occasion of the visit of the brigade of volunteers from BALTIMORE to this city for the purpose of honoring, at the capitol of their country, the anniversary of the battle of North Point, fought by volunteers and militia, in defence of the city of Baltimore from invasion, two-and-twenty years ago.

The day was bright and beaming, and the city and neighboring towns poured out almost their whole population to greet and admire the strangers, whose splendid appearance exceeded all anticipation. We have indeed seen many public spectacles in our day, but never one so brilliant and impressive as yesterday afforded us. The arrival of the trains of the cars alone, transporting, by the aid of several locomotives, so many hundreds of troops, (eighteen companies,) the elite of the citizen soldiery of the monumental city, witnessed as it was from the brow of Capitol-hill by thousands upon thousands of men, women and children, was one of the grandest sights one could desire to look upon. Add to this the effect of the federal salute from the hill, by which the visitors were welcomed, the showy marshalling of the troops at the base of the hill, and the march of the glittering column up North Capitol street into the space in front of the capitol, (where the volunteers of our city and Georgetown, with a company of Baltimore cavalry, joined them,) and we can safely say that a more impressive scene is seldom witnessed, in either our civil or our military exhibitions, in any part of this country.

At the capitol, the troops were reviewed by the commanding general of the army of the United States. After which review, &c. of all which a more particular account may be hereafter expected, the visitors were entertained with a collation provided for the occasion at Carusi's saloons.

The reception which our city was able to give to our fellow-citizens of Baltimore bore no adequate proportion to the wishes of our people, nor perhaps to the claims of our visitors. To have done this would have required the resources as well as the public spirit of the monumental city itself, which never does such things by halves. We trust, however, that the visit was rendered acceptable to our visitors, and will have afforded them general gratification.

The following letter from gen. Steuart, who commanded the division, to the president pro tem. of the rail road company, shows the importance of rail roads conveyance in the transportation of troops.

Baltimore, Sept. 13th, 1836.

SIR: On the part of the first light division, I beg leave to return thanks for the very handsome manner in which the Baltimore and Ohio rail road company carried from 900 to 1,000 men, with some artillery, guns and horses to be transported yesterday from Baltimore to Washington and back again in the same evening with great safety, punctuality, ease and comfort.

The experiment was a bold one, but proved completely successful, and whilst it illustrates the great capacity of the road for rapid transportation of troops, I must beg leave to say that nothing could exceed the energy, skill and obligingness with which the whole movement was directed and executed by the agents of the company. I would especially mention captain FITZHUGH and Mr. WOODSIDE, (though it appeared to me that all were equally ambitious to do their duty) but as you sir were present, giving your kind attention when it was required, I will say no more than that we all feel greatly indebted to the company for the liberal arrangements made for our comfort, and equally indebted to yourself as well as the two gentlemen I have named and the other agents of the company who were employed in this special duty.

With great respect, your obedient servant,
G. H. STEUART.

Col. William Steuart, president pro tem. of the Baltimore and Ohio rail road company.

SLAVERY IN TEXAS.

BRITISH HOUSE OF COMMONS, August 5.

On the order of the day being moved for the house to go into the committee of supply,

Mr. B. Hov, pursuant to notice, rose to move an "address to the crown, praying that his majesty will be graciously pleased to direct that such measures may be taken as to his majesty may seem proper, to secure the fulfilment of the existing treaty between this country and Mexico; and to prevent the establishment of slavery and the traffic in slaves, in the province of Texas, in the Mexican territory." He said that the question was a very important one to this country, as we had in the province in question property to the amount of 70,000,000 dollars. The Texas had already been dissevered from Mexico, and might fall, along with Cuba, &c. into the hands of the United States. He had before asked whether the Texas would not be bound by the treaties into which she entered, when forming part of the Mexican territory, relative to the slave trade; and the noble lord (Palmerston) then answered that if the Texas remained, after the conclusion of the war, part of Mexico, she would be bound by the treaties entered into with this country at that time. But he had the opinion of the noble lord on another point to quote as a precedent in this case. The noble lord, in answer to a question from him, had stated that Holland was bound by all the treaties made by her when joined to Belgium, after the separation of the two countries. The war going on in Texas was not a war for independence or for liberty: it was a war for slavery, and the Texas had been most unjustly assisted by the southern states of the American union. Texas had carried on slavery in the most open manner.

The annexation of Texas to the American union was contemplated and spoken of. The American states had been originally 13 in number; they were now 26. The last state which had joined the union was the Arkansas; and the only stipulation which they had made was this—that they should be allowed to do as they pleased on the question of slavery; that the general government should have no voice upon that. In the same manner, there could be no doubt, that if a union were to take place between the United States and Texas, the main condition of it would be, that slavery should be allowed to continue in the latter. He begged to ask the noble lord, if within the last ten days he had not had an application from the Mexican government, requesting the mediation and good offices of government, to remonstrate in an amicable manner with the government of the United States, on the gross violation of the treaties between those states and Mexico, and the aggression which had taken place against Mexico on the part of the southern states of the union. The honorable member then quoted the authority of Mr. Huskisson and of John Q. Adams, to show the design entertained by the United States to extend their dominion to the territories of other powers in the neighborhood of their own.

It was for the house and the country to consider whether the sacrifice of those enormous sums which we had expended, and which we were still annually expending, in order to procure the abolition of slavery and the slave trade was now to be rendered wholly useless, and whether we were to retreat from that position, which we had so long held, of a nation taking the lead in endeavors to bring about the suppression of that odious traffic, while we possessed the power and right of interfering in such manner as to prevent so unfortunate a result.

Last year eighty vessels from Cuba had been engaged in the slave trade; many of them, doubtless, had conveyed slaves to Texas, for it was calculated that at least 13,000 slaves annually had been of late introduced into Texas, by importation direct, or from the immediate neighborhood. On this point he begged to remark that the papers laid upon the table of the house, relative to the slave trade, contained no information respecting its progress in Texas, such as they contained of its progress in other American territories. If Texas became independent and united, as he had no doubt it would be, to the North American republic, he would ask the house and the country to consider what must be the consequences resulting. He would call upon the house to consider what must be the consequence of a perseverance on the part of the United States in a system of progressive aggrandisement.

The acquisition of Texas would lead to the establishment of the states as a commercial power of dangerous importance; it would place them in a commanding position on the Atlantic and the Pacific alike; and while, on the one side, they would be distant only six weeks' sail from this country, on the other, they would be distant only six weeks' sail from China and those other countries of the east with which a facility of intercourse was always so advantageous, and so much desired. Unless Mexico could be at once assisted by this country, it would fall an easy prey to the United States. His object on the present occasion was to obtain the concurrence of the house in an address to the crown, praying his majesty to take such measures as to his majesty should seem proper to see fulfilled the existing treaty. The honorable gentleman concluded with moving an address to that effect.

Mr. H. G. Ward seconded the motion, and said that the deep interest which he had long taken in the question induced him to say a few words. From the time of his mission to Mexico, he had observed that it had been the fixed determination of the United States, by fair means or foul, to obtain possession of the province of Texas. Honorable members might, perhaps, not be aware of the importance and value of such an acquisition. That territory contained upwards of 120,000,000 acres of the finest land; it was watered by several navigable rivers, having their embouchures in the gulf of Mexico, and on its coast were to be found many harbors, superior to all others in the adjoining territories, and the possession of which would give them a complete command of that gulf. When Mexico became an independent state, her government agreed to abolish slavery in its dominions. He could answer for the fact that, during his residence in that country, the treaty was most rigidly enforced; and at present he would take upon himself to say that there were not more than twenty slaves in it. Ever since the erection of Mexico into an independent republic, the United States had cast most covetous eyes upon the province of Texas. He had observed a curious proof of it during his residence in Mexico, when through their agent, Mr. Poinsett, they took measures for the purpose of obtaining such a party in the Mexican congress as would consent to let them have Texas for a certain number of dollars. This endeavor failing, the United States had had recourse to other means; they encouraged all the refuse of their population to overflow the boundary line between the United States and Texas, and to take possession of the lands of the latter. This was done; the lands of Texas were occupied by subjects of the United States, a Texian land scrip was created, and the stock became the subject of speculation in the markets of New York and New Orleans. No Texian had any interest in it. The territory was in the hands of ten, fifteen, or eighteen thousand adventurers—men recognising no laws, and seeking for nothing but the means of turning their land to the utmost account. When he was in Mexico there had been in communication with Mr. Poinsett, upon the subject of the occupation of Texas, an American, who was now the president of the Texian republic, a man of talent, certainly, but utterly devoid of principle.

As a further proof of the connexion of the United States, he would state that Mr. Forsyth, a member of the cabinet, was reported to have been a very large owner of Texian land. Thus, it appeared that Texas, being undeniably a country belonging to Mexico by solemn treaty, and being uninhabited, the Americans had created a population in it, and instigated that population to declare itself independent; and the committee on foreign relations in the senate then came forward with a solemn report, ushered in by Mr. Clay, gravely discussing the absolute necessity of recognizing the independence of Texas—a state which they had created from the offscourings of the population of their own western states, and which they had encouraged in every way, by furnishing supplies of men, arms and munitions of war, to sever itself from Mexico. There were two considerations which ought to weigh with them in discussing this question. The first was the question of general policy, whether it was advisable to allow the United States to pursue a system of aggrandisement without any endeavor on our part to check them, and to allow the extension of their territory to the Rio Bravo and the Gulf of Mexico in such manner as to obtain for them the absolute command of that gulf; for certainly the acquisition of Texas would give them that command, and would enable them, with half a dozen privateers, to shut us out entirely from our present trade with Mexico, leaving us no route whatsoever by which to maintain a commercial intercourse with that country, save that leading round Cape Horn to its western coast.

Upon the importance of that trade, not only in reference to its present actual amount, but in reference also to the large probable increase which it would undergo, it was unnecessary for him to dwell; it was growing more extensive every day; nor could he see any definite limit to its increase in future years. Our connexion with Mexico was rendered, too, more intimate by this circumstance, that we possessed a large capital invested in mining adventures in that country. It was impossible, then, to contemplate, without anxiety, events having a tendency, apparently, to sever from the Mexican state a most valuable portion of its territory, and to place our trade with that state at the mercy of a commercial rival. The noble lord must be aware that, in 1825, there had been a somewhat similar project, on the part of the United States, to obtain possession of the island of Cuba. There were at that time in Cuba three parties, severally wishing for a connexion with England, France and America; the mutual jealousy of the three countries, however, prevented any one of them from taking possession of the island, and they came to a solemn treaty (notes having been actually interchanged by their respective governments) that neither England, France nor America should interfere with it, but that it should be left in the possession of Spain. The other consideration, of which he had spoken as one which ought to have weight in the discussion of the question, was the consideration of moral feeling which must influence every gentleman acquainted with the condition of society in the western states of the union, and every gentleman aware of the incalculable misery which the system of slavery there prevailing inflicted upon so many millions of human beings.

The question to be decided under this view of the subject was whether, for the purpose of maintaining that demoralizing system, they would allow the annexation of the territory of Texas to the United States. In a pamphlet recently published upon the subject in the union, a great fear was expressed as to the consequences of such an event on the part of the non-slaveholding states; for doubtless the house must be aware that the states were at present divided into two great parties, the slaveholding and the non-slaveholding states—that a struggle had been for some time carried on between them in the national legislature, and that the parties were now pretty equally balanced. The result of the annexation of the province of Texas would be the creation of nine additional slaveholding states, with eighteen representatives in the congress at Washington; and that circumstance would put an end to all hopes of doing away with the system which formed the most degrading feature in the whole frame of the United States.

Viscount Palmerston said that if he began by declaring that he did not feel himself at liberty to agree to the address proposed by the honorable gentleman, he trusted that neither he nor the house would imagine that circumstance to be any proof that he did not feel fully the importance of the subject to which that address related, or that his majesty's government were not as much animated as he was by a desire to put an end to those events to which mainly it referred. He thought, however, that he should satisfy the house that in some respects the address would be unnecessary, and in others it would be premature. The observations made by the honorable gentleman, and by his honorable friend behind him, (Mr. Ward), divided themselves, strictly speaking, into two different branches, the one of them relating to the political part of the question, and the other relating to that part of it which regarded the trade in slaves. With reference to the political part of the question, undoubtedly the possibility of the annexation of the province of Texas to the U. States was a subject which ought seriously to engage the attention of the house and the country. But he did not think that the events which had yet occurred afforded them any ground for thinking that there was at present any such probability of that kind as to call upon the house to address the crown with reference to it. The state of Texas at present was this: A revolt had taken place in that province, and a Mexican army had been despatched thither for the purpose of putting it down.

The first operations of that army were greatly successful, but a part of it having incautiously advanced considerably before the remainder, had been surprised by the Texian force, and routed with great slaughter, the president, who happened to be with that portion of the Mexican army, being taken prisoner. But it would be premature to infer from that simple event what might be the ultimate issue of the civil war in that province. It was possible, undoubtedly, that the resistance of the people of Texas might prevail against the authorities of Mexico; but, on the other hand, the numerical superiority lay with the army of Mexico. The government of Mexico was preparing, according to our last advices, to make fresh efforts to reinforce their army, and he thought we were not in a position to infer from any thing which had happened what might possibly be the result of the contest. But with respect to the conduct of the United States, although he was aware of the fact stated by the honorable gentleman, and by his honorable friend, that individuals in those states of the union which bordered upon Texas had undoubtedly given great assistance to the revolted population, yet, if we looked to what had been the conduct of the responsible government of the United States, we should find in the message sent to congress by the president, at the beginning of the session, a most unequivocal declaration that the government of the United States would take no part in that civil war; nay, farther, we should find that orders had been issued by that government to enforce the laws of the states, and prevent individual subjects from mixing in that dispute.

He (lord Palmerston) had too high an opinion of the honor and good faith of the government of the United States not to believe that they would act up to their declaration; and he thought, therefore, that fresh circumstances ought to arise before it would be fitting on the part of the house to send up to the crown an address bearing on that political branch of the question. With respect now to that part which related to the trade in slaves, the honorable member had remarked, that in the correspondence laid before the house, as having taken place between the government at home and our agents abroad, with regard to the progress and diminution of that trade, there appeared nothing bearing upon the trade supposed to exist in Texas. That was perfectly true; and the explanation was that we had no agent in the province of Texas. It was but lately, indeed, that he had received from our minister at Mexico representations bearing upon the illicit trade which was supposed to be carried on in that province. Undoubtedly it would be a very great evil, and much to be deplored, if the course of the civil war in Texas, be it what it might, were to lead to a renewal or extension of the slave trade; and that was a subject well deserving the attention of the house. If the house were of opinion that his majesty's government were indifferent in the matter, and were not disposed of their own accord to bestow on it their most vigilant attention, and to do all in the power of the crown to prevent such an evil, he should agree that it would be fitting on the part of the house to admonish the government, and remind them of the course which it behooved them to pursue in the manner proposed by the honorable gentleman. But he assured the house that the government required no such stimulus to urge them to perform their duty on that point; and he trusted that what they had done, and what they were in the progress of accomplishing, might be accepted by the house as a fresh proof that they were as anxious and active as the house could wish them to be in endeavoring to put down the trade in every part of the world, and prevent it from springing up in quarters where it did not now exist.

If they considered what effect the progress of events in Texas might have on that matter, he did not think that there was any danger—any considerable danger—that such an evil would be the result of the civil war; because it was evident either that Texas would be reconquered by Mexico, and the authority of Mexico re-established therein, or else the province would assert its independence and become a separate state; or thirdly, indeed, it might unite itself with the United States of North America. If the government of Mexico re-established its authority in Texas, then the laws of Mexico would come into operation in that country; and, therefore, as far as the internal administration of Texas was concerned, there would be no more encouragement given to the slave trade in that part of the Mexican territories than in any other. With reference to any thing which the government of Mexico could do, it was obvious, whether their authority were thrown off in Texas or not, that while they were unable to rule in that country and to make their laws to be there obeyed, it would be useless to apply to them to interfere for the purpose of putting down the slave trade in that province. In the next place, if Texas established its independence, it would be for the government of England, by addressing itself to that state, to enter into such negotiations as would induce its government to enter into those engagements for the suppression of the slave trade which we had persuaded many nations to contract, and which, he trusted, we should persuade all the nations of the civilized world in like manner to contract.

If, again, by any progress of events at any future distant time, Texas were to become a member of the union, then, undoubtedly, there would be some danger that at least from other states of America slaves might be introduced into the province of Texas; but there would not be any real danger in practice of the importation of slaves brought from the coast of Africa, or from any of the islands of the West Indies. If there had been hitherto any importation of slaves into Texas, which he was inclined to believe there had been, it would be found, he apprehended, that they had come from Cuba and some neighboring places in the West Indies; he had not heard of any cargoes being brought to Texas direct from the coast of Africa. With regard to the importation from Cuba, that was a branch of a larger question which, he trusted, had been satisfactorily settled. The house knew that we had concluded a treaty with Spain for the suppression of the slave trade, containing what he hoped and what he thought would be most effectual provisions for putting an end to the slave trade under the flag of Spain. That treaty had only lately come into operation, and, therefore, the statement which the honorable gentleman had made as to the transfer of slaves from Cuba to Texas related to a period of time, and a state of things antecedent to the practical operation of the new treaty. It was well known that some years ago we persuaded the French government to enter into a treaty by which the mutual right of search, subject to certain limitations, was conceded by one country to the other. The treaty likewise contained other regulations, having for their object the suppression of the slave trade.

What had been the effect of that treaty? Until then, the trade in slaves was carried on to an enormous extent under the flag of France; but he believed that, from the moment the treaty came into operation, not a single slave ship had sailed under the flag of that country. We had now also concluded a treaty with Spain. Previous to the conclusion of this treaty, and perhaps he might say, almost up to the present moment, the flag of Spain had been extensively used for the purpose of covering the abominable traffic. He, however, trusted and believed that the same provisions which in the treaty with France had proved effectual in suppressing the illicit traffic carried on under the French flag, would, in the treaty with Spain, be found equally effectual in preventing it from being carried on under the flag of the latter country, and that the enormous trade in slaves carried on with Cuba in defiance of our representations to the local authorities of that island, and in reproach of the good faith of the Spanish government, would finally be put an end to, as well as that subdivision of the traffic which had flowed into the territory of the Texas. There was another flag which had, perhaps, been more abused for the purposes of the slave trade than that of Spain; he meant the flag of Portugal. (Hear, hear.)

The papers which have been laid upon the table contained sufficient evidence of the abominations carried on under that flag, and hardly a week passed without his receiving fresh accounts, each exceeding its predecessor in the enormity of the facts disclosed. It, therefore, gave him much pleasure to be able to state to the house that this country had entered into negotiations with Portugal for the purpose of concluding a treaty precisely similar to that concluded with Spain. These negotiations were brought so nearly to a conclusion, that he expected, before many weeks elapsed, to receive the treaty signed; and, if that should be the case, he trusted that the slave trade, now being carried on under the Portuguese flag, would be put down. Then there would remain chiefly to be considered the flag of Brazil, which, in spite of a treaty, had, to a certain extent, been applied to that purpose. The government of Brazil had lately signed two supplementary articles containing the essential stipulations, for want of which the existing treaty had proved ineffectual; he meant the stipulations respecting equipment and breaking up of vessels. What had now, therefore, associated with us in the common cause of putting down the slave trade, almost all the maritime powers whose flags could be abused and prostituted for that purpose. The British government was going still further than this.

They had made a proposition to the government of Austria, Prussia and Russia, who had not hitherto concurred in any treaty on the subject, in consequence of which those powers had agreed to a treaty conjointly with France and England; and he hoped that, before a considerable time elapsed, he would be in possession of the ratified document. He must say, therefore, that the subject of the slave trade in Texas was a comparatively insignificant branch of a much greater and more extensive question; and, if we should succeed, and he trusted it would be the case, in carrying our object into effect with respect to the general question, little apprehension need be entertained on the score of Texas. If, however, it should appear that the importation of slaves into Texas still continued, it would undoubtedly be the duty of the government to take such steps as circumstances might require to endeavor to put an end to the abuse. Upon political grounds, therefore, he thought it was unnecessary for the house to address the crown on the subject of Texas; and, with respect to the question of the slave trade, he ventured to say that it was equally unnecessary to approach the throne; and, if the house should take an unnecessary step in addressing the crown upon a point with respect to which his majesty's advisers were already prepared and willing to act, it would be casting a censure upon the conduct of the government, which he believed the honorable mover of the amendment did not intend to convey.

He (lord P.) might avail himself of this opportunity to state that it was his intention to introduce a bill connected with the subject now under discussion, and the statement which he had made would in some measure explain his motive for doing so. He confidently expected that he would shortly obtain the ratifications of the treaties to which he had alluded; but the house was aware that those treaties could not be carried into execution without the sanction of a parliamentary enactment; and knowing that the treaties would probably be concluded at a period when parliament would not be sitting, he wished to bring in a bill, the operation of which should be limited to the duration of a certain time after the next session, by which the crown would be empowered by orders in council to give immediate effect to any treaty which his majesty, in pursuance of addresses from the two houses of parliament, might conclude with foreign powers for the suppression of the slave trade, without waiting for the passing of a bill to carry each treaty into operation—(hear, hear). If parliament would consent to pass a bill of that description, it was obvious that considerable time would be saved.

Mr. F. Burton expressed his belief that if the Americans should obtain possession of Texas, which had been truly described as forming one of the fairest harbors in the world, a greater impulse would be given to the slave trade than had been experienced for many years. If the British government did not interfere to prevent the Texian territory from falling into the hands of the American slaveholders, in all probability a greater traffic in slaves would be carried on during the next fifty years than had ever before existed. The war at present being waged in Texas differed from any war which had ever been heard of. It was not a war for the extension of territory; it was not a war of aggression; it was not one undertaken for the advancement of national glory; it was a war which had for its sole object the obtaining of a market for slaves—(hear, hear). He would not say that the American government connived at the proceedings which had taken place; but it was notorious that the Texians had been supplied with munitions of war of all sorts by the slaveholders of the United States. (Hear, hear.) Without meaning to cast any censure upon the government, he thought the house had a right to demand that the secretary for foreign affairs adopt strong measures to prevent the establishment of a new and more extensive market for the slave trade than had ever before existed. The noble lord ought immediately to open negotiations on this subject, not only with the Mexican, but with the United States government, which latter had always professed to be anxious for the extinction of the slave trade.

After a few words from Mr. Hume, sir F. Trench and sir J. R. Reid, in condemnation of the proceeding of the Texians,

The amendment was withdrawn.

MR. CLAY'S REMARKS

ON COLONIZATION.

From the Lexington Intelligencer.

We intimated, on Tuesday, an intention to publish a sketch of Mr. Clay's observations at the colonization meeting of Friday last. This semi-pledge we are enabled to redeem, though in an imperfect manner, by the aid of the brief notes taken by us at the time.

Mr. CLAY said, that he came to the meeting as a listener, with no prepared speech, and with no purpose of making a speech. Standing, however, in the relation he did to the gentleman, who had just taken his seat, he felt it incumbent on him first, to say something of him, and next, of the great cause that had brought us together. That gentleman he had known for many years, as one of the most zealous, persevering, energetic, pious and benevolent friends of the cause of colonization; he was one of the officers of the national society; and to his services in that capacity, the free colored people, the colony and the society were largely indebted. He spoke of Mr. Gurley as having proved, by his labors, his assiduity, his eloquence in defending the cause of colonization, and his general and well known character for Christian philanthropy, that the fullest confidence in him could not be misplaced. Having said thus much, and less he could not have said in relation to that gentleman, if he said any thing, he would proceed to the topics whose consideration had caused this meeting.

When we take a survey of our country, we find it occupied by two distinct classes of population—two races of men—distinct in many important respects—agreeing in few, except that they alike possessed the gift of reason. The amalgamation of these two races was a thing impossible—forbid by all considerations of regard to either. The case presented difficulties long ago deeply felt and deplored. They were seen by the fathers of the republic, who, after much argument and reflection, resolved to do the best they could, and depend for the result upon Providence. Many schemes passed in review before them, and all were rejected as impracticable.

About twenty years ago some zealous, pious, benevolent men conceived the project of African colonization. He recollected well the proceedings at Washington at the organization of the society. He was invited to be present. At first he declined; but on further reflection, he felt disposed to think well of the plan. Among those present at the original meeting, he remembered were Mr. Caldwell and Francis S. Key of the District of Columbia, the rev. Dr. Finley of New Jersey, and a late distinguished member of congress from Virginia, John Randolph of Roanoke. We met and considered the prejudices in our way, the obstacles to be removed, and the objects to be accomplished; and finally organized the society on the principles which it has ever since publicly professed, and which have just been stated to this meeting.

The success of this society has exceeded the hopes of its founders. It was not deemed possible for a society with mere private means, to do more than plant a colony, and thus demonstrate the practicability of the object. When I look back, said Mr. C. on the twenty years during which this society has existed, and consider what it has done, I am impressed with the belief that it is the work of an overruling Providence. It was surrounded by difficulties at its outset, and it has at all times encountered opposition and misrepresentation. Recently a new school has sprung up—one which maintains that slavery is a blessing—that it is an indispensable element for the preservation of our own freedom! Of this school, I take the liberty to say, I AM NOT ONE. There are two extremes of opinion on this subject, in neither of which do I concur. The first is that of those who regard slavery as no evil, but a good. I consider slavery as a curse—a curse to the master, a wrong, a grievous wrong to the slave. In the abstract, it is ALL wrong; and no possible contingency can make it right. It is condemned by all our notions of natural justice, and our maxims of natural political equality among men. Necessity, a stern political necessity alone, can excuse or justify it; a necessity arising from the fact, that, to give freedom to our slaves that they might remain with us, would be doing them an injury, rather than a benefit—would render their condition worse than it is at present.

That slavery was condemned by religion, he did not say. It was not his purpose to speak of it, except in its political relations. That slavery was a blessing, and ought to be perpetuated as a valuable institution, was one extreme; and those who occupied it had ever been opposed to African colonization. But there was another extreme; and on that were to be found the advocates of immediate, unconditional, indiscriminate emancipation, without regard to consequences. To this fanatical class were to be referred directly or indirectly, much of the violence and wrong, the mobs and the outbreaks, which are so rife in some portions of our country, with which no friends of good order, and of the just rights of the different portions of the union could have any congeniality of feeling on this subject. These were none of your old fashioned gradual emancipationists, such as Franklin, Rush, and the other wise and benevolent Pennsylvanians, who framed the scheme for the gradual removal of slavery from Pennsylvania, about the time of the origin of the federal government.—They were not of that class with whom he (Mr. C.) was proud to say he had acted in this state forty years ago, to procure the adoption of a gradual system of emancipation, on such terms and under such regulations, as might consist with the good order and highest interests of the commonwealth.

He had heard with some surprise in the course of the day, that some individuals, even in this community, suspect that there is some connection between the Colonization and Abolition societies. He could assure the meeting that there was no cause or reason for any such suspicion. He had corresponded with a leading gentleman of the Abolition society in New York, with whose name the reading public were familiar, who had addressed him on another subject; but expressed to him also his views on slavery; (a gentleman who was honest and benevolent in his motives, he presumed, but deceived and infatuated), and he (Mr. C.) had endeavored to convince him of his error. He had put to him the question, how the citizens of New York would endure the organization of societies in Kentucky to regulate the tolls on the New York and Ohio canals. But he had alluded to this correspondence, mainly in order to state, that this gentleman had expressed a determined hostility to the scheme of African colonization. He thought it a design of slaveholders—and in part, this is true. He (Mr. C.) was ready to admit that one advantage of the scheme was, its tendency, by the removal of a class, in theory free-men, but in fact, NOT FREE, to contribute to preserve quiet and subordination among the slaves. The removal of the free blacks would, while it conferred a vast good on them, render the slave more docile, manageable and useful.

It was not his object to have said so much; but merely to express his own feelings towards the society, derived from 20 years experience; his unshaken conviction of the utility and benevolence of the colonization scheme, and of the strong claims which it presented for aid, to the state and national governments. Nor could he omit to allude to the vast good it must confer upon Africa, by introducing among her people our religion. I am not, said Mr. C. a professor of religion, and, as I have remarked on another occasion, I regret that I am not, I wish I were, I hope that I shall be. The longer I live the more sensible do I become of its utility; the more profoundly penetrated with its truth; the more entirely convinced, that the religion we have received from our ancestors, the religion of Christ, is, of all religions, the best; and it alone can afford us an adequate solace in the hour of affliction. The colonization scheme affords the means, and presents the best hopes of propagating this religion, throughout Africa.

The Colonization society, viewed in all its relations and influences, DOES GOOD AND GOOD ONLY. It does not disturb any of the legal or political rights, which slavery involves. It is voluntary in all its operations. But if the day should arrive when the governments, state or general, shall, by common consent, agree on some plan of gradual emancipation (and who will say that such day may not arrive) may not the means of accomplishing the object be found in the plan of this society? Or, in case of any convulsion arising out of the condition of our colored population, might not this scheme afford the means of relief? Say not the plan is impracticable on a large scale. We have already found it difficult satisfactorily to dispose of our surplus revenue; and a great increase of our national revenue is to be expected: and if 100,000 emigrants can come annually from the shores of Europe into the United States, without deranging our business, or employing too large a portion of our tonnage, can it be doubted that the means of this country are sufficient to transport not only the free, but the slaves, should the states consent to their removal. True, this society has nothing to do with slaves. Yet, some, it is true, have been manumitted, and with the consent of their owners, sent to Liberia. And who can object to the colonization of those who are liberated voluntarily for so humane and glorious a purpose? Or to the influence of this society in opening an asylum, to receive and confer the greatest blessings upon such slaves as may be emancipated, by those who alone can manumit them—their own masters—or the legislatures of the slaveholding states?

In reference to the resolution touching an application to the legislature of this state, for some portion of the surplus fund placed at its disposal by the recent act of congress, he would beg leave to say a word. Having voted for that act he felt disposed to leave the disposition to the free action of the people and the state legislature; and yet, having originated the land bill, for which this act must be regarded as a substitute, he felt it right to allude to the three great objects specified in that bill, and to which, by the terms of that bill, the proceeds of the sales of the public domain were to be applied, education, colonization and internal improvements. Without presuming to dictate, he would suggest to the legislature the propriety and importance of remembering these cardinal objects—of such vital interest to the state.

This fund will be ample—at the lowest estimate it would be a million—it ought to be a million and a half; it might, by possibility, be two millions and a half, with a rigid economy in the administration of the financial affairs of the country, and it may be expected that the amount, arising from the sales of public land, will continue to be divided, either by future land bills or distribution bills. Thus our state will possess ample funds for these great objects, colonization, education and internal improvements. He trusted colonization would come in for its due share—as our state was among the first to express favorable opinions of this cause, I think (said Mr. C.) she should, I hope she will, set a good example to other states—that her often and uniformly expressed favorable regard for the colonization cause, will be proved to have been sincere, now that she has the means brought within her control for giving such undoubted and substantial proofs. He would not urge at present a large appropriation, but one which would be considered liberal. All this, however, must be left to the judgment of the legislature—to us it belongs, from our private means, to contribute such sums as our convenience and sense of duty might permit and dictate. And surely no occasion could be more proper than that when we were visited by an agent of the national society, who had devoted himself to the furtherance of her patriotic and philanthropic objects; who was prepared to defend them from misrepresentation and aspersion; who had so ably and eloquently, as the meeting have heard, addressed us in relation to them; who could give all requisite information touching the scheme and its practical progress; and of whose acquaintance with the principles of the society, its plans and operations, its needs and capabilities for usefulness, we had had such abundant evidence.

Mr. Clay, after a brief recapitulation of some of the prominent suggestions he had made, and a renewed expression of his confidence in the honesty, benevolence, efficiency, capacity for good, and singleness of purpose of the Colonization society and its friends, and of the confirmed persuasion, which its whole history had forced upon his mind, that it is destined to triumph over all unfounded prejudices against it, and finally, by the blessing of heaven, to achieve the great purposes of its origin, sat down with the applause of the meeting.

GOVERNOR OF KENTUCKY.

The following address was delivered by governor Clark of Kentucky, at Frankfort, on the 30th ult. previous to taking the oath of office.

GOVERNOR CLARK'S ADDRESS.

In contemplating my present attitude, my sensations scarcely permit me to make the deep acknowledgments, called for by the debt of gratitude which I owe to my fellow citizens, for the distinguished and unmerited confidence they have reposed in me.

It is only in a land of freedom and of liberty where men exercise the unquestionable right of self government, that causes of self gratulation, such as create the emotions that are now felt by me, are produced.

To be called by freemen to conduct the affairs of freemen, is alike elevating, honorable and gratifying. I deeply feel the extent of the obligation created; but it is a feeling accompanied by a consciousness of the humble pretensions of him who has been summoned to this high appointment. Fully impressed with the extent of the confidence reposed in me by my fellow citizens, and mindful of the important duties, which it imposes, I shall fearlessly undertake their performance, with a firm reliance upon the honest support of all, and a kind indulgence for those errors and imperfections that will always characterize even the best exertions of the most faithful and patriotic.

The most acceptable return that I can make to my fellow citizens, for having invested me with the honor of the chief magistracy of this growing commonwealth, will be, so to conduct affairs placed under my management, as to promote the prosperity, welfare and general happiness of our beloved country. And I now give the pledge, that so far as an invincible attachment to the principles of the constitution can contribute thereto, by the exertions of a very fallible judgment, aided by untiring efforts, it shall be done; and now when party feeling having run its course, seems about to expire of exhaustion, may we not be permitted to hope that all parties, at least so far as state policy is brought into question, laying aside and burying in oblivion all past causes of dissension, will unite in advancing those measures, that the permanent good of the state, the happiness of its inhabitants, and the improvements of an enlightened age so imperiously demand.

Various are the evils that arise out of party excitement. Among all its mischiefs, none are to be so much deprecated, as that feeling which seems to be its inseparable incident, and which leads the zealous partizan, forgetful of the welfare of the people at large, to give up all his energies with untiring ardor, to the attainment of those ends, and the success of those projects, deemed necessary to secure the ascendancy of party. This unwise, unpatriotic and deleterious conduct ought to be reprobated by all who feel desirous of promoting the prosperity and dignity of our common country. The expression of such sentiments, I flatter myself, will be tolerated without subjecting me to the imputation of disloyalty to former principles and opinions.

What a cheering prospect does our country afford us at this time; prosperity and abundance are seen every where; enterprise and industry are the common characteristics of our citizens. The work of internal improvement furnishing facilities to that enterprise and intercommunication between the different members of this great republic form a ligament of union, constituted by interest and friendship, and consequently of the most durable nature. The day to question the expediency of the system of internal improvements is gone by. The light of experience has put to rest all doubts that ever existed on this subject; and unless we wish to fall behind our sister states in importance and wealth, we will devote our best energies to push forward the works already commenced under the most favorable auspices.

There is no portion of this large continent, more deeply interested in all the branches of this system than our own state. Having a fertile soil, yielding a large surplus beyond the wants of its inhabitants, affording an abundance of mineral productions and other sources of great wealth, the improvement of our roads and our rivers is of vital importance to our welfare. The truth of this proposition is so self evident, that an enlightened community has not failed to perceive it, and to acknowledge its conviction thereof, by its unequivocal approbation.

To enter into a detail of the principles, or the policy that will characterize or influence the administration of the government of this state, so far as it may be controlled by me, would at present be unnecessary. By an unrestrained, open and constant interchange of opinions with my fellow citizens during the present summer, my views on all measures connected with this subject, must be, and are no doubt well understood. To preserve and defend the sacred principles of our national and state constitutions; the guardians of our liberty, security and independence; to sustain the honor and dignity of our state, that she may rightfully assert claim to, and maintain the respect of all, both at home and abroad; to guard and defend our laws and institutions from secret violation; or open aggression; to see that the laws are executed according to their true object and spirit, and to aid in the advancement of those great leading and fundamental measures, that the voice of experience, the adoption of former administrations, and the approbation of the sovereign people have sanctioned, will constitute the leading features of my administration.

No people in the world enjoy all the blessings of civil liberty to the same extent, with the people of the United States. They have a right to be proud of their condition. It is the work of their own hands, under the protection of a benign Providence. The eyes of the whole world are upon us. We constitute the last hope of the friends of liberty in every clime; let us not disappoint their just expectations; let us not thoughtlessly dash to pieces a fabric which ages may not be able to rebuild; but on all occasions let us testify our sacred attachment to the union. It is the life, the animating principle, the undying protection of our dearest liberties.

The father of his country has said, that we are one common people, held together by the strongest ties, and has urged us to the preservation of that union, by all the reasons and incentives that can operate on our sympathies, our sensibilities, our understanding, or our patriotism. The idea of its dissolution should never be entertained, the suggestion should be recoiled from with the same feelings of horror, that we would from one of those dreadful convulsions of nature, that throws a world into ruins.

Without this union what would we be? Restrained by no consideration of mutual interest, influenced by no feelings of former friendship, or recollections of ancient dangers, and past privations, in which all participated; but actuated and wrought upon, by local jealousies and petty strifes, and separated into small and unconnected governments, in danger of constant quarrels and bloody wars, our situation would be deplorable indeed. May we be long able to avert so great a calamity; may a nation's wisdom, inspired and sustained by the Creator of the universe, enable us to perpetuate a union, the blessings of which, so long as it continues to exist, will be the theme of praise to generations yet unborn.

With these brief remarks, I now proceed to take the oaths of office.

At the conclusion, Henry Wingate, esq. administered the oath prescribed by the constitution. Mr. Wickliffe, prior to being qualified by taking the oaths addressed the audience, and declared his gratitude at the preference by which he had been preferred to office, professed a determination to be the officer of the state, and not of a party. Declared his uniform advocacy of internal improvement, but stated he should urge, in all legitimate modes, that a system of education, through the medium of common schools, should be adopted by the legislature, and repeated and impressed upon his hearers, that intelligence and virtue were the safeguards and protection of a republic. His address was received with manifestations of approbation. From the capitol, the dignitaries proceeded to the mansion house, where Mr. Marouse had prepared abundance of good cheer, and many of us participated in its comforts. I have given you a hasty sketch. All were in good humor, and I trust we shall never forget the inaugurations of this day.

Yours,

J. J. M.

MR. DALLAS' LETTER,

To the democratic corresponding committee of Smithfield, Bradford county, Pa.

The corresponding committee of Smithfield, Bradford county, Pa. take pleasure in presenting to their democratic fellow citizens, a letter, from the hon. GEORGE M. DALLAS, of Philadelphia, which is written with great clearness and eloquence; and is a triumphant vindication of the ability and right of the people, by constitutional provision, to revoke the charter of the United States bank. This institution is now on its trial before the people of Pennsylvania, charged with having come into being against their will, and of possessing and exercising powers which endanger the public safety. In the language of Mr. Buchanan, "the struggle will be for life or for death." Mr. Dallas makes the most lofty and powerful appeal to the reason, and the moral sense of the community, and at this solemn and important crisis, his argument, founded as it is, upon the same broad principles of justice and truth, as the immortal "Declaration of Independence," cannot fail to be read with deep interest, by the people of Pennsylvania.

Resolved, That a copy be forwarded to the president and vice president of the United States, to col. R. M. Johnson and col. T. H. Benton, and that each member of this committee preserve a copy to be placed by the side of president Jackson's celebrated veto message of 1832.

Sam'l Satterlee, S. Salisbury,
Hosea Caleff, Isaiah Kingsley,
T. M. Beech, H. M. Peck,
Peleg Peck, Joel Allen,
Abiram Pierce, Abraham Wood,
William Wilkinson, Abraham Jones,
Lyman C. King.

Committee of correspondence.

East Smithfield, Pa. July, 1836.

Philadelphia, 7th July, 1836.

GENTLEMEN: I was honored by your letter transmitting a copy of the printed proceedings of a democratic meeting held in East Smithfield on the 15th March last, pronouncing your belief that the charter of the bank of the United States within this commonwealth is a national calamity, and requesting my "views in relation to the appropriate remedy."

My engagements of business have heretofore prevented that attention to your request which its flattering character would otherwise have commanded. The published letters too of my associates in your esteem, Mr. Rush and Mr. Horn, seemed to render any thing from me unnecessary. As you have, however, again invoked a reply, I am forced to suppose that you place some value upon my sentiments beyond their real worth, and will therefore express them to you as candidly and clearly as I can. Should they throw the least additional light upon the absorbing topic to which they relate, or give gratification to the democrats whom I address, they will more than compensate the trouble of communicating them, and, in some measure, atone for their having been so long withheld.

When, in the winter of 1831, the directors of the bank determined to apply for a renewal of the charter, I had just been elected by this commonwealth to represent her in the senate of the United States. Against my earnest and sincere remonstrances, the duty of presenting and forwarding the memorial was imposed upon me. It was undertaken with extreme and avowed reluctance; as I felt conscious of inexperience in legislation, of some lukewarmness in the fate of the institution, and of the talent and patriotism by which it would instantly and perseveringly be resisted. I accompanied the presentation of the memorial with the expression of an opinion that it was ill-timed—the celebrated federal Baltimore convention, at which Mr. Clay was nominated for the presidency having recently assembled—and frankly challenging scrutiny into the conduct and management of the bank, I pledged myself to become its implicable opponent, should that scrutiny develop actual or contemplated interference, directly or indirectly, in the politics of the country. Of the constitutional power of the national government to create a bank, I did not then, and do not now, entertain a doubt; of the ability of congress to create such a bank as would be a safe machine of finance, and a serviceable agent in preserving a sound currency, I then was, as I still am, quite convinced; and even after the experience of the last four years, I am inclined to believe that if one particular and practical feature recommended by the secretary of the treasury in 1816 to the committee of ways and means had not, at that time, been struck from the original draft in the house of representatives, the bank would never have become the detested enemy of the people it has since been. With these opinions, stimulated by positive instructions from our state legislature, and doubtless still alive to impressions which a recollection of the venerated author of the charter, and of his labors and anxieties in its formation could not fail to produce in me, I contributed my voice and vote, all that was in my power, to re-incorporate the bank. The bill passed both houses of congress, but met from the Roman tribune who filled the executive office, in whose elevation I had taken an active part, and from the great current of whose policy and spirit the democracy of America expected the wonders of renovation and reform he has since achieved, a signal and overwhelming VETO.

It so happened, from special and private incidents which I am not disposed to trouble you with, that my legislative duties to the measure were performed, unflinchingly and faithfully, without involving me in the slightest chagrin or disappointment at its failure; without abating one jot of my attachment to the patriotic chief who inflicted the coup de grace, and certainly without my imbibing, even in the most zealous conflicts of debate, the preposterous and peurile inclination to abandon the great republican party to which my whole life was devoted, in order to attach myself to the cause of a corporation whose being, when contrasted with the secure action of fundamental principles throughout the entire structure of government was regarded by me as measurably insignificant.

From the moment of the veto, the enraged board, heretofore discreet and plausible, tore off the mask, stripped itself rapidly of all disguise, and under the flimsy pretext of being first assailed, entered at a bound and with bluster, into the arena of political strife. The chief magistrate of the country became the mark of its contumely and vindictive thrusts. Town meetings were convened to exasperate party. Bank banners were paraded on every election ground. Official manifestoes, equally arrogant and inflammatory, were issued. Legislation was to be overawed, the citizens intimidated, the elective franchise depreciated or controlled, the country revolutionized! This was a process of recharter which seemed to prostitute the powers and to defeat the purpose of the corporation. It involved practices and pretensions utterly irreconcilable with what were well known to me to have been the pure objects and democratic principles of its founders. It gave reality at once to the vivid pictures drawn in congress of the ambitious tendencies and dangerous influences of such a moneyed agent. It threw me irresistibly back upon the pledge which as a republican senator I had openly given in that high sphere of representative duty, and I witnessed and shared with pride the manly and vigorous and triumphant resistance by which its usurpations were encountered and finally prostrated.

Uncompromising hostility to all banks, is the extreme remedy to which the events of a few years have drawn many of our wisest and most prudent politicians. I am not prepared for so indiscriminating a rule. The capacity of the people, in the pursuit of happiness, to devise their own organs and facilities, should be preserved unabated. It is their right to be free to act. Experience may teach us how effectually to regulate them, so as to secure their advantages and to avoid their mischiefs. But, uncompromising hostility to any bank which shall start from its prescribed path and strict subordination, shall venture to mingle in politics, and shall, covertly or boldly, formally or informally, gather, exasperate and lead party for the attainment of its ends, is, in my estimation, an imperative obligation upon those who desire to perpetuate the virtue and freedom which characterize our social and political system. The same rule is applicable to every creation of organic or municipal law. Derangement, collision and destruction, can alone follow upon wilful and perverse deviations from the legally allotted orbits of duty. The judge who perverts the moral influence of his station, or blemishes his ermine with the stain of faction; the ministerial officer who warps in the exercise of his functions to accommodate his private antipathies or attachments; the juror who barter his verdict for a vote; and the corporation which makes its combination and its efforts the means of effecting unauthorised or forbidden aims; are all dangerous and should all be denounced. Else is the republic at the mercy of its own instruments; every man entrusted with office is an unchecked tyrant or corruptionist, and every corporation a conspiracy with mercenaries already banded to resist, subvert or dictate the law.

The people of America can never again incur the risk of a national bank. Such an agent may help to equalize their exchanges, purify their currency, and facilitate their transfers; but it is better that these undoubtedly important objects should be accomplished in a mode less economical, less certain, and less simple—nay, it is better that they should not be accomplished at all, than hazard another fierce struggle for the ascendancy of government, of law, and of the popular will, like that in which they recently conquered. Providence, among its numerous merciful dispensations, ordained this struggle to occur while yet enough of primitive democracy and revolutionary energy remained to secure its issue: at a time when the watch tower was tenanted by one whose lofty patriotism attracted unbounded confidence, while from his stern presence and inflexible purpose the efforts of intimidation, clamor or blandishment, withdrew defeated and unavailing.

But the same stockholders, with the same capital, swayed by the same direction, animated by the same spirit, and even exulting in the same name, have been suddenly dragged from "the slough of despond," into which they were thrown, and incorporated anew by the general assembly; and this it is, gentlemen, which you term "a calamity not only to Pennsylvania, but to the nation," and on which my views as to the "appropriate remedy" are desired.

The event was an apprehended consequence of the unhappy division in the ranks of democracy at the last election. It is in perfectly good keeping with the character of a legislative body whose members scrambled into their seats against the sense of a large majority of their constituents: whose federal and antimasonic fragments owned but one principle of cohesion, that of revenge upon republican measures and men: whose proceedings violated the constitution, endangered the public peace, put in jeopardy the public works, undermined the administration of public justice, laughed to scorn the manifestations of public will, and, inoculated as it were with the virus of the gambler, prodigality wasted the public treasure. Such an assembly could not be expected to remember the national verdict recorded against the national bank, nor that this verdict was mainly pronounced from the ballot boxes of Pennsylvania. Such an assembly would naturally search for modes of keenly wounding our democracy, and they found the keenest in the enactment of the charter. Such an assembly, in the conscious absence of all merit, would sordidly strive to protect themselves from the effects of popular indignation, by cowering under the wing of some irresponsible and bountiful power, and they tendered their homage to the bank of the United States. The "calamity," gentlemen, is the more poignant, because we could and should have avoided it by concentrating against the common foe the assaults we made upon each other.

The legislature, though a minority one, was constitutional; though unwise and inveterate, bad in its views and worse in its motives, its enactments challenge our obedience, and as good citizens, we must submit to their operation until they are regularly annulled. Did the act of incorporation import nothing more than an ordinary law, a body competent to make, could repeal it, and the "appropriate remedy" might be found in the suffrages of a reforming people. At the worst, the evil would be short-lived. But it is essentially a contract, made by at least our nominal representatives with numerous persons, nine-tenths of whom are strangers to our soil, and each of whom contributed, in the payment of the bonus, some portion of his private property in execution of his share of its stipulations. Like every other contract, it has not less than two parties, and, being in operation, the consent of both is necessary to change or cancel it; the rights which it imparted are now absolutely vested; and the constitution of the United States prohibits any state from passing a law impairing the obligation of a contract. Such, in brief and substantially, is the argument in protection of the existing charter. We must understand and appreciate its full force in order to meet it advisedly and effectually.

I am aware that speculative writers deny the competency of one legislature to impair the power of its successor, or to grant away a franchise which may not be recalled at discretion: but however ingenious and plausible such a position may be made to appear on paper, it is repelled by all history and all practice. Every session of our own general assembly ever convened, has acted irreconcilably with such a doctrine. The case is one in which recourse to an extreme theory, ever so captivating, would be unwise.

I am also aware of the reasoning which appeals to the first paragraph of the tenth section. Article I, of the constitution of the United States, declaring, among other things, that "no state shall emit bills of credit," and which, on that prohibition disputes the competency of any state to empower a creature of its own, a bank, to do what it cannot perform itself, to issue notes. This is not a novel suggestion. Many years ago, the point was made and examined before the highest judicial tribunal of one of the most enlightened members of the confederacy, and it was then settled that the bills of credit denounced by the constitution, were those for the payment of which the faith of the state only is pledged: such as were profusely emitted during the life-struggle of the revolution—and that ordinary notes drawn on the credit of a particular fund, like the capital of a bank, are not within the constitutional meaning. This decision has, I believe, received very general, if not universal, acquiescence. All the legislatures of all the states, our own most democratic ones, have conformed to its principles.

I am aware, also, of the natural and prevailing impression that the next general assembly might be called upon to pronounce the incorporating act null and void, and to provide criminal sanctions against any attempt to exercise its faculties, on the ground of its having been fraudulently, surreptitiously and corruptly obtained. Such a movement, it is true, has a precedent on the legislative files, placed there and vehemently urged by the very man who sprung the charter from his pocket upon an unwarned and unwary community. The source of the precedent is enough to destroy all confidence in its value. It violates fixed maxims; making declamation equivalent to proof; forfeiting private property, and passing sentence of infamy without judicial trial. We must not debase our pursuit by any such hypocritical pageantry and summary injustice. But could we be reconciled to the attempt by reflecting on the provocation, what would be its sure result? An executive veto, unreversed by two-thirds in each branch; governor Ritner refusing his signature to his own condemnation; and I presume you are hardly charitable enough to anticipate that sudden and adequate reformation or repentance, in the senate, which would act in his defiance.

What then, you will say, is to be done? Is the "calamity" to be patiently endured during the allotted term of thirty years? Are the people of Pennsylvania conscious of a heavy wrong, so shackled as to be unable to throw it off? No, gentlemen, not so. I have adverted to a few of the projects afloat, to show you what I conceive to be their peculiar weakness: but there is one behind, one at this time provisionally in reach of your ballots, liable to no reproach or embarrassment, a frank, generous, and lofty proceeding, whose real dignity and impressiveness are commensurate with the magnitude of the occasion.

Several months before the plan to rekindle the spent volcano was started, our citizens had proclaimed their determination to resume the delegated powers of government, to reconstruct the social and political edifice, and, as it were, to begin afresh with all the lights and all the improvements of experience. Of this, the whole world had ample notice. The legislative act to provide for calling a convention, bore date the 14th of April, 1835, and was immediately promulgated. The seal of popular decision was definitively affixed to the movement by the elective franchise, on the second Tuesday of October, 1835. From that period, they who accepted, upon any terms, a grant of any portion of the powers of the people, social or political, and especially a grant of such enormous and prolonged powers as are transferred in the charter—powers, the loss of which enfeebles the people, and the use of which makes the corporation their competitor in sovereignty—accepted them in fraud of the contemplated convention, or subject to the reclamation of that body. The principle is one of acknowledged and universal justice. It is of daily application in determining controversies between individuals, and only acquires greater weight as it enters a higher sphere. The design to effect vast and vital changes by the convention was avowed and notorious; perhaps none floated more conspicuously upon the surge of public sentiment and sanction, than a restriction, if not a total denial, of the legislative competency to create monopolies; and yet! between the first great step to attain this object and its achievement, a phalanx rush into the capitol, in advance of the convention, snatch up a mass of privileges far surpassing all the pre-existing ones combined, and hope, by this stolen march, to defeat a primary and known purpose of the people! It may not, must not be. No law, human or divine, no maxim of expediency or right, forbids us to reclaim the plunder.

A convention is the provided machinery of peaceful revolution. It is the civilized substitute for intestine war; the American mode of carrying out the will of the majority; "the unalienable and indefeasible right to alter, reform, or abolish their government, in such manner as they may think proper." When ours shall assemble, it will possess, within the territory of Pennsylvania, every attribute of absolute sovereignty, except such as may have been yielded and are embodied in the constitution of the United States. What may it not do? It may reorganize our entire system of social existence, terminating and proscribing what is deemed injurious, and establishing what is preferred. It might restore the institution of slavery among us; it might make our penal code as bloody as that of Draco; it might withdraw the charters of the cities; it might supersede a standing judiciary by a scheme of occasional arbitration and umpirage; it might prohibit particular professions or trades; it might permanently suspend the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus, and take from us (as our late general assembly made an entering wedge to do) the trial by jury. These are fearful matters, of which intelligent and virtuous freemen can never be guilty; and I mention them merely as illustrations of the inherent and almost boundless power of a convention. The only effective limits to its authority are the broad and unchangeable rules of justice and of truth; and these, I have already shown, do not hedge around the charter.

There are other considerations which recommend the convention strongly to my mind, as the best source whence to derive a "remedy." It is as yet an unselected tribunal. The partisans of the bank have an equal opportunity with its opponents to test, in direct reference to that question, the sense of our community. Their new apportionment bill may have been manufactured in order to augment their chances; no matter—be it so. Do they claim the charter as a legitimate offspring of improved intelligence and of the general will—we invite them to the proof, and tender, even on their own terms of trial, the most unerring ordeal. They cannot shrink from it, without a virtual confession of rapine, and they should not be allowed to evade its judgment. There is, from the nature of our institutions, one last peaceable resort, one conclusive expedient, for the development and pronouncement of sovereign pleasure:—the election of delegates to the convention in November next is the appointed and impartial means for such an appeal:—let us unhesitatingly abide the issue, and let the giants of monopoly look to it.

Besides, in a measure of so much impression, and in which, as is known, so many absent strangers are interested, we owe it to the commonwealth and to the democracy of the union, to characterize it by such fairness, elevation and form as will satisfy the world. The edict of a convention can never be esteemed other than as the deliberate adjudication of the people of Pennsylvania. It will not be obnoxious to the imputation of haste, or party distemper. It will attest the convictions of a staid community, that the charter is a fraud upon their rights, was sought for and yielded against their known will, and cannot, without a degrading surrender of unalienable and indefeasible power, be permitted to endure. It will be entitled to "full faith and credit" wherever heard of or received. It will bear within itself, like the Declaration of Independence, incontestible evidence of its own justice and necessity. All men will acknowledge its impressive solemnity; republicans every where will exult in it and be proud.

The fiat, too, once issued, will be irreversible. Whatever jurisdiction might be claimed by the federal judiciary upon a law of repeal enacted by the general assembly, none could be pretended as to an organic institute of sovereignty. Indeed, the supreme court of the United States will be less apt hereafter than heretofore to construe away the independent capacities of the several states. It is a remarkable fact as to the tribunal, so little exposed to change, that president Jackson, as if destined not merely to inculcate but to secure state rights, has appointed, during his term of office, five of its seven incumbents. So large and so fresh an infusion of federative democracy exacts a revival of confidence throughout the nation.

It does not become me to intimate the details by which the convention may enforce the fulfillment of its will. They cannot fail to occur, when the decision shall be fixed,—and although the subject is one on which I could not be more concise, I fear that I have long since exhausted your welcome and your patience. Permit me, therefore, to conclude by a single additional suggestion.

The commonwealth should pay back every cent of the bonus it has received. To which end, our share of the surplus revenue of the United States, estimated at more than two millions of dollars, can be appropriated as soon as obtained:—and the rest, if any, be made payable to the agents or trustees of the extinguished corporation in convenient annual instalments, or in certificates of a state stock bearing a fair rate of interest. My wish would be to leave untarnished by doubt or suspicion the absolute integrity of the proceeding: to treat the money price of freedom and political power with the contempt which every virtuous citizen must feel for it: and to show that the people of Pennsylvania, undebauched by the love of gold, and inaccessible to the approaches of corruption, reject with equal decision the bank and its bribe.

I am, gentlemen, very respectfully, your fellow-democrat and friend,

G. M. DALLAS.

To Samuel Satterlee, S. Salisbury, Abraham Jones, Ab'm Wood, Abiram Pierce, Peleg Peck, Joel Allen, William Wilkinson, and T. M. Beach—Committee of correspondence.

LETTER FROM GENERAL JACKSON.

The following letter was addressed by general Jackson to certain citizens of Bedford county, Tenn. in reply to a letter from a committee of that county expressing their approbation of his administration, and inviting him to partake of a public dinner.

Near Nashville, August 20, 1836.

GENTLEMEN: I have the pleasure to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 16th inst. conveying the proceedings of a public meeting of my fellow citizens of Bedford county, and conveying to me the sentiments of respect which they entertain for me personally; and more particularly an expression of their entire, full and cordial approbation of the measures of my administration, and tendering to me a public dinner, to be given at Shelbyville, at such time during my visit to the state as may suit my convenience.

Nothing could be more agreeable to me than to meet my fellow citizens of Bedford, many of whom were my early friends and companions in arms, when we were called to defend our common country; but having visited my residence on private business, which must necessarily occupy my attention, and being under obligations of public duty to be at Washington early in October, I shall be deprived of the satisfaction of accepting their kind invitation.

Under present circumstances, when many of the opposition disclaim, and every opposition press in the state are loading me with unmerited abuse and calumny, I cannot refrain from the expression of the high gratification which I feel, on receiving from those who have so long known me, the unsolicited expression of their entire, full and cordial approbation of my public acts, and especially of my administration of the government. Such a mark of approbation as you have conveyed to me on this occasion, fills me with those sentiments of gratitude which language cannot fully express.

We live, fellow citizens, in evil times, when political apostasy becomes frequent; when public men abandon principle, their former party attachments and associations, and for selfish ends and aggrandizement, are attempting to undermine our republican system; and by throwing themselves into the arms of those entertaining opposite opinions, to destroy the great and fundamental principles upon which the government, formed by the people for their own prosperity and happiness, has been heretofore successfully administered.

The vigilance of the people, who possess the sovereign power, can alone crush this danger, by selecting public agents, who will carry out the principles which you have so fully approved in my administration.

The people alone control the means by which our liberties, our glorious union and republican form of government, can be preserved and perpetuated. The rising generation looks to you, as you have done to your fathers, to hand down to them unimpaired, the free institutions they established.

I beg you to convey to the citizens of Bedford this assurance of my deep regret, that it will not be in my power to visit them on this occasion; and to offer them an expression of my best wishes for their prosperity and happiness. I am very truly, your obedient servant, ANDREW JACKSON.
To Wm. Gilchrist and others, committee.

LETTER FROM GEN. HARRISON.

General Harrison passed through Staunton, Va. a few days since, and received an invitation from a committee of the citizens of Staunton and Augusta to attend a public dinner, to which he returned the following answer:

Staunton, Va. Sept. 3, 1836.

GENTLEMEN: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of this date.

In the prosecution of a journey to visit some near and dear relations who reside in the centre and eastern counties of this state, and being limited in the time which I have necessarily assigned for its completion, and my return to Ohio, I could not, without considerable inconvenience, and indeed giving up a part of my contemplated route, remain here long enough to give time to make the arrangements for the public dinner which you have tendered me on behalf of the citizens of Staunton and Augusta counties. But I must beg you to believe, gentlemen, that neither the personal inconvenience to which my remaining would subject me, nor even the disappointment which it might occasion in meeting with some of my relations whom I have not seen for many years, would prevent me from acceding to the wishes of the citizens whom you represent, and to whom I am already so deeply indebted, if it were not opposed by other considerations, arising from the position in which I at present stand before the American people, and which, from the view I have taken of the obligations it imposes, I am not permitted to disregard.

Whether the conclusions to which I have arrived in my consideration of this matter are correct or not, it is now out of my power to alter the course of conduct which they indicated, as I have upon several recent occasions, under their influence, declined invitations of a similar character.

Thus situated, my fellow citizens of Augusta county, will, I trust, see in my declining their invitation, no want of respect, no deficiency of gratitude for the present or the former distinguished honor which they conferred upon me.

To yourselves individually, gentlemen, I must ask leave to say that nothing could be more gratifying to my feelings than the terms you have been pleased to use in the address which you did me the honor to present. Your designation of the kind of reception which was to be given to me at the proposed dinner is particularly acceptable. "A Virginia welcome" has ever been associated in my mind as it every where is, with every thing that we admire in hospitality, or that delights us in social intercourse—all that the heart can enjoy at the festive board, which the judgment will not condemn. Accept, gentlemen, the assurances of my warmest regard.

WM. H. HARRISON.

To L. Waddell, W. H. Allen, N. C. Kinney, James Bell, D. W. Patterson, R. L. Cooke, A. H. H. Stuart, esqrs. committee on behalf of the citizens of Staunton and Augusta county.

LETTER FROM JUDGE WHITE.

In another page we have published Judge White's reply to the queries of Mr. Sherrod Williams of Kentucky. The following extract of a letter from Judge White, dated Knoxville, Tenn. Aug. 22, throws additional light upon the subject.

"So far as I am capable of understanding my own political opinions, they conform to the true Jeffersonian creed.

"I am for limiting executive patronage, so that no officer holding his office at the will of the president can be displaced because he will not conform to the president's wishes in elections.

"It ought to be made a high offence in office holders to use their official station with a view to influence the votes of electors.

"It is, and ought to be, considered a high political offence in a chief magistrate to use any of the powers conferred upon him by his station, for the purpose of influencing public opinion in the choice of his successor, or in the choice of members to either house of congress.

"I am for such a construction of the constitution as will prevent congress and the president from exercising any power not expressly granted, or which is not necessary and proper to carry into effect some one of those powers which are expressly granted.

"I am against imposing or continuing any tax, direct or indirect, for the purpose of bringing money into the treasury; but when there is an accumulation beyond the wants of the federal government, I am for distributing such surplus, ratably, among the states; and if the constitution does not now authorise such distribution, I am for so amending it that such power will be conferred.

"Now, sir, let the friends of the administration put down their creed, and if it differs from mine in any thing material, they, and not I, will be found on the federal side.

"On the principles I have ever avowed I have honestly endeavored to act; and if in any instance I have deviated, it was unintentional, and I am not aware of it. Those principles are the same on which the president came into power, and if we are not now together, the change has not been with me."

JUDGE WHITE'S OPINIONS.

Washington city, April 7, 1836.

SIR: I consider it the right of every citizen of the United States to ask and demand, and to be fully informed of the political principles and opinions of those who are candidates for the various offices in the gift of the people, and the imperious duty of the candidate to frankly and fully avow and disclose the opinions which he entertains.

I therefore, as a voter, a citizen and an individual, feeling a deep and abiding interest in the welfare and prosperity of our common country, and an ardent desire to see the perpetuity of our free and happy form of government, take the liberty of asking you to give me your opinion and views on the following subjects:

1st. Will you (if elected president of the United States) sign and approve a bill, distributing the surplus revenue of the United States, to each state according to the federal population of each, for internal improvements, education and to such other objects as the legislature of the several states may see fit to apply the same?

2d. Will you sign and approve a bill distributing the proceeds of the sales of the public lands to each state, according to the federal population of each, for the purposes above specified?

3d. Will you sign and approve bills making appropriations to improve navigable streams above ports of entry?

4th. Will you sign and approve, (if it becomes necessary to secure and save from depreciation the revenue and finances of the nation, and to afford a uniform sound currency to the people of the United States) a bill (with proper modifications and restrictions) chartering a bank of the United States?

5th. What is your opinion as to the constitutional power of the senate or house of representatives of the congress of the United States to expunge or obliterate from the journals the records and proceedings of a previous session.

A frank, plain and full answer, to the foregoing inquiries is respectfully solicited.

Your answer is desired as soon as possible. I intend this and your answer for publication.

I have the honor to be, your obedient and humble servant,
SHERROD WILLIAMS.
Hon. Hugh L. White.

Washington, July 2, 1836.

DEAR SIR: Soon after its date your letter of the 7th April last was received. I then believed that, during the session of congress, opportunities would be presented of expressing my opinions upon some, if not upon all the questions propounded; and that those thus expressed would be more satisfactory than any which could be given in a letter of reasonable length.

Let this be my apology for not giving you an earlier answer. Upon the first and second questions presented, I took occasion to express my sentiments, when the bill to distribute the proceeds of the sales of the public lands was under consideration in the senate; and my views in relation to the power of the two houses over their journals, were given, when considering a resolution presented by myself, to rescind the one adopted on the 28th March, 1834. Herewith you will receive copies of the substance of my remarks on those occasions.

Upon the powers of the federal government to charter a bank, my opinion has been so often expressed, publicly and privately, that I content myself with saying it remains unchanged. I do not believe congress has the power to charter one, to exercise its corporate powers within the states, and upon that opinion I must continue always to act, until I can be satisfied I am in error.

The only remaining question is, whether I would approve and sign a bill to improve a navigable river, or stream, above a port of entry.

I am one of those who deny that congress has the power to adopt and carry out a system of internal improvement, by constructing roads and canals within the states. In relation to navigable streams running through them, congress has the power to regulate trade among the states, and this, I think, confers the power to establish ports of entry upon those streams, wherever the course of trade may require, exactly to the same extent that it has the power to establish them on the sea coast, in virtue of the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations. Whenever the port of entry is established on a navigable stream, for the purpose of regulating trade, I cannot perceive any reason for a distinction in the power of congress over the stream, above or below the port of entry.

Although I admit the power of congress to establish ports of entry on our navigable streams for such purpose, yet I deny that, under the pretence of exercising that power, there is any right to commence, or carry on a system of constructing harbors or clearing out rivers at pleasure.

By its own legislation congress cannot enlarge its own powers. If, under the pretence of regulating trade among the states, we grant that congress may commence and carry on a system of clearing out streams, and of constructing harbors within the states, merely at discretion, it appears to me we sanction a fraud on the constitution; and that the exercise of such a power will soon operate so partially and unjustly, that the states cannot and will not long submit to its exercise.

Congress may do whatever the course of trade among the states requires, to regulate it fairly; but under a pretence of regulating it, is not at liberty to apply the funds of the nation to improvements in some states, to the destruction of the interests and the annihilation of the trade of others.

I am, most respectfully, your obedient servant,
HUGH L. WHITE.

The hon. Sherrod Williams.

MR. TYLER AND SLAVERY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Gloucester, Sept. 4, 1836.

To the editors of the Whig.

GENTLEMEN: An absence from home for several days past, which did not terminate until to-day, has prevented an earlier compliance with the request addressed to me in the Whig of last Friday week. The paper which you call for is now forwarded. It was prepared in anticipation of a reference of the petitions and memorials praying the abolition of slavery within the District of Columbia to the committee on the District, of which I had the honor to be the chairman; and from a belief on my part, that if such reference took place, the country would expect a prompt and decisive action on the part of the committee. No such action, however, took place, and I filed away the intended report among my other papers on leaving Washington. I am pleased that I did so, since it will make known to the country my opinions on a subject more deeply interesting to the union, than any other ever agitated in my day. The resolutions which I offered to the senate are strictly deducible from the reasoning of the report. The sacredness of private property, from the arbitrary powers of the government is therein maintained, and the unconstitutionality of any proceeding violating that sanctity, I think, demonstrated.

I confess that I have not been a little surprised at the commentary made on my first resolution by Mr. Claiborne of Mississippi and Mr. Pinckney of South Carolina. For those gentlemen, I have very high respect, both for their moral and intellectual worth. How they could have reconciled it to any principle of sound construction, to have declared that I had asserted the doctrine by and through that resolution, that congress, on an application of the people of the District, had a right to abolish slavery within the District, is to my mind passing strange. The resolution is as applicable to one sort of property as another, and the control over all property is by it, in substance, declared to be in the owners exclusively not in the people—a majority of whom may neither own houses, lands or slaves—but in the owners, and none but the owners. The phraseology of the resolution was adopted on full consideration, and after mature deliberation—and if it be weak and puerile, as has been declared, to say that no man or set of men, and that no government on earth, has a right to touch my property without my consent, I am ready, nevertheless, to seek shelter behind it for me and mine, as a bulwark of strength sufficient to protect my property from lawless invasion.

I omit all notice of the fact that the second and third resolutions have been passed over by my commentators without notice. The editor of the Enquirer must be ignorant of their existence. I send you the page of the journal which contains them, and request you to publish them in your paper.

I have the honor to be, gentlemen, your most obedient servant,
JOHN TYLER.

The committee for the District of Columbia, to which were referred certain petitions and memorials praying the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

That, in the examination of the highly interesting and momentous question presented by the petitioners, the committee have neither deemed it necessary or becoming to impugn their motives; on the contrary, they have felt every disposition to concede to them intentions humane and philanthropic, however erroneous and mistaken. It often happens that altars erected to benevolence become places of bloody sacrifice, and that, from the short-sightedness of man, the results of his policy unfold themselves as if in mockery of his vanity and pride. History is replete with evidence of the truth of this remark. It may be said with much force that man lives but to err. His judgment, imperfect in itself, is constantly subject to be warped by the passions, and his passions, most frequently the effect of involuntary impulses, serve to veil the future from his vision, and to lead him into dangers of which he only becomes conscious when escape from them is no longer possible. Take one example, for the sake of illustration: Our duty to our Creator is the highest of all; in fact, it encircles all other duties; nothing can, therefore, be more important to the human family than the inculcation of religious sentiments. Under the persuasion of this, the ardent and enthusiastic have, in all ages, resorted to expedients to enforce religious observances. In so holy a cause, and for an end so wise and benevolent, all and every means have been regarded as justifiable and becoming. Hence the faggot has been lighted, and the fires of persecution have blazed, and the altars erected to religion have streamed with blood, and her habitations have been filled with sorrow and lamentation. If we would profit by the lessons of the past, we should be saved from numberless evils; the present generation would be secured in its means of happiness against those fatal errors which have overthrown the hopes and expectations of the generations which have gone before it. But such, unhappily, is not the fact. The past has, for the most part, existed in vain, and we derive profit neither from the wisdom nor folly of those who have gone before us; nor does contentment seem to be a portion of our nature; ever restless, speculative and uneasy, we realize but too often the fable of the dog and the shadow. For this, our first great progenitor was expelled from paradise, and for this the memorialists, in the opinion of the committee, would jeopard the peace, safety and happiness of the people of the United States, and endanger their political union—a union heretofore so full of blessings, and which holds up to the contemplation of the human race a future replete alone with glory.

So far as the question of slavery exists in the several states, the committee abstain from any remark. It is a question to be decided by each severally and for itself. Over it congress has no control. The plain recognitions of the fundamental law on which the union rests should place it forever at repose. To discuss it in congress, or to agitate it in the states where it does not exist, produces no good, can be followed up by no act, and serves no other purpose than to irritate the public mind. Such discussions can only arise from losing sight of the fact that the union rests solely on compact between equals, and that powers not ceded by all for the advantage of all remain in full and undisputed right and sovereignty to each, severally and respectively. It would as well comport with good sense for the people of any one of those states to set themselves deliberately to work to discuss the propriety of any one of the police laws of England, France, or other foreign country, and set about the task of accomplishing its change, as for them to undertake the task of reform in regard to one of their neighbors of the American union. This disposition to interfere with the concerns of others disturbs the peace of neighborhoods in the walks of private life, and it would be strange if its fruits were less bitter when applicable to separate and distinct communities. The petitioners confine the prayer of their memorials to the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia upon a supposed difference existing between the District and the several states; and the committee will now proceed, with as much brevity as possible, to an investigation of this branch of the subject.

That portion of territory constituting the present District of Columbia was, at the time of the adoption of the constitution of the United States, part and parcel of the states of Maryland and Virginia. Their citizens were represented in the convention which framed, and the conventions of those two states which adopted that constitution. They adopted it in common with their fellow citizens. Its provisions were, and still continue to be, as applicable to them as to any other portion of the union. To them, in common with all others, are guaranteed those great rights of person and of property, without which liberty cannot exist. The subsequent cession to the general government by the states of Maryland and Virginia was made in express compliance with authority vested in congress by that constitution. No pre-existing private right was thereby abrogated. No great security of civil liberty was either weakened or annulled. Among other restraints imposed on government is that which guarantees to the owner the unmolested enjoyment of private property. All foregone history had established the fact that where government was left free to deal with the property of individuals at its unlimited will and pleasure, there was no safety, and of course no freedom. No matter what form the government might assume, whether monarchical, aristocratic or democratic, if private property was liable to be seized upon under any pretext whatever, at the will and pleasure of the rulers, the shadow of liberty would scarcely remain. Our forefathers manifested their wisdom in nothing more conspicuously than in tying up the hands of the government in this particular. They warred against the spirit of confiscation, whose ill effects had been so often exhibited in the history of the world. They saw labelled on the banner of tyranny, "arbitrary assessments and arbitrary invasions of the rights of private property;" and they restrained the hands of the government which they reared, by declaring that "private property should not be taken for public use, without fair remuneration." They define the terms they had employed, by also declaring that the government was one of limited powers, which powers arose under specific grants, and were given for specified ends. To test, therefore, whether government rightfully or wrongfully lays its hands on the property of individuals, the question evermore recurs, to what defined end is it proposed to apply it? And if it be not found necessary for the accomplishment of any granted power, the action of government can justly be regarded in no other light than as tyrannical and unauthorised. Let it be remarked that this provision of the constitution is over all; equally binding on the states as on congress; as well on congress when acting for the whole union, as when acting as the local legislature for the District of Columbia. Slavery existed within the territorial limits of the District before the cession, and was recognized and guaranteed by the constitution. Under what pretence, then, can property vested in a slave be dispossessed, any more than in any other subject? If one held to servitude in the District shall flee to any state, the constitution requires a restitution to the owner. Thus is there thrown around this subject of property a positive and efficient security. How, then, can it be divested by the mere action of the government, for no object defined by the constitution? Let those who invoke the action of congress point out the authority for its action. Let them read over the grants of power contained in the constitution, and point to that one in particular with which this action is connected. Until that be done, congress can rightfully take no step operating, either individually or universally, on the citizens of the District. It is vain that philanthropy, either well founded or mistaken, shall call on congress to exert a power which is not only denied by fair implication, but expressly and plainly by a restraining cause. The reply must evermore be, that private property shall not be taken except for public use, and that the public use must of necessity arise out of the execution of some one of the objects contemplated by the constitution.

If the force of this argument be attempted to be weakened by running a distinction between the congress as the representative of states, and the congress as a local legislature, such effort will avail nothing. If it acts in the first capacity, the sphere of its action is limited and prescribed. What it is authorised to do is defined. It cannot exceed the powers granted. As a local legislature, even under the most enlarged construction of its powers, it must act exclusively for the District; and it can only lay its hands upon private property belonging to any citizen within the District for a public use within its limits. As, for example, if it be deemed necessary to open a road through any man's land, so much of the land as is essential may be condemned and paid for; but to this plain and legitimate authority, the pretext for assuming power to cancel title-papers, and to divest each and every citizen of his possessions, whether of reality or personality, would be to outrage the constitution and prostrate public liberty.

Property in slaves is recognized by the constitution: its tenure is as sacred as that of any other kind of property, and the owner can no more be divested of it by governmental action, than he can of his house, his lands or any other article of property acquired in pursuance of law, and held under the most sacred guaranties. The committee again protests, in the most solemn manner, against the violation of private right. They cannot regard it as other than subversive of all the essentials of free government. The principle once admitted, and its application becomes universal: the tenure of property is insecure, resting on no fixed law, but depending entirely on the will of the rulers. The stimulus to industry and enterprise is lost—it cannot exist without absolute security: the want of that security introduces apathy in individuals, and ultimates in the overthrow of civilization itself. These are the fatal consequences of this tyrannical and arbitrary doctrine. The committee do not deem it necessary to go into the wide field of abstract reasoning on the subject of slavery; they take facts and principles as they exist. Slavery existed at the formation of the constitution; it is recognized by the constitution, has grown up from the country, and property in slaves is vested in individuals according to law. Congress, as the local legislature of the District, may pass laws authorising individuals to manumit their slaves. This it has done; the rest must be left to the voluntary action of individuals; what the owner may choose to do, they have power and authority to do, without the further intervention of government.

But the owners of this species of property in this District have called for no enactment to enable them to emancipate their slaves; they present no petition making complaint of imperfections in existing laws. And what would be the condition of any people, if strangers to their habits and customs, ignorant alike of their wants and wishes, should exert the power of legislation over them? Our forefathers believed that the declaration that the British parliament had the right to bind the colonies by laws enacted at St. Stephen's chapel, was the enunciation of a despotic principle, to which it was impossible for them to submit. Their determination proves their wisdom, and the success which followed that determination should serve as a lesson of experience to succeeding generations. Shall the local legislature of the District, acting upon the suggestions of others who most probably have never visited the District, and know nothing of its localities or wants, undertake to reverse the rules of property, dissolve the bonds of society, and upset the existing order of things? To do so, would be to transform the local legislature into something else the most unlike; it would overturn the principles and blessings of representative government, and dissolve all connexion between the representative and constituted body; and the effort to set free one portion of the inhabitants of the District would virtually have the effect of enslaving the whole.

The legislation now invoked by the petitioners is not only objectionable on the grounds already stated, but on others of the greatest weight and force. The seat of the federal government was ceded by the states of Maryland and Virginia with an eye to their own, as well as to the public advantage. Their interests are intimately associated with those of the District, from which they are separated by imaginary lines. The necessary effect of the measure now sought for would be to constitute on each side of the Potomac river a sanctuary for runaway slaves from those two states. Reclamations on the part of the owners, and breaches of the peace, might be looked for as of daily occurrence. A swarm of indolent and unemployed blacks would be thrown upon the suburbs of Alexandria, Georgetown, and Washington, and the site of the general government would be the seat of want and distress, and the favorite abode of crime and disorder. Other deplorable consequences would inevitably arise. The peace of the slaveholding states has been greatly disquieted by the action of the most forward of the abolitionists residing at a distance from their borders. What would be their condition, and more especially the condition of Maryland and Virginia, if this District should become the centre of their operations, may be readily imagined. Nor would there be any security from insult, even to the representatives from the slaveholding states, from the wild spirit of fanaticism and insubordination which might be expected to exist. The committee abstain from pressing these views further; they do but barely advert to them, with a feeling of confidence that the representatives of a great and enlightened people will never sanction measures, the possible consequences of which may be so replete with injury to any portion of the people.

But Maryland and Virginia have a still stronger appeal to make. They appeal to the good faith of their sister states, plighted to them by circumstances attendant on the cession, as emphatically as if stipulated after the most solemn form. They had every reason to conclude that their safety was complete when they granted the territory comprised within the District. The constitution had recognized the absolute right of property in the persons therein alluded to—representation and taxation had been adjusted in reference to them—a solemn guaranty was given that, upon their fleeing from service, they should be restored to that service. If any thing additional could have been required, discussions, which had arisen in congress as early as 1790, in which the disclaimer on the part of the representatives of the non-slaveholding states of all right to interfere with the subject of that species of property, were calculated to lull into perfect repose all suspicion of any ultimate design so to interfere. Many states—it may be more properly said that every state, was anxious to secure to itself the advantages expected to flow from the establishment of the seat of government on a part of its territory. Propositions were therefore made to congress from every quarter. Virginia repeatedly proposed to make a cession of Williamsburg, Maryland of Annapolis, New York of the city of New York, Pennsylvania of Philadelphia; while similar propositions were made by New Jersey and other states. South Carolina would readily have conceded Charleston, and Massachusetts Boston. But would any one undertake to say that either of those states would for a moment have indulged the idea of such a cession, if it could have supposed that congress, upon the contingency of the ascendancy of the slaveholding or non-slaveholding states in the public councils, would have felt itself authorised to interfere with the caste and character of its population? Would Virginia and Maryland now expose themselves to this danger, if the cession was now to be made? Would South Carolina yield Charleston, or any other southern state invite the union to fix the seat of government within its territory? Would either of them introduce a leprosy into their households, or incur the hazards which, by a mistaken philanthropy, are now sought to be introduced through legislation here? This District was at the time of its cession the centre of the colored population of the United States; and if the men of this day see the dangers under the aspect taken of them by the committee, it is not to be doubted that our wiser forefathers also perceived them, and considered them as guarded against and silenced. Let the condition of things be reversed. Suppose that the slaveholding states held the balance of power in their hands, and that Philadelphia, New York, or Boston, had been ceded, as has been this District, and that congress should seek to change the order of things in such city, by introducing slavery therein, what would the petitioners, and those who may think with them, say and do in such a contingency? The states accepted the cession of the District as it was, with its population as it was. No repugnance to its acceptance was manifested because of the caste and character of its population. Our illustrious forefathers saw none of these obstacles to the peace and harmony of the union which have been developed in these latter times. The southern man and southern states were not taunted and insulted by any portion of their brethren, because of the peculiarity in their situation. In that great struggle which ultimated in the establishment of independence, those states and the men of those states were associated in glory with their sister states and their illustrious sons. A common property was claimed in those distinguished benefactors of the human race, which a kind providence had permitted to exist in each and all of the states for the good of mankind. Their example ought to be precious in the eyes of their countrymen. It was an example of brotherly love, of patriotic devotion. They have left to us a rich inheritance in this union, and the principles of forbearance and concession which gave rise to it: let us not, like prodigals, cast it away, and thus throw upon their memories the reproach of having attempted a system of government which was inevitably to perish under the influence of unruly passions, or a mawkish sensibility. The circumstance which has arisen more from difference in climate than any thing else, that some of the states are slaveholding and others not, should have no effect. It existed during the war of the revolution, and yet union took place. It existed at the formation of the constitution, and yet the constitution was ratified. It existed during the late war with Great Britain, and yet the northern and the southern man only rivalled each other in the race of glory. It has existed during the whole period of our national existence, and yet these states have grown up with a growth unprecedented in the history of the human race, and it may exist forever, and the peace, the happiness, the prosperity of the country will not be interrupted or retarded. The northern man has his virtues, and the southern man has his. So both also have their faults. If we look exclusively at the last, we may find enough to condemn; if to the first, abundant cause of admiration. We are all inhabitants of the same hemisphere, and the union of these states is equally precious to all. The readiest and surest way to preserve that union is, by observing the most scrupulous regard to the faith plighted by the states to each other: a breach of faith is followed by a loss of confidence. The loss of confidence gives rise to suspicion and distrust—and these last inevitably lead to disruption and civil war.

Your committee therefore conclude that congress has no power to grant the prayer of the petitioners: 1st, because of constitutional restraints and prohibitions; and, 2dly, because even in their absence it is restrained by the pledged and plighted faith of the country; and they submit the following resolutions: The following motions, submitted by Mr. Tyler,* were considered:

Resolved, That to alter, change, or abolish the rights of property in the District of Columbia, without the consent of the owners, would be unjust and despotic, and in violation of the constitution of the United States.

Resolved, further, That, even with such consent, to interfere with the subject of slavery not only without, but against the consent of the people of Maryland and Virginia, would be in flagrant violation of the public faith, an abuse of the trust conferred on congress by the cession, and hazardous to the peace and security of those two states.

Resolved, further, That such proceeding would sap the foundation of our conventional system, which is based on the condition of things as they existed at the time of the adoption of the constitution, and which cannot be altered in so material a point without disturbing the principle of compromise out of which the government originated.

KNOXVILLE CONVENTION.

The following highly interesting statements were presented to the Knoxville convention by the delegates from South Carolina and Georgia. They are full of useful information.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Statement from the delegation of the state of South Carolina, to the Knoxville convention.

CHARLESTON. The delegation from the state of South Carolina beg leave to submit to the Knoxville convention, certain geographical and statistical information, illustrating the advantages to result from establishing the main route of the proposed rail road through the centre of that state.

In 1830, the population of the state of South Carolina was 501,458. The staple productions of the entire country consist of cotton and rice. Prior to the last war, the people of the upper districts made corn and other grain, and raised stock sufficient for their own use, and their principal product for market was tobacco; but for the last twenty years the improvement in the price of cotton, greater skill in the management of the plant and its increased productiveness, have gradually diverted the attention of the agriculturists of that region—Every thing has given place to the culture of this valuable staple, and instead of being competitors with the people of the west in affording to the low country of the state a portion of their supplies, they are yearly more dependent on their neighbors beyond the mountains for many of the necessities of life. It is not proposed to assume at what point of the state the road shall enter, or through what districts it will probably pass. With the exception, perhaps, of Spartanburgh and Greenville, all the upper districts of the state are essentially cotton growing districts. Pendleton, Abbeville, Edgefield and Barnwell, on the Savannah river side of the state—Laurens, Newberry, Fairfield, Union, Chester, York and Lancaster, all afford very large and increasing supplies of cotton for the several markets of Camden, Columbia, Hamburg, Augusta and Charleston. It is not practicable to speak with any accuracy of the crops of each district, but some idea may be formed of the proportions of the upper districts, from the fact that during the last year the trade with Camden amounted to 40,000 bales of cotton, with Cheraw to 30,000, Columbia to 70,000, and with Hamburg to 35,000 bales. During the same period in Columbia alone the purchases of bacon amounted to 3,500,000 lbs. of bagging 500,000 yards, and of bale rope 300,000 lbs.

Since the first introduction of cotton, the entire middle country of South Carolina has been devoted to the successful cultivation of that staple. In the lower section of the state, and on the seaboard, rice and sea island cotton are added to its invaluable resources. The exports of Charleston in short staple cotton, for the present year, amount to

280,000 bales, valued at ($55)	$11,500,000
27,000 bales sea island, at $85	2,300,000
130,000 barrels of rice, at $16	2,080,000

Exports $15,880,000
The amount of merchandise sold annually in Charleston alone, is about $15,000,000.

In the meantime the exclusive devotion of the planter to this great staple, renders the country a most valuable, regular and extensive market for the principal products of the west. Several years since, it was estimated from sufficient data, that the drovers of horses and hogs alone, carried annually from the state of South Carolina $2,000,000 in cash.—The demand for bagging in Charleston is 1,500,000 yards annually, and for bale rope in proportion. At least 50,000 barrels of flour, and from 350 to 400,000 bushels of corn are annually imported. In bacon, lard and pork the consumption is very great, and annually increasing. The supply is usually received from the west, by the way of New Orleans, a route so long, circuitous and attended with so many disadvantages and dangers, that the profit to the producer, and the value to the consumer, are incalculably impaired.

The delegation from South Carolina are aware that a preference has usually been accorded to the harbor of Charleston over every other southern port; but it is believed that all the advantages which this city presents as a depot for the commerce of the south and west, as a market for their produce, and as the great emporium to which they would resort for the purchase of their supplies, have never yet been fully appreciated.

The population of the city of Charleston, not including the suburbs, in the year 1830, was 35,000. The harbor is so located, (as will more satisfactorily appear from a lithographic map accompanying this statement) as to render it decidedly the most eligible port of entry and exportation, from the Delaware to the Mississippi river. From its proximity to the Atlantic, vessels may enter and depart at all seasons, with perfect facility. In one hour from leaving the wharf, a ship carrying 2,500 bales of cotton, is on the broad ocean. No port to the south of Charleston is subject to so few difficulties in the navigation. The passage between the Bahama banks and the Florida shore, through the Gulf of Mexico, is known to be of the most hazardous character. It is supposed by many, that the vessels annually wrecked in this passage, would more than pay the interest on the entire cost of a rail road from Charleston to the waters of the Ohio. Such are its advantages, that vessels can make three voyages to and from Charleston and Europe, in the same period of time consumed in making two voyages to and from the Gulf of Mexico and Europe. The port of Charleston possesses peculiar advantages for carrying on successfully, the trade of the West Indies, and especially with the Island of Cuba, whence it is believed the southern and south western states obtain their principal supplies of coffee, and large quantities of sugar, which are exchanged principally for rice and lumber. When the communication with the west shall be rendered more easy and expeditious, by means of the great work now in contemplation, a large accession of the products of that country, will be added to the exports of the West India islands; the trade to those islands will be increased to an illimitable extent, and their produce, sugar and coffee, received on the most favorable terms; and as there is usually a large supply of these articles in the market, purchases can be made on most advantageous terms to the buyer.

It is confidently believed that merchandise may be imported into Charleston from Europe, on more favorable terms than into New York. Freight is lower from England to Charleston, than to New York, and generally, exchange is lower. During a portion of the year, insurance is also lower. Insurance from Europe to the ports of New Orleans and Mobile, is from 50 to 100 per cent. higher than insurance to the port of Charleston; and freight is, on an average, 50 per cent. higher from those ports to Europe, than from Charleston. Dry goods from the north, (of which the supply is very extensive), arriving at the west by the way of New Orleans and the Mississippi river, are encumbered with heavy extra freight and insurance from the north to N. Orleans, and all the insurance between New Orleans and the place of final destination. All these would be saved to the merchant, and, ultimately to the consumer, by the rail road carriage from Charleston to the west, even if the freight by river from one place, and by rail road from the other, was equal, exclusive of the saving in time between a passage from New York to the west, through New Orleans, of probably six weeks or two months, and a passage from New York through Charleston by rail road of eight or twelve days—the passage from New York to New Orleans being on an average, 20 to 25 days, and from New York to Charleston, 5 to 7 days. When to all this is added, that commissions and other charges on receiving and forwarding, are so much more moderate than in those south western ports, the advantages to the west, of an importation by this route, will be fully estimated by all those who have any practicable acquaintance with the course of trade. At the last session of the legislature, a company was incorporated, for establishing a line of packets direct between Charleston and Liverpool. Steamboats are now running between Charleston and New York, and between Charleston and Norfolk and Baltimore, leaving each port twice a week; and the boats for a weekly line between Charleston and Philadelphia, are now building, so that a steamboat for the north will leave Charleston three times a week. Steamboats from Charleston to the interior of the state, and to Savannah and Augusta, are constantly running, and can be increased to any extent which the wants of the community may require.

* Submitted the 21st January, 1836.

Produce commands usually a higher price in Charleston than in any city to the south of it, or, indeed, it is believed, than in any city on the continent. Goods and merchandise, for the consumption of the country, can be purchased on terms, and at rates generally as favorable as elsewhere; and when a direct importing trade is established, it cannot be doubted that these advantages will be improved. In no place are credits given on a more liberal scale than in Charleston; and with a banking capital of upwards of $8,000,000, the moneyed facilities of that city are abundantly adequate to its present or any increased amount of trade that can be brought to it.

As a port of shipping, it has decided advantages over every other port to the south of it. The disbursements are much less—the facilities of repairing much greater—the accommodations and moorings for vessels are much more convenient and accessible; the difficulty of procuring seamen, comparatively with other southern ports, altogether trifling—and to all these advantages should be super-added the superior health of the crews of vessels in the port of Charleston over all other southern ports.

This paper cannot, perhaps, be better concluded than by a statement as to the general health of the city. If the bills of mortality can be received as data for its character in this respect, the city of Charleston ranks pre-eminently high. Of the entire population only one in 45 or less than 2 1-4 per cent. die annually, which proves that Charleston is among the healthiest cities in the world. Of the whole deaths 12 1-2 per cent. are by consumption, a disease not belonging to our climate, and which is ordinarily the fatal malady of persons from other climates, who seek, too late, a refuge in the more genial atmosphere of the south. The next largest per centage of the whole number of deaths annually, (upwards of 11 per cent.) is from old age raging from 70 to 120 years. Formerly a visit to Charleston through the low country of South Carolina, at particular seasons of the year was always attended with danger. It is not within the knowledge of the delegation, that since the completion of the rail road between Charleston and Hamburg, a single case of illness has occurred from visiting Charleston by that route at any season of the year, although the travelling is daily and without interruption.

The delegation forbear to trespass on the attention of the convention, by a reference to the mineral productions of the state of South Carolina. But a table, accompanying this statement, will shew that the resource of the country have been very insufficiently estimated, when the mineral capabilities of the state have been overlooked. They are aware that in all documents of this character correctness is of incalculably more value than minuteness. The delegation are themselves deceived if any fact has been misstated, any advantage unduly estimated, or any inducement for adhering to the rail road indicated by the existing charter, too strongly presented.

B. F. DUNCAN,
CHAS. EDMONDSTON,
ALEX'R BLACK,
JOEL R. POINSETT,
SAM'L P. RIPLEY,
F. H. ELMORE,
WM. K. CLOWNEY,
THOS. F. JONES,
WHITFIELD BROOKS,
WILSON NESBIT,

Committee of the S. Carolina delegation.

GEORGIA.

Report upon the commercial advantages presented by Georgia to the west, in connection with a contemplated rail road communication.

The undersigned committee, beg leave to submit the following report:

The advantages which a rail road communication with Georgia presents to the inhabitants of the west, in a commercial point of view, consists in the extent of country opened to the trade, producing rice and cotton and consuming articles, the produce and manufacture of the north western states; and in forming direct and convenient communications with all the great commercial cities of the south, through which the necessary supplies of the west may be most conveniently obtained and cheaply transported to the west.

A rail road entering Georgia at any point on her northern boundary, between South Carolina and Alabama, will communicate by the Georgia rail road with Athens and Augusta, and from Augusta, by the rail road with Charleston, and by the steamboats with Savannah.

From a point above Athens, a direct communication may be had with Forsyth, there meeting the rail road to Macon, and from one of these places, a rail road communication will soon be opened to Columbus on the Chattahoochee, from whence steamboats now run through Florida to the Gulf of Mexico.

A glance on the map, at the lines here designated, will shew, that the cities and country thus opened to the trade of the west—will include, the city of Charleston, and all the rice growing country of South Carolina—the city of Savannah and every important point in the state of Georgia, touching at Columbus the boundary of South Alabama, and passing through Florida.

To shew the importance of these communications more in detail—we state—

The gross receipts of the Georgia rail road, now being constructed, for transportation, are estimated upon specific data to be 400,000 dollars per annum. This amount is estimated upon the assumption that the road will terminate at Athens.

Augusta, the largest interior commercial city of the south, is the next point. The present population of Augusta is estimated at between seven and eight thousand inhabitants; and immediately adjoining, connected by two bridges, is the important town of Hamburg, in South Carolina. Of the crop of cotton made in 1835, the receipts at Augusta, will be 140,000 bales, and at Hamburg 35,000, making an aggregate of 175,000 bales, which, at 50 dollars per bale, makes an amount of 8,750,000 dollars. The sale of merchandise may be safely estimated to exceed seven millions of dollars, thus making an aggregate commercial business of the year exceeding fifteen millions of dollars.

Bagging, flour and bacon are leading articles of importation for interior consumption.

The commercial business of Augusta is carried on by the rail road with Charleston, and by steamboats with Savannah—through which cities all her imports and exports are made. The business on the Savannah river alone, employs 20 steamboats and about 50 tow boats. The freight on the imports of Augusta, from Savannah, though carried at very low rates, exceeds 200,000 dollars per annum.

Diverging from the Georgia rail road line, at a point above Athens, to the south the communication is opened by Forsyth with Macon, and all south western Georgia.

The receipts of cotton at Macon the past season, amounted to 80,000 bales, of the average weight of 350 pounds, which at the market value, produced over four millions of dollars. The receipts at other places, above Darien, amounted to 20,000 bales, and in value to one million of dollars. The sales of merchandise at Macon for the year may be estimated at 3,500,000 dollars, and at the other places on the rivers at 7 to 800,000 dollars, making an aggregate commercial business for the year of over nine millions of dollars.

The transportation of cotton and merchandise, on the Oconee and Ockmulgee rivers, employs at present, eight steamboats and fifty tow boats and pole boats.

From Macon to Savannah, the central rail road of Georgia is about being constructed.

From Macon to Columbus, on the Chattahoochee river, the present communication is by two daily lines of post coaches, but will without doubt require a rail road. Macon is unquestionably the second, and Columbus the third city, in commercial importance, in the interior of the southern states. Though of recent origin, they have already outstripped their elder competitors, and are growing with a rapidity, only equalled by the most flourishing towns of the north and west.

The quantity of cotton made in Georgia the last season and exported by the way of Columbus and the Chattahoochee and Flint rivers to Appalachicola, exceeded forty thousand bales, and in value over two millions of dollars—employing two steamboats on the Flint, and twelve steamboats on the Chattahoochee river.

In this section of country a large portion of the best cotton lands, are not yet brought into cultivation—and the production is yearly increasing in a great ratio.

We have stated that a rail road entering the northern boundary of Georgia at any point, between South Carolina and Alabama, would communicate by the Georgia rail road, through Athens, to Augusta, and from that point would command the trade, of both Charleston and Savannah, thus giving a choice of the two most important markets of the southern Atlantic coast.

The city of Savannah in 1830 contained a population of 7,900 inhabitants. By information derived from the local authorities, the population is now stated at 11,000.

The exports of cotton from Savannah of the crop made in 1835, will be about 250,000 bales, which at the average value of 55 dollars per bale, will amount to 13,750,000 dollars. The export of rice of the crop of 1835—will be about 24,000 casks, and will amount in value to 450,000 dollars.

The exports of lumber, and all other articles, may amount to 750,000 dollars—making an aggregate of nearly fifteen millions dollars in value, exported of the produce of the country, from Savannah the present year.

The imports into Savannah from all quarters the present year, will exceed twelve millions of dollars—part of which is sold in Savannah, and part forwarded in the original packages to Augusta, Macon and other places in the interior.

The intercourse between Savannah and New York alone, employs fifteen regular packets, many of them large ships, besides transient vessels. But the largest business from Savannah is direct with Liverpool. In 8 1-2 months—to wit: from Oct. 1st, 1835, to June 16th, 1836, there were shipped from Savannah direct for Liverpool, 125,807 bales of cotton, which at the value of 55 dollars per bale, amounted to 6,919,385 dollars.

From Savannah, steamboats run to Augusta—to Charleston—to Darien—to Macon—to the St. Johns river in East Florida, and to all the intermediate places on the coast, and the rivers.

By a statement published in the Savannah Georgian on the 17th of June, 1836, it appears that the merchants of Savannah were then owners in thirty-seven ships and brigs, besides smaller vessels and steamboats—that of these, eighteen were ships of the largest class, averaging over 500 tons each.

From Savannah the central rail road will lead directly into the heart of Georgia, and arrangements are being made to connect therewith lines of steam packets running to Norfolk and New York.

Having pointed out the important commercial points, placed in direct communication with the west, by a rail road coming from thence, and entering the northern boundary of Georgia, we now state, the entire country embraced in this sketch, is almost exclusively a country producing cotton and rice, and consuming largely the products, manufactures and stock of the west.

The receipts of cotton at Savannah,	are stated at	250,000 bales.
Exported from Darien to places other than Savannah,		10,000 “
Exported by the way of Appalachicola,		40,000 “

Making a total of	300,000 bales.
-------------------	----------------

To pack this quantity of cotton, 1,500,000 yards of bagging are required, all of which is now imported from Great Britain, but which may be supplied from the west.

In addition to this, a large section of the finest cotton lands in Georgia, lying between the Flint and Chattahoochee rivers, are but partially settled, and will, in three or four years, increase the growth of cotton in Georgia to at least 400,000 bales—making a still further demand upon the west, for its produce, manufactures and stock.

We have thus, in the short time allowed us, sketched a very brief and imperfect outline of some of the commercial advantages which Georgia presents to her friends in the west, and north western states, and which may be commanded by a rail road, entering any point of her northern boundary, between South Carolina and Alabama.

WILLIAM DEARING,
JAMES R. BUTTS,
ROBERT CAMPBELL,
S. B. PARKMAN,
T. G. CASEY.

FOREIGN CHRONICLE.

Funeral of Mr. Rothschild. The body has been conveyed from Germany to his residence at New Court, St. Swithin's lane, London. Many of his private friends connected with him in business, have put on mourning out of respect to him. The remains are deposited in a leaden coffin, encased in one of oak, elegantly carved and moulded with silver handles, and a breast plate carved in oak representing the arms and crest of the family.

Mr. Aaron Hendrick is appointed by the synagogue to conduct the ceremonies, which are to be as plain as possible. There will be 24 mourning coaches—the four sons the chief mourners. The rev. Dr. Solomon Herschell, chief rabbi of the synagogue, and his assistants, and also readers from the other synagogues will be in the procession. There are to be no feathers on the coaches nor hat bands. The children of the different charitable associations of which he was patron, will be present. The remains are to be deposited in a grave, bricked as a vault, in the Jewish burial place. The procession is to pass down Piccadilly.

In the house of lords on the 9th, the custom duties bill, and the assessed tax bill, were read a second time. The report on the Irish valuation, was agreed to.

In the commons, on the same day, notice was given by Mr. Robinson, that early next session he should submit a motion for the repeal of the duty on marine insurances.

Mr. D. W. Harvey inquired if any measures had been taken by government to compel the repayment of the money advanced to the Irish clergy in 1835, or any part of it. Lord John Russell said that the chancellor of the exchequer was about to bring in a bill on the subject.

Six hundred muskets had been seized by the several commissaries of police, in Paris, at the residences of several individuals, together with sabres, pistols, ammunition, &c. and a printing press, with all its apparatus. Further search was making with great activity.

A ceremony of thanksgiving was performed July 2, in the Israelitish temple Rue Notre-dame de Nazareth, for the purpose of testifying gratitude to God for the escape of the king.

The archbishop of Paris has ordered a solemn Te Deum to be sung in all the churches throughout France, for the same purpose.

The pope was expected at Prague, for the coronation of the emperor.

Accounts from Greece represent that country as perfectly tranquil.

The Augsburg Gazette announces the cholera as raging in Vienna.

Female artists in France. It appears from the catalogues of the exhibition of the works of modern French painters in the Louvre for 1834, 1835 and 1836, there are upwards of 200 female painters, who regularly exhibit their productions in the annual exhibitions of modern art in the Louvre.

Rulle's monument. The monument of this distinguished Jesuit which was overthrown either by religious intolerance or wanton recklessness, has been replaced by subscription. It was raised on the 23d, the anniversary of the battle or massacre in which father Rulle was slain.

Mr. Bernet, an engineer at Lyons, has invented a machine he calls a Balayuse, by which, with the employment of only one horse, the mud in the streets, squares, and highways, is collected and thrown into a cart with extraordinary regularity, giving 100 strokes on a surface of about 6 yards square, and thus doing the work of 200 scavengers in the same time.

Paganini. Gallinani's Messenger says that Charles X lately sent for Paganini to come and spend a month with him—when the great fiddler returned for an answer that he would for 20,000 guineas. Very moderate.

Oaths. The Scotch, when an oath is administered, raise the right hand, as is the practice in New England; the English kiss the book. The Scots who come to England often make it a point of conscience of slaving the cover of a dirty book, and the subject of their grievance has been brought before government. It is said a bill will be introduced for the relief of those who wish to be sworn according to the Scottish form.

A remarkable incident has just taken place in the neighborhood of a small frontier city in the department of Ardennes. A peasant undertook to set fire to his own barn, when a robber who was concealed in a heap of straw, raised the cry of fire, while he was making his own escape. Both being confronted before the magistrate, the peasant maintained that he only set fire to his barn because he knew that his neighbor, the robber, of whom he had suspicions, was concealed there; and the robber, on his side, declared that he had suspected the designs of the peasant and had concealed himself that he might detect him in the act. Unfortunately he was not in time to prevent the fire. The judgment in the case has not yet been rendered. [Paris paper.]

German festivals. Every German village has its annual festivals called Kirmes, when the poor people meet in their gayest clothes, go to church and there make merry and enjoy themselves together. It was originally the anniversary at which the college church was consecrated, but now by common consent, these holidays all take place in autumn after the vintage. In the large valleys on the upper Rhine, Kirmes last for three days there as it does in most of the large villages. Every morning gay parties walk about on those beautiful hills and delightful shores; after which, those who can afford it dine at the inns, at every one of which is an excellent table d'hôte at one o'clock; and, after a merry dinner and a cup of coffee, they adjourn to the ball room.

The young princess Victoria, destined heir to the British throne, promises by her winning manners to secure the foundation of an enduring popularity before she assumes the august sceptre of a royal monarch. At a late déjeuner a la fourchette, given to her by the lord mayor of London, she was escorted to the drawing room on the arm of alderman Scholey, and exhibited all the naivette and rude beauty of a country girl.

The Thames tunnel is slowly progressing. The shield has 36 boxes and advances only 9 inches an hour, the greatest precaution being necessary, as it has now reached 620 feet, and is in the loose sand directly under the bed of the river. The other 12 feet being in solid earth will be easier digging.

Appropriate reminiscence. At a recent meeting of the republican party in London, who are endeavoring to procure a total abolition of the stamp duties, a procession was formed, and the music, in allusion to the early struggles of the Americans on the same subject, struck up our national air of Yankee Doodle, which had a most spiriting effect on the multitude.

Madam Malübran de Beriot (Garcia) who formerly received 20 guineas for every song she sung at a concert—25 for private parties and £370 for acting and singing three nights at Drury Lane theatre, has been playing to, comparatively, empty benches in London. The English being tired of her, she may be expected in the United States, where she will be rapturously greeted—for we gladly receive any thing John Bull has cast off, whether it be a stale actress or refuse goods.

DOMESTIC CHRONICLE.

Portrait of the president of the United States. The "Globe" says—a thousand dollars have been subscribed by the citizens of Washington to procure a full length portrait of the president, to adorn the city hall. This subscription we learn was suggested, and has been obtained, by some of the public spirited men of the city, always opposed to the president in his political principles, but penetrated by a grateful sense of the interest, which, as chief magistrate, he has evinced for the prosperity of the city, and the great improvement in it, which has been effected during his administration.

"Statistics of prisons. In Sing Sing prison only 289 out of 842 could read and write tolerably; and but 52 had received a good English education; and 484 had been habitual drunkards, and many had committed their crimes while intoxicated. Of 670 prisoners at Auburn, 3 only had received a collegiate education; 503 had been intemperate, and 400 were committed for crimes perpetrated while under the influence of spirituous liquors. In the Connecticut prison 8 in 100 only could read, write and cypher, when convicted, and 46 in 100 could read and write; 44 in 100 committed their crimes under the influence of alcohol. Instruction, temperance and industry are found to be the surest preventives of crimes."

Gen. Hayne has been elected intendat of Charleston, S. C. without opposition.

Petrified fish. Some remarkably beautiful specimens of organic remains of fish, exhibiting the entire form of the animal preserved in all its perfection of scales, fins, &c. were recently found in the slate stone at Northampton, Mass. by a young gentleman of that place.

Cannel coal. The Wheeling Gazette says—several veins of this coal, or the same vein in several places, have been discovered in Beaver county, Pa. some of which are stated to be of ten feet in thickness. One of these veins was discovered in the following manner: A farmer, in clearing some land, built a log or brush heap against what he thought to be a bank of slate, but to his astonishment, after a little time he discovered that it had taken fire, and burned with a bright, fierce flame, which cost him much labor to extinguish.

The season. Two curious circumstances are related by the Salem Gazette, as evidence of the uncommon dryness and coldness of the present season. A peat meadow, back of Chapman's tavern, in Salem, on the old Boston road, has been burning nearly a fortnight, until several acres have been consumed. A part of the meadow had been planted with potatoes, which have been destroyed. In some instances they have been taken from the ground roasted, in a state perfectly fit for eating. The fire took from the burning of some brush at the edge of the meadow.

Bodies of ice formed by the intense cold of last winter, in some of the Boston street tan-yards, in Salem, have remained undissolved, under a slight coating of tan, to the present time. Thus proving the extreme coolness, as the other instance does the great dryness of the present season. [Bost. Trans.]

Consumption of wood. It has been calculated that every ship of the line requires all the good wood which can be found on fifty acres of woodland; and the ships decay long before the forest can grow again.

Frightened to death. A little girl aged about 8 years, the daughter of John Peterson, residing about five miles from Whitehall, was frightened in such a manner, on Thursday last, that she died in about two hours after the fright. Her brother, a lad of 14, dressed himself in a dried bear's skin, and chased her as she was going to school. [Troy (N. Y.) Whig.]

Girard estate. It is rumored that the foreign heirs of Stephen Girard filed a bill last week, in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Pennsylvania, praying to have the devise in the will of Girard for the endowment and erection of a college, set aside, and the property which is the subject of it, divided amongst his natural heirs and next kin.

Honor to the brave. The city council of Charleston have erected a monument over the remains of the gallant volunteers who died in that city after their return from the Florida campaign. It is a handsome obelisk of white marble, ten feet high, on which are inscribed the names of the gallant deceased, viz: Goodwin Haigood, John Yeargan, James T. Duun and William McCray.

Something for the curious. The elections of president, electors of senate, delegates and sheriff, all take place this fall in Maryland. The same elections will not occur again in the same year until 1897, when, if the constitution of the state and the United States are not changed, or the union is not severed, five elections will take place in the fall of that year in this state, to wit: for president of the United States, electors of state senate, house of delegates, sheriff for each county, and representatives to congress.

[Frederick (Md.) Herald.]

Singular event. The Indiana American says that, Mr. Temple was elected a representative to the Indiana legislature on the 1st of August last, from Fountain county, twelve days after his death. He died at Warren, Mississippi, on the 18th of July last, and was elected on the 1st of August after.

Montreal and New York. The Montreal "Herald" expresses the opinion that, when the rail road from Whitehall to Albany is completed, and the fleet of steamboats, which is preparing for lake Champlain, commence running, the trip from Montreal to New York (384 miles) may be made in twenty hours!

Colonization society. The receipts of the American colonization society for the month ending the 20th of July, amount to $7,330. Among the donations is one of $1,000 from D. T. Walden of New Orleans, and one of $700 from D. Brand of Virginia. The whole amount of subscriptions and collections, says the New York Journal of Commerce, from which we take the above, obtained by Mr. Gurley during his late visit to the south west, is upwards of seven thousand dollars, nearly two thousand of which has already been paid. Several splendid legacies have recently been left for the same object, connected, in many cases, with the emancipation of slaves, on condition of their proceeding to Liberia. One of them is expected to yield $6,000, and another $25,000.

Dr. Abbot, the respected principal of Phillips' academy, Exeter, N. H. has presided over that institution forty nine years. Messrs. Webster, Cass and gov. Everett of Mass. are among the distinguished individuals who learned their a b c s there—says the N. Y. Star.

Schools in Boston. The Boston school committee have voted to increase the salaries of their schoolmasters. The principals of the Latin and English high schools are to have twenty-four hundred dollars, being an increase of four hundred; and the grammar and writing masters, fifteen hundred, being an increase of one hundred to the former, and three hundred to the latter. This is as it should be.

Life insurance. It is stated in the Army and Navy Chronicle that the late col. HILLMAN insured his life to the amount of six thousand dollars in the Life Insurance office in Baltimore. By the judicious appropriation of a small annual sum, this gallant officer has thus been enabled to make provision to the amount stated, for his otherwise dependent widow and six children.

Gold coinage. The amount of gold coined at the United States mint at Philadelphia, during the month of August, 1836, was $631,400, of which $391,700 was in quarter eagles.

NILES' WEEKLY REGISTER.

FIFTH SERIES. No. 4.—Vol. I.]

BALTIMORE, SEPTEMBER 24, 1836.

[Vol. LI.—Whole No. 1,304.

THE PAST—THE PRESENT—FOR THE FUTURE.

EDITED, PRINTED AND PUBLISHED, BY WILLIAM OGDEN NILES, AT $5 PER ANNUM, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

On order to "get in" the address of the Van Buren electors to the people of Maryland, and the opinion of chief justice Shaw, in the "Boston slave case," both of which were received at a late period in the week, we have been compelled to omit many miscellaneous articles prepared for the present sheet.

The attitude in which the state of Maryland stands, in consequence of the refusal of the Van Buren electors of senate to enter the electoral college, is unprecedented in the history of this nation, and has caused much excitement, not only in this state, but in the neighboring states. That all may fully understand the subject, we have given the proceedings of the Van Buren meetings in Frederick and Cecil counties and in the city of Baltimore, which recommended the Van Buren electors not to go into an election unless certain demands were complied with, and the address of those electors to the citizens of the state in defence of their conduct, and recommending to the people "to proceed forthwith, to elect on the first Monday of November next six delegates from each county and city to meet in convention at Annapolis on the third Monday of the same month, clothed with full powers to extend the authority of all civil and military officers now in commission until a convention hereafter to be chosen, can be convened to amend the old or form an entire new government for the people."

The Van Buren electors left Annapolis on Wednesday last, and by the last accounts from that city, the Whig electors had resolved to continue in session, adjourning from day to day, until a remedy can be found for the present deplorable condition of things. What will be the result, it is difficult to predict; for while one party appears resolved to accomplish "reform or revolution," the other is equally resolute in its support of the constitution. The question thus presented is, indeed, of great interest, and will thoroughly test the character of our institutions.

A Paris paper of August 19, says—The king, by and ordinance of the 4th instant, has appointed M. Serrurier to be his envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary at Rio Janeiro, and M. Edward Pontais, in the same quality, to the United States of America.

We have an account of a horrible affair in New Orleans, in which three individuals, who attempted to inflict Lynch law upon judge Bermudez of that city, by assailing him in his dwelling, were killed. The particulars of this bloody affray are crowded out, but will be placed on record in our next, as a noble evidence of a just regard for personal and legal rights and of success in defending them.

The Bowery theatre in New York was destroyed by fire on Thursday morning last. The loss is estimated at $100,000, and no insurance.

GENERAL HARRISON arrived in Baltimore from Washington on Thursday last, at about 2 o'clock, P. M. He was met at Carroll's bridge, about a mile from the city, by a body of citizens on horseback, estimated at nearly five hundred, who escorted him into it. On his arrival at Pratt street he was met by a large assemblage on foot. A procession was then formed, (the general having been placed in a barouche, attended by the committee of the citizens of Baltimore, who proceeded to Washington to invite him to visit this city), which proceeded down Pratt street to the Point, from thence up Market street to the Eutaw House—where the general was addressed by judge Charles W. Hanson on behalf of the citizens of Baltimore and welcomed to the city; he replied, and expressed his deep gratitude for the distinguished honor with which he had been received, and his admiration of the enterprise and patriotism of the monumental city. Last evening he attended the theatre, and this morning departed in the steamboat for Philadelphia, accompanied by a committee from this city.

MR. BELL OF TENNESSEE. A public dinner was given to this gentleman at Pleasant Grove Seminary, six miles from Nashville, Tennessee, on the 1st instant. The procession which was formed on the occasion, was more than a mile and a half in length, and consisted of upwards of eleven hundred horsemen and fifty-six carriages—and it is estimated that at least 4,000 persons were present. Mr. Bell addressed the company, and was listened to with marked attention. Mr. Peyton and Mr. Maury also addressed the assembly.

BOSTON SLAVE CASE. The opinion of the supreme judicial court of Massachusetts, pronounced by chief justice Shaw, in the case of the Commonwealth vs. Thomas Aves (known as the "Boston slave case") is published at length in the present sheet. The extraordinary interest which the case excited will commend the opinion to every reader, especially after the following evidence of the feeling which prevails on the subject in the south.

From the Augusta (Geo.) Sentinel.

OUTRAGE UPON SOUTHERN RIGHTS. We furnish our readers this morning with a decision which gives an entire new feature to the slave question. It has just been decided by the supreme court of Massachusetts, that a slave carried into that state by his owner, becomes eo instanti free! What think you of that, people of the south? If a southerner carries a servant or a nurse with him into the state of Massachusetts, the highest judicial tribunal of that state is ready with its writs and processes to wrest that servant from him and pronounce him a freeman before his face! And then, as if to add the grossest insult to the deepest injury, we are told that this decision is no interference with the rights of the slave holder, but that rather, the carrying of a slave into a state which does not tolerate slavery, is an interference with the laws of that state! People of the south! Will you sleep forever over your dearest rights? Are you willing to sustain forever a confederation with states into which you dare not travel with your property, lest that property becomes by law actually confiscated? Of what value to you is a union which enables those who are in common with yourself, members of that union, to destroy the right of private property and deprive you of that which is justly yours.

This is the strongest and boldest step ever yet taken against the rights of the south, and leaves the puny efforts of the abolitionists at an immeasurable distance in the rear. The abolitionists themselves have thus far asked but little more than the liberty of publishing and distributing what they please on the subject of slavery, (bad enough in all conscience), but here is a high and powerful court, which sets our negroes free, as soon as they can get within its reach. Shall we submit to this? Has it not been enough that we have borne for years with a patience almost amounting to servility, the exactions of the tariff for the benefit of the north? Is it not enough that the coffers of the general government have been filled by southern earnings to be lavished upon those states in the way of appropriations? And must we now submit to have our property taken from us by courts and juries, and be insultingly told such things are no interference beyond our rights!

AARON BURR's remains were interred in the college burial ground at Princeton, N. J. by the side of his ancestors, on Friday the 16th inst. The body was carried from Staten Island to New York and from thence to Amboy, N. J. from Amboy to Hightstown on the rail road, whence it was brought to Princeton in a hearse, accompanied by the pall bearers, gen. Robert Swartwout, col. S. Swartwout, col. J. W. Scott, col. Romeyn, gen. Bogardus, maj. Popham, H. M. Western and Samuel Copp, esqrs. and others, in carriages. A large funeral procession was formed in the college green, comprising the company of Mercer guards—the clergy—chief mourners—Clio society—faculty and students, the college and the seminary, citizens, &c. which proceeded with the body to the college chapel where an appropriate address was delivered by Dr. Carnahan, president of the college, after which the services were closed by Dr. Rice. When the body was consigned to the earth, the military fired a volley over it.

The New York American, in allusion to a report that Mr. Burr died surrounded by his friends and in the presence of a clergyman, says—he breathed his last in the presence of, and his eyes were closed by, a passing stranger—no relative, friend, or clergyman, being in the room at the time.

EXPLORING EXPEDITION. The store ship for the south sea exploring expedition, has been launched at Philadelphia. She is described as a very fine vessel, well prepared to encounter and buffet the storms of those high latitudes. She will mount 10 guns, have 100 men, and be commanded (according to the U. S. Gazette) by lieut. Thomas A. Dornin.

THE ARMY. Resignations from the army during the week ending on the 8th Sept. Captain CHARLES DIMMOCK, 1st artillery, 30th September; 1st lieutenant F. D. NEWCOMB, 4th infantry, 30th September; 1st lieutenant A. A. HUMPHREYS, 2d artillery, 30th September; brevet 2d lieutenant A. CAMPBELL, 6th infantry, 30th September.

[Army and Navy Chron.

NEAPOLITAN INDEMNITY. The following notice will be acceptable to the holders of claims on Naples:

Treasury department, September 19, 1836.

Neapolitan indemnity. Notice is hereby given, that the whole of the third instalment under the Neapolitan treaty has reached this country, and soon as all the accounts relating thereto shall arrive, so that the nett proceeds can be accurately ascertained, proper arrangements will be made as to the time and places of payment to the claimants, and public notice thereof given. In the mean time the certificates still remaining in this department will be forwarded as the claimants may be pleased to direct.

LEVI WOODBURY,

Secretary of the treasury.

SPANISH INDEMNITY. The Washington Globe states that a portion of the Spanish indemnity has been paid, and arrived in this country, besides all the instalments due from France and Naples.

THE CHOLERA AT CHARLESTON. From the following statement it appears that the cholera is on the decrease at Charleston.

	New cases.	Deaths.
On the 14th	11	2
15th	6	2
16th	6	4
17th	8	1

An endorsement on the way bill from North Santee states that two cases of cholera had occurred on col. T. Pinckney's plantation, South Santee, both of which terminated fatally. A letter from the same place enlarges the statement by making the number of cases six, and that of deaths four.

FROM FLORIDA. We have no news of importance from Florida—Newnansville still held out, and a hope is expressed that the reinforcements alluded to in our last, would arrive in time to prevent it from falling into the hands of the enemy. The inhabitants and the troops throughout the territory are represented as being in a most deplorable condition. A letter dated on St. John's river, Sept. 4, after stating that the number of troops in the fortified posts south of Black river amount to only 867 men, adds, "in these several forts are upwards of 2,000 persons crowded together, exhibiting a scene of starving and squalid wretchedness scarcely to be imagined."

A letter from Florida says—"The Tennessee troops in Georgia, with the regulars under the command of gen. Jesup, amounting in all to from 2,500 to 3,000 men, are expected here in a few days."

The following is from the Jacksonville, (E. F.) Courier of the 8th instant.

Latest intelligence—army movements, &c. Major Pierce with all the effective force from St. Augustine left Black creek on Saturday evening, encamping that night at Bull creek, five miles from Garey's ferry, on his way to Newnansville. The force with him amounted to little upwards of two hundred men. A train of wagons went on under escort. We are told that major P. is determined to try another battle with the Indians, and that too, speedily. May the God of battles grant him success.

Capt. Walker, from Nassau county, left this place on Tuesday morning with sixteen men, to join the remainder of his company at Newnansville.

The two companies of militia, (whose time of service expires in a few days), and the one of regulars at Fort Gilliland, joined with the men just gone on with major Pierce, will, we hope, be able to save Newnansville from the Indians. That place has been threatened and will probably be attacked, or the roads leading to it so beset, that communication, except under strong escorts, will be interdicted.

Mr. Charles Dell, who left Newnansville on Saturday last, states that for some time the Indians have been in the immediate neighborhood of the fort. It seems that they have made their headquarters at San Felasco (col. Sanchez's plantation) only four miles from Newnansville, and collecting cattle, penned them there for a night, and then drove them off towards Hogtown prairie. The Indians, on Tuesday night of last week, came within 150 yards of the fort, and stripping a slip of bark from a tree, made some marks, which were interpreted by those skilled in Seminole hieroglyphicks to signify that 150 Indians were present at that place. It is impossible to say what force the infernals have, but enough to overrun Florida unless assistance soon comes.

The women and children at Newnansville must suffer incredible hardships, at night shut up in the fort, alarmed, needy and sick. The day is spent in the tents pitched around the fort. We are told that the number is nearly three hundred.

At Black creek, the people from Alachua, who sought that place for security, and are encamped on both sides of the creek for some distance along the road, are suffering greatly from sickness. Such are their exposures to the weather, their want of almost every comfort of life, that the preservation of their healths is a thing almost impossible. The measles and the whooping cough still prevail among them.

These epidemics, in addition to the fevers consequent on their exposures, place these unfortunate people in "extremis rebus." It is said two-thirds of them are now sick. What must be their suffering! homeless, homeless, lying upon the ground, exposed to the noon-day heat, the damps and dews of night, and the storms of heaven, destitute of every thing, even of medical aid, (except what is rendered by the surgeon of the post), sick, dying!

NOVEL LAW CASE. A case of great novelty was tried on Wednesday last, before the circuit superior court of law and chancery for Spottsylvania. Judge Lomax presiding. We allude to the case of Payne vs. Smith. The plaintiff some years ago brought an action of detinue, in Orange superior court, against his brother, in which a jury gave a verdict for the defendant. Conceiving that his attorney—Mr.—now judge—Barbour, of the supreme court of the United States, had been guilty of neglect of professional duty, or deficient in skill in the conduct of the suit, Payne brought an action against him for damages, in Orange, and had the case removed to Culpeper county. The trial came on about four years ago—Wm. Smith, esq. for the plaintiff. Judge Barbour disdained to defend the suit, and was not at the court, but two gentlemen of the Culpeper bar volunteered in his behalf. The trial lasted two days, and resulted (as might have been anticipated from the well known ability and zeal of judge Barbour) in a verdict for the defendant.

Payne next instituted a suit against Smith, his counsel in Payne vs. Barbour, for neglect of duty and want of professional skill. The case was continued from time to time, and was subsequently removed to this county. It came on for trial during the last term. Smith did not defend the suit, and the jury gave a verdict of one thousand dollars damages. The judge granted a new trial, which took place on Wednesday last. Plaintiff's counsel, Mr. Preston, of Baltimore—Mr. Smith appearing for himself. Verdict for the defendant.

We have never seen a case supported by less evidence. All the plaintiffs witnesses, as well as several of the jury in the case of Payne vs. Barbour, testified to the fact, that Smith had managed the case with great zeal and ability. It was also in evidence, that while the jury were in their room, Payne had expressed himself in terms of satisfaction and admiration of the efforts of his counsel.

Gentlemen of the bar at all times act under a deep sense of responsibility, but a few clients, like the plaintiff in this case, would make the profession too hazardous to be pursued as a calling. Mr. Preston acquitted himself very handsomely, and we believe his client does not intend to bring an action against him.

[Fredericksburg Arena.]

LAW CASE. United States district court. This court has been occupied during the last four days with a suit brought by the district attorney against J. W. Mahon, captain of the ship Union, and Wm. C. Boardman, to recover the amount of their bonds passed at the custom house, under the act of congress for the protection of American seamen. On the part of the prosecution it was alleged that the defendants forfeited their bonds in consequence of the captain having refused to bring back three American seamen, named Keon Roton, Peter Johnson and William Brown, whom he had taken as seamen in his ship to Liverpool. The evidence for the prosecution was directed to show that when the ship was about to sail, the three seamen went to their dinner, and returned in about twenty minutes, and that during their absence the ship proceeded into the river, but was so near the three seamen that they could be seen; that they called and made signals for a boat to be sent for them, which the captain neglected to do, and went to sea without them. For the defence it was stated that the men absented themselves without leave, and neglected to return until it was too late for the captain to take them on board. Verdict for the prosecution.

[N. Y. Jour. Com.]

FOREIGN NEWS.

The New York Commercial Advertiser contains the following items of news selected from Liverpool papers, to the 24th ult. received at that office.

The newspaper stamp duties bill was amended in the house of lords by the rejection of the clauses requiring the names of proprietors to be registered.—On its being returned, thus mutilated, to the commons, the chancellor of the exchequer moved that the bill be laid aside, which was agreed to. He then introduced another bill precisely similar to the first, except that the registration clauses were omitted, which was read on the 10th August, and on 11th read twice and passed. It was then sent up and passed in the house of lords on the 12th.

The Jewish civil disabilities bill was read a third time and passed in the house of commons on the 16th.

The church temporalities bill for Ireland was passed in the house of lords on the 16th.

The newspaper stamp duties bill received the royal assent on the 18th of August.

The British parliament was prorogued on the 20th August by a speech from the throne. The speech shall have a place in our next.

Mr. N. M. Rothschild's will gives £20,000 per annum to his widow, with his house in Piccadilly and that purchased by him from the princess Amelia, and all the furniture, plate and jewels; £120,000 to each of his daughters; £1,000 to each of his wife's brothers, and £500 to each of her sisters.—£10,000 to Mr. Cohen, one of his executors; some charitable donations; and the residue to be equally divided between his four sons, who are to continue the business exactly as heretofore, in conjunction with the houses in Vienna, Frankfurt and Paris.

The crops. Report speaks favorably of the wheat crop in England and Ireland, and in the south-eastern counties a very considerable portion has already been secured in excellent condition.

The prospects of the harvest in Scotland were very fine.

The people of Caucasus to the number of 60,000 are moving against the Russians. The population number six hundred thousand, and 80,000 for an adverse force to a power so much detested, can hardly be overrated. The tribes of Daghestan, and Scircuan, and the inhabitants of Mingrelia, Imeria and Georgia, are more anxious to declare their hostile feelings towards the Russians than they are to conceal them. In the mean time Russia cannot depend upon her own soldiers. They wait but an opportunity to declare their hostility. From a late number of the German Courier, we are led to anticipate a revolution among the Russians, inasmuch as an immense body of the Caucasians have combined against them. To subdue the Circassians is impossible in their primeval forest and defiles, and extermination is the only warfare Russia can hope to use successfully against such a foe. Russia, however, hopes to put down this and all such combinations in the almost undivided hostility which one tribe of the Circassians bears against another. While they hate Russia they despise each other, and here Russia expects to continue her triumph over a powerful but divided foe.

The important intelligence had been received from Spain that the constitution of 1812 was proclaimed at Madrid on the 8d of August, and that on the 6th a royal decree was issued, dissolving the national guard of Madrid. This must have been occasioned by fear or proof of disaffection among the citizens composing that body. This disaffection, however, is thought to be directed only against the existing government for its inactivity or want of success in putting down Don Carlos, and not to indicate any disposition in his favor.

A French ship of the line and corvette sailed from Brest, on the 11th of August, for the coast of Spain. A powerful intervention by France is still asserted and denied with great pertinacity. Orders had been transmitted to Toulon, to have all the ships in that harbor ready to sail at an hour's notice.

Gen. Evans is not dead, after all. A letter dated St. Sebastian, Aug. 10, says that he is very unwell, from which it may be inferred, we think, that he is still alive. The British legion was fast losing by desertion, owing to difficulties about pay, but a large reinforcement to the French legion was expected.

From the London Sun, August 22.

We have advices from Bayonne to the 17th inst. On the 14th gen. Evans proceeded to Bayonne, for the purpose of having an interview with general Harispe; but the latter was absent, and the gallant member for Westminster returned to San Sebastian. The condition of the legion is deplorable.

Another change has taken place in the Spanish ministry.

The Madrid Gazette of the 15th contains the following decrees:

"The constitution of 1812 is proclaimed till the reassembling of the cortes, which will pronounce relative to the institutions that ought to be given to Spain.

"M. Calatrava is appointed president of the council of ministers.

"M. Ferres, minister of finance.

"M. Labuola, minister of the interior.

"General Seone replaces gen. Quesada.

"General Rodil is appointed to the command of the guard, charged with the general inspection of militia.

"The decree proclaiming Madrid in a state of siege has been recalled, and the national guard of Madrid is reorganized.

"The constitution of 1812 has been proclaimed at Santander and St. Sebastian."

Havana. Letters have been received at New York from the Havana, which say that in consequence of the late commotions in Spain, which resulted in the proclaiming of the constitution of 1812, great sensation has been felt among all classes of people. The majority of the inhabitants, it is well known, entertain ultra liberal opinions, and some change, it is apprehended, will ensue in the political organization of the government of the island.

The brother of governor Tacon was in command at Cadiz when the late revolution took place, and was compelled to obey the will of the people.

"REFORM OR REVOLUTION" IN MARYLAND!!!

The late electoral election in Maryland resulted, as before stated, in the choice of twenty-one Whig and nineteen Van Buren electors. These electors were enjoined by the constitution to meet at Annapolis on Monday last (the 8d Monday in September) "and they or any twenty-four of them so met, to proceed to elect by ballot, either out of their own body or the people at large, fifteen senators; (nine to be residents on the western and six to be residents on the eastern shore)."

The 18th section prescribes, "that the electors, immediately on their meeting, and before they proceed to the election of senators, take such oath of support and fidelity to this state, as this convention or the legislature shall direct, and also an oath to elect, without favor, affection, partiality or prejudice, such persons for senators, as they in their judgment and conscience believe best qualified for the office."

The form of the oath to be taken by each elector, is as follows:

"I do swear that I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to the state of Maryland, and that I will support the constitution and laws thereof, and that I will to the best of my skill and judgment, diligently and faithfully, without partiality or prejudice, execute the office of elector according to the constitution and laws of this state."

On Friday the 9th inst. an editorial article appeared in the Baltimore Republican, exhibiting the result of the electoral election, and showing that the nineteen Van Buren electors represented a population of 205,922 white inhabitants, and the twenty-one Whig electors a population of 85,179 white inhabitants—and, after commenting in strong terms upon the gross inequality of the representative system of the state, and alluding to a report that the Whig party, when it was believed that the Van Buren party had a majority of electors, would not go into an election for senators, expressed a hope that the Van Buren electors would not permit their opponents to choose a senate entirely "opposed to the will of the people."

On Saturday the 10th inst. the following notice was issued in Frederick town.

REFORMERS, TO THE RESCUE!

NOW OR NEVER.

The people of Maryland, at the recent senatorial elections have, by a decided majority, signified so-lemly, their will, that no man ought to be placed in the next senate of the state, hostile to a radical change in its legislative and fundamental laws; and it is the duty of every good citizen, to see that the will of the people is carried into full effect; and there being good cause to fear that a majority of the senatorial electors who have been chosen, will contemptuously disregard the well known wish of those for whom they are to select lawgivers, every friend of order, and of that reform which can alone long preserve it, is earnestly urged to attend a meeting, to be held at the court house in Frederick, at early candle light this evening, to devise means to carry into effect the will of the people of Maryland in the formation of the state senate.

Frederick, Saturday, Sept. 10, 1836.

The Frederick "Citizen" of the 16th says—

Pursuant to the above call, one of the largest and most respectable meetings ever held in Frederick, assembled at the court house, and on motion of Francis Thomas, esq. organized by calling capt. Geo. W. ENT and HENRY NIXDORFF, esq. to the chair and appointing Messrs. John J. Steiner and William Tyler, jr. secretaries.

When, on motion of P. H. Brown, the chair appointed the following gentlemen a committee to report resolutions for the consideration of the meeting, viz:

P. H. Brown, Dr. Wm. Tyler,
H. R. Warfield, Col. John McPherson,
John H. McElfresh Francis Thomas.
M. E. Bartgis,

Who reported the following preamble and resolutions, which were supported most ably and eloquently, in spirit stirring addresses by Francis Thomas, Henry R. Warfield and John McElfresh, esqs. which were responded to most enthusiastically by the assembled multitude.

This meeting is deeply impressed with the conviction, that a crisis exists in the affairs of the people of Maryland, demanding the adoption of decisive and energetic measures. When the late senate of the state was chosen in 1831, our condition was prosperous and our treasury was full, now at the expiration of their term of service, we are on the verge of bankruptcy. The late senate of the state was characterized by a system of legislation highly improvident and injurious to the interests of the state, and in many instances utterly regardless of those rights of the people, which are inalienable and inestimably dear to every freeman.

In the late senatorial election a vast majority of the people have, after a calm and deliberate review of the past conduct of their rulers, expressed a fixed and determined purpose, that the places which "knew them once shall know them no more." They have emphatically declared by their votes, that the whole of the last senate, and a majority of the house of delegates, have forfeited public confidence; that they, by oppressive and ruinous legislation, have brought the institutions of the state into disrepute and made the quiet enjoyment of that property which has been accumulated by honest industry problematical. The same people have declared it to be their will, that the friends of Martin Van Buren and republican principles shall have the power to form the next senate of the state; and they have said also in the result of the senatorial election, that there shall be chosen a senate ready and willing to reform all abuses in the legislative and executive departments of the government, and to correct and amend all defects in the existing constitution and form of government. Nevertheless, by reason of the abhorrent inequalities which exist in the apportionment of delegates to the electoral college of state senators, there have been elected by a small minority of the people, (85,179, amounting to but little over one-fourth of the white population of the state), twenty-one electors forming a majority of the whole electoral college who, or a majority of whom, we have good reason to believe and fear, are deaf to the voice of the people, and who are ready to make choice of a senate, prepared to perpetuate the abuses of which the people loudly complain; and who will resist all amendments and reforms in the constitution, required by the people, and demanded by every principle of justice.

And whereas, the 15th section of the constitution declares that NO SENATE CAN BE FORMED UNLESS TWENTY-FOUR ELECTORS agree to meet for the appointment of the members of which it is to consist.

Therefore resolved, That the senatorial electors of this county, be instructed to require of the twenty-one whig electors a pledge that no member of the former senate, and no member of the house of delegates who opposed the bill calling a convention of the people, shall be elected to the next senate of the state. That at least eight of the members of the senate to be chosen by the electoral college shall be selected from among persons known to entertain opinions and sentiments coinciding with the principles and opinions held by, and governing a majority of the people (205,922), who have elected 19 V. B. electors, and that in the formation of the senate there shall be a majority of members known to be favorable to such a thorough and radical reform of the constitution of the state as will ensure to all citizens living under it, equal political rights and privileges.

Resolved, That unless the pledges required by the preceding resolution, are solemnly given in true faith, the two electors from this county, be requested to refuse to enter into an election of senators: provided that the electors from other counties and cities, having a majority of the white population of the state therein, will co-operate with them to defeat the election of a senate, hostile to a reform in the constitution to the extent required in the first resolution.

Resolved, That our friends in the counties and cities that have elected Van Buren reform electors, are earnestly invited and recommended to join us in these measures as the only means by which we can avoid the fate of being again compelled to submit for five years at least, to the tyranny of a government, wielded and controlled by a small and aristocratic minority of the people of the state.

On motion of Mr. M. E. Bartgis the preamble and resolutions were submitted to the meeting, and unanimously adopted, and were on motion ordered to be printed in the newspapers of the state.

When on motion, the meeting adjourned to meet again at the same place on Wednesday evening next.

GEO. W. ENT, }
H. NIXDORFF, } chairmen.

J. J. STEINER, }
WM. TYLER, jr. } secretaries.

On Thursday the 15th, agreeably to public notice "a large meeting of the citizens of Cecil county convened in the court house in Elkton, when colonel ADAM WHANN and major JOHN N. BLACK were called to the chair, and GEORGE H. JOYCE appointed secretary.

The objects of the meeting having been explained,

On motion, a committee of six was appointed to report resolutions expressive of the sentiments of the meeting.

This committee was composed of the following named gentlemen: Rich'd C. Hollyday, col. Wm. Mackey, Benjamin F. Mackall, Thomas Richards, jr. George Davidson and J. S. H. Boyce, who, after retiring reported the following preamble and resolutions:

The citizens of Cecil county in this meeting assembled, are fully aroused to the importance of the present existing crisis in their affairs. They view this crisis as the incontrovertible evidence of a demand on the people of Maryland for their prompt and decisive action. Five years ago, when the last senate of the state was chosen, our treasury was overflowing, the condition of our state compared to what it is at present, eminently prosperous, and now the constitutional term of service of that senate has expired, we find that our finances have been improvidently squandered, our treasury reduced to the condition of bankruptcy, and our state placed upon the very brink of utter and hopeless ruin. The system of legislation which, since 1831, has been pursued and strenuously adhered to by the last senate, and which has strikingly characterized its proceedings as a legislative body, has not only been highly detrimental, peculiarly disastrous, and eminently injurious to the best and vital interest of the citizens of our state, but too often in violation of their just and constitutional rights as a republican people, and in derogation of those unalienable rights and privileges, which are ever fondly cherished by a free people, as inestimably dear. But the united voice of a great majority of the people of the state at the late electoral election, has proclaimed that the system of legislation pursued by the last senate, was altogether obnoxious to them, and in direct conflict with their views and their wishes. The voice of the people has also declared, that as freemen they can no longer quietly submit to the tyrannical government of an irresponsible and an aristocratic minority, but that they are determined to rise at once to the rescue of their republican rights and constitutional liberty. The majority of the people have declared, that even now, the rulers of our state must be changed, their rights as freemen respected, secured to them, and placed beyond the grasp of usurpers. By their votes at the late election, a vast majority of the people of the state have unequivocally pronounced the sentence of condemnation on the whole of the last sen-nate, and on the majority of the house of delegates, for their unconstitutional and oppressive acts, have declared them wholly unworthy of public confidence, and have proclaimed that as representatives, they have forfeited and abused the trust reposed in them. For these legislators have by their acts subverted the fundamental and vested rights of property, accumulated by honest industry, and have rendered its tenure by the enactment of ex-post-facto laws unsafe and insecure. It is the will of a great majority of the people of Maryland, and by their votes they have so declared, that the supporters of the republican principles of government should be chosen to represent them in the next senate of the state. It is also the firm and determined wish of a large majority of the people that a state senate should be selected, who would promptly aid in the amendment and the reform of the glaring defects in our state constitution, who would fearlessly advocate the correction of all existing abuses in the judicial, the executive and the legislative branches of government, who would relieve the people from the unequal, the unjust, the unwarranted and the oppressive burdens placed upon them, and who would, by every constitutional and republican means, ameliorate their condition, and raise the political character of Maryland from its present state of degradation. And yet, notwithstanding these considerations, in consequence of the unequal apportionment of the members of the electoral college among the counties without reference to the population of each, a very small minority of the people (85,179) comprising but little more than one-fourth of our entire white population, have elected twenty-one senatorial electors, the majority of the electoral college, men of whom, from the political principles they are known to support, we can but feel a deep apprehension that they will heedlessly turn a deaf ear to the voice of the people, and select a senate who will rivet on us the chains of oppression, and perpetuate all the monstrous abuses now loudly denounced by a vast majority of the people, and who will strenuously oppose every salutary measure of that reform in our constitution and state government which is now imperatively demanded by the necessities of the people, and by every principle of republican justice.

And whereas, the state constitution in the 15th section, declares that the electors shall meet at Annapolis, and requires the presence of at least twenty-four members in the electoral college, for the election of the senate. Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the electors from this county be instructed, before entering the electoral college, to require a solemn pledge from the whig electors that no member of the last senate, and no member of the house of delegates who opposed the calling of a convention for the reform of our state constitution, be placed in the next senate of the state. That at least eight members of the new senate be chosen from among individuals entertaining the political principles which govern the great majority of the people of the state, and who have elected the nineteen republican electors; and that the senate be constituted of individuals who will promote a salutary and radical reform in our state constitution.

Resolved, That unless the pledge required by the preceding resolution be in good faith given, the electors from this county, be instructed not to enter the electoral college: Provided, the electors from the cities and the counties representing a majority (205,922) of the white population, will co-operate in the defeat of the election of a senate adverse and hostile to a liberal and judicious reform in our constitution and state government.

Resolved, That "we demand nothing which is not clearly right, and will submit to nothing that is wrong," and that the proceedings recommended in the above resolutions, are the only means by which the people can be preserved, for the next five years, from the worst of tyranny, that which is wielded by a small minority in a government constituted as our own.

The meeting having unanimously adopted the preamble and resolutions reported by the committee, on motion it was

Resolved, That the proceedings of this meeting be signed by the chairmen and secretary, and published in the Cecil Gazette, and the newspapers of the state favorable to reform. On motion, the meeting then adjourned.

ADAM WHANN, }
JOHN N. BLACK, } chairmen.
GEORGE H. JOYCE, secretary.

Next followed a meeting in Baltimore, the following account of which we copy

From the Baltimore Republican of Monday last. Agreeably to public notice, a meeting of the friends of state reform was held at monument square, on Saturday evening, September 17th. His honor the mayor, general SAMUEL SMITH, was called to the chair, and the honorable BENJ. C. HOWARD and WM. KREBS, esq. were appointed vice presidents—and Henry Myers and Th. Parkin Scott, esqs. secretaries.

The following preamble and resolutions were introduced by Mr. Scott, and supported by general Howard, and unanimously adopted by one of the largest meetings ever held in this city:

Whereas, the people of Maryland have long been sensible of the oppression of the constitution of this state—and on various occasions, and by divers means have endeavored in vain to obtain a redress of their grievances through the legislative servants; and whereas, "forms of government are for the enjoyment of justice," and by the very construction of the existing constitution this enjoyment is denied to the people, inasmuch as the majority is deprived of an equitable representation in the law-making power—and entirely excluded from a voice in the selection of their chief law-executing agent; and whereas, by the effect of this as well as other mischievous features of the constitution, the majority of the people and their rights and interests are made subservient to the accidental power of an extreme minority.

And whereas, the evils growing out of the anti-republican constitution are made palpably manifest by the many and late acts of unconstitutional or ill judged legislation—by a deficient treasury—by increasing and burdensome taxation—by the partial administration of justice—and by an odious system of bargain and influence, whereby the citizens of Maryland are made uncertain as to the free and full enjoyment of their political rights, and the peace and prosperity of the people are placed in constant and painful jeopardy.

And whereas, it is now solemnly asserted, that by these results of the constitution, "the ends of government is perverted," and it is conscientiously believed from the experience of the past, "that all other means of redress are ineffectual," we therefore throw ourselves upon our sacred bill of rights, and in its language proclaim that the people may at any time, and in any manner they may deem most effectual—and, under the existing circumstances, that they "of right ought to reform the old or establish a new government"—and "that the doctrine of non resistance against arbitrary power and oppression is absurd, slavish and destructive of the good and happiness of mankind:"

And whereas, the 15th section of the constitution declares that no senate can be formed unless twenty-four electors agree to meet for the appointment of the members of which it is to consist:

And whereas, the late election for such senatorial electors has proved, that 19 electors, who are a minority in the electoral college, represent 205,922 of the white population of this state—and that 21 electors who are a majority in that college represent only 85,179 of the same population—thus affording the incontestible evidence that the objects for which the majority of the people elected their agents, may be entirely subverted by but little over one-fourth of the white population:

And whereas, all past efforts have evidenced how utterly hopeless will be any future exertion by the same means to obtain redress of these grievances from the legislature; and whereas, the power is with the present electors to produce a reform of this and other outrages upon the people's rights and privileges, either by obtaining a senate friendly to reform, together with a majority, at least, in that senate who may immediately represent the majority of the voters as shewn by the late election—or upon refusal of this equitable demand then in a peaceful manner to bring about the desired result—by withdrawing from the college.

Therefore, resolved, That we heartily respond in letter and spirit to the proceedings of the friends of reform adopted in Frederick on Saturday, September 10th, and in Elkton, (Cecil), on Thursday, the 15th instant.

Resolved, That the elector of senate from this city be and he is hereby instructed to concur with the members of the electoral college favorable to a reform of the constitution of Maryland, and that if a reform senate as specified in the preamble cannot be obtained, that he refuse to meet the college, provided that the electors from other counties and cities, having a majority of the white population of the state therein, will co-operate with him to defeat the election of a senate hostile to a reform of the constitution, to the extent above detailed.

Resolved, That we most warmly adopt the sentiment of our friends in Cecil, that "we demand nothing which is not clearly right, and will submit to nothing that is wrong," and that the proceedings recommended in the above resolutions, are the only means by which the people can be preserved, for the next five years, from the worst of tyranny, that which is wielded by a small minority in a government constituted as our own.

SAMUEL SMITH, chairman.
BENJ. C. HOWARD, } vice presidents.
WM. KREBS, }
Henry Myers, } secretaries.
Th. Parkin Scott, }

On Monday last the whole body of electors was in Annapolis, when the twenty-one electors chosen by the Whigs proceeded to the State house and were qualified. The nineteen Van Buren electors failed to attend. The Annapolis Republican of Tuesday last says—"It was understood, out of doors, that they held a private session at the City hotel—and report adds, that a deputation had attempted to approach, at first, some member individually, and afterwards the attending electors, with propositions, which however were returned unopened in the first case, and their reception were declined in the second case."

The following account of the proceedings of the electors who had qualified, is also copied from the "Republican" of Tuesday.

The electoral college.

Yesterday being the day designated by the constitution and form of government of the state of Maryland for the electors of the senate to meet, for the purpose of choosing fifteen senators for the ensuing five years, at 12 o'clock, M. a number having assembled in the senate chamber for that purpose,

On motion of col. Merrick, of Charles county, the clerk of the senate proceeded to call over the following roll of members returned, when those to whose names we have attached asterisks (*) answered to their names—and,

On motion of Mr. Brawner, of Charles county, the electors present proceeded to qualify, by taking the oath prescribed by the constitution, and by affixing their names thereto.

There being but twenty-one members present, and it being understood that ALL the members elect were in the city, the attending members remained in session until 3 o'clock, hoping that the absent members would attend. The hour having elapsed,

On motion of Mr. Pratt, The college took a recess until FIVE O'CLOCK, at which hour they again assembled.

On the roll being again called, the same members only appeared and answered to their names. After remaining in session some hours they adjourned to meet this morning at 9 o'clock.

St. Mary's county—George S. Leigh,* Benedict I. Heard.*

Kent county—George Vickers,* James P. Gale,* Anne Arundel county—John S. Sellman, Wesley Linthicum.

Calvert county—James Kent,* James A. D. Dalrymple.*

Charles county—Henry Brawner,* William D. Merrick.*

Baltimore county—Dr. Ephraim Bell, George Ellicott.

Talbot county—Gen. Solomon Dickinson,* George Dudley.*

Somerset county—Dr. Williams,* Samuel J. K. Handy,*

Dorchester county—William W. Lake,* Thomas H. Hicks.*

Cecil county—John Evans, George A. Thomas.

Prince George's county—George W. Duvall,* Thomas G. Pratt.*

Annapolis city—Sprigg Harwood.

Queen Ann's county—Dr. Enoch George, John B. Thomas.

Worcester county—Thomas A. Spence,* Henry Franklin.*

Frederick county—Caspar Quynn, John Fisher.

Harford county—Thomas Hope, Samuel Sutton.

Caroline county—Robert T. Keene, Marcey Fountain.

Baltimore city—Joshua Vansant.

Washington county—Robt. Wason, Chas. Magill.

Montgomery county—Ephraim Gaither,* Dr. Washington Duvall.

Alleghany county—Richard Beall,* Andrew Bruce.*

On Wednesday last the Van Buren electors (with the exception of Mr. Sellman of Anne Arundel county who is unwell) left Annapolis for their homes—and on Friday, the following address to the people of the state, and copies of letters addressed to the majority, appeared in the Baltimore Republican:

TO THE PEOPLE OF MARYLAND.

Impelled by a deep and solemn sense of duty to acquiesce in the necessity which imperiously required a surrender into your hands of the high trust committed to us—it becomes us to submit fully and frankly the considerations by which our conduct has been influenced. It is well known that, in those counties and cities which we represent, the great body of the people are unchangeably riveted in the conviction, that the government of this state is based and administered upon unjust and anti-republican principles, and that similar views are entertained by respectable numbers of our fellow citizens residing in other parts of the state. That such an opinion is well founded, seems scarcely to admit of controversy. By the existing government, the governor and members of the senate are not elected directly, as they ought to be, by the people; and many public officers who ought to be subjected to the control of those whose trustees they are, hold their respective offices, contrary to sound political principle, by a tenure for life.

In the formation of both branches of the legislative political power is apportioned arbitrarily without regard to any principle of moral or political justice, our representation in the electoral college and house of delegates, is not based upon population, nor territory nor a mixture of both. But every acknowledged and just foundation is disregarded, and an arbitrary rule substituted, by which the majority is allowed fewer representatives than the minority: thus inverting the first principles of a free government, and rendering the majority's inalienable rights of personal liberty, personal security and personal property, subject to the operation of laws, in the enactment of which, they are not permitted an equal participation.

Whatever may have been the views or principles with reference to which the government of Maryland was instituted, it is perfectly manifest that its practical operation carries out and enforces, to a most odious extent, the minority's right to rule. It pervades the whole compact and enters into the constitution of each department of the government.

By the organization of the legislative powers, the counties of Kent and Calvert, with a population of 19,401, are allowed as many representatives in the senatorial electoral college and the house of delegates as the counties of Frederick and Washington with a population of 71,056, and Kent and Calvert, each, have double the number of delegates allowed to the city of Baltimore with a population of 80,625.

The executive department is the creature of the legislature, being elected thereby, the judicial and most of the civil officers receive their appointment from the executive; so that the minority of one-fourth of the people having the right to elect a majority of the members of the legislature, controls all the departments of the government. This minority not only rules and governs in the enactment of the laws, but likewise in the appointment of those by whom they are to be expounded, administered and enforced. Can a government thus organized, be termed republican! The tenure of the rights and immunities of the majority is thus held at the will of so small a minority, that it cannot be expected, such flagrant injustice will be forever endured. We do not believe that any respectable portion of our fellow citizens, who will, without prejudice, calmly contemplate this gross inequality of political rights, can desire to perpetuate it. We have too much confidence in the high sense of justice, the virtue and patriotism of the people of Maryland to believe that they will, when well informed as to the extent of the evils we have attempted to arrest, condemn the measure which has been adopted for that purpose.

It is true, the powers of our constitution, foreseeing that amendments would become necessary, in that instrument, have authorized the legislature to correct all the evils of which the people of Maryland justly complain. And it may be asked, why have we undertaken to arrest the formation of one branch of that body with which the power is entrusted. To such an enquiry a satisfactory answer may be readily given. The present constitution was formed in 1776, and at that time the representatives in the house of delegates and in the electoral college were apportioned amongst the several counties and cities in proportion to their population as nearly as that could be done. Our fathers, then, recognized freely the binding force of that great principle that all freemen have an inalienable right to enjoy equal rights in the choice of their governors. Anticipating those changes which have occurred in the condition and location of the population of the state, those who established our constitution gave power to the legislative department to incorporate those amendments therein, which experience and time might make expedient and just.—We must say, and all candid men will express, that this solemn trust has not been faithfully exercised. Year after year, repeated, earnest petitions have been presented to the legislature, asking, praying, and at last, demanding a redress of those gross grievances of which the majority of the people have long complained. These petitions and memorials have been again and again rejected. The minority, who rule, have persisted for near half a century to disregard the just demands of the majority who are governed. What then was to be done?—Were the republican yeomanry of Maryland to be doomed to endure the galling yoke of political bondage which has so long pressed heavily on them, and is felt to be more insufferable because the freedom of almost every state in the union delight in the enjoyment of equal and equitable political principles. Tame submission was not to be thought of with the least patience, and the undersigned proceeded to examine, with anxious solicitude, the extent and nature of the power entrusted to them, to discover a mode in which it could be peaceably and honorably exercised so as to provide an effectual remedy. We preferred that an arrangement should be made with our colleagues in the electoral college by which the rights of our constituents could be secured, and the honor and prosperity of the whole people of the state be promoted. The nature of that arrangement and the cause of its failure is disclosed in the accompanying correspondence. The first letter proposed an equitable apportionment of the members of the senate amongst the several counties and cities. It was on the day of its date, delivered by our chairman and secretary, to one of the electors to whom it was addressed, who was in the senate chamber at the time, in company with others of the 21 members of the college, with whom we desired to open a communication at an early day.

After retaining it a few minutes it was returned to our chairman by the same gentlemen, who alleged that no communication of that character could be received, until the college had been constitutionally organized.

This proceeding we could but consider unreasonable. We were known to be electors of senate and felt fully authorized to correspond with our colleagues touching the discharge of our duties, before or after the vote of office had been taken. In pursuance of this opinion, another letter was sent to the same gentlemen, through the same channel, and again a refusal to hold a correspondence was the reply. Unavailable efforts were also made, informally, by several of the undersigned, to personal applications to other of the 21 electors, to open a correspondence.

Being convinced by these repeated refusals that no senate could be formed, disposed to respond to the known wishes of our constituents, the high power reposed in us is respectfully returned to the people to whom it belongs legitimately, and by whom we are confident it will be exerted so as to secure to them and their posterity, no matter on what part of the soil of Maryland they may be located, those dear inalienable rights of man for which our fathers fought and bled. We have declined to participate in the election of a senate in the full expectation that the people of Maryland, in convention assembled, can and will provide for the election of that branch of their legislature, more wisely than we could have done, and at the same time, organize anew their whole government, subjecting all its functionaries to their sovereign will, and laying its foundations on the immutable principles of liberty, equality and justice.

We are fully sensible that an acquiescence on our part, in the purposes of our colleagues, would not have left without power to redress their wrongs, those whom we represent. We might have qualified, and thereby have afforded to those 21 gentlemen an opportunity, in conformity with the letter of the constitution, to elect a senate, and this too, they would probably have done, although they are the representatives of but 85,179 of the free inhabitants of the state, while three of the undersigned alone have been chosen by 98,419 free inhabitants, and received more votes at the polls than were given to those who claim the right, and were prepared to exercise it, to make one branch of the legislature—a body constituted for, and clothed with power to check and control all the operations of the entire government. Still, if this had been done, the people of Maryland would not have been absolutely without means of redress. The framers of our constitution have expressly reserved to them, in our bill of rights, the power “to reform the old, or establish a new form of government.” But this authority, by the same instrument, is declared to exist only “whenever the ends of government are perverted, and public liberty manifestly endangered, and all other means of redress are ineffectual.” It is manifestly a revolutionary remedy, inherent in all communities, and of which one generation of men cannot deprive those who are to succeed them. And it is obviously a violent mode of redress, not to be thought of until all others have been ineffectually tried. Unwilling that evils and inequalities, oppression and injustice, should be piled, like Ossa on Olympus, on the people until sufferance would no longer be esteemed a virtue, we have taken the responsibility to exert all the power with which you had clothed us, to insure the permanent peace at the same time that we hope to have provided the means to perpetuate equal laws and equal privileges to the whole of the state, with whose destinies we are all deeply identified. The means used are neither violent nor unconstitutional.

To three-fifths of the electoral college, the constitution has given the power to form the entire senate of the state. It so happens that those who desire to perpetuate the rule of a party in Maryland, who, it is well ascertained, have forfeited public confidence, do not constitute the number of electors required. The same constitution has secured expressly to seventeen of our members, power to defeat the consummation of this purpose. This provision in that instrument was designed for the protection of the minority. If then, we were the representatives of that minority, the power to adopt the course which has been pursued, would not be denied, although this propriety might, under such circumstances, be questioned. But standing as we do, in relation to the people of Maryland, will it not be granted by all liberal, unprejudiced and enlightened republicans that our conduct, under most delicate and trying circumstances, has been prudent—and may we not, without presumption, add, patriotic.

No political principles are better established than that all public functionaries are but trustees for the benefit of those by whom they have been appointed. And it is equally undeniable that all depositories of political power are bound to surrender it to those from whom it was derived whenever it cannot be exercised for their benefit. These elementary principles have been so often sanctioned—we might say without irreverence, sanctified by the conduct of public functionaries in the country, that instances need not be adduced to show that we have not acted without numerous precedents to justify us. Senators of the United States, governor of states, legislators, judges and other officers, or trustees of the people, have repeatedly, when made sensible that they could no longer exercise advantageously the authority with which they were clothed, returned it to the great fountain of all legitimate authority to be again deposited in other hands. Resignations, surrenders of power in instances, such as we have adverted to have produced no shock, have afforded no pretexts for political panics. On the contrary, they have been hailed by the democracy of the whole country as proof, incontestible of admitted sovereignty of the people, of the patriotism of their agents, and of that firmness and durability which is fondly claimed for our republican institutions by all who would not, if opportunity offered, be aristocrats in practice, though they are republicans in profession.

Not only have individual public officers surrendered authority entrusted to them, but whole legislative bodies have done likewise. In few if any of the state constitutions formed in this country after the revolution, was there authority expressly given to the legislature to pass a law calling a convention to new model and amend them. And yet, who does not know that Maryland, alone, of the old thirteen states, has never had the benefit of a convention to impart new life and restore youthful vigor to its institutions. These conventions were assembled in pursuance of a law passed by the several state legislatures. And whence, we ask, did such laws derive this binding force and obligation? Certainly not from the words of the constitution. But undoubtedly their validity, justice and propriety had its origin in the belief of the legislators, that the time had arrived when it became their duty to surrender to the people all power necessary to reorganize this defective government. Why, we ask, should senators, governors, judges and whole legislatures be commended for a surrender of power which they believed could no longer be rightfully and beneficially exerted by them, and we be condemned for refusing to afford to others the opportunity to form a most important branch of our legislature, when we felt, and now feel, a deep and abiding conviction, that “the will and wishes, the rights and interests, of our constituents would be trampled upon and violated by our consent to be present at the unholy sacrifice. We do not anticipate that such an inconsistent judgment will be rendered by that great and just tribunal to which we appeal. Truth is omnipotent and public justice certain.

It does not become us to prescribe the manner in which the vast power now tendered to the people of Maryland, shall be exercised. We cannot, however, conclude without expressing an earnest conviction that there is no cause for the least apprehension or alarm, or even anxiety, as to the security of all our personal rights and civil privileges. It will be admitted that resignation of all the members of a state legislature could not endanger public liberty or private property. Such an event would only make necessary a convention to reconstruct that department of the government. With what propriety then can the alarmists (the panic makers) contend that “we are in the midst of a revolution, bloodless as yet?” True, the state senate has not been organized, but the process is very simple by which that defect in our institutions can be remedied. If we could be permitted to do so, we would most humbly and respectfully recommend to our fellow citizens throughout the state, to proceed forthwith, to elect on the first Monday of November next, six delegates from each county and city, to meet in convention at Annapolis, on the third Monday of the same month, clothed with full powers to extend the authority of all civil and military officers now in commission, until a convention hereafter to be chosen, can be convened to amend the old or form an entire new government for the people of Maryland.

By such a prompt movement on the part of the people, all apprehension would be quieted and the panic avoided which may possibly be attempted by individuals whose deep personal interest in the present form of government, renders them incapable of appreciating the great and inestimable advantages, to be derived from a reorganization of our system, and the substitution of wholesome democratic features, for its present odious aristocratic ones. For ourselves, we cannot indulge the hope of escape from censure, by some of those whose possession of power may be disturbed or expectation of office disappointed, by the course which a fervent and conscientious devotion to the public interest, constrained us to elect. It is natural that it should be so. Man's perception and acknowledgment of rights which do not accord with the tenure by which he enjoys power, are generally slow and reluctant.

This must always constitute an impediment even to the most necessary reform of existing institutions. It was the greatest obstacle which the present constitution of the United States had to encounter, “the interests of a certain class of men to resist all changes which might hazard a diminution of the power, emolument and consequences of the offices thus held under existing establishments.” We trust, however, that there are but few, very few, indeed, who are not willing to surrender upon the holy altar of disinterested patriotism, power and office, with all their allurements when the public weal demands it: and that instead of becoming alarmists, they will unite and co-operate with their fellow citizens in providing such amendments as shall plant our institutions upon the deepest and most enduring foundation, the affections of the people. This can only be done by making them just and equitable—diffusing equally their burdens and benefits.

Let but our fellow citizens put aboard our ship of state, pilots of tried skill and integrity, men who know how

To steer the bounding bark with steady toil,
When the waves thicken and the billows boil,
And the gallant vessel will soon be permanently
And securely moored in a harbor of peaceful and abounding prosperity.

We are yours, fellow citizens,

CHAS. MAGILL,
ROBERT WASON,
CASPER QUINN,
JOHN FISHER,
GEORGE ELLICOTT,
EPHRAIM BELL,
JOSHUA VANSANT,
JOHN EVANS,
GEO. A. THOMAS,
SAM'L SUTTON,
WASH'N DUVALL,
ROB. T. KEENE,
M. FOUNTAIN,
ENOCH GEORGE,
JOHN B. THOMAS,
SPRIGG HARWOOD,
THOS. HOPE,
WESLEY LINTHICUM,
JOHN S. SELLMAN,

Annapolis, Sept. 19th, 1836.

GENTLEMEN: It is a duty which we owe to our constituents, that before we take our seats in the college of electors of the senate of this state, we should have a distinct and positive understanding, as to the course to be pursued by that body.

You are apprised that a crisis has occurred, when neither of the political parties of the state have elected electors, having the constitutional power to form a senate. Of the nineteen counties and two cities, into which the state is divided, we represent the two cities and eight of the counties, having a white population of 205,922, and federal numbers 267,669. You represent ten of the counties, having a white population of 85,170, and federal numbers 138,252; and the vote of the remaining county is divided. Of the electoral body we are nineteen in number, while you are twenty-one. But, although you are a majority (the smallest possible) of the college, it is to be recollected that we represent nearly three-fourths of the free white population, and two-thirds of the federal numbers of the state, and very much the largest portion of its territorial extent and wealth; we shall therefore expect that you will concede to us the nomination of eight members of the senate to be chosen, and that you will vote for the persons whom we may nominate to the college, although they may be favorable to a convention to revise and amend the constitution of the state, if in all other respect, in your opinion, well qualified. The counties and cities we represent ought to have, upon any political principle which governs the appointment of members of a legislature, a majority of the senate to be formed, greater than that which is sought to be obtained. To force upon them, then, being the majority of the people, an entire senate against their will, would be unjust and anti-republican; and we, their agents, cannot participate in such a violation of their rights as freemen; neither can we become passive members of the electoral college, and thereby enable you to select for the people we have the honor to represent, senators residing in the districts from which we come. The people of those counties and cities have elected us to make choice of their senators, presuming that we who reside among them are better qualified than strangers can be, to choose those who know their rights and interests, and will protect them. If our constituents are to be subjected to a senate opposed to their will, it would be an aggravation of the evils they will be compelled to endure to have some of the members of that body taken from the midst of communities whose confidence they do not enjoy, and whose wants and wishes they are not willing cheerfully to gratify. From these considerations we feel compelled to take the position above assumed. Moreover, our constituents, who desire to see radical changes made in their present constitution, have a right to expect that we will not fail to exert all the powers reposed in us under our form of government to make the institutions of the state more republican and conformable to the will of those for whose happiness and safety they were designed.

The friends of reform in Maryland have sought repeatedly to obtain from the legislature, by an exertion of the powers confided to that body by the fifty-ninth section of the constitution, such amendments of that instrument as are indispensable, and it is with regret we say that all of their applications were in vain, and indeed it may be said, they were not even treated with that respectful deference to which the remonstrances of a large majority of the people are justly entitled. It would be needless for us here to spread out in detail, the several applications for reform which have been made.

You know the history of many petitions which have been presented to the legislature; and we have felt the manner of their rejection. Each instance is fresh in the recollection of our constituents, and they believe as we do, that no redress of grievances can be had through the ordinary form which the framers of our constitution provided. Under this solemn consideration, we have determined not to be willingly instrumental in perpetuating institutions that work such bitter injustice, and if, gentlemen, you will give us your pledge of honor to accede to our proposal, and give to the majority of the people a majority of one branch of the legislature to protect from future violations their rights and privileges, it will afford us great pleasure to meet you in the electoral college to-day. Should, however, your views as to our relative rights and duties not accord with ours, we shall most deeply regret it, and be compelled by a high and holy sense of duty to our constituents and to the whole state, not to meet you in college, and thereby we shall entirely avoid the odious responsibility of assisting to form a senate obnoxious to the people we represent.

We are aware that your rejection of this proposition, and the state of things which may grow out of it, will give some alarm to the timorous. But upon the most calm and deliberate examination of the whole subject in all its bearings, we can discover none of those causes for deep and lasting excitement which endanger the peace and good order of the community, if the legislative functions of the government should cease for a season, that will be found to arise, should we assist to organize a senate, which would perpetuate, possibly, all existing evils, and secure for five years, at least, that oppressive dominion, of a small minority over the majority, which has been so long reluctantly endured by the people of Maryland. We perceive no cause for apprehension and alarm in the temporary suspension of the powers of the senate. Thereby, the whole constitution would not be abrogated. The governor would remain in office long enough to afford time to form a new constitution, and perform the functions of the executive department.

The judiciary and the officers connected with the courts would experience no interruption of their powers, and all the officers who derive their appointments annually from the executive are empowered under the forty-ninth article of the constitution, to hold their offices until they are superseded by the appointment of others.

The laws, therefore, would be administered—civil rights and private property protected, and the peace of the community preserved, by all the means now employed for that purpose. In the mean time the powers which have been delegated to us, will revert to the people, in whose integrity, virtue, patriotism and intelligence, we have the most entire confidence; and we doubt not but that they, guided by the spirit that animated our fathers in seventy-six, will provide for every exigency that may arise. Before any inconvenience can be experienced, the sovereign power of the people of Maryland will be employed, by means of a convention to reform our constitution, so as not to justify a recurrence of a similar contingency by basing all its departments on sound republican principles, so as to secure equality of political rights, and a just responsibility in all public officers to popular will.

To prevent misapprehensions, we have submitted our propositions in writing, and its manifest justice gives us every reason to expect that you will yield to it a ready assent. We hope you do not desire to leave the state without a senate, unless you are permitted to select all its members—as well for counties you represent as those counties and cities represented by us. Nor can we believe that you will ask us to join you in the electoral college, and be passive spectators of your proceedings, merely to witness the degradation of our constituents by your choice of a senate for 205,922 people, whose representatives you are not. We ask only what we think is right, and are determined to submit to nothing that is wrong. To our propositions we respectfully ask an answer at your earliest convenience.

And whatever may be your response, we cannot, doubt your concurrence with us in the perfect conviction of the competency of the people to accept a surrender of the legislative functions of the government, and that deeply imbued with the spirit of patriotism and justice, and guided by the lights of experience they will, through the instrumentality of a convention, so adjust and apportion them as to secure the inestimable blessings of a republican government. We are, very respectfully, gentlemen, yours &c.

CHARLES MAGILL,
ROBERT WASON,
CASPER QUINN,
JOHN FISHER,
JOSHUA VANSANT,
THOMAS HOPE,
SAMUEL SUTTON,
JOHN EVANS,
GEORGE A. THOMAS,
G. ELLICOTT,
EPHRAIM BELL,
ROBERT T. KEENE,
ENOCH GEORGE,
M. FOUNTAIN,
JOHN B. THOMAS,
SPRIGG HARWOOD,
JOHN S. SELLMAN,
WESLEY LINTHICUM,
WASHINGTON DUVALL.

To Messrs. Heard, Leigh, Vickers, Gale, Gaither, Kent, Dalrymple, Williams, Handy, Spence, Franklin, Dickinson, Dudley, Hicks, Lake, Pratt, Duvall, Merrick, Brawner, Bruce and Beal.

Annapolis, September 19th, 1836, P. M.

GENTLEMEN: We are anxious to elect a senate, and for the promotion of this object, we sent certain propositions to you, for your consideration, and selected colonel Heard as the organ of communication, knowing him to be an old member of the legislature, and an elector returned for the county of St. Mary's, which is always first called from priority. Col. Heard returned this paper stating that he had no authority to act, and therefore declined presenting it to his political associates. We have therefore to request of you, whether you will receive any communication from us—and to indicate the manner in which you would prefer to receive communications from us. We are gentlemen, very respectfully yours, &c.

CHARLES MAGILL,
ROBERT WASON,
CASPER QUINN,
JOHN FISHER,
G. ELLICOTT,
EPHRAIM BELL,
JOSHUA VANSANT,
SPRIGG HARWOOD,
THOMAS HOPE,
SAMUEL SUTTON,
ROBERT T. KEENE,
M. FOUNTAIN,
JOHN EVANS,
GEORGE A. THOMAS,
WASHINGTON DUVALL,
JOHN B. THOMAS,
ENOCH GEORGE,
JOHN S. SELLMAN,
WESLEY LINTHICUM.

To Messrs. Heard, Leigh, Vickers, Gale, Gaither, Kent, Dalrymple, Williams, Handy, Spence, Franklin, Dickinson, Dudley, Hicks, Lake, Pratt, Duvall, Merrick, Brawner, Bruce and Beal.

Annapolis, September 21, 1836.

At one o'clock, P. M. the democratic republican members of the electoral college again assembled, when Charles Magill, of Washington county, resumed the chair, and George A. Thomas, of Cecil, acted as secretary, whereupon the following proceedings were had.

Contrary to our reasonable hopes and expectations, the other electors having refused even to receive or reply to the propositions which we have thought proper to submit, formally and informally, in letters addressed to all of them, and in conversations held by individual members of this meeting, with individual members of the other branch of the electoral college, and the other electors having, moreover, made to us, or to any one us, no propositions whatever, calculated to restore to the people of Maryland, through the medium of the legislature, the right to revise and amend the constitution; and this meeting being fully convinced that we have no alternative left but to adjourn, or to submit to the selection of a senate opposed to those reforms, both of the constitution and of the administration of the government of the state, which our constituents desire to see accomplished—Therefore Resolved, That this meeting do now adjourn.

CHARLES MAGILL, president.
GEORGE A. THOMAS, secretary.

FROM THE ARMY—OFFICIAL.

Head quarters, army of the south,
Montgomery, Ala. Sept. 5, 1836.

SIR: I came hither to-day to examine into the state of the supplies on hand, and of selecting and forwarding such as may be spared from the service in this country, for the use of the troops destined for Florida.

On my way to this place I passed Wetumka, where there are about three thousand Indians, who are to cross the Coosa to-day, and take up their line of march westward. Ho-poe-thle Yo-ho-lo, whose departure I reported a few days ago, is on his way to the west, with two thousand three hundred of his band; about four thousand will move in a day or two from Talladega, if they have not moved already; and I hope to have the whole nation in motion by the 20th, except the families of some of the warriors who go to Florida, whom I have consented to allow to remain until the warriors return.

Being able to dispense with the services of the Tennessee volunteers, I directed brig. gen. Armstrong several days ago to proceed with them to Florida, by easy marches. I this day ordered the regular troops to concentrate at Fort Mitchell and Irwinton; they are dispersed generally in single companies, from Irwinton to Tallassee, a distance of a hundred and twenty miles; they will be pushed on to Florida about the 20th; and I hope to send, under captain Lane, from six hundred to a thousand Indian warriors. This force, if the Seminoles can be found, should put an end to the war there in all October. I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

TH. S. JESUP,

Maj. gen. com.

The hon. Lewis Cass, secretary of war, Washington city.

GENERAL ORDER, NO. 61.

Head quarters of the army, adj. gen'l's office,
Washington, Sept. 16, 1836.

I. The major general commanding-in-chief has received the official account of the attack made on the 21st of August, by major Pierce, of the 1st regiment of artillery, on a large body of Indians collected at the site of old Fort Drane, in which, with a force of only 110 men, he completely surprised and routed about 300 warriors, and killed and wounded a considerable number of them.

II. The conduct of the officers and men engaged in this enterprise, like those who attacked a superior force at Micanopy, under the gallant and much lamented lieutenant colonel Heileman, is deserving of the highest praise.

III. It is with much satisfaction that the major general recurs to the conduct, on all occasions, of the troops of the regular army, who have been serving in Florida, against the Seminoles. Whenever they have had an opportunity of meeting the enemy they have acted with a spirit of gallantry worthy of a nobler field; and the major general cannot, without deep sensibility, contemplate the sacrifices and sufferings which they have experienced in the arduous duties imposed on them; all which they have borne with a fortitude and submission to discipline that reflects honor on the character of the American army, and entitles them to the approbation and regard of their government and country.

By order of ALEXANDER MACOMB, major general commanding-in-chief. S. COOPER,
Act. adj. gen

The editor of the Norfolk Beacon received by the southern mail, the following important "order," which was copied from the manuscript by a friend in Columbus, and forwarded forthwith.

ORDER, NO. 83.
Head quarters, army of the south,
Tuskegee, Alab. 8th Sept. 1836.

The major general commanding has the satisfaction to announce to the army the entire cessation of hostilities, and the movement westward of the principal part of the Creek nation. He congratulates both officers and soldiers, on the complete success which has attended their operations throughout the campaign. More than 2,000 hostile Indians, among them upwards of 700 warriors, were captured by the Alabama troops and friendly Indians—all of whom have been removed to Arkansas, or are in the custody of the civil authorities, waiting their trial for offences against the laws of Georgia and Alabama.

Several hundred Indians who had escaped from Echo Hado's camp, in this neighborhood, and attempted to force their way into Florida, were attacked in the most gallant manner by the Georgia troops, and, with few exceptions, were destroyed, captured or driven back to their swamps.

The greater part of the Georgia and Alabama troops, called out for three months, have already been discharged—those that remain in service, with the exception of major Nelson's battalion and capt. Hentz's company of Georgia volunteers, will be mustered, honorably discharged, and paid as soon as arrangements for that purpose can be made.

The services of general officers of volunteers being no longer required, major general Sanford and the officers of his staff, of Georgia, and major general Patterson and brigadier general Moore, with the officers of their respective staffs, of Alabama, are hereby honorably discharged. In separating officially from those gentlemen, and the officers and troops that compose their commands, the major general would do injustice to his own feelings were he to omit the expression of the high sense which he entertains for their good conduct and soldiery deportment. They have his entire approbation and deserve that of their country.

The Tennessee brigade, under brigadier general Armstrong, deserve the highest commendation for the prompt and effective manner in which they have performed the duties that devolved on them while they were detained in the Creek country.—They are now on their march to Florida, where a determined and active enemy awaits them. The same promptness and attention to duty which distinguished them here, will ensure them victory there.

The regular troops, except major M'Intosh's company, will proceed to Florida in the course of this month or early in October.

The order, discipline and good conduct which they have displayed throughout this campaign, and the readiness with which every duty has been performed by officers and soldiers, do them the highest honor.

The marines will be necessarily detained some time longer in this country. Both officers and men have acted in the best manner, and have performed every duty which has devolved upon them with a promptness and correctness creditable to themselves and characteristic of the corps. The gallantry which prompted them to volunteer for service in the field, will be long remembered by the army, and by none more gratefully than by the major general commanding.

By order of major general JESSE:
HENRY STAUNTON,
Lieut. colonel and adj't gen. army of the south.

NAVY DEPARTMENT.

Extract of a letter from master commandant Thomas T. Webb, commander of the United States sloop of war Vandalia, to commodore A. J. Dallas, and transmitted by him to the secretary of the navy, dated

"U. S. ship Vandalia, Pensacola bay, Aug. 24, 1836.

"Sir: I have the honor to report the arrival this day of the U. S. sloop of war Vandalia, under my command.

"In obedience to your instructions of 7th May, 1836, I proceeded to the port of Havana, and after communicating with our consul and filling up my water, left that city for the cape and port of St. Nicholas Mole, at which place I arrived on the 15th June; not finding there any agent of the U. States, or other public officer from whom I could obtain information in regard to the object of my cruise, I left that anchorage, and arrived at Port au Prince on the evening of the 21st, at which place I was informed by the American consul that every thing was in a quiet and undisturbed state, though fears were apprehended of piratical depredations from the new arrangement made by the Haytian government, compelling foreign produce to pay duties in foreign coin. That arrangement is not as yet generally known; and it is feared that, when it is well understood that American vessels bound to Hayti carry with them specie for the payment of duties, much injury will result to the persons and commerce of our countrymen.

"Having obtained all the information I could at Port au Prince, I left that anchorage on the 28th for La Guayra and Porto Cabello. At the former port I arrived on 29th July, and the latter on the 1st August; and ascertaining that the most profound tranquillity pervaded the whole country, and the commerce and citizens of the United States undisturbed, and protected by the authorities, I left Porto Cabello on the 2d August, direct for Pensacola."

Consulate of the U. S. Havana, May 19, 1836.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt yesterday afternoon of your favor of that date, apprising me of your arrival at this port, and of the purposes of your visit; and it gives me pleasure to state that within my knowledge no circumstances exist in this quarter calling for the intervention of a vessel of war. I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant, (Signed) N. P. TRIST.

U. S. consulate, La Guayra, July 29, 1836.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of this date, and beg leave to congratulate you on your arrival, particularly as I consider it of great importance to our commercial interests that our national flag should occasionally be displayed in this port.

Our commercial relations with Venezuela are on the best footing, every facility being afforded by the local and general authorities we can desire.

The present political state of Venezuela is that of profound tranquillity, the country rapidly recovering from the direful effects of the late revolution.

I have every reason to believe, from the general good understanding existing at present, that no difficulty can possibly arise to the citizens of the United States in the prosecution of their lawful commerce.

Offering you my best services, I am, sir, with consideration, your obedient servant, (Signed) BENJ. RENSCHAW, U. S. consul.

Thos. T. Webb, esq. commander U. S. ship Vandalia, La Guayra roads.

THE BOSTON SLAVE CASE.

From the Boston Commercial Gazette, of 15th inst.

OPINION OF THE CHIEF JUSTICE.

We are this day enabled to present to the public the very interesting and authentic opinion of the supreme judicial court of Massachusetts, on a slave case recently adjudicated. The opinion was pronounced by Mr. Chief Justice Shaw, and we are authorised to add, that it was unanimously concurred in by the four judges. It therefore settles the question as to slaves voluntarily brought into this state by their owners, and as such, will be read with great interest. Whatever may have been the impressions of individuals on this question the community will yield implicit assent to the opinion of the learned court.

Commonwealth vs. Thomas Aves,
August 27, 1836.

The question now before the court arises upon a return to habeas corpus, originally issued in vacation, by Mr. Justice Wilde, for the purpose of bringing up the person of a colored child named Med, and instituting a legal inquiry into the fact of her detention, and the causes for which she was detained. By the provisions of the revised code, the practice upon habeas corpus is somewhat altered. In case the party complaining, or in behalf of whom complaint is made, on the ground of unlawful imprisonment, is not in the custody of an officer, as of a sheriff or deputy, or corresponding officer of the United States, the writ is directed to the sheriff, requiring him or his deputy to take the body of the person thus complaining, or in behalf of whom complaint is thus made, and have him before the court or magistrate issuing the writ, and to summon the party alleged to have or claim the custody of such person, to appear at the same time, and show the cause of the detention. The person thus summoned is to make a statement under oath, setting forth all the facts fully and particularly; and in case he claims the custody of such party, the grounds of such claim must be fully set forth. This statement is in the nature of a return to the writ, as made under the former practice, and will usually present the material facts upon which the questions arise. Such returns, however, is not conclusive of the facts stated in it, but the court is to proceed and inquire into all the alleged causes of detention, and decide upon them in a summary manner. But the court may, if the occasion require it, adjourn the examination, and in the mean time bail the party, or commit him to a general or special custody, as the age, health, sex and other circumstances of the case may require. It is further provided that when the writ is issued by one judge of the court in vacation, and in the meantime, before a final decision, the court shall meet in the same county, the proceedings may be adjourned into the court, and there be conducted to a final issue, in the same manner as if they had been originally commenced by a writ issued from the court. I have stated these provisions the more minutely, because there have been as yet but few proceedings under the revised statutes, and the practice is yet to be established.

Upon the return of this writ before Mr. Justice Wilde, a statement was made by Mr. Aves, the respondent; the case was then postponed. It has since been fully and very ably argued before all the judges, and is now transferred to and entered in court, and stands here for judgment, in the same manner as if the writ had been originally returnable in court.

The return of Mr. Aves states that he has the body of the colored child described in his custody, and produces her. It further states that Samuel Slater, a merchant, citizen and resident in the city of New Orleans and state of Louisiana, purchased the child with her mother in 1833, the mother and child being then and long before slaves by the laws of Louisiana; that they continued to be his property, in his service, at New Orleans, till about the first of May last, when Mary Slater, his wife, the daughter of Mr. Aves, left New Orleans for Boston, for the purpose of visiting her father, intending to return to New Orleans after an absence of four or five months; that the mother of the child remained at New Orleans in a state of slavery, but that Mrs. Slater brought the child with her from New Orleans to Boston, having the child in her custody as the agent and representative of her husband, whose slave the child was, by the laws of Louisiana; when the child was brought thence, the object, intent and purpose of the said Mary Slater being to have the said child accompany her, and remain in her custody and under her care during her temporary absence from New Orleans, and that the said child should return with her to New Orleans, the domicile of herself and her husband; that the said child was confided to the custody and care of said Aves by Mrs. Slater, during her temporary absence in the country for her health. The respondent concludes by stating that he has exercised no other restraint over the liberty of this child than such as was necessary to the health and safety of the child. Notice having been given to Mr. and Mrs. Slater, an appearance has been entered for them, and in this state of the case and of the parties, the cause has been heard. Some evidence was given at the former hearing, but it does not materially vary the facts stated in the return. The fact testified which was considered most material was, the declared intent of Mrs. Slater to take the child back to New Orleans. But as that intent is distinctly avowed in the return, that is, to take the child back to New Orleans, if it could be lawfully done, it does not essentially change the case made by the return.

This return is now to be considered in the same aspect as if made by Mr. Slater. It is made in fact by Mr. Aves, claiming the custody of the slave in right of Mr. Slater, and that claim is sanctioned by Mr. Slater, who appears by his attorney to maintain and enforce it. He claims to have the child as master, and carry her back to New Orleans, and whether the claim has been made in terms or not to hold and return her as a slave, that intent is manifest, and the argument has very properly placed the claim upon that ground.

The case presents an extremely interesting question, not so much on account of any doubt or difficulty attending it, as on account of its important consequences to those who may be affected by it, either as masters or slaves.

The precise question presented by the claim of the respondent is, whether a citizen of any one of the U. States, where negro slavery is established by law, coming into this state, for any temporary purpose of business or pleasure, staying some time, but not acquiring a domicile here, who brings a slave with him as a personal attendant, may restrain such slave of his liberty during his continuance here, and convey him out of this state on his return, against his consent. It is not contended that a master can exercise here any other of the rights of a slave owner, than such as may be necessary to restrain the custody of the slave during his residence and to remove him on his return.

Until this discussion, I had supposed that there had been adjudged cases on this subject in this commonwealth; and it is believed to have been a prevalent opinion among lawyers, that if a slave is brought voluntarily and unnecessarily within the limits of this state, he becomes free, if he chooses to avail himself of the provisions of our laws; not so much because his coming within our territorial limits, breathing our air, or treading on our soil, works any alteration in his status, or condition, as settled by the law of his domicile, as because by the operation of our laws, there is no authority on the part of the master, either to restrain the slave of his liberty, whilst here, or forcibly to take him into custody in order to his removal. There seems, however, to be no decided case on the subject, reported.

It is now to be conceded as an established rule, that by the constitution and laws of this commonwealth, before the adoption of the constitution of the United States, in 1789, slavery was abolished, as being contrary to the principles of justice and of nature, and repugnant to the provisions of the declaration of rights, which is a component part of the constitution of the state.

It is not easy, without more time for historical research than I now have, to show the course of slavery in Massachusetts. By a very early colonial ordinance, (1641), it was ordered, that there should be no bond slavery, villanage or captivity amongst us, with the exception of lawful captives taken in just wars, or those judicially sentenced to servitude, as a punishment for crime. And by an act a few years after, (1646), manifestly alluding to some transaction then recent, the general court conceiving themselves bound to bear witness against the heinous and crying sin of man stealing, &c. ordered that certain negroes be sent back to their native country (Guinea) at the charge of the country, with a letter from the governor expressive of the indignation of the court thereabouts. See ancient charters, &c. 52, chap. 12, sects. 2, 3.

But notwithstanding these strong expressions in the acts of the colonial government, slavery to a certain extent seems to have crept in; not probably by force of any law, for none such is found or known to exist; but rather, it may be presumed, from that universal custom, prevailing through the European colonies, in the West Indies, and on the continent of America, and which was fostered and encouraged by the commercial policy of the parent states. That it was so established, is shown by this, that by several provincial acts, passed at various times, in the early part of the last century, slavery was recognized as existing in fact, and various regulations were prescribed in reference to it. The act passed June, 1703, imposed certain restrictions upon manumission, and subjected the master to the relief and support of the slaves, notwithstanding such manumission, if the regulations were not complied with. The act of October, 1705, levied a duty and imposed various restrictions upon the importation of negroes, and allowed a drawback upon any negro thus imported and for whom the duty had been paid, if exported within the space of twelve months and bona fide sold in any other plantation.

How, or by what act particularly, slavery was abolished in Massachusetts, whether by the adoption of the opinion in Somerset's case, as a declaration and modification of the common law, or by the Declaration of Independence, or by the constitution of 1780, it is not now very easy to determine, and it is rather a matter of curiosity than of utility; it being agreed on all hands that if not abolished before, it was so by the declaration of rights. In the case of Winchendon vs. Hatfield, 4 Mass. R. 123, which was a case between two towns respecting the support of a pauper, chief justice Parsons, in giving the opinion of the court, states, that at the first action which came before the court after the establishment of the constitution, the judges declared, that by virtue of the declaration of rights, slavery in this state was no more. And he mentions another case, Littleton vs. Tuttle, 4 Mass. R. 128, note, in which it was stated as the unanimous opinion of the court, that a negro born within the state, before the constitution, was born free, though born of a female slave. The chief justice, however, states, that the general practice and common usage have been opposed to this opinion.

It has recently been stated as a fact, that there were judicial decisions in this state prior to the adoption of the present constitution, holding that negroes born here of slave parents were free. A fact is stated in the above opinion of chief justice Parsons, which may account for this suggestion. He states that several negroes born in this country, of imported slaves, had demanded their freedom of their masters by suits of law, and obtained it by a judgment of court. The defence of the master, he says, was faintly made, for such was the temper of the times, that a restless, discontented slave, was worth little, and when his freedom was obtained in a course of legal proceedings, his master was not holden for his support, if he became poor. It is very probable, therefore, that this surmise is correct, and that records of judgments to this effect may be found; but they would throw very little light on the subject.

Without pursuing this inquiry farther, it is sufficient for the purpose of the case before us, that by the constitution adopted in 1780, slavery was abolished in Massachusetts, upon the ground that it is contrary to natural right and the plain principles of justice. The terms of the first article of the declaration of rights are plain and explicit.—“All men are born free and equal, and have certain natural, essential and unalienable rights, among which are, the right of enjoying and defending their lives and liberties, that of acquiring, possessing and protecting property.” It would be difficult to select words more precisely adapted to the abolition of negro slavery. According to the laws prevailing in all the states, where slavery is upheld, the child of a slave is not deemed to be born free, a slave has no right to enjoy and defend his own liberty, or to acquire, possess, or protect property. That the description was broad enough in its terms to embrace negroes, and that it was intended by the framers of the constitution to embrace them, is proved by the earliest contemporaneous construction, by an unbroken series of judicial decisions, and by a uniform practice from the adoption of the constitution to the present time. The whole tenor of our policy, of our legislation and jurisprudence from that time to the present, has been consistent with this construction, and with no other.

Such being the general rule of law, it becomes necessary to inquire how far it is modified or controlled in its operation; either,

1. By the law of other nations and states, admitted by the comity of nations to have a limited operation within a particular state, or

2. By the constitution and laws of the United States.

In considering the first, we may assume that the law of this state is analogous to the law of England, in this respect, that while slavery is considered as unlawful and inadmissible in both, and this because contrary to natural right and to laws designed for the security of personal liberty, yet in both, the existence of slavery in other countries is recognized, and the claims of foreigners, growing out of that condition, are to a certain extent, respected. Almost the only reason assigned by lord Mansfield in Somerset's case was, that slavery is of such a nature that it is incapable of being introduced on any reasons moral or political, but only by positive law; and, it is so odious, that nothing can be suffered to support it but positive law.

The same doctrine is clearly stated in the full and able opinion of Marshall C. J. in the case of the Antelope, 10 Wheat. 120. He is speaking of the slave trade, but the remark itself shows that it applies to the state of slavery. “That it is contrary to the law of nature will scarcely be denied. That every man has a natural right to the fruits of his own labor, is generally admitted, and that no other person can rightfully deprive him of those fruits, and appropriate them against his will, seems to be the necessary result of the admission.”

But although slavery and the slave trade are deemed contrary to natural right, yet it is settled by the judicial decisions of this country and of England, that it is not contrary to the law of nations. It has been too long and too extensively admitted, by the laws of all modern civilized nations, and more explicitly by those who have had foreign colonies, to warrant any one independent community to say, that it is opposed to the laws of nations. The authorities are cited in the case of the Antelope, and that case is itself an authority directly in point. The consequence is, that each independent community, in its intercourse with every other, bound to act on the principle, that such other country has a full and perfect authority to make such laws for the government of its own subjects, as its own judgment shall dictate and its own conscience approve, provided the same are consistent with the law of nations; and no independent community has any right to interfere with the acts or conduct of another state, within the territories of such state, or on the high seas, which each has an equal right to use and occupy; and that each sovereign state, governed by its own laws, although competent and well authorised to make such laws as it may think most expedient to the extent of its own territorial limits, and for the government of its own subjects, yet beyond those limits, and over those who are not her own subjects, has no authority to enforce her own laws, or to treat the laws of other states as void, although contrary to its own views of morality.

This view seems consistent with most of the leading cases on the subject.

Somerset's case, 20 Howell's State Trials 1, as already cited, decides that slavery, being odious and against natural right, cannot exist except by force of positive law. But it clearly admits, that it may exist by force of positive law. And it may be remarked, that by positive law, in this connexion, may be as well understood, customary law as the enactment of a statute; and the word is used to designate rules established by tacit acquiescence or by the legislative act of any state, and which derive their force and authority from such acquiescence or enactment, and not because they are the dictates of natural justice, and as such of universal obligation.

The Louis, 2 Dodson's R. 238. This was an elaborate opinion of sir Wm. Scott. It was the case of a French vessel seized by an English vessel in time of peace, whilst engaged in the slave trade. It proceeded upon the ground that a right of visitation by the vessels of one nation, of the vessels of another, could only be exercised in time of war, or against pirates, and that the slave trade was not piracy by the laws of nations, except against those by whose government it has been so declared by law or by treaty. And the vessel was delivered up.

The Amedie, 1 Acton's R. 240. The judgment of sir Wm. Grant in this case, upon the point on which the case was decided, that of the burden of proof, has been doubted. But upon the point now under discussion, he says, but we do not lay as a general principle, that this is a trade which cannot abstractedly speaking, be said to have a legitimate existence. I say abstractedly speaking, because we cannot legislate for other countries; nor has this country a right to control any foreign legislature that may give permission to its subjects, to prosecute this trade. He however held, in consequence of the principles declared by the British government, that he was bound to hold prima facie, that the traffic was unlawful, and threw on the claimant the burden of proof, that the traffic was permitted by the law of his own country.

The Diana, 1 Dodson, 95. This case strongly corroborates the general principle, that though the slave trade is contrary to the principles of justice and humanity, it cannot with truth be said, that it is contrary to the laws of all civilized nations; and that courts will respect the property of persons engaged in it, under the sanction of the laws of their own country.

Two cases are cited from the decisions of courts of common law, which throw much light upon the subject.

Modrozo vs. Willis, 3 B. & Ald. 353. It was an action brought by a Spaniard against a British subject, who had unlawfully and without justifiable cause, captured a ship with three hundred slaves on board. The only question was, the amount of damages. Abbott C. J. who tried the cause, in reference to the very strong language of the acts of parliament, declaring the traffic in slaves a violation of right and contrary to the first principles of justice and humanity, doubted whether the owner could recover damages, in an English court of justice, for the value of the slaves as property, and directed the ship and the slaves to be separately valued. On further consideration he and the whole court were of opinion, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover for the value of the slaves. That opinion went upon the ground that the traffic in slaves, however wrong in itself, if prosecuted by a Spaniard between Spain and the coast of Africa, and if permitted by the laws of Spain, and not restrained by treaty, could not be lawfully interrupted by a British subject, on the high seas, the common highway of nations. And Mr. Justice Bayley in his opinion, after stating the general rule that a foreigner is entitled, in a British court of justice, to compensation for a wrongful act, added, that although the language used by the statutes was very strong, yet it could only apply to British subjects. It is true, he further says, that if this were a trade contrary to the laws of nations, a foreigner could not maintain this action. And Best J. spoke strongly to the same effect, adding that the statutes speak in just terms of indignation of the horrible traffic in human beings, but they speak only in the name of the British nation. If a ship be acting contrary to the general law of nations, she is thereby subject to confiscation; but it is impossible to say that the slave trade is contrary to what may be called the common law of nations.

Forbes vs. Cochrane, 2 Barn. & Cressw. 448, Dowl. & Ry. 679. This case has been supposed to conflict with the one last cited; but I apprehend, in considering the principles upon which they were decided, they will be found to be perfectly reconcilable. The plaintiff, a British subject, domiciled in East Florida, where slavery was established by law, was the owner of a plantation, and of certain slaves, who escaped thence and got on board a British ship of war on the high seas. It was here that he could not maintain an action against the master of the ship for harboring the slaves after notice of demand of them. Some of the opinions given in this case are extremely instructive and applicable to the present. Holroyd J. in giving his opinion, said, that the plaintiff could not found his claim to the slaves upon any general right, because by the English laws, such a right cannot be considered as warranted by the general law of nature, that if the plaintiff could claim at all, it must be in virtue of some right, which he had acquired by the law of the country where he was domiciled, that when such rights are recognized by law, they must be considered as founded, not upon the law of nature, but upon the particular law of that country, and must be coextensive with the territories of that state; that if such right were violated by a British subject, within such territory, the party grieved would be entitled to a remedy, but that the law of slavery is a law in invitum, and when a party gets out of the territory, where it prevails, and under the protection of another power, without any wrongful act done by the party giving that protection, the right of the master, which is formed on the municipal law of the place only, does not continue. So in speaking of the effect of bringing a slave into England, he says, he ceases to be a slave in England, only because there is no law, which sanctions his detention in slavery. Best J. declared his opinion to the same effect. Slavery is a local law, therefore if a man wishes to preserve his slaves, let him attach them to him by affection, or make fast the bars of their prison, or rivet well their chains, for the instant they get beyond the limits, where slavery is recognized by the local law, they have broken their chains, they have escaped from their prison and are free.

That slavery is a relation founded in force, not in right, existing, where it does exist, by force of positive law, and not recognized as founded in natural right, is intimated by the definition of slavery in the civil law; "Servitus est constitutio juris gentium, qua quis dominio alieno contra naturam subijcitur."

Upon a general review of the authorities, and upon an application of the well established principles upon this subject, we think they fully maintain the point stated, that though slavery is contrary to natural right, and to the principles of justice, humanity and sound policy, as we adopt them, and found our own laws upon them, yet not being contrary to the laws of nations, if any other state or community see fit to establish and continue slavery by law, so far as the legislative power of that country extends, we are bound to take notice of the existence of those laws, and we are not at liberty to declare and hold an act done within those limits, unlawful and void, upon our views of morality and policy, which the sovereign and legislative power of the place has pronounced to be lawful. If therefore an unwarranted interference and wrong is done by our citizens to a foreigner, acting under the sanction of such laws, and within their proper limits, that is, within the local limits of the power by whom they are thus established or on the high seas, which each and every nation has a right in common with all others to occupy, our laws would no doubt afford a remedy against the wrong done. So in pursuance of a well known maxim, that in the construction of contracts, the lex loci contractus shall govern, if a person, having in other respects, a right to sue in our courts, shall bring an action against another, liable in other respects to be sued in our courts, upon a contract made upon the subject of slavery in a state where slavery is allowed by law, the law here would give it effect. As if a note of hand made in New Orleans were sued on here, and the defence should be that it was on a bad consideration, or, without consideration, because given for the price of a slave sold, it may well be admitted that such a defence could not prevail, because the contract was a legal one by the law of the place where it was made.

This view of the law applicable to slavery, marks strongly the distinction between the relation of master and slave as established by the local law of particular states, and in virtue of that sovereign power and independent authority, which each independent state concedes to every other, and those natural and social relations, which are every where and by all people recognized, and which, though they may be modified and regulated by municipal law, are not founded upon it, such as the relation of parent and child, and husband and wife. Such also is the principal upon which the general right of property is founded, being in some form universally recognized as a natural right, independently of municipal law.

This affords an answer to the argument drawn from the maxim, that the right of personal property follows the person, and therefore, where by the law of a place, a person there domiciled acquires personal property, by the comity of nations, the same must be deemed his property every where. It is obvious, that if this were true, in the extent in which the argument employs it, if slavery exists any where, and if by the laws of any place a property can be acquired in slaves, the law of slavery must extend to every place where such slaves may be carried. The maxim therefore and the argument can apply only to those commodities which are every where and by all nations, treated and deemed subjects of property. But it is not speaking with strict accuracy to say, that a property can be acquired in human beings, by local laws. Each state may, for its own convenience, declare that slaves shall be deemed property, and that the relations and laws of personal chattels shall be deemed to apply to them; as for instance, that they may be bought and sold, delivered, attached, levied upon, that trespass will lie for and injury done to them, or trover for converting them. But it would be a perversion of terms to say, that such local laws do in fact make them personal property generally; they can only determine, that the same rules of law shall apply to them as are applicable to property, and this effect will follow only so far as such laws proprio vigore can operate.

The same doctrine is recognized in Louisiana. In the case of Lunsford vs. Coquillen, 14 Martin's Rep. 404, it is thus stated:—The relation of owner and slave in the states of this union, in which it has a legal existence, is a creature of the municipal law. See Storey's Conflict of Laws, 92, 97.

The same principal is declared by the court in Kentucky, in the case of Rankin vs. Lidia, 2 Manhall, 470. They say, slavery is sanctioned by the laws of this state; but we consider this as a right existing by positive law of a municipal character, without foundation in the law of nature.

The conclusion to which we come from this view of the law is this:

That by the general and now well established law of this commonwealth, bond slavery cannot exist, because it is contrary to natural right, and repugnant to numerous provisions of the constitution and laws, designed to secure the liberty and personal rights of all persons within its limits and entitled to the protection of the laws.

That though by the laws of a foreign state, meaning by "foreign" in this connection, a state governed by its own laws, and between which and our own, there is no dependence one upon the other, but which in this respect are as independent as foreign states, a person may acquire a property in a slave, that such acquisition, being contrary to natural right, and effected by the local law, is dependent upon such local law for its existence and efficacy, and being contrary to the fundamental laws of the state, such general right of property cannot be exercised or recognized here.

That as a general rule, all persons coming within the limits of a state, become subject to all its municipal laws, civil and criminal, and entitled to the privileges, which those laws confer, that this rule applies as well to blacks as whites, except the case of fugitives, to be afterwards considered, that if such persons have been slaves, they become free, not so much because any alteration is made in their status, or condition, as because there is no law, which will warrant, but there are laws if they choose to avail themselves of them, which prohibit their forcible detention or forcible removal.

That the law arising from the comity of nations cannot apply, because if it did, it would follow as a necessary consequence, that all those persons who by force of local laws, and within all foreign places where slavery is permitted, have acquired slaves as property, might bring their slaves here, and exercise over them the rights and power, which an owner of property might exercise, and for any length of time, short of acquiring a domicile, that such an application of the law would be wholly repugnant to our law, entirely inconsistent with our policy, and our fundamental principles, and is therefore inadmissible.

Whether if a slave voluntarily brought here, and with his own consent returning with his master, would resume his condition as a slave, is a question which was incidentally raised in the argument, but is one on which we are not called on to give an opinion in this case and we give none. From the principle above stated, on which a slave brought here becomes free, to wit, that he becomes entitled to the protection of our laws, and there is no law to warrant his forcible arrest and removal, it would seem to follow as a necessary conclusion, that if the slave waives the protection of those laws, and returns to the state where he is held as a slave, his condition is not changed.

In the case ex parte grace, 2 Haggards, ad. R. 94, this question was fully considered by sir William Scott, in the case of a slave brought from the West Indies to England, and afterwards voluntarily returning to the West Indies; and he held that she was reinstated in her condition of slavery.

A different decision, I believe has been made of the question in some of the United States; but for the reasons already given, it is not necessary to consider it further here.

The question has thus far been considered as a general one, and applicable to cases of slaves brought from any foreign state or country; and it now becomes necessary to consider how far this result differs, where the person is claimed as a slave by a citizen of another state of this union, that is, how the question as between citizens of different states, is affected by the provisions of the constitution and laws of the United States.

In article 4, section 2, the constitution declares that no person held to service or labor in one state, under the laws thereof, escaping into another, shall in consequence of any law or regulation therein, be discharged from such service or labor, but shall be delivered up on claim of the party to whom such service or labor may be due.

The law of congress made in pursuance of this article, provides, that when any person held to labor in any of the United States, &c. shall escape into any other of the said states or territories, the person entitled, &c. is empowered to arrest the fugitive, and upon proof made that the person so seized under the law of the state, from which he or she fled owes service, &c. Act of Feb. 12, 1792.

In regard to these provisions, the court are of opinion, that as by the general law of this commonwealth, slavery cannot exist, and the rights and powers of slave owners cannot be exercised therein; the effect of this provision in the constitution and laws of the United States, is to limit and restrain the operation of this general rule, so far as it is done by the plain reasoning and obvious intent and import of the language used, and no further. The constitution and law manifestly refer to the case of a slave escaping from a state where he owes service or labor, into another state or territory. He is termed a fugitive from labor; the proof to be made is, that he owed service or labor, under the laws of the state or territory from which he fled, and the authority given is to remove such fugitive to the state from which he fled. This language can, by no reasonable construction, be applied to the case of a slave who has not fled from the state, but who has been brought into this state by his master.

The same conclusion will result from a consideration of the well known circumstances under which this constitution was formed. Before the adoption of the constitution, the states were, to a certain extent, sovereign and independent, and were in a condition to settle the terms upon which they would form a more perfect union. It has been contended by some over-zealous philanthropists, that such an article in the constitution could be of no binding force or validity, because it was a stipulation contrary to natural right. But it is difficult to perceive the force of this objection. It has already been shown, that slavery is not contrary to the laws of nations. It would then be the proper subject of treaties among sovereign and independent powers. Suppose instead of forming the present constitution, or any other confederation, the several states had become in all respects sovereign and independent, would it not have been competent for them to stipulate, that fugitive slaves should be mutually restored, and to frame suitable regulations, under which such a stipulation should be carried into effect? Such a stipulation would be highly important and necessary to secure peace and harmony between adjoining nations, and to prevent perpetual collisions and border wars. It would be no encroachment on the rights of the fugitive; for no stranger has a just claim to the protection of a foreign state against its will, especially where a claim to such protection would be likely to involve the state in war; and each independent state has a right to determine by its own laws and treaties who may come to reside or seek shelter within its limits.—Now the constitution of the United States partakes both of the nature of a treaty and of a form of government. It regards the states, to a certain extent, as sovereign and independent communities, with full power to make their own laws and regulate their domestic policy, and fixes the terms upon which their intercourse with each other shall be conducted. In respect to foreign relations, it regards the people of the states as one community, and constitutes a form of government for them. It is well known that when this constitution was formed, some of the states permitted slavery and the slave trade, and considered them highly essential to their interests, and that some other states have abolished slavery within their own limits, and from the principles deduced and policy avowed by them, might be presumed to desire to extend such abolition further. It was therefore manifestly the intent and the object of one party to this compact to enlarge, extend and secure as far as possible, the rights and powers of the owners of slaves, within their own limits, as well as in other states, and of the other party to limit and restrain them. Under these circumstances the clause in question was agreed on and introduced into the constitution; and as it was well considered, as it was intended to secure future peace and harmony, and to fix as precisely as language could do it, the limit to which the rights of one party should be exercised within the territory of the other, it is to be presumed that they selected terms intended to express their exact and their whole meaning; and it would be a departure from the purpose and spirit of the compact to put any other construction upon it than that to be derived from the plain and natural import of the language used. Besides, this construction of the provision in the constitution gives to it a latitude sufficient to afford effectual security to the owners of slaves. The states have a plenary power to make all laws necessary for the regulation of slavery and the rights of slave owners, whilst the slaves remain within their territorial limits; and it is only when they escape, without the consent of their owners, into other states, that they require the aid of other states to enable them to regain their dominion over the fugitives.

But this point is supported by most respectable and unexceptionable authorities.

In the case of Butler vs. Hoyer, 1 Wash. C. C. Rep. 499, it was held by Mr. Justice Washington, in terms, that the provision in the constitution which we are now considering, does not extend to the case of a slave voluntarily carried by his master into another state, and there leaving him under the protection of some law declaring him free. In this case however, the master claimed to hold the slave in virtue of a law of Pennsylvania, which permitted members of congress and sojourners, to retain their domestic slaves, and it was held that he did not bring himself within either branch of the exception, because he had, for two years of the period, ceased to be a member of congress, and so lost the privilege; and by having become a resident could not claim as a sojourner. The case is an authority to this point, that the claimant of a slave, to avail himself of the provisions of the constitution and laws of the United States, must bring himself within their plain and obvious meaning, and they will not be excluded by construction; and that the clause in the constitution is confined to the case of a slave escaping from one state and fleeing to another.

But in a more recent case, the point was decided by the same eminent judge. Eparte Simmons, 4 Wash. C. C. R. 396. It was an application for a certificate under § 3 of the act of Feb. 12, 1793.—He held that both the constitution and laws of the United States apply only to fugitives, escaping from one state and fleeing to another, and not to the case of a slave voluntarily brought by his master.

Another question was made in that case, whether the slave was free by the laws of Pennsylvania, which like our own in effect liberate slaves voluntarily brought within the state, but there is an exception in favor of members of congress, foreign ministers and consuls and sojourners; but this provision is qualified as to sojourners and persons passing through the state in such manner as to exclude them from the benefit of the exception, if the slave was retained in the state longer than six months.—The slave in that case having been detained in the state more than six months, was therefore held free.

This case is an authority to this point; the general rule being, that if a slave is brought into a state where the laws do not admit slavery, he will be held free, the person who claims him as a slave, under any exception or limitation of the general rule, must show clearly that the case is within such exception.

The same principle was substantially decided by the state court of the same state in the case of Commonwealth vs. Holloway, 2 Serg. & Rawle, 305. It was the case of a child of a fugitive slave, born in Pennsylvania. It was held that the constitution of the United States was not inconsistent with the law of Pennsylvania; that as the law and constitution of the United States did not include the issue of fugitive slaves in terms, it did not embrace them by construction or implication. The court considers the law as applying only to those who escape. Yet by the operation of the maxim which obtains in all the states wherein slavery is permitted by law, partus sequitur ventrem, the offspring would follow the condition of the mother, if either the rule of comity contended for applied, or if the law of the United States would be extended by construction.

The same decision has been made in Indiana, 3 American Jurist, 404.

In Louisiana, it has been held, that if a person with a slave, goes into a state to reside where it is declared that slavery shall not exist, for ever so short a time, the slave ipso facto becomes free, and will be so adjudged and considered afterwards in all other states; and a person moving from Kentucky to Ohio, to reside, his slaves thereby become free, and were so held in Louisiana. This case also fully recognizes the authority of states to make laws dissolving the relation of master and slave; and considers the special limitation of the general power, by the federal constitution, as a forcible implication in proof of the existence of such general power. Lunsford vs. Coquillen, 14 Martin's Rep. 465.

And in the above cited case from Louisiana, it is very significantly remarked, that such a construction of the constitution and law of the United States can work injury to no one, for the principle acts only on the willing and volenti non fit injuria.

The same rule of construction is adopted in analogous cases in other countries, that is, where an institution is forbidden, but where for special reasons and to a limited extent such prohibition is relaxed, the exemption is to be construed strictly, and whoever claims the exemption, must show himself clearly within it, and where the facts do not bring the case within the exemption, the general rule has its effect.

By a general law of France, all persons inhabiting or being within the territorial limits of France are free. An edict was passed by Louis XIV, called "Le Code Noir," respecting slavery in the colonies. In 1716, an edict was published by Louis XV, concerning slavery in the colonies, and reciting among other things, that many of the colonists were desirous of bringing their slaves into France, to have them confirmed in the principles of religion, and to be instructed in various arts and handicrafts, from which the colonists would derive much benefit, on the return of the slaves, but that many of the colonists feared that their slaves would pretend to be free on their arrival in France, from which their owners would sustain considerable loss, and be deterred from pursuing an object at once so pious and so useful. The edict then provides a series of minute regulations to be observed both before their departure from the West Indies, and on their arrival in France, and if all these regulations are strictly complied with, the negroes so brought over to France shall not thereby acquire any right to their freedom, but shall be compellable to return; but if the owners shall neglect to comply with the prescribed regulations, the negroes shall become free, and the owners shall lose all property in them.—20 Howell's State Trials, 15, note.

The constitution and laws of the United States then are confined to cases of slaves escaping from other states, and coming within the limits of this state without the consent and against the will of their masters, and cannot by any sound construction extend to a case where the slave does not escape and does not come within the limits of this state against the will of the master, but by his own act and permission. This provision is to be construed according to its plain terms and import, and cannot be extended beyond this, and where the case is but that of an escape, the general rule shall have its effect. It is upon these grounds, we are of opinion, that an owner of a slave in another state where slavery is warranted by law, voluntarily bringing such slave into this state, has no authority to detain him against his will, or to carry him out of the state against his consent, for the purpose of being held in slavery.

This opinion is not to be considered as extending to a case, where the owner of a fugitive slave having produced a certificate according to the law of the United States, is bona fide removing such slave to his own domicile, and in so doing passes through a free state, where the law confers a right or favor, by necessary implication it gives the means of executing it. Nor do we give any opinion upon the case, where an owner of a slave in one state, is bona fide removing to another state where slavery is allowed, and in so doing necessarily passes through a free state, or arrives by accident or necessity he is compelled to touch or land therein, remaining no longer than necessary. Our geographical position exempts us from the probable necessity of considering such a case, and we give no opinion respecting it.

The child who is the subject of this habeas corpus, being of too tender years to have any will or give any consent to be removed, and her mother, being a slave and having no will of her own and no power to act for her child, she is necessarily left in the custody of the law. The respondent having claimed the custody of the child, in behalf of Mr. and Mrs. Slater, who claim the right to carry her back to Louisiana, to be held in a state of slavery, we are of opinion that his custody is not to be deemed by the court a proper and lawful custody.

Under a suggestion made in the outset of this inquiry, that a probate guardian would probably be appointed, we shall for the present order the child into a temporary custody, to give time for an application to be made to the judge of probate.

VOLUNTEERS FOR TEXAS.

The Lexington (Ky.) Intelligencer of the 18th inst. contains the following address

TO THE PUBLIC.

The undersigned deem it an act of justice, not to themselves alone, but to the community of which they are members; more especially to those whose generous sympathies were so deeply enlisted in the cause of Texas, to make known the causes which have induced them to abandon an enterprise in which they embarked with so many fond and flattering hopes. They would have been glad to have been spared this painful task—they take no pleasure in the performance of an act, which may tend to check the universal current of kindness and sympathy which has been manifested by the people of Kentucky towards the people of Texas, from the beginning of their revolution down to the present time. They have too distinct a recollection of their own feelings when they quit their homes, to aid the cause, as they then thought, of civil and religious freedom, not to know that their return, and this brief expose of the motives which induced it, will cause a pang of mortification in many bosoms which now throb with exultation in the hope of Texian freedom. Nothing but a sense of duty—of the obligation which rests upon them to justify themselves to the world, would now impel them to expose the unhappy civil and political condition of Texas, or to declare, as they now do, their solemn convictions of her total unworthiness of aid or sympathy. We might perhaps be content with this declaration of our opinions, but we will proceed briefly to fortify those opinions by a detail of facts.

We will not dwell upon the false assurances made to us by men professing to be the accredited agents of Texas in this country. At a time when the cause of Texas was dark and gloomy; when Santa Ana seemed destined to carry desolation over the whole country, those men were prodigal of promises, and professing to be authorised to speak in the name of the Texian government, made assurances of ultimate remuneration which they knew at the time were false, and which time proved to be so. But of this hereafter.

The public were informed at the time, of our extraordinary delay at New Orleans. It was generally attributed to the neglect of the Texian agent at that place. There was a deeper cause. The battle of San Jacinto had been fought, and the president and cabinet believing that the war was at an end, thought there would be no use for more volunteers, and if we could be delayed beyond the 1st of July, we should lose the benefit of the provisions of the decree in council, that being the time for the operation of the act to expire. The president and council actually issued a proclamation prohibiting the coming in of additional volunteers. In the mean time, however, a rumor was circulated that the Mexicans were about to make another effort to regain the country, and were coming into Texas with 15,000 men, and we were then permitted to embark: captain Postlethwaite proceeding in advance with about one hundred troops on the second day of July; colonel Wilson remaining with the residue, expecting to follow in a few days, but was in the manner before related detained ten days. Col. W got off on the 12th of July, and arrived at Galveston after a passage of seven days. Captain P. had made his passage in four days. Captain P. being thus several days in advance of col. W. and having nothing to occupy him, concluded to visit Velasco, the seat of government, for the purpose of making a personal examination of the country, and to ascertain if possible its civil condition. On his arrival at Velasco, he was introduced to president Burnet by a friend, and presented a letter of introduction—which was opened, glanced at and thrown by without comment; captain P. not being asked to sit, or treated with common civility. Captain P. left president Burnet and returned to his hotel, where he had several distinct propositions made to him by officers in the Texian service, to join them with the men under his command, avowing their object to scour the country and take every thing valuable which they could find, until they had paid themselves; and then to return to the United States, as they said they did not expect the Texian government to pay them a cent for the services they had rendered, or the expenses they had incurred! Captain P. was then informed that the representations made by the Texian agents in Kentucky of the right of volunteers to lands were false—that all right to head right claims expired with the declaration of independence, and that no bounty lands would be given to any volunteers who arrived after the 1st day of July. Captain P. then returned to Galveston, at which place col. W. had arrived in his absence, and communicated to him all the material facts which he had become possessed of at Velasco. Captain P. at that time announced his resolution to return home—informed the colonel that he had become sufficiently disgusted with the state of things at the seat of government. Col. W. prevailed upon captain P. to remain at Galveston until he could himself make a trip to Velasco and see if something might not have occurred to change the aspect of affairs. The colonel proceeded to Velasco, presented his letter of introduction to the president, and was treated, if possible, with still more incivility than captain P. had been. Col. W. returned to Galveston and announced all the facts to his men—and told them that he was willing to abide by their decision; to wit: either to join the main army, or return with them to the United States.

This was the reception we met with. Those who recollected the difficulties we encountered in raising the corps, the high hopes with which we were inspired by the plausible and pathetic appeals made to us by Texian agents in this country; the deep enthusiasm which was evinced by the whole community when we bade adieu to our native country and homes may form some adequate conception of our personal chagrin and mortification, when we plainly discovered that our presence was regarded by the authorities of the country as an intrusion; when we seemed to be looked upon as men who had come to claim that which had been won by the valor of others. Let any honorable man put the question to himself, and say what would have been his feelings, and what course of conduct his own sense of propriety would have dictated? This however was personal to ourselves. We have said that Texas was unworthy of public aid or sympathy?

We now state what our personal observation and undoubted information enabled us fully to perceive.

1st. That the present population of Texas seemed wholly incapable of a just idea of civil and political liberty, and that so far as the extension of liberal principles is concerned, it is of little moment whether Mexico or Texas succeeds in the struggle.

2d. That the mass of the people, from the highest functionary of their pretended government, to the humblest citizen (with but few exceptions) are animated alone by a desire of plunder, and appear totally indifferent whom they plunder, friends or foes.

3d. That even now, there is really no organized government in the country; no laws administered; no judiciary; a perpetual struggle going on between the civil and military departments; and neither having the confidence of the people or being worthy of it. We will here state one or two facts which may tend to show the estimation in which they are respectively held by each other, and their capacity to enforce their orders. The secretary of war came down with a quartermaster and steamboat to carry his loading, consisting of provisions, clothing, &c. to the main army. Captain Switzer, volunteer emigrant from Ohio (who had lately arrived) wanted some clothing for his men, and determined that unless he was first supplied with such articles as he desired the expedition should not proceed. He took possession of the fort under the command of colonel Morgan, loaded the cannon and prepared to fire on them if they attempted to move without his permission. He then sent a file of men on board and took the vessels into his own possession, and sent the honorable secretary with his quartermaster and steamboat back to Velasco! Again the president and cabinet appointed general Lamar to the chief command of the army; the army promptly refused to receive him, and the power and authority of the cabinet were contemptuously disregarded! The army then, doubtless after due deliberation, resolved that the cabinet was either corrupt or imbecile, (probably both) and it being necessary in their opinion to get rid of them, determined to do so by a summary process. They therefore sent an officer with instructions forthwith to arrest them and bring them on to head quarters to be tried according to military usage. This order however, was not executed, simply because the officer charged with its execution had not the physical force requisite.

These facts and others sufficiently demonstrate to us, that the cabinet was deficient in all the requisites as a good government, and that no one in his senses, would trust himself, his reputation or his fortunes to their charge or control. Charged with treason, bribery and usurpation, weak in their councils, and still weaker in power to enforce their orders; we perceived at once that we must look for safety and proper inducements elsewhere. We then turned our eyes to the army, and a scene still more disheartening presented itself; undisciplined, and without an effort to become so; not a roll called nor a drill; no regular encampment; no authority nor obedience; with plundering parties for self-enrichment, robbing private individuals of their property. We could see nothing to induce us to embark our fortunes and destinies with them. With these views and facts, we could but sicken and wonder at the vile deceptions which had been practised upon us; yet we were told that this people had risen up in their might, to vindicate the cause of civil and religious liberty. It is a mockery of the very name of liberty. They are stimulated by that motive, which such men can only appreciate, the hope of plunder. They are careless of the form of government under which they live, if that government will tolerate licentiousness and disorder. Such is a brief, but we sincerely believe a faithful picture of a country to which we were invited with so much assiduity, and such the manner in which we were received and treated.

We might multiply facts, in support of each proposition here laid down, to show the miserable condition of things in Texas, and the utter impossibility that a man of honor could embark in such a cause with such men. Should it be rendered necessary, we may yet do so; but for the present we will pause with this remark, that if there be any, in Kentucky, whose hearts are animated with the desire of an honorable fame, or to secure a competent settlement for themselves or families, they must look to some other theatre than the plains of Texas. We would say to them, listen not to the deceitful and hypocritical allurements of LAND SPECULATORS, who wish you to fight for their benefit and who are as liberal of their promises as they are faithless in performance. We are aware of the responsibility which we incur by this course. We are aware that we subject ourselves to the misrepresentations of hired agents and unprincipled land mongers. But we are willing to meet it all, relying upon the integrity of our motives and the correctness of our course. We left our native land, our peaceful firesides, with a solemn resolution to devote our undivided energies to stop the course of Mexican desolation, and build up a free and flourishing commonwealth. The very fact of our going, sufficiently indicates the depth and sincerity of our devotion to the cause. Our return, and the circumstances which caused it, equally proclaim our infatuation. That others may not be alike deluded, is an additional motive with us to make this publication.

EDWARD J. WILSON,
G. L. POSTLETHWAITE.

P. S. It may be here proper to state, the commission of general Chambers is not recognized in Texas. He derives his commission from the former governor, (Smith), whose acts have been officially declared null and void.

Lexington, Sept. 10, 1836.

We, the undersigned, volunteers in the cause of Texas, entertaining the highest sense of the conduct of col. Wilson, both as an officer and a gentleman whilst under his command; and entirely approving of the reasons which have induced him, reluctantly, to return home—are unwilling to take leave of him without this public expression of the regret that event occasions us—the sincere respect and esteem in which we hold him, and of the kind and friendly feelings on our part, which will always accompany him, however different may be the lots which fortune shall assign us.

[Here follow the signatures of one hundred and twenty-four volunteers.]

DINNER TO JUDGE WHITE.

From the Knoxville Register.

According to previous arrangements, on Wednesday the 31st ultimo, a portion of the citizens of Knox county, together with a number of invited guests, composing by far the largest assemblage we have ever witnessed here upon any similar occasion, sat down to a sumptuous table, spread under a shed erected in the grove near the old Methodist church. General SOLOMON D. JACOBS officiated as president, and colonel G. W. CHURCHWELL and major FREDERIC S. HEISKELL, as vice presidents. The cloth being removed, the following toasts were offered:

1st. Our country—In these times of corruption and danger she demands from her sons united and independent action.

2d. Washington, Jefferson and Madison—Time cannot touch the perfection of their excellencies or the immortality of their names. Posterity will never cease to revere their memory and their virtues.

3d. Tennessee—Her political creed has not changed; it is the same in '36 that it was in '24; too intelligent to be tricked; too independent to be led; she is deceived by no artificer; submits to no dictation.

4th. The elective franchise—It must and shall be as free as the air we breathe. Hands off; we spurn all direction and dictation, come from whom it may.

5th. The president of the United States—His memory is treacherous; he has forgotten his early friends and supporters, and listens only to the voice of flattery and the siren song of sycophancy. He misdirects his influence when he stoops to canvass for his successor.

6th. Our distinguished guest and neighbor, the hon. Hugh Lawson White—His public career has been no less conspicuous for its consistency, independence and usefulness than his private life for its propriety, purity and uprightness. Malevolence and persecution cannot prostrate him. Tennessee will sustain him firmly and fearlessly against the slanders of malice and the magic of the most influential name.

After the loud and reiterated bursts of applause with which this sentiment was received had subsided, judge WHITE rose and said:

GENTLEMEN: The sentiment just given, and the feelings with which it has been received, encourage me to do something more than make my acknowledgments for your undeviating support and continued confidence.

After an absence of almost nine months, seven of which were devoted to my duties in congress, upon my return home, to find my neighbors, the people of my own county, ready to greet me as a friend, and to declare, in the face of the world, that my character as a private citizen does not deserve reproach, and that my conduct as a public man meets their approbation, is a source of the highest gratification. More especially when I reflect how incessantly I have been assailed, and with how much industry the vilest slanders have been circulated, under the sanction of names, some of which I know are, and long have been, very dear to you, as well as to the great majority of my fellow citizens.

For eleven years I have, in part, represented Tennessee in the senate of the United States. Until the two last, my services, humble as they were, appeared to be acceptable to the great body of the people. Any complaints against me were made comparatively by a few, and they were, of those, decidedly opposed to the present chief magistrate and his administration.

Now the matter has changed, and I have been violently assailed by some of those with whom I have formerly acted, and several of those who were my bitter opponents on account of my attachment to the chief magistrate have become his zealous friends, while they still continue their hostility to me. Having resided in the state from my boyhood, and having, from the time I attained the years of discretion, been busy among the people in some capacity or other, I believed a large and overwhelming majority of our fellow citizens were decidedly Jeffersonian republicans; and belonging to that school of politicians myself, when honored with a seat in the senate, I flattered myself that on all important questions, when I honestly carried out, in practice, my own political opinions, I would also faithfully represent the opinions of my constituents. I have neither solicited nor desired the birth, and could not have been induced to accept it, if a sacrifice of any of my principles had been required. At one period, domestic afflictions visited me in such rapid succession, and with such weight, that I had made up my mind to withdraw, and let my place be supplied by some one whose mind would not be doomed to brood so much over his own misfortunes; but abandoned the idea at the earnest solicitation of some, whom I, childishly, then thought my friends, and who are now, under the hypocritical pretence of continued friendship, my most deadly enemies.

In the great struggle to bring the present chief magistrate into office, it became necessary that his friends should proclaim and enforce, by all the arguments they could advance, their political principles; and what were they?

1st. All useless expenditures of the public moneys should be discontinued.

2d. All offices should be filled by men who were honest, capable, faithful to the constitution, and of business habits.

3d. That neither congress, nor any department of the federal government, had any power, except that which was expressly granted by the constitution, or was necessary and proper to carry into effect some power which was expressly granted.

4th. That the executive power should be so limited and regulated by law, that neither the president nor any officer appointed by, or dependent upon him, could use his influence or power to control or guide public opinion in elections.

5th. That the constitution should be so amended as to secure to the people the right of choosing the chief magistrate themselves; that the same person should not be elected for a second term, and that offices should not be filled with members of congress.

6th. That all surplus moneys which might accumulate in the treasury beyond the reasonable wants of the federal government, should be divided among the states by some fair ratio, to the end that the people, to whom it rightfully belonged, might have the benefit of it for internal improvements, education, &c.

7th. That all caucuses or combinations of men, whose object it was to create or control public opinion in the election of president and vice president, should be discountenanced and put down.

These were the great and leading principles for which we, in common with others, contended. The public voice sanctioned them by the election of the chief magistrate in 1828. In his inaugural address in 1829, and in his subsequent addresses, he has avowed and proclaimed several of them.

They are the very doctrines on which I have practised from that day to this, so far as my humble capacity enabled me; and I now challenge my persecutors to put their fingers on the cases in which I have departed from them.

How then has it happened, that, for the last eighteen months or two years, my humble name has, in a certain set of newspapers, and among a certain clan of politicians, been constantly coupled with some degrading charge?

Upon this subject, I can perhaps give you some facts, not heretofore generally known, and this I shall do, not for the purpose of injuring any one, but for the sake of making a just defence of myself.

The general assembly of this state sat in Nashville in the fall of 1833. At the commencement of its session, as is my habit, I was there. While there, the news reached us that the deposits of the public moneys had been removed by the order of the president from the bank of the United States. I immediately foresaw that this would produce a violent effort in congress to put down the administration. I ascertained that there was a wish among the members, before the session closed, to present my humble name to the people of the United States as a suitable person to succeed the present chief magistrate. To every member with whom I conversed, and to every other person who addressed me on the subject, I used all the arguments in my power to prevent them from doing so; and with some that I could take most liberty with, when coming away, left it in charge, should a nomination be attempted in my absence, to have it prevented.

At the close of the session, one of those gentlemen wrote me that he was censured as unfriendly for not concurring in the plan of a nomination. I immediately answered his letter, assuring him he had not only acted in conformity to my wishes, but in accordance with my request; and so sure was I that such a nomination would have weakened the president in congress, that if it had been made, I would have held myself bound to withhold my assent.

In the spring of 1834 I received communications from different quarters upon the same subject, proposing, if it met my approbation, there would be meetings of the people to nominate me. To this course I gave no encouragement. During that year the president visited Tennessee, our convention was in session; and after their rise, I was informed some of the members had wished to nominate me, but had abandoned the attempt after they ascertained it would incur his displeasure. On his journey to Washington he conversed freely with some of my friends, and remonstrated against any attempt to nominate me as president—said that there must be a national convention, that Mr. Van Buren ought to be nominated as president, I as vice president, and when his eight years were expired, I was young enough then to be taken up as president. All this was communicated to me, and the only answer I could make was, that either office was beyond my merits, but that I could not enter into any arrangement which would operate as a lure to induce any person to vote for myself, or for any other person, contrary to his judgment. Thus the matter stood when the session of congress commenced in December, 1834. During that winter many county meetings were held, at which my name was brought before the public, as well as by the legislature of Alabama.

Under a full belief that a system was about being put in operation which would destroy the freedom of election, which was intended to transfer all federal power into certain hands, who by like process would transfer it into the hands of others at their pleasure, and that the effect of this would be to give the operations of the government such a direction as would favor the interests of one class of citizens at an entire sacrifice of the interests of all others, I consented that my political friends might use my name, or not, as they believed would most promote the public interest.

In this I may have erred; but if I did, it was an honest error.

After giving this consent, and before the Baltimore convention, I was repeatedly forewarned what I might expect if my name was not withdrawn. These threats carried no terrors to me. Whatever of character I have was given to me by my country; and whenever it becomes necessary to risk the whole of it in defence of those principles which I think essential to the preservation of liberty, I willingly stake it all. I feel that I was not intended to be the slave of any man or set of men—that I have some mind, and that the author of my existence intended that I should exercise it—that I should form opinions as to politics and religion, and freely and fearlessly act upon them, without being intimidated by what either men or devils can do. Could I have hesitated for one moment in my course, I would have fancied that I heard myself addressed from the tombs in yonder church yard, (pointing to the place where his father and mother are buried), in language like this: My son, remember that the same principles are now involved which were proclaimed in July, 1776; that to maintain them I risked my life and every thing dear to man; that, after struggling through a seven years' war, with my compatriots in arms, we succeeded in the establishment of a free government—under it I lived happy and prosperous, and died without leaving a spot upon my name: that good name and that free government I left my children as an invaluable inheritance. And is it possible that for the lack of moral courage you will deprive yourself and your children of those blessings for which I toiled so long and risked so much? If I still doubted, a voice still more endearing, if that be possible, would salute my ears in accents like these: Can you for an instant forget the lessons taught by your mother? Remember you not only have your father's name in charge, but you have also that of my family. Do you not recollect how I used to encourage you and your brother to discharge your duty, as my only sentinels to watch and warn me when the Tories would approach our dwelling for plunder, in your father's absence in the tented field? That I would then inform you that my family were among the first to hoist the pole of liberty in the south, and among the most firm and fearless in defending it? And will you, who have not a drop of any but whig blood in your veins, hesitate as to the course you ought to pursue? To these questions I could give but one answer—Fear not for me. The same good name you have transmitted, and the same rich inheritance, shall be left unstained, and transmitted unimpaired to your grandchildren.

But to proceed: the Baltimore convention met, and in due form nominated a candidate for the presidency and vice presidency, against whom no man has heard me say one word. They have accepted the nominations, and I have no doubt, in doing so, acted on those principles which they think it right to maintain. As to myself, I solemnly declare that with the knowledge I have with the manner in which that convention was brought about, the object it was intended to accomplish, and the consequences expected to flow from it, had I been nominated by it for either office, such nomination would have been almost the only contingency upon which I would have prohibited the use of my name.

Let me not be misunderstood; I am very far from intimating it as my opinion that the whole of that assemblage, or a majority of them, were either dishonest or dishonorable men. Many of them are strangers to me, and I hope were governed by worthy motives, and I doubt not believed great good would result from their labor. I, on the contrary, think nothing but evil can result from a nomination by a set of men collected under the auspices of the executive, with a view to nominate an individual designated by him.

Notwithstanding this nomination, my name has been permitted to remain where it was before placed, and the threatened vengeance has been poured out upon my devoted head ever since. "Tray, Blanche, Sweetheart, little dogs and all," have been let loose upon me. I have heeded them not. It has been my aim to bear any and every thing. I have uniformly conformed my public conduct to my avowed principles, and what I believed the politics of my state. So far as the administration has acted on the principles which brought the chief magistrate into power, I have been, as I think, a uniform and steady, though very humble, supporter. If on any point he has changed his principles, it is unreasonable to expect me to change with him, unless I can be furnished with sufficient reasons for such a change.

Humble as my pretensions are represented to be, we all now see and know that my venerable old friend, the chief magistrate himself, in his own proper person, has openly, and in the view of the sovereign people themselves, turned out to control and regulate public opinion. This is a trouble which I am very sorry he had to take on my account. His acts are to live after him. He occupies the most dignified station upon earth. If any man living did more towards elevating him to that station than I did, it was because he had more influence. He has the efficient control of the whole fund of the nation—the disposal of our invaluable public domain—the appointment of all officers at home and abroad—the power to remove tens of thousands of officers, who have no means to procure subsistence for a day, if he chooses to remove them; they must do as he directs, or be turned loose to starve. All this power I zealously strove to give him, and I did so under a thorough conviction that he would only use it in accordance with the spirit of the constitution; that he would follow the wise example of Washington, of Jefferson, of Madison and Monroe; that, so far from openly interfering in the election of his successor, or encouraging any executive officer to do so, he would sternly prohibit it in others, and think it a high political and moral duty in himself to be perfectly "neutral," and lest he should disclose his preference, would "avoid conversing on the subject with his most intimate friends." In this I have been disappointed. I have been apprized that for twelve months past he has neither been sparing nor backward in his censure of me. It gave me no uneasiness; I was willing to bear it all without complaint. My only wish was that he might so conduct as to take nothing from the high character which, in common with others, I had for years endeavored to give him. Not content with this, he comes to our own state, among my own constituents, those in whose employ I now am, took a circuitous route through East Tennessee, so as to be in many villages, and is still on his tour through West Tennessee into North Alabama, openly denouncing me as a "red hot federalist," having abandoned his administration, and being as far from him as the poles are asunder, &c. Now, with great deference to the opinion of that highly esteemed and venerable man, I must be allowed to say he is entirely mistaken, I am not now and never was a federalist, in any sense of that term recognised by, or known to, the American people. I am now and ever have been a republican of Mr. Jefferson's school, so far as I have been able to comprehend the doctrines taught by him. The true way to test this matter is for each of us to put down the articles of his political creed, and see in what we disagree. I have given you mine: you and the American people, who have taken the trouble to read what I have said, or to notice my recorded votes, know that I have practised on my professions. It is not with me to say whether the chief magistrate has practised on his or not. If we now disagree in any thing, I aver that I agree with the republican creed, and that he will be found on that side which leads directly to monarchy, although I hope he does not so intend it.

It is undoubtedly true that upon one point he and I are antipodes, as far apart as the poles are from each other. He thinks it an important point of his administration, before his time expires, to select his successor, and through the medium of a convention, got up under his own auspices, have the person thus selected recommended as a suitable candidate, to use all his influence and patronage to procure the election of the person thus recommended, and he denounces every man as a federalist, and as opposed to his administration, who will not vote for and support such person.

I disagree with this whole doctrine, and insist it is no part of his duty to select his successor, to have him recommended by a convention, or to use his influence or patronage to induce or coerce persons to vote for him. This is obviously the point of disagreement, and I willingly leave to the present generation, and to those who are to succeed us, to say which of us holds the republican side.

Suppose Mr. Adams to be now president, and his term about to expire, and he had designated Mr. Clay as his successor, and was using all his patronage to induce persons to vote for him, and was actually travelling through Massachusetts and elsewhere, haranguing the people and denouncing general Jackson as a red hot federalist because he would not withdraw his name and vote for Mr. Clay, what would be said by our venerable friend in such case?

With a view to bring this doctrine home to the comprehension of every man, suppose there were now a proposition to amend the constitution, and make it the duty of every president, before his term expired, to select the man, in his judgment, best qualified to succeed him—to have a convention called to recommend such person, and then to use all his patronage and influence to have him elected: is there any one man in America so stupid as not to see it would be taking from the people all choice, all power in electing their chief magistrate, and vesting it in the hands of one man? If such an amendment were to prevail, so far as the election of president was concerned, we would have to all intents and purposes a monarchy. Well; if we can be prevailed on to think this practice ought to be pursued, without such an amendment, practically the government is a monarchy; because the people will have given up their right of choice, and transferred it to one man. It is not me alone that is denounced, but every friend I have in congress from the state.—They are taken up one by one by name, and denounced by the president as federalists, and opponents of his administration. In what have they opposed his administration? Did they vote against his three millions, session before last? Did they vote against expunging the journals? Not they. Not one of them. Yet they are opposed to his administration, because they will not vote for the person he has selected as his successor. It is true as to one of them, Mr. Huntsman, when the president was asked how he was, he said he did not know, he was hanging on the fence, and it was doubtful which side he would fall.

In justice to that gentleman, I must be permitted to state, if there be any sincerity in man, he is as much on the Tennessee side of the fence as any of his colleagues. I have thought it right, on this occasion, to bring this point plainly and distinctly to your view, that you might every one see the reason why I and my friends are denounced as federalists, opposed to the administration and the antipodes of our esteemed and venerable chief magistrate.

The real offence which I have committed is not the abandonment of my principles, but because I would not abandon them. Not because I became the tool of the opposition, but because I would not unite with an old and valued friend in doing that, under evil and mischievous advisers, which, before God, I believe would rob the people of that freedom for which our fathers "perilled their lives, their fortune and their sacred honor," and bring reproach upon our memory, when we are numbered with the dead.

I have no controversy with the chief magistrate; I aspire to nothing which he wants. If there is any controversy, it is between my countrymen, who solicited the use of my name and him. They have solicited me to let my name be used as his successor, and I have consented. This is my whole offence. If there be any thing wrong in it, who is the cause of it? It is not me that is to be put down, and disgraced in this controversy, if Tennessee is either coerced or coerced to surrender her choice. It is the people who have placed me in the position I now occupy. The Savior of the world, when upon earth, found among the small number of his disciples one Judas who not only sold, but betrayed him for his thirty pieces of silver. It were vain for one of my humble attainments, who has nothing to offer but his best efforts to promote the public welfare, to hope that all who professed to be his friends would continue to act up to that character. Already have I found more than one Judas, who, by parting with their interest in me, have received, or expect to receive, more than twice their thirty pieces. I doubt not there may be more who will yet do so; but if it is the will of Providence that the use of my name shall be of service to my fellow men, it will be so ordered that, in place of such hollow-hearted and false friends, I will receive the aid and support of many honest men, who will desire nothing but that the government may be preserved in its purity: and if there lives the man who can induce a majority of the people of Tennessee to abandon their own principles and sacrifice an individual, whose name they have placed before the public to gratify his wishes, then will I admit that I never understood the character of the people among whom I have lived for almost fifty-two years.

My enemies have made a mistake. They imagine that, as I have determined not to advocate my own pretensions for the most dignified station upon earth, they may charge me with what misconduct they please, in my present station, as senator, and that I must remain silent, or lay myself liable to the charge of indecency in electioneering. I cannot and will not act on any such false delicacy. If I am unjustly accused—if I am charged with entertaining principles which do not belong to me, and these charges are made to my own constituents, by a character of the highest standing, it is due to you, it is due to the country, and it is just to myself, that I not only repel the charges, but disclose the motives of those who make them.

My political friends who have placed my name before the public are Jeffersonian Jackson republicans, professing and practising now the same creed they professed in 1828. Our motto is "not words but deeds." We determine to prove our "faith in our creed by our practices." If for this we are to be denominated "newborn whigs," we are content. Instead of being placed in the company of aliens and strangers, we will still be in the embraces and arms of our long-cherished principles. "Names are nothing," said our venerable chief magistrate in his letter to Mr. Monroe. Dress a tory in the garments of a whig, and he will be a tory still. As well might we expect to conceal the wolf by putting on the covering of the lamb, as to suppose that we conceal the conspirator who seeks to deprive the people of their right of suffrage, by throwing over him the name of a "good old Jeffersonian democratic republican."

All political power is vested originally in the great body of the people. It all resides there yet, except such portions of it as they have vested in their different agents, to be used for their benefit. They have reserved to themselves the right freely to choose the two highest officers known to the constitution, in that mode pointed out by it.

This right is the sure rock upon which the whole superstructure rests. Upon it I have planted myself. "The rains of slander may descend, the floods of calumny may come, the winds, the storms, and the tempests of denunciation may beat upon me," but there will I remain unmoved, until some political earthquake shall shiver both it and me to atoms.

In conclusion, permit me to add, that as to our venerable and esteemed chief magistrate, if in any thing I have said there is the appearance of unkindness or want of respect, it was certainly not intended. He has assailed me openly for my conduct while in your employ. One of the first laws of our nature is self-defence. I obey that law, as a freeman, whose rights and reputation are dear to him. We disagree in opinion on a most important subject. At our age, and every circumstance considered, it becomes us both to disagree in opinion, in good temper. In times past he has had his troubles, and in them he never was without a friend to justify or excuse his conduct when I was present. He has decreed that we shall separate, or I surrender that freedom for which my father fought. The first is the only alternative for a man determined to preserve his self-respect. He and I are poorly employed, if we lose our temper about human governments. In the course of nature they must soon cease to have any operation upon either of us. We must soon appear before a tribunal where the Judge himself will be the only witness. He cannot be misled as to our acts or our motives; and my prayer is, that, instead of applying the rules of strict justice to either, our errors, vices and infirmities may find forgiveness in His mercy.

If thanks from the fullness of a grateful heart would avail you any thing for your unshaken confidence and steady support under every change and vicissitude of life, I would pour them out as long as my strength would permit: but I feel that I have detained you already too long. I offer you the following sentiment, in which I hope you will cheerfully unite:

Practices not professions—The republicans of Tennessee are now what they were in 1828—Jacksonians, following the creed of that apostle of liberty, Thomas Jefferson. Should this entitle them to a "new-born" name, they care not, provided they are left in the full enjoyment of their unalienable right of suffrage. They would rather have even a bad name with good principles, than bad principles concealed under a good name.

APPROPRIATIONS AND OFFICES CREATED IN 1836.

OFFICIAL PUBLICATION.

Report of the clerk of the house of representatives of the United States, in compliance with the "act to authorise the appointment of additional paymasters, and for other purposes," passed July 4, 1836.

Office of the house of reps. of the U. S. July 11, 1836.

In obedience to the 6th section of the "act to authorise the appointment of additional paymasters, and for other purposes," passed July 4, 1836, which requires "the secretary of the senate and clerk of the house representatives, as soon as may be, after the close of each session of congress, to publish a statement of all appropriations made during the session; and also a statement of the new offices created, and the salaries of each; and also a statement of the offices, the salaries of which are increased, and the amount of such increase," the clerk of the house of representatives submits the accompanying statements.

WALTER S. FRANKLIN,
Clerk house of reps.

Statements of appropriations made, new offices created, with the salaries of each, offices the salaries of which are increased, with the amount of such increase, during the first session of the 24th congress of the United States of America.

July 11, 1836. Prepared by the clerk of the house of representatives, in obedience to the sixth section of the act of July 4, 1836, entitled "an act to authorise the appointment of additional paymasters, and for other purposes."

Statement of appropriations made during the first session of the 24th congress of the United States of America, specifying the amount and object of each.

H. R. 51.

For the civil and diplomatic expenses of government for the year 1836.

For pay and mileage of the members of congress	$556,480
For pay of the officers of congress	83,700
For contingent expenses of the senate	53,700
For contingent expenses of the house of representatives	200,000

H. R. 216.

For compensation to the president and vice president, the secretary of state, the secretary of the treasury, the secretary of war, the secretary of the navy, and the postmaster general	60,000
For clerks and messengers in the office of the secretary of state	19,200
For clerks, machinist and messenger in the patent office	5,400
For incidental and contingent expenses of the department of state, including the expense of publishing and distributing the laws	25,000
For contingent and incidental expenses of the patent office	2,000
For the superintendent and watchmen of the north east executive building	1,500
For contingent expenses and repairs of the buildings	3,350
For compensation to the clerks and messengers in the office of the secretary of the treasury	14,000
For the first comptroller of the treasury	3,500
For the clerks and messengers in the office of the first comptroller	18,850
For the second comptroller	3,000
For the clerks and messenger in his office	10,450
For compensation to the first auditor	3,000
For compensation to the clerks and messenger in his office	14,900
For compensation to the second auditor	3,000

For compensation to the clerks and messenger in his office	17,900	For messengers in the pension office	1,250	For compensation to the chief justice, the associate judges and district judges of the United States	81,400
For compensation to the third auditor	3,000	For contingent expenses	5,500	For the expenses of printing the records of the supreme court of the United States	3,000
For compensation to the clerks and messengers in his office	27,050	For the superintendent and watchmen of the north west executive building	1,250	For the salaries of the chief justice and associate judges of the District of Columbia and the judges of the orphans' courts	9,500
For compensation to the fourth auditor	3,000	For two additional watchmen to assist in watching the buildings of the war department	1,125	For compensation to the attorney general	4,000
For compensation to the clerks and messengers in his office	17,750	For the contingent expenses of said building	3,183	For compensation to the clerk in his office	800
For compensation to the fifth auditor	3,000	For compensation to the clerks and messengers in the office of the secretary of the navy	11,850	For a messenger in said office	500
For compensation to the clerks and messenger in his office	12,800	For the contingent expenses of the office	3,000	For contingent expenses of said office	500
For compensation to the treasurer	3,000	For compensation to the commissioners of the navy board	10,500	For the compensation to the reporter of the decisions of the supreme court	1,000
For compensation to the clerks and messenger in his office	7,150	For compensation to their secretary	2,000	For compensation to the district attorneys and marshals	12,900
For compensation to the register	3,000	For compensation to the clerks, &c. in their office	7,550	For defraying the expenses of the supreme, circuit and district courts of the United States, including the District of Columbia	345,000
For compensation to the clerks and messengers in his office	24,200	For contingent expenses of the office	1,800	For the payment of sundry pensions, granted by special acts of congress	1,350
For compensation to the commissioner of the general land office	3,000	For the superintendent of the south west executive building and the watchmen	1,250	For the support and maintenance of light houses	279,986 67
For compensation to the clerks and messengers in his office	20,500	For contingent expenses of said building	3,350	For a light house at or near Michigan city, Indiana	3,000
For compensation to the solicitor	3,500	For compensation to the two assistant postmasters general	5,000	For a light house on Pottawatamie island, at the entrance of Green bay, in lake Michigan	3,000
For compensation to the clerks and messenger in his office	3,950	For compensation to the clerks and messengers in the office of the postmaster general	40,350	For a light house or beacon light on one of the piers at the harbor of Oswego, on lake Ontario	1,200
For compensation to the secretary to the commissioners of the sinking fund	250	For contingent expenses of said office	7,500	For the removal of the light house now on the north end of Goat island, near the harbor of Newport, Rhode Island	8,700
For the contingent expenses of the several offices of the treasury department, viz:		For superintendency of the building	1,640	For erecting a frame building for a beacon light at the end of west pier, at the mouth of Black river, Ohio	2,600
For the office of the secretary of the treasury	12,500	For additional clerk hire for the year eighteen hundred and thirty-five	41,984 07	For finishing and securing the foundation of the beacon light at Cunningham creek, Ohio	225 50
For the office of the first comptroller	1,500	For the services of a topographer and map maker for obtaining materials	1,000	To make good a deficiency in the funds for the relief of sick and disabled seamen	15,000
For the office of the second comptroller	1,500	For the surveyor general in Ohio, Indiana and Michigan,	2,000	For expense in relation to the relief of certain insolvent debtors	3,000
For the office of the first auditor	800	For the surveyor in Illinois and Missouri	2,000	For surveying the public lands in Ohio	650
For the office of the second auditor	500	For clerks in the office of said surveyor	2,000	For surveying the public lands in the Michigan peninsula	15,000
For the office of the third auditor	600	For the surveyor general in Arkansas	1,500	For surveying the public lands in Michigan territory, west of the lake, and in Wisconsin territory	50,000
For the office of the fourth auditor	1,000	For the clerks in said office	1,800	For surveying the public lands in Illinois and Missouri	40,000
For the office of the fifth auditor	1,000	For the surveyor in Louisiana	2,000	For surveying the public lands in Mississippi	10,000
For the office of the treasurer of the United States	700	For the clerks in the office of said surveyor	1,500	For surveys south of the thirty-first degree of north latitude	2,500
For the office of the register of the treasury	3,000	For the surveyor in Mississippi	2,000	For survey of the Creek lands	1,000
For the office of the solicitor of the treasury	1,000	For the clerks in the office of said surveyor	1,000	For survey of the public lands and private land claims in Florida	16,450
For the office of the commissioner of the general land office	39,000	For the surveyor in Alabama	1,500	For survey of the public lands and private land claims in Louisiana	85,000
For tract books, other articles of books, and all other contingent expenses	9,500	For the surveyor in Florida	2,000	For surveying public lands in Arkansas	25,000
For translations, passports and sea letters	800	For the secretary appointed to sign patents for lands	1,500	For the salaries of keepers of the public archives in Florida	1,000
For stating and printing the public accounts	1,400	For the commissioner of the public buildings in Washington city	2,000	For the discharge of such miscellaneous claims not otherwise provided for	12,000
For compensation of superintendent and watchmen of the buildings occupied by the treasury department	2,100	For the purchase of books for the library of congress	5,000	For the salaries of ministers to Great Britain, France, Spain and Russia	36,000
For contingent expenses of said buildings	10,000	For salary of the principal and assistant librarians, and for contingent expenses of the library and pay of messenger	3,850	For the salaries of the secretaries of legation to the same places	8,000
For compensation to the clerks and messengers in the office of the secretary of war	12,650	For services rendered by Charles Meehan as assistant in the library	398	For the salaries of secretaries of legation to France, Spain and Russia, for the year eighteen hundred and thirty-five	6,000
For compensation to extra clerks when employed in said office	8,600	For compensation to the officers and clerks of the mint	13,900	For salaries of the charges des affaires to Portugal, Denmark, Sweden, Holland, Turkey, Belgium, Brazil, Chili, Peru, Mexico, Central America, New Granada, Prussia and Venezuela	63,000
For contingent expenses	3,000	For compensation to the laborers employed in the mint	21,000	For the salary of the dragoman to the legation to Turkey and for contingent expenses	6,500
For books, maps and plans for the war department	1,000	For incidental and contingent expenses of the mint	51,100	For outfits to ministers to Great Britain, France and Spain	27,000
For messenger in the bounty land bureau	400	For expenses of new machinery and apparatus	20,000	For outfits of charges des affaires to Mexico, Prussia and Peru	13,500
For compensation to the commissioner of Indian affairs	3,000	For compensation to the governor, judges and secretary of the Michigan territory	10,000	For the salaries of the agents for claims at London and Paris	4,000
For compensation to the clerks and messenger in his office	4,950	For contingent expenses of the Michigan territory	350	For the expenses of intercourse with the Barbary powers	12,000
For contingent expenses	800	For compensation and mileage of the members of the legislative council of Michigan, pay of the officers of the council, fuel, stationary and printing	6,425	For the relief and protection of American seamen in foreign countries	80,000
For compensation to the clerks and messenger in the office of the paymaster general	4,600	For arrearages of the expenses of the legislative council of the territory of Michigan	3,553 40	For completing "Digest of Commercial Regulations of Foreign Countries."	5,883 84
For contingent expenses	300	For compensation to the governor, judges and secretary of Arkansas territory	9,000	For completing the custom house at New Bedford	7,900
For compensation to the clerks and messenger in the office of the commissary general of purchases	4,200	For contingent expenses of the Arkansas territory	350
For compensation to the clerks in the office of the adjutant general	2,950	For compensation and mileage of the members of the legislative council of the territory of Arkansas, including fuel, stationary, printing and distribution of the laws and journals	10,000
For contingent expenses	1,000	For compensation to the governor, judges and secretary of the Florida territory	11,700
For contingent expenses of the office of quartermaster general	600	For the contingent expenses of the Florida territory	350
For compensation to the clerks in the office of the commissary general of subsistence	3,800	For compensation and mileage of the members of the legislative council of Florida, pay of officers and servants of the council, fuel, stationary, printing and incidental expenses	9,406
For contingent expenses of said office	2,500	For arrearages of the expenses of the legislative council of Florida	908 60
For compensation to the clerks in the office of the chief engineer	2,950	For allowances to the assistant counsel and district attorney in Florida	4,000
For contingent expenses of said office	1,000
For compensation of the clerks in the ordnance office	2,950
For contingent expenses of said office	800
For compensation to the clerk in the office of the surgeon general	1,150
For contingent expenses of said office	400
For contingent expenses of the topographical bureau	1,235
For the salary of the commissioner of pensions	2,500
For salaries of clerks transferred from the office of the secretary of war	4,900

Digitized by Google

or water; freight and ferriages; purchase or hire of horses, oxen, mules, carts, wagons and boats for transportation of troops and supplies, and for garrison purposes; drayage and cartage at the several posts; hire of teamsters; transportation of funds for the pay department; the expenses of sailing a public transport between the several posts on the Gulf of Mexico, and procuring water at such posts as from their situation require it	148,000
For contingencies of the army	8,000
For two months' extra pay to re-enlisted soldiers, and for the contingent expenses of the recruiting service	10,564 44
For arrearages prior to the first of July, one thousand, eight hundred and fifteen	3,000
For removal of the troops from Port Gibson to some eligible point on or near the western frontier line of Arkansas, and for a fort to be built upon the point selected	50,000
For completing the barracks, quarters, storehouses, hospitals, &c. at Key West	10,000
For hospitals at the various military posts at which they may be required by the proper officers of the medical department	100,000
For the national armories	330,000
For the armament of the fortifications	200,000
For the current expenses of the ordnance service	75,670
For the purchase of gunpowder	100,000
For arsenals	231,502
For supplying the arsenals with certain ordnance stores	188,575
For the purchase of cannon balls	29,488
For the medal heretofore ordered for gen. Ripley	300
H. R. 524.
For the renewal of the gold medal presented to gen. Morgan, in honor of the battle of the Cowpens	150
H. R. 259.
For the military academy of the United States, for the year eighteen hundred and thirty-six.
For the pay of the officers, cadets and musicians	56,012
For subsistence of officers and cadets	39,566
For forage of officers' horses	1,152
For clothing of officers' servants	330
For the expenses of the board of visitors	2,000
For arrearages for the same in eighteen hundred and thirty-four and eighteen hundred and thirty-five	382 48
For fuel, storage, stationary, printing, transportation and postage	12,585
For repairs, improvements of buildings, grounds, roads, wharves, boats and fences	9,066
For pay of adjutant's and quartermaster's clerks	950
For philosophical apparatus	800
For models for the department of engineering	500
For models for the drawing department, apparatus and contingencies for the department of chemistry, and instruments and repairs for the mathematical department	1,285
For the purchase and repairs of instruments for the band	392
For incidental expenses of the department of artillery	50
For increase and expenses of the library	800
For miscellaneous items and incidental expenses	2,293
For completing the chapel	3,500
For compensation to the acting professor of chemistry	600
H. R. 264.
For payment of volunteers, and for raising an additional regiment of dragoons or mounted riflemen	300,000
H. R. 374.
For an arsenal in the state of North Carolina	45,000
H. R. 459.
For arsenal at Charleston, South Carolina	20,000
H. R. 406.
For the protection of the western frontier, by making military roads and constructing military posts	100,000
	$4,607,286 92

H. R. 54.
For certain fortifications of the United States for the year one thousand eight hundred and thirty-six.
For the preservation of Castle Island and repairs of Fort Independence, Boston harbor	100,000
For Fort Warren, Boston harbor	200,000
For Fort Adams, Rhode Island	200,000
For Fort Schuyler, East river, N. York	200,000
For repairs of Fort Columbus and Castle William, and of officers' quarters on Governor's island, N. York harbor	20,000
For Fort Delaware, Delaware river	150,000
For Fort Calhoun, Virginia	150,000
For Fort Caswell, Oak island, North Carolina	60,000
For fortifications, Charleston harbor, S. Carolina, and preservation of the site of Fort Moultrie	150,000
For Fort Pulaski, Cockspur island, Geo.	170,000
For Fort Pickens, Pensacola, Florida	50,000
For the fort at Foster's bank, Florida	160,000
For incidental expenses attending repairs of fortifications, and for the purchase of additional land in their neighborhood	100,000
For contingencies of fortifications	10,000
For the purchase of land and the right of way on Throg's Point, in Long Island sound, being the balance of the appropriation of one thousand eight hundred and twenty-six, carried to the surplus fund	2,000
And the following sums, necessary to close accounts in the office of the third auditor, viz:
For a fort on Cockspur island, Georgia	2,308 56
For contingencies of fortifications	61 08
For fortifications at Pensacola	1,223 31
For the armament of fortifications, in addition to the amount included in the bill making appropriations for the support of the army for one thousand eight hundred and thirty-six, including cannon, mortars, howitzers, gun carriages, howitzer carriages, mortar beds, powder, cannon balls, shells and for the transportation of the ordnance and ordnance stores; and for the purchase of twenty acres of land adjoining the Kennebeck arsenal, Maine; and the purchase of land inclosing the rear of the public ground with a brick wall and coping at the Frankford arsenal, Pennsylvania; and constructing a forging shop, one story high, seventy-five by forty feet, of brick, at the arsenal, Watertown, Massachusetts; and in the purchase of a steam engine of eight-horse power; and for the quarters of officers at Fort Monroe arsenal	400,000
For Fort McHenry, Redoubt Wood, and Covington battery, near Baltimore	50,000
For Fort Monroe	150,000
For the repairs of Fort Marion, and the sea wall at St. Augustine, Florida	50,000
For knapsacks and camp equipage for volunteers or militia	52,705
For accoutrements for the army	102,305
For the purchase of sites, and the construction of arsenals for the deposit of arms in Arkansas, Missouri, and at Memphis, in Tennessee	42,256
For the purchase of twenty-eight fire engines, and the necessary apparatus	22,400
For store houses at Newport, Kentucky	1,500
For purchasing seven acres of land, including the site of the powder magazine attached to the arsenal at St. Louis, Missouri	2,100
For erecting a piazza in front of the building occupied as barracks, by the troops at Augusta arsenal, Georgia	450
For barracks, quarters, storehouses, hospital, stables and materials for the same, at Fort Jesup, Louisiana	25,000
For rebuilding the wharf at Fort Wolcott, Newport, Rhode Island	500
For constructing a wood yard and wharf at Fort Monroe, Virginia	1,000
For constructing a wharf at Fort Severn, Maryland	1,000
For rebuilding and repairing barracks, quarters, hospital, storehouses and materials for the same, at Fort Brady, Michigan territory	5,000
For the purchase of land adjoining Fort Sullivan, and the buildings thereon	3,750
For the following objects, in addition to former appropriations for the same:

For national armory at Harper's Ferry	77,897
For national armory at Springfield	45,000
For the purchase or manufacture of light brass and iron field artillery, and for construction of field artillery, carriages, caissons, and travelling forges	187,190
For the construction of furnaces for heating cannon balls	12,000
	$2,907,645 95
H. R. 53.
For the naval service for the year one thousand eight hundred and thirty-six.
For pay of commissioned, warrant and petty officers, and of seamen	$2,318,017 16
For pay of superintendents, naval constructors, and all the civil establishment at the several yards	68,340
For provisions	782,263 75
For repair of vessels	1,065,000
For medicines and surgical instruments and hospital stores	41,000
For the navy yard at Portsmouth, N. Hampshire	67,000
For the navy yard at Charlestown, Massachusetts	199,575
For the navy yard at Brooklyn, N. Y.	84,300
For the navy yard at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania	11,750
For the navy yard at Washington	37,500
For the navy yard at Gosport, Va.	167,000
For the navy yard at Pensacola	49,000
For wharves and their appendages at the navy yard at Pensacola, as recommended by the secretary of the navy	150,000
For powder magazine	17,000
For wall or inclosure of brick, three yards high, and a half-yard thick, as recommended by com. Dallas	24,000
For ordnance and ordnance stores	64,900
For sundry enumerated contingent expenses	$21,600
For contingent expenses not enumerated	8,000
For completing the steam vessel building at Brooklyn	150,000
For completing the navy hospitals near New York and Boston, repairing the naval asylums, and all other hospitals, and for preparing suitable burying grounds	45,410
For completing the powder magazines near New York and Boston	19,200
For pay of the marine corps	163,077 25
For provisions for said corps, serving on shore, and for servants and washerwomen	32,517 72
For clothing	38,655
For fuel	14,589
For the purchase of sites, and the erection of barracks, near the navy yards at Charlestown, Gosport and Pensacola	150,000
For repairs of barracks near Portsmouth, New Hampshire, and for repairs at the other stations	8,900
For transportation of officers, non-commissioned officers, musicians and privates, and expenses of recruiting	6,000
For medicines, hospital stores, surgical instruments and pay of matron	4,139 29
For military stores, pay of armorers, keeping arms in repair, drums, fifes, flags, accoutrements and ordnance stores	2,000
For contingent expenses of said corps	17,977 93
For arrearages for defraying the extra services and expenses of the officers of the navy engaged in the survey of the coast and harbors of the United States	1,500
For a surveying and exploring expedition to the Pacific ocean and the the South seas	150,000
	$6,276,312 10
H. R. 52.
For the payment of pensioners.
For the revolutionary pensioners	847,629
For the invalid pensioners	105,825
For pensions to widows and orphans, payable through the office of the third auditor	2,000
	$455,454
[TO BE CONCLUDED IN OUR NEXT.]

NILES' WEEKLY REGISTER.

FIFTH SERIES. No. 5.—VOL. I.]

BALTIMORE, OCTOBER 1, 1836.

[Vol. LI.—WHOLE No 1,305.

THE PAST—THE PRESENT—FOR THE FUTURE.

EDITED, PRINTED AND PUBLISHED, BY WILLIAM OGDEN NILES, AT $5 PER ANNUM, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

☞ The president of the United States left the Hermitage on the 11th ult. for Washington, and is daily expected in that city.

☞ The majority of the Maryland senatorial electors continue in session at Annapolis, and manifest no disposition to adjourn—they have published a reply to the exposition of the minority, which is inserted in the present sheet. We also publish certain proceedings of the citizens of Baltimore at a town meeting held on Monday last in Monument Square, and the resolutions of the Van Buren central committee of Frederick county, recommending the withdrawal of the delegate ticket, and the card of the candidates on complying with the request. Contrasted with these latter proceedings, our readers will also find certain resolutions of the citizens of Allegany county, censuring the conduct of the recusant electors, and a card from the Van Buren candidates avowing their determination to remain in the field. In our next number, we will place on record a number of other important papers in relation to the late movement, that a full and impartial history of it may be preserved.

MARYLAND LOANS. The Annapolis Republican of the 27th inst. after stating that the executive council had adjourned, after having remained in session from Tuesday, the 20th, until Saturday last, says—They considered it, we believe, inexpedient, in the present posture of our state concerns, to appoint commissioners to negotiate the loans authorized by the act of the last general assembly. According to the tenure of that act, the treasurer of the western shore, on Friday last, being furnished with all the requisite vouchers, subscribed, on the part of the state, for the stock of the Baltimore and Ohio rail road. The means of fulfilling the obligation thereby contracted depends upon the credit of the state in the cold, calculating money market of the world. If a doubt is entertained as to the stability of government proposing to contract, the price of the risk is nearly graduated accordingly by those whose subsistence depends upon the interest of the money they lend. The law of last session, on the other hand, wisely limits the price at which a debt shall be incurred, and a premium is to be obtained which, when invested as a sinking fund, will be adequate to the discharge of the debt before it will become due. Unless these terms can be obtained, no loan is to be made. Our readers can form their own opinions as to the present prospects of the progress of our internal improvements.

SINGULAR COINCIDENCES. When, in 1787, the legislature of Pennsylvania had before them a resolution for calling a convention to deliberate upon the proposed constitution of the United States, the minority endeavored to defeat, or, as they said, to postpone the passing of the resolution, by absenting themselves from the house. That minority consisted of nineteen members. In the debate on the subject, a member, Mr. Clymer, remarked that three years before, a similar secession had taken place; that the same number of members, namely, nineteen, had then absconded, and there was the same number of laws ready to be compared on the table. The seceders from the Maryland college of electors are also nineteen. In the Pennsylvania case two of the recreant members were brought to the house, volens volens, by the citizens, but with as much respect as the occasion would allow, and a very amusing debate took place on the question whether they were present or not. The resolution, however, was passed, the convention called under it, and the constitution accepted by an overwhelming majority of the people. [U. S. Gazette.

CHOLERA AT CHARLESTON. The reports were, on 21st, 10 cases, 4 white and 6 black, 1 dead—1 more death of the preceding day's report; 22d, 10 cases, 2 whites, 8 blacks, 1 dead; 23d, 27 cases, 5 whites, 22 blacks, 9 dead—one death of the preceding day's report; 24th, 12 cases, 1 white, 11 blacks, 4 dead.

NEAPOLITAN INDEMNITY. Treasury department, September 30, 1836. Notice is hereby given, that the nett proceeds of the third instalment of the Neapolitan indemnity, will be paid on the 5th day of October next, by the bank of America, either in New York city, or at the Maine bank, (Portland), the Commercial bank, (Portsmouth), the Merchants' bank, (Boston), the Girard bank, (Philadelphia), the Union bank, (Baltimore), or the bank of the Metropolis, (Washington), as may be most convenient to the holders of the certificates.

LEVI WOODBURY, secretary of the treasury.

EXTENSIVE INDIAN EMIGRATION. The Columbus Sentinel says the Creek Indians have nearly all been gotten under way, within the last week, for their destined homes at the west. Opothe Yohola's party, a party from the neighborhood of Wetumpka, the Ufaulas on the Tallapoosa, a party from the neighborhood of Gunter's landing, another from Taladega, and Tuckabatchee Hargo's party from Chamber's county, estimated in all at upwards of thirteen thousand souls, are now all on their way to the far west. Jim Boy and his warriors, with a few others from the lower towns, all under the command of colonel Lane, go to Florida, leaving their families at home until their return, when they will put off for the same destination. And thus will the Creek territory be entirely rid of this unfortunate but troublesome population.

BENJAMIN RATHBUN. A committee of the creditors of Benjamin Rathbun having arrived at Buffalo for the purpose of investigating his affairs, finding that his personal liberty was indispensable to their operations, directed their counsel, Samuel Dutcher, esq. of Albany, to make an application to the circuit court, then in session in Buffalo, to admit Mr. R. to bail. Mr. Dutcher, on Thursday the 22d ult. made a motion to that effect, assisted by H. K. Smith and Thos. T. Sherwood, esqs. counsel for Rathbun, which was argued at length and strenuously opposed by Geo. P. Barber, esq. district attorney; and the court in the afternoon determined to admit him to bail in the sum of $60,000. On Saturday last the requisite security was given, and Mr. Rathbun returned to his family.

The Buffalo Commercial of the 24th ult. says that, the investigations already made have given confidence to the committee that the property assigned, will, under judicious management, extinguish all the claims on his estate.

MICHIGAN. The returns, thus far, of the election for fifty delegates to assemble at Ann Arbor, to express their assent or dissent to the late act of congress for the admission of Michigan, with the prescribed boundary, &c. render it certain that a large majority of delegates have been elected who are opposed to the stipulations of that act. In this event Michigan will have no senators or representative in congress at the next session, nor any vote in the coming election of president and vice president of the United States.

RAIL ROADS can be traced back, as it is stated, to the year 1690. At that period coals came to be a substitute for wood as fuel in London and other parts of England. The consequence was that from the increased demand at the mines, the greatest inconvenience accrued in conveying the coal from thence to the ships, as well as immense expenses for the horses and laborers employed; for the purpose of removing which, wagon roads were at first made, consisting of wooden rails or ledges, fitted to allow the wheels of the wagons to run upon them. By this improvement it was found that a single horse could easily draw on these rails, which had previously required three or more horses. In 1793 a farther improvement was made by substituting cast iron rails instead of the wooden ones. The old fashioned wagons, however, being still employed, were found inconvenient. These were dispensed with about the year 1770, and instead of one great wagon, a number of smaller wagons, each capable of containing one or two tons, were used, being linked together with chains. By thus diffusing the weight over a larger portion of the railway, the principal cause of the failure in the first instance was removed. From this time cast iron railways began to be constructed as branches to canals, and in some places as roads of traffic from one place to another.

AMERICAN AND BRITISH SHIPPING. The British house of commons at their last session, having appointed a select committee to inquire into the cause of shipwrecks in the British merchant service, that committee in August last made a long and detailed report, which (says the N. York Times) we find in the London Courier of the 18th and 20th of August. The report contains the following deserved compliments to the mariners of the United States:

21. Experiments in American vessels. That the happiest effects have resulted from the experiments tried in the American navy and merchant service to do without spirituous liquors as an habitual article of daily use; there being at present more than 1,000 sail of American vessels traversing all the seas of the world, in every climate, without the use of spirits by their officers and crews, and being in consequence of this change, in so much greater a state of efficiency and safety than other vessels not adopting this regulation, that the public insurance companies in America make a return of five per cent. of the premium of insurance on vessels completing their voyages without the use of spirits, while the example of British ships sailing from Liverpool on the same plan have been productive of the greatest benefit to the ship owners, underwriters, merchants, officers and crews.

45. American shipping. That the committee cannot conclude its labors without calling attention to the fact, that the ships of the United States of America, frequenting the ports of England, are stated by several witnesses to be superior to those of a similar class amongst the ships of Great Britain, the commanders and officers being generally considered to be more competent as seamen and navigators, and more uniformly persons of education than the commanders and officers of British ships of a similar size and class trading from England to America, while the seamen of the United States are considered to be more carefully selected, and to be more efficient; that American ships sailing from Liverpool to New York have a preference over English vessels sailing to the same port, both as to freight and rate of insurance; and higher wages being given, their whole equipment is maintained in a higher state of perfection, so that fewer losses occur; and as the American shipping have increased of late years in the proportion of 12 1-8 per cent. per annum, while the British shipping have increased within the same period only 1 1-2 per cent. per annum, the constantly increasing demand for seamen by the increasing maritime service of the whole world, the numbers cut off by shipwreck, and the temptations offered by the superior wages of American vessels, cause a large number of British seamen every year to leave the service of their own country, and to embark in that of the United States, and these comprising chiefly the most skilful and competent of our mariners, produce the double effect of improving the efficiency of American crews, and in the same ratio, diminishing the efficiency of the British merchant service.

BRITISH SHIPPING IN 1235. Total number of ships cleared inwards and outwards in 1835—in foreign trade only, 16,531

Of which there were
British ships 11,740
Foreign do. 4,749
Tonnage in the foreign trade 2,952,854

Of which there were in
British ships 2,203,026
In foreign 749,828

The total number of ships belonging to Great Britain (small coasters not included) in 1832—was 24,655
Tonnage of the above 2,617,638

Of the above number of ships, there were belonging to Great Britain 19,684
To the British colonies 4,771

PUBLIC LANDS. The United States owns, at present, of surveyed lands, as follows: In Ohio, 4,100,492 acres; in Indiana, 11,459,156 acres; in Illinois, 17,234,001 acres; in Missouri, 17,443,429 acres; in Alabama, 22,586,058 acres; in Mississippi, 12,924,301 acres; in Louisiana, 9,683,526 acres; in Arkansas, 14,223,175 acres; in Michigan, east of the lake, 9,104,697 acres; in Michigan, west of the lake, 4,924,220 acres; and in Florida, 6,792,909 acres; making a totality of (in round numbers) about 132 millions of acres, now surveyed, of which 122 millions have been offered at public sale, and are now subject to entry, and about ten millions are new lands, lately surveyed, and ready to be proclaimed for sale. Besides this mass of surveyed lands, (it is, in fact, four or five millions more, for the surveyed lands of this year are not included), the United States own, in the same states and territories, about 100 millions of acres to which the Indian title has been extinguished, but which is not yet surveyed, and about 80 millions of acres to which the Indian title has not been extinguished; and all this exclusive of the Des Moines purchase, an acquisition of great value and extent, west of the Mississippi and north of the state of Missouri, and which of itself will form a great state, and complete the line of states on the west bank of the Mississippi, from the Gulf of Mexico to the Falls of St. Anthony. Here, then, is an aggregate of about 340 millions of acres of public land within the limits of the states and territories, of which 132 millions are now ready for sale, and 100 millions more can be ready as soon as it can be surveyed.

[Globe.]

EASTERN AFRICA. A Mr. Isaacs has lately published in England an account of Eastern Africa. He left St. Helena a boy of sixteen, in 1824, with lieutenant King, on a voyage to Natal, on the south eastern coast of Africa, in quest of a lieutenant Farewell, who had years before sailed for that port, and was supposed to have fallen into the hands of the savages. The voyage was made in safety, till the vessel entered the bay of Natal, where she was wrecked. All on board were, however, saved, and the shipwrecked crew had the pleasure of meeting with Farewell's people, who had obtained the protection of the Zoola king, and had been treated by him with every mark of friendship. Mr. Isaacs landed in Natal in 1825, and during his residence penetrated some hundreds of miles into the interior, carrying on a bartering trade with the natives for ivory. He describes the country as very beautiful and well watered; the air as mild and genial; the soil as rich, loamy and productive; and the climate as healthy and agreeable to Europeans. The natives, particularly the Zoolas, are a fine race of people, and capable of social and moral improvement. The Europeans shipwrecked at Natal formed a settlement, in which they were assisted by the natives, who were docile, obedient, and much attached to the "Melangoes," or white men; and there is every reason to conclude that the place would have soon become the nucleus of a flourishing colony, but for the avarice and strife of the officers. While Mr. Isaacs lived there lieutenant King died, and lieutenant Farewell was murdered, while making an excursion in the interior. The former was a gallant, generous, noble-minded man, whose conduct procured for him the respect of his own people, and the veneration of the natives, who looked up to him as a being superior to all others.

[N. Y. Evening Post.]

SHIP BUILDING ON THE LAKES. The Buffalo Daily Journal states that the most approved plans or proportions for steam vessels built for the lakes, are as follows: In a vessel of from 180 to 200 feet in length, one foot beam to about six and three-quarters of length, with 12 feet of hold, &c. Therefore, to construct a vessel with a much less beam than 29 or 30 feet in 200, with a hold of 12 feet, would be thought impolitic, as the requisite strength or safety could not be long maintained under the operation of a heavy engine, and of course her attainment of a great velocity would be much lessened or impeded. We believe that some of the best boats which have been remarkable for great velocity, have been as 1 to 10; but, as before observed, their strength is thought insufficient to answer a good purpose on the lakes.

ADVICE OF WILLIAM PENN—extracted from one of his epistles to his emigrants, which we do not recollect to have seen publicly noticed:

"Now, for you who think of going to Pennsylvania, I have this to say to you, by way of caution. If a hair of our heads fall not to the ground without the Providence of God, remember your removal is of greater moment. Wherefore, have a due reverence and regard to his good Providence. Go clear in yourselves and of all others. Be moderate in expectation; count on labor before a crop, and cost before gain; for such persons will best endure difficulties, if they come, and bear the success, as well as find the comfort that usually follow such considerate undertakings."

AN ANTIQUE. A venerable and beautiful relic of old times has been disinterred, as one may say, from a burial of thirty years and more, in Norfolk. This is nothing less than the mace, employed before the revolution, by the borough court, as a symbol of authority. It is of richly wrought silver, three feet six inches long, and weighing eighty-six ounces. It consists of a polished staff, having a crown on the top, with the British arms, the rose and thistle, and other devices. The crown weighs twenty-eight ounces. From an inscription on the staff, it appears that this beautiful piece of workmanship was presented to the corporation of Norfolk in 1753, by the hon. Robert Dinwiddie, then lieutenant governor of Virginia. In 1790, it was committed to the clerk of the borough court, for safe keeping, and by him deposited, in 1805, in the vault of the Virginia bank, where it has ever since remained undisturbed and almost forgotten.

SUPPOSED VOLCANO AT SEA. An intelligent ship-master writes from the coast of California, that on his passage out, "Thursday, April 9, 1835, in lat. 7, N. long. 99 West, we observed some little things floating by the ship, which on examination proved to be small stones, resembling pumice stone. From their appearance I should suppose they were of volcanic origin. We sailed upwards of fifty miles through them, thinly scattered over the surface of the sea.

We were about 540 miles from the continent, 600 from Gallipagos, and 600 from Clipperton rock. The north east trade winds prevail in these latitudes. I can form no satisfactory opinion whence they came, excepting from some volcanic eruption at the bottom of the ocean. As I send you specimens, you can forward part of them to the learned professor Silliman.

"The meteoric shower in November, 1834, was seen in California."

[Boston Daily Adv.]

CURE FOR CHOLERA. At Laybach, in Illyria, the cholera broke out on the 25th of June last, and in four days more than 400 of its inhabitants, out of a population of 20,000, died. On the 5th day, there was an earthquake,—from which moment the intensity of the disease was past. It may therefore be set down as a probable fact, that earthquakes are a cure for the cholera. Thunder and lightning have frequently been found to exert a similar influence in staying the progress of the epidemic. Desperate diseases require desperate remedies. Artificial thunder, or the firing of cannon, has sometimes been resorted to for the same purpose. But a mere shaking of the atmosphere does not occasion that radical change in it which is effected by the natural phenomena above mentioned. Nevertheless, the firing of cannon has sometimes seemed to be of use in dissipating the causes of the disease.

[N. Y. Jour. of Com.]

ITEMS OF FOREIGN NEWS

From Paris papers to the 24th and Havre to the 26th ultimo.

Accounts had been received at Paris of the formation of the new ultra liberal ministry in Spain. M. Isturiz, minister of foreign affairs and of the interior and president of the council. Gen. Soane, minister of war, Senor Galiano, of marine, and Salarte of finance. The minister of justice not yet appointed.

Gen. Evans was in daily expectation of a reinforcement of 1,200 Spanish troops, who had obtained leave to march through the French territory, and on their arrival it was supposed that he would make a vigorous attack on the Carlists. The head quarters of Don Carlos were at Villa Franca.

Reports were circulated in Paris that serious disturbances had taken place at Madrid, and that the queen had been compelled to reinstate M. Mendizabal; but no authentic intelligence of this nature had been received.

The French government had despatched another expedition in search of La Lilloise, from which no tidings have been received for three years.

It is said that Talleyrand was dangerously ill. The following is an extract of a letter from Rome. It is generally known that the family of Lucien Bonaparte reside at Canino, of which he is the proprietor. Two of his sons, giving way to the impetuosity of youth, engaged in a quarrel with the game keeper, when the latter was killed. The Roman government immediately sent a detachment of carabinieri to the spot, with an order to arrest the two princes; they, however, made resistance, and were joined by other young men of the neighborhood.—The officer commanding the detachment was shot dead by a pistol from one of the princes. The contest became general; several persons were wounded, and among others, the sub-lieutenant and two carabinieri dangerously so. The government force finally obtained the victory; one of the princes escaped, but the other was immediately sent under an escort to Rome, where he arrived on the 8th, shortly after the news of the event had reached government. It is said that the lieutenant who was killed is related to a prelate.

WAR IN FLORIDA.

The Tallahassee Floridian of the 17th announces the arrival of the Tennessee volunteers, and speaks of them as a fine body of men, brave, handsomely equipped and well mounted. They are encamped about six miles from Tallahassee. Active preparations were making for the winter campaign, which will be directed by general Call in person, general Jesup serving as a volunteer. According to the Mobile Commercial Register, the force destined for the campaign consists of 600 regular troops, 500 marines, 1,600 Tennessee volunteers, and if deemed necessary 1,500 or 2,000 of the Alabama volunteers now in service. The force of the Indians is stated at 2,500 men, 1,500 of which are Seminoles (formerly Red Sticks from the Creek nation) 500 captured negroes, and 500 Creeks who have recently joined Oseola.

It is said that the Indian warriors engaged by general Jesup, confidently predict that there will be no fighting—that the Seminoles will surrender as did their people, when our troops were sent against them. The experience of the past is against this opinion, and we will not be disappointed if Oseola not continues to elude the vigilance of our troops (which cannot penetrate their fastnesses in the hammocks and cypress swamps without great loss) until the arrival of the warm weather, when the country, as recently, will be left exposed to his depredations. He is not a foe to be despised, and such is the discipline of his warriors, that an officer who has witnessed their conduct in the field, expresses an opinion that as soldiers and light troops they cannot be surpassed.

From the following extract of a letter, received at Jacksonville, E. F. it will be seen that Newnansville has been relieved:

On the 5th instant, a train, with a supply of provisions, arms, and ammunition, left Gary's Ferry for Newnansville, under the command of major Pierce. Expecting to encounter the Indians on the march, major Pierce directed all the effective force, of 12 companies to accompany the train. The command consisted of about 150 regulars and mounted Florida volunteers, and two pieces of artillery. It reached Newnansville on the evening of the 7th, and supplied that post with subsistence for two months, one howitzer, with 140 rounds of ammunition, canister shot and shells, and 10,000 musket ball cartridges, and as large a reinforcement of regular troops was also left as the commanding officer of that station considered adequate to its protection. It is highly gratifying to be enabled to state that Newnansville continues healthy."

Major Peirce had returned to Gary's Ferry. The following honorable testimonial of his conduct in the battle at Fort Drane was transmitted to him by governor Call. The major is a gallant officer, and enjoys the confidence of the troops and citizens in a high degree.

Tallahassee, Sept. 6.

SIR: I have received through col. Crane a copy of your official report of the battle at Fort Drane. Your conduct, and that of the officers and men under your command on that occasion, reflects on you and upon them the highest credit. To have beaten Powell, with one third of his force, was a proud achievement—and I take this occasion to tender my acknowledgment to you and to your command for this gallant service. I am sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant, (Signed) R. K. CALL, commander-in-chief.

Major R. K. Pierce, U. S. army.

Major Pierce has been invested by gen. Call with the independent command of all the troops west of the St. Johns, with orders to col. Crane to send immediately all his disposable force from St. Augustine and east of St. Johns, to join maj. Pierce, who is to report to the governor direct.

We see it also stated, that gov. Call expects to be in the field by the 25th inst. with 1,600 Tennessee volunteers and the middle Florida militia, and that major Pierce is to join him with all the regulars west of the river St. Johns.

In a letter from lieutenant col. Mills, dated Fort Gilliland, 9th instant he says:—"An expedition under captains Beckham and Gilliland, (during my absence), on Sunday pursued a party of Indians, killed one and took six horses from them. No loss on our side."

Information was brought to New Orleans by the schooner Emblem, which arrived at that port on the 15th from St. Marks, that a fight had taken place on the 2d September near Tallahassee, between 104 men under major Sands, and 200 of Oseola's warriors, in which the latter were driven from the field leaving 12 of their slain behind. Major Sands had but one man wounded and none killed.

Since the above was in type we received the following:

Tallahassee, Sept. 18, 1836.

SIR: I have the honor herewith to enclose copies of my last letters to general Jesup and commodore

Dallas, which will explain to you fully my plans for conducting the war against the Seminole Indians. Since the date of those letters, I have had a personal interview with general Jesup, in which with great magnanimity, he declines the command of the army in Florida, and proposes to serve under my authority as a volunteer. It is gratifying to me to know that the country will have the benefit of his talents and experience, even though he declines the nominal command of the army. He will be in Florida by the 25th inst. with the forces under his command. I shall march to-morrow at the head of the Tennessee and a small number of the Florida volunteers, and hope to meet the enemy before the first of October. I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. K. CALL,

Commanding the army in Florida.

The hon. Lewis Cass, secretary of war.

Extract of a letter to a gentleman in Washington, from an officer of the Tennessee volunteers, dated "Tallahassee, Florida, Sept. 18, 1836.

"On to-morrow morning we take up the line of march for the Wythlacoochee. Our brigade is 1,400 strong, under the command of general Robert Armstrong, of Nashville. There will be about 1,000 Floridians and 800 regulars, with 2 or 300 Indians in co-operation with us. We have great ambition and high hopes of putting an end to the war."

The Jacksonville Courier Extra is filled with the details of an inroad made by the Indians; a hot pursuit, and the Indians final escape. These barbarities have been perpetrated chiefly upon females.—The Indians have appeared within seven miles of Jacksonville. The house of Mr. Higginbotham was attacked. There the party in pursuit found two men (one of whom was sick) and two ladies on guard with guns in their hands. The Indians had not reappeared after their being beaten off before Mr. Higginbotham left to report in town. On a slight examination, they saw a number of bullet marks in the house made by the Indian's shots—and saw the clothes of the younger lady, through which the ball passed, grazing the skin of her person. She had arisen early, and going out towards a branch for water, when the attack was made upon the house, between which and herself were the Indians. The Indians fired at her, and one ball passed her side so close as to cut through all her clothes but touched not her body. She ran to the branch and seated herself therein, and subsequently made her way into the house, past the Indians, in safety.

After a little time spent in search, the party under maj. Hart found where the Indians encamped the night previous, not three-fourths of a mile from the house, and also the spot where the horses were tied while the attack was made on the house.—From that spot our party took the Indians' trail.—It struck the Tallahassee road, and these daring devils kept the road for 10 miles, riding at full speed as their trail showed, till they came to Mr. McCormick's house, then occupied by Mr. Johns and wife, on the road 18 miles from Jacksonville. Our party in pursuit reached this house about 4 o'clock, P. M. It was a smouldering pile of ruins. On examination, maj. Hart states that they found the calcined bones of a human being burned in the house. A piece of the back-bone was found with some flesh upon it. The skull was to be seen, but at the touch it fell in and crumbled to pieces. The bones were mostly reduced to ashes.

Near the house was a quantity of hair, to appearance that of a female. Thence the trail seemed to be still on the road, and our men pushed on with increased speed and anxiety, to overtake the murdering Indians. They expected to do so at the next house (Mr. Lowder's) 7 miles ahead. On arriving there they found the house abandoned by the two females and their children who lived there, but unvisited by the Indians. The inmates had evidently fled in alarm, as the dinner they were preparing was still at the fire and warm, of which our party partook—and then, doubtful of the trail they were on, set out for Mr. Sparkman's four miles distant. It was after night when they reached Mr. Sparkman's nor was it possible for them to determine whether they were on a trail or not. Great distress filled the house of Mr. Sparkman. There was Mrs. Johns—her arm laid open with a rifle bullet—a ball shot through her neck—and her scalp, so far as the hair extended over her head, most horribly and mangled taken off—and she still alive! Good God! who can hear the recital of such a deed, and not feel horror stricken at the cold-blooded barbarity! Who can hear and not feel a thirst to revenge such outrage?

She was able to state the circumstances of the attack upon herself and her husband. They were about twenty yards from the house, between 10 and 11 o'clock Thursday morning, when the Indians showed themselves by the corner of a fence close to them. The Indians fired and wounded Mr. Johns in the left breast. Both ran for the house, entered and closed the door. The Indians came up and fired on the house. They called out in English, and told them if they would come out they should not be hurt. The Indians looked in through the cracks (the house was made of logs) and told Mr. Johns and his wife to come out; but they did not consent to do so, but begged for their lives. The order was given in English to charge the house.

The Indians burst in—shot Mr. Johns through the head—he fell, and his wife fell upon his body. An Indian dragged her to the door, and said to "hi-e-pus-cha," "go." She asked where, and he pointed toward the head of Black creek. At that moment she saw another Indian level his rifle—she threw up her arm—the Indian fired—and the ball passed lengthwise through the flesh of her arm, passed through her neck.

She fell. The Indian came up—dragged her into the hall of the house, (the house is what is called a double log-house), and then taking out her comb and tearing the string from her hair, scalped her. He did not tear the scalp off, but cut it as butchers take the skin from a beef. During this operation Mrs. Johns was sensible to what was doing. She saw the Indian's scalping knife, and says it was a round pointed common butcher-knife—she lay as if dead. The Indians plundered the house, taking a pair of portmanteau containing $100, and every thing of value—set fire to the house, and one Indian applied the torch to her clothes—left the house—gave a hoop, and hurried off in the direction, she thought from their noise, off the head of Black creek. She felt the fire of her clothes upon one leg, and as soon as she dared to move so much, grabbed in her hand a quantity of her own clotted blood, with which she put out her burning clothes. And then when the Indians were out of hearing, she got up—saw her murdered husband's body unscalped and unmoved from the position in which he at first had fallen except that the Indians had put one foot up on the edge of a table.

The house was on fire—she made her way out of it, fainting every few minutes. She reached the edge of a swamp—got some water, and there lay down, unable to get farther. There she remained till 10 o'clock, P. M. when three men, Mr. Johns, the father of her husband, Mr. Lowder, and McKinney came along. They saw the burning house all fallen in, except the corners of the logs, the body therein burned—and discovered her, whom they took to be an Indian at first, then a squaw. On advancing to her, what must have been the feelings of her father-in-law, to recognize in the butchered, bloody, almost lifeless woman, his daughter-in-law—and to know that the burned human frame in the house was that of his son! These three men carried her to Mr. Lowder's, and, giving the inmates of the house the alarm, and taking them, the two females and their children, went on to Mr. Sparkman's—where our party in pursuit of the Indians found them, as above stated.

It was the trail of these men that was mistaken for that of the Indians. The Indians were all mounted, and the trail was therefore easily mistaken.

That these cursed butchers, so bold as to come within seven miles to commit their depredations, should escape from so ready, rapid, and hot pursuit, and that, too, from men of known bravery and perseverance, and determined at every hazard to overtake and chastise them, gives us great mortification and pain. They did all that man could do, except running, only 20 strong, and without any forage, into the nation after them, which would have been folly and rashness.

SON OF RAMHOUN ROY. A son of the celebrated Indian prince, Ramhoun Roy, has been for some years in England, where he is receiving an education, with a view of ascertaining the fitness of the Hindostanee character and mental capacity to fill civil offices in India. He is about eighteen or twenty years of age.

THE WESTERN FRONTIER.

It appears by information derived by the St. Louis Bulletin from the Arkansas papers that a requisition has been made by gen. Arbuckle on the state for troops to quell the disturbances existing among the recently emigrated Creeks and Cherokees, originated, as is supposed, by the rival claims of Roly McIntosh and Nea Mathla to the chieftaincy of the nation. Under the impression that the conflict might become one of a sanguinary character, and involving the safety of the frontier, gen. Arbuckle has made the requisition, and it is believed that in no other emergency than an actual infringement of the rights of the border settlers, will the general consider himself authorized to interfere.

The troops ordered into service, together with the governor and his aids, proceeded, on the 25th, to Fort Towson, where they are to be armed and equipped, and will doubtless be ordered across to Fort Gibson, to await general orders. No one seems for a moment to entertain the idea that these troops will be required on our Mexican frontier.

The last Arkansas Gazette says: "We learn, by a letter from an intelligent gentleman residing in one of the Indian nations west of Arkansas, that the Indian country, at this time, is in a state of considerable excitement. The Creeks and Cherokees have held a secret council, at which it is believed, they formed an alliance, to sustain the present Creek chief, Roly McIntosh, in authority, against the claims of Nea Mathla, who was the second chief all the Creeks east, and is now at the head of a numerous band of his people approaching their new country west. A great national ball-play took place, a few days ago, in a remote part of the Cherokee nation, where it is supposed their plans were developed to the great body of the Cherokee people. But nothing has yet happened, or is likely to happen, to disturb the slumber of the good people of Arkansas."

TEXAS.

By an arrival at New Orleans, in 4 days from Galveston island, information is received that the Texian army (3,000 men), had removed their encampment to the Garcite, near Matagorda bay.—The trial of Antonio Lopez, for attempting to rescue Santa Ana, was to take place in a few days. The election for president took place on the 5th instant. General Samuel Houston was elected president, and M. B. Lamar vice president.

Another attempt, which proved unsuccessful, has been made by a Spaniard, of the name of Payes, to rescue Santa Ana. Upon being examined he stated that he was employed for the purpose by the Mexican consul of New Orleans.

The New Orleans Bulletin of the 15th contains the following proclamation:

From the Red River Herald, 5th Sept. 1836.

PROCLAMATION.

Nacogdoches, Texas, 29th Aug. 1836.

TO THE CITIZENS OF TEXAS: From reports which have reached me, I am induced to believe that our situation is unsafe: some Cherokees with the native Castilians, have returned to the Cherokee village from Matamoras, and say that the Indians of the Prairie and a Mexican force are about to attack this portion of Texas. The counties of San Augustine, Sabine, Tanahaw and Beval, as well as Nacogdoches, will forthwith organize the militia of each county. The following requisitions are made to sustain the United States force at this place, until reinforcements can arrive at this place from general Gaines, viz:

Sixty-four from San Augustine, 56 from Tanahaw, 56 from Sabine and 33 from Beval. The troops will repair to this place with the least possible delay, and report to the commanding general as soon as they arrive.

This call is made through the judges of the several counties, and must be regarded as the law of the land; the troops will only be detained a few days, as soon as gen. Gaines can send reinforcements to this place they will be discharged.

Let arms and ammunition be brought; at least one hundred rounds are requested. The commander-in-chief will be with the freemen of Texas. If they have to meet an enemy all the men of Texas must have their arms in order—to have liberty, we must be watchful.

(Signed)

SAM. HOUSTON,
Commander-in-chief.

MICHIGAN.

The following letter from Mr. Schoolcraft, in reply to one from John S. Norvell, one of the senators elected from Michigan, contains much valuable information in relation to the new territory annexed to Michigan, by the recent act of congress.

Detroit, Aug. 5, 1836.

DEAR SIR: My reply to your note of the 2d inst. respecting the extent and value of the territorial domain annexed by congress to Michigan, must necessarily be brief, and will exclude some data, which I could not well introduce, without reference to my manuscript notes. I have no hesitancy, however, in stating such facts as can readily be embodied, nor have I any objection to express my opinions of the value and character of the region in question, whether they may accord with, or are opposed to public opinion. Little time and search are required to show, that congress have conferred a territorial boundary of magnificent extent upon the people of Michigan, presenting very prominent geographical features, and of varied value. Portions of it are the mere development of sublime scenery, which appertains to that comparatively elevated portion of the continent. Mountains and lakes, plains, rivers and forests, spread over it, with a boldness of outlet, which may be said to constitute almost a peculiar type in North American geography. This division embraces the mineral district of the region. Much of it falls under the influence of causes, which render it of little or no value in an agricultural point of view; but it may in future be regarded as the seat of mining operations.

Extensive ranges of the looser sand rock have been broken down, in some former changes, and redeposited at a lower altitude, in extensive plains and ridges; which are now covered with forests of pine. These sandy plains are crossed by rivers, having a free descent towards the lakes, and afford the requisite power of converting the logs into lumber. Millions of acres of such land, which have suffered comparatively little by fire, stretch out between the sources of the Wisconsin, Montreal, Ontonagon and St. Mary's; and it is probably within the limits of a just estimate to say, that several hundreds of mill seats, of adequate power, are furnished by the district.

Such is the aspect of the larger portion of the lake Superior lands. They extend southerly, to a point undetermined, between the waters of that lake and of lake Michigan. The line of their termination is the point of junction between the agricultural limestone lands of the west, and the marine sand plains, and the pine heights, above indicated. Accuracy, with respect to either kind of the soil, either in acres or in miles, must be the result of explanation and survey. The northern shores of lakes Michigan and Huron, as far as point Detour, are exclusively limestone, where rock is at all visible, and this rock is characterized by the usual indications of gypsum or brine springs.

The growth of trees in the newly acquired boundary is as various as the soils, and is, in general, an accurate index of its fertility. The sugar maple is interspersed throughout the tract, being separated by the sand plains, the mountain masses, and by tracts of spruce lands. The tree forms, however, so considerable a portion of growth, that the natives can always, by a timely removal of their camps, rely on the manufacture of sugar. The beach tree is found as far north as Point Iroquois, at the outlet of lake Superior. I regard the white oak, however, as a surer test of soil and climate together, than any other of our forest trees. I doubt whether this tree attains to any size in a climate that is not decidedly congenial to agriculture.—The rock maple and the red oak are found, at intervals, throughout the northwest. I have seen both species at the source of the Mississippi, but have not observed the beach north of the locality mentioned, nor the white oak north of the straits of Michilimackinac.

The entire area comprehended within the state limits, west of lakes Michigan and Huron, cannot be stated with accuracy, in the present unsurveyed state of the country; but I cannot, if I have used proper data, vary greatly from twenty-two millions of acres, about six millions of which were ceded by the lake Indians in the treaty concluded with them at Washington in March last. Five-sevenths of the whole area can be visited in vessels, such as ordinarily navigate the lakes. The interior abounds in minor lakes, and enjoys a singular advantage of communication by its streams and portages. The area included between the three great lakes, north of Mackinac, which will probably hereafter be denominated the upper peninsula of Michigan, embraces the present settlements at Michilimackinac and Sault Ste. Marie. Taking the whole extent of the annexed territory, from Menomonee river, following the curves of the coast to the northwest limits of the state at the mouth of the Moniauw,* or Montreal river of lake Superior, it affords not less than 720 miles of additional coast navigation; and embraces in the distance, several large bays and excellent harbors. About forty large and some sixty small streams discharge their waters into the three lakes constituting portions of the boundary.

Lake Superior lies at a level, estimated to exceed a fraction of 40 feet above lake Huron, and is connected with it by the straits of St. Mary's. The principal fall is to be overcome at Sault Ste. Marie, where the river sinks its level about twenty-two feet in three-fourths of a mile. Vessels can ascend to this position. Three ship locks, of about seven feet lift, would open a communication with the lake above, adding, according to the various estimates of the circumference of lake Superior, from 1,200 to 1,600 miles of the coast navigation to the voyage from Buffalo. The structure of the country is favorable to the execution of the work, at a reasonable expense. The soil is clay and gravel, underlaid by sand stone.

The number of fishing stations about the coast is numerous, and the points where fish are taken are annually increasing, under the incipient enterprise of the inhabitants. It would be difficult to estimate the present value of the trade or commerce. Several thousand of barrels of fish are put up annually. One thousand barrels were brought from lake Superior the present season. The waters of this lake are probably destined to yield an exhaustless supply of this article. Twenty thousand dollars worth of fish may be expected to be barreled in the upper lakes the present year. An adequate capital vested in fishing vessels, nets and other articles, would increase the amount indefinitely. There is reason to infer, that the present reproduction of fish annually exceeds the number taken.

Leisure does not permit me to continue these remarks. It is proposed to resume them at the earliest possible moment after my return to the upper lakes, and to give short notices of the several topics to which you have done me the honor to request my attention. I am, sir, with much regard, yours, &c. HENRY R. SCHOOLCRAFT.

Hon. John Norvell, Detroit.

THE JUGGERNAUT PAGODA.

From the London Nautical Magazine for August.

The town of Pooree, in which the Juggernaut Pagoda stands, is situated about a mile from the sea, and is enclosed by jungle; the general feature of the immediate country being extensive sandy plains. It is a most perfect Hindoo town, considered very holy, and at present contains ten thousand inhabitants. These are mostly connected with the services of the temple, and at the arrival of the pilgrims are fully occupied in affording lodging, &c. The houses are just a remove from huts, except a few belonging to the priests or rich farmers. The fronts are mostly daubed with rude outlines of their gods, all monsters; some with five arms, and others without any; some with elephants' heads, and these are intermixed with peacocks and Hindostanee characters. Then there are numerous pagodas and hospitals for sick pilgrims, which, together with the temple, and other curious buildings within its surrounding walls, truly present a most singular mass; a jumble of squalid superstition and vague idolatrous grandeur.

The whole population, men, women and children, elephants and favorite cows, are all marked on the forehead with various colored paint; the painting seems to be arbitrary, and to depend on the caprice of the priest. The colors employed are red, yellow and mud, and they are placed in dots, lines and curves. This general daubing, which is common all over Hindostan, takes place on mornings and evenings; and, thus secured from evil, the people go forth to their labors with confidence and alacrity. I witnessed a mahout, or driver, with his elephants, in the act of being marked. The man had first dots and lines placed on his forehead, and a stripe down his nose; then the elephant, kneeling down, received his portion, being similar to the mahout's, a yellow stripe running the whole length of his trunk; his tusks were capped with brass, and certainly when he walked towards a piece of water close by, he looked a most noble animal. On reaching the margin of the tank, he set up a loud shout, and commenced spouting the water up, seeming highly delighted.

The town roads are very deep and filthy, being several feet lower than the houses, the ascent to which is by steps cut out of the sides or walls of the road, and a family may at times be seen walking up the steps, followed into the house by their favorite cow. These Bramanee cows are mostly white, and delicately formed, having deer-like legs. Their owners take delight in having their bodies fancifully tattooed, and their horns brass-tipped.—They are indeed highly favored throughout Hindoo India.

The temple of Juggernaut, or of "the lord of the universe," stands immediately without the town on its N. W. side. It is in latitude 19 deg. 48 min. 40 sec. N.; longitude 85 deg. 53 min. E. and lies nearly S. W. from Calcutta, above 250 miles, allowing for the windings of the Hooghly. Its entire height is 220 feet, and the hill on which it is built has a considerable elevation. This, with other minor temples and shrines, form the inner court; the walls being twelve feet high. Outside these walls are numerous other buildings, viz: temples, cook-houses, &c. and the whole stands within a square enclosure, with walls twenty feet high, and half a mile in extent. In the centre of each side of the square is a large gate; the principal one, facing the east, has a lion couchant on either side; hence it is called the Gate of the Lions. They are very rudely formed, and in point of sculpture are fit associates for the great idol god, Sri Jee, and his companions. The greater part of the exterior walls of the temple are covered with representations of numerous Hindoo gods, and other objects of idolatry; the walls of the courts and gates are also similarly ornamented.

In front of the Gate of the Lions is an open space, in the centre of which is a handsome basaltic pillar, and here the bazaar is held; from this there is a good road to the westward, over a fine level piece of ground bordered with numerous shrines, two large tanks or lakes, and a pleasant country.—It is along this road that the procession of the cars pass. There are several festivals held during the year; but the Rutt Jatra, or the feast of the cars, is the most celebrated, and attracts multitudes from the remotest part of Hindostan. The idol at this festival is brought to the Gate of the Lions, and placed on a stupendous car, from forty to fifty feet high, supported on cumbrous wheels. The car has all the tinsel and gaudiness, flags and other decorations, befitting barbaric grandeur.

The idol, a misshapen block of wood, being clothed and decorated, and the whole being rendered as imposing as possible, crowded with priests and their satellites, and preceded by richly caparisoned elephants, bearing flags and tinkling bells, is dragged forward by hundreds of men, women and children, amid the shouts and yells of a countless multitude, the horrid din of the noisiest and rudest description of music, and forms altogether such a scene of excitement and confusion as is beyond description. In this manner the car rolls heavily over the road above mentioned, leaving deep indents in its track, and wooing any excited victim to be crushed beneath its wheels, the car proceeds to a distance of a mile and a half, when it stops in front of a pagoda, with enclosures, &c. similar, on a smaller scale, to the one it left. At this pagoda the idol is feasted and remains some time.

Self-immolation, I was informed, is now of very rare occurrence, and that only three had taken place during the last two years; it was supposed one of these was an accident.

The car, or rath, I examined, had sixteen heavy solid wheels, the axletrees of the extreme wheels being the shortest, and gradually increasing in length to the centre axle; the two front and hind wheels were the nearest, and the centre ones the farthest apart.

The tax levied by government, (company's) on the pilgrims at this festival, is very considerable, being from five to three rupees each, according as they come from the northward or southward, and two rupees, 8 annas; for every week they remain.—The priests and their agents are also paid several rupees; the expense of which, with that of purchasing holy food and lodging, is felt as a heavy exaction on the greater number of these poor people, thousands of whom struggle onwards, with only the necessary tax secreted on some part of their persons, depending for subsistence, during their long and weary pilgrimage, on the precarious charity of the country through which they have to pass. Hundreds, who are unable to raise the required sum, are, by permission of the proper authorities, admitted gratis. Several Hindoo princes maintain hospitals for sick pilgrims, and otherwise contribute to the support of Juggernaut.

The great loss of life attending this festival, which takes place during the sickly season, either in May or June, is sufficiently manifest, the surrounding sands being thickly strewn with human bones. The great scavengers of India, the vulture, adjutant and crow, the jackall and Parian dog, here feast to satiety. Hence, during the greatest mortality, which, when cholera steps in, is awfully great, the atmosphere is scarcely tainted. A few hours are sufficient to strip a body; ants and other insects, with a scorching sun, quickly complete the skeleton; and the sand, moved by every breeze, in a short time covers the whole; and this home of death exhibits not a trace of the extraordinary scenes so lately enacted.

The Juggernaut festival is also celebrated, but on a very minor scale, at Trincomalee, Madras, near Calcutta, and other parts of India; and it is to be feared that there is very little, if any abatement, in the enthusiasm connected with this popular superstition, than which a more unintellectual or profligate system, perhaps never debased the human race.—Pooree being the fountain-head of this idolatry, offers a noble field for missionary labors; and a station being established there, may be of incalculable benefit.

Fifteen miles to the eastward of the temple, and at about its distance from the sea, are the ruins of the Kunnarecor, or Black Pagoda. This was formerly a place in much estimation, but having been struck with lightning, was in consequence desecrated. It may be known from seaward by its resemblance to a black building having a high spiral chimney, such as we often see in our manufacturing towns. On the coast to the westward of the temple, and at the distance of six miles, is the Narsingapatam Pagoda; it is very small, and its white top is just visible above a cluster of trees. Still farther to the westward is the Manikpatam Pagoda.

*So called by the Indians.

ATTACK ON JUDGE BERMUDEZ.

The following are the particulars of the horrible affair in New Orleans, alluded to in the last "REGISTER."

On Monday the 5th of September, judge Bermudez, let to bail a Mr. Giquel, who was imprisoned under a charge of having murdered a Mr. Brux in an affray which occurred, a short time previous, in one of the streets of New Orleans. It was apparent, says the New Orleans Bulletin, that public opinion was against the decision of the judge, and that some excitement was occasioned by it. Little, however, did we imagine that it would extend so far as to produce the lamentable results of Monday night. On this night it appears that some personal friend of Mr. Brux, who had been killed by Giquel, in company with several other individuals, feeling exasperated at the release of Giquel, and the judge who had been the author of it, proceeded to the residence of judge BERMUDEZ, with a view to lynch him, or to inflict some severe punishment upon his person.

"They knocked at the door of his house, which upon being opened by him, some individuals demanded if he were judge BERMUDEZ, and if he were, that he must go along or march with them. One of the individuals, Mr. Bailey, we are informed, put his hands on the judge, using some force, with a view to get him along, in consequence of which a scuffle ensued, which resulted in the death of Mr. Bailey, he being stabbed with a sword. A Mr. EAGAN was at the same engaged in an attack on the judge, and was killed by the discharge of a double barrelled gun, by a young man passing the night in the house of the judge. Upon the death of these individuals, the others in front immediately left. These are in substance the particulars of this lamentable business, so far as we have heard. That two young men of fine prospects, and holding a highly respectable standing in society, with a large circle of relatives and friends, to lament with bitterness their death, should have lent themselves in an evil hour to those most unfortunate and illegal measures, is to us a source of unaffected grief.

The New Orleans American of the 8th ult. says: "MERIDA, who was wounded on Monday night at the house of judge BERMUDEZ, has since died [making three killed on the occasion]. Woodlief, who was taken prisoner on the same night, has been liberated on bail."

The coroner's inquest which was held on the bodies of the killed, returned a verdict of "justifiable homicide."

It appears from further facts developed, connected with the death of the individuals who attempted to lynch judge Bermudez, that his wife performed a principal part in the scene, having with her own hand slain one of the deceased.

"Had it not been for her timely interference the assailants would have succeeded in their nefarious purpose. Four of them had seized the judge, and whilst he was struggling, she rushed into the room with his sword, with which he killed one, when he was almost down, by a back-handed stroke. She herself grappled another. A negro is also stated to have fought most furiously for his master and mistress. Bailey, one of the slain, was from Boston, and Eagan, the other, from St. Thomas. The judge is described as a very active man, somewhat above the middle size, and about 35 years old."

NEW GRANADA.

The following is an extract from a letter written at Bogota the first day of July last:

"The congress of New Granada adjourned the 29th of May, and in the course of their session took up the subject of internal improvements upon a grand scale, having passed an act making large appropriations of land for a rail or Macadamized road across the isthmus of Panama, with the exclusive privilege for forty-five years. This contract was obtained by col. Charles Biddle, a citizen of the United States, in conjunction with a few capitalists here, and promises, if completed, to be of immense importance to our commerce, and indeed to that of the whole world, as it must become, in a few years, the highway of nations to the Pacific ocean, and will enable our whaling ships to make their return every six months, instead of three years, as well as save a dangerous voyage around Cape Horn. In this matter the charge of the United States (gen. McAfee) gave all the aid in his power.

"A company has also been organized to make a road from Popayan to the Pacific, a distance of about thirty-three leagues; and, also, another company to construct a similar road from Buena Ventura, on the Pacific, to Cali, on the Cauca river, thirty leagues distant, which will open that rich valley (of Cauca) to our trade across the isthmus. Exertions are also making to open the canal from Barranca to Cartagena, which will connect all this part of the country, and that watered by the Magdalena, with Cartagena. If these projects succeed, this country will be open to our commerce in every direction.

"The congress also have passed a new decree, admitting our barrels, hogsheds, staves and hoops free of duty. This passed at the session of 1835, but was unfortunately encumbered with the alcabala duty on the last day of the session, which defeated the intention of congress. This is now removed, and will, of course, open the way for the exportation of sugar and molasses.

"A decree to sustain the public credit passed, which provides for the payment of the third part of the interest on the whole public debt. This decree sets apart the tobacco and public lands, as well as an eighth part of the customs.

"The payment of our claims on Colombia are deferred until the three states (Venezuela, New Granada and Quito) settle their proportions, which will not take place very soon, unless a mediator or arbitrator is called upon to decide, and the United States are the only nation likely to be called on.

"An attack was made upon one of our merchant vessels, called the Tuscarora, near Porto Bello. Satisfaction has been given in consequence of the interference of our charge. The offenders have been punished, and an order given that the goods which had been taken shall be restored. The representation of the charge was promptly attended to, and is a proof that this government intends to act with decision in relation to outrages committed on friendly nations within its borders." [Globe.

REFORM OR REVOLUTION IN MARYLAND.

TO THE PEOPLE OF MARYLAND.

The present momentous crisis evidently demands of the undersigned, twenty-one of the electors chosen by you on the first Monday of the current month, to elect, under the provisions of the constitution, a senate for the state of Maryland, that they should submit to your calm consideration the causes which have thus far prevented them from discharging their solemn trust, and the principles and views by which they have been governed in their endeavors to accomplish it.

Sincerely desirous of performing with scrupulous fidelity the duty devolved upon them, the undersigned, in conformity with the practice of every prior college of electors since the 14th day of August, 1776, determined to take for their sole and exclusive guide the constitution under which alone the office was created, its duties prescribed and themselves elected. Recurring to that instrument they found the 15th section to be in these words—"That the said electors of senate shall meet at the city of Annapolis or such other place as shall be appointed for convening the legislature, on the 3d Monday of September, 1781, and on the same day in every fifth year forever thereafter; and they, or any twenty-four of them, so met, shall proceed to elect, and by ballot, either out of their own body or the people at large, fifteen senators, (nine of whom to be residents of the Western, and six to be residents on the Eastern Shore) men of the most wisdom, experience and virtue, above twenty-five years of age, residents of the state above three whole years next preceding the election."

They also found that by an amendment of the constitution proposed by the act of 1822, ch. 204, and confirmed by the act of 1823, ch. 116, each elector of the senate, before he could act as such, was bound to take the following oath of office—"I do swear (or affirm as the case may be) that I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to the state of Maryland, and that I will, support the constitution and laws thereof; and that I will to the best of my skill and judgment diligently and faithfully, with out partiality or prejudice, execute the office of elector according to the constitution and laws of this state." And by the 18th section of the original instrument which is so far unrepealed, that such oath was to be taken by the electors immediately on their meeting. These provisions were too plain to be misunderstood—They are obvious as every organic law especially should be, to the dullest capacity; with our duty so clearly and specifically defined, we assembled in compliance with universal usage in the senate chamber at Annapolis, on Monday last, the third Monday in September, at 12 o'clock, and immediately qualified by taking the oaths of office—as however only twenty-one (the undersigned) did so assemble and qualify, as the constitution by its letter seemed to require that twenty-four should be present at the election of a senate, we waited patiently for the other nineteen members elect to join us—We knew that they were in the city and confidently anticipated that they would take the oaths of office in the course of the day and organise the college—A report however soon reached us that they had resolved not to unite with us, in the performance of a common manifest duty, except upon conditions, to be previously prescribed by them.

At first we did not credit the rumor. We did not believe it possible that any mere agents of the people of Maryland, selected for a specific purpose, the performance of a single and well defined duty, would gravely determine to make it depend upon any thing else than a fair construction of the constitution and the laws. We could not suppose that we, who were known to be under the most sacred and solemn obligation to execute a trust faithfully and conscientiously, could be approached with a proposition of bargain touching the performance of our duty. We never for a moment entertained the idea of trafficking upon such a subject; and a proper self-respect, together with the palpable obligations of duty, precluded all of us from listening to such a proposition coming from any quarter, however respectful in its language; and still less could we receive it from any other than a member of the college, duly qualified as such. Our duties were most clearly pointed out by the constitution, and we were not only bound as good citizens to support it, but our very oath of office made it our particular and sacred duty to uphold it in all its integrity.—The votes we were to cast for senators were not to be given as our votes, but as those of the people of Maryland. They had by their constitution laid down the rules, and the only rules, which were to govern us; and we should have been false to them, and false to our oaths, if we had permitted any other to be prescribed to us.

We soon ascertained that there was too much truth in the rumor to which we have referred, and that a misguided partizan feeling was threatening the state with anarchy and its terrible results. Hoping for a returning sense of duty, we continued in session nearly the whole of each day, until Wednesday last, the third day of our session, when, without taking the oaths of office, the whole of the nineteen electors left the city of Annapolis, and the state without a senate. Whether they are to return or not, depends upon you. It becomes you to act promptly and decidedly. Be not deceived by the cry of reform. Many of the undersigned, and those by whom they were immediately elected, are in favor of reform to a certain extent and by constitutional means. Revolution is not reform. The history of the world reads us awful lessons of the former. Nothing can justify it, except, in the language of your bill of rights, "the ends of government are perverted and the public liberty endangered, and all other means of redress are inefficient." Can these things be predicated of Maryland, of a constitution adopted by men as pure, free and patriotic as ever lived? Time may have rendered some of its provisions unsuitable to the present condition of the state. Some changes are proper and necessary, but who can say that liberty is manifestly endangered, and that all other means of redress are ineffectual, but revolution.

It is for you, freemen of Maryland, to decide upon the destiny of your state, whether she is to continue the pride and boast of her sons, or be involved in all the horrors of revolution. Do not deceive yourselves; the moment an effort is made, unauthorised by the constitution, to organize a different government—the moment it is understood that we are resolved into the original elements of society—the moment it is attempted to force upon the people a new constitution, in any other mode than that provided by the existing instrument. Maryland ceases to exist. Once gone, she will be no more, forever.

We now propose briefly to examine the grounds upon which your nineteen agents seek to justify their conduct. They are found in an address for the first time published in the city of Baltimore, after they had abandoned their trust at Annapolis. You are there told that it is not the purpose of these gentlemen to meet us in college, and that the power which was delegated to them is surrendered into your hands, and that no senate, because of their absenting themselves, can be constitutionally chosen, or will hereafter exist in Maryland under the present constitution.

Waving, for the present, all question as to the right of such agents to surrender their office, what are the reasons given for their conduct? we have a right to examine them, because they are designed to cast upon us the responsibility of the present alarming crisis of affairs. We are told that they would have been willing to have gone into the election, to have made a senate whose powers would have been necessarily limited by the constitution as it is, if before doing so the undersigned should have given them a pledge to vote for eight persons as senators to be named by them, and this pledge they assert they had a right to exact, because they received a majority of all the votes taken at the electoral election, and desired some radical changes in the constitution and form of government. Passing by, for the present, the question whether electors of the senate could, consistently with their oaths, and the nature of the trust confided to them, give any such pledge, let us see the results to which the principle of the nineteen would lead.

In the first place it involves a subversion of the very constitution we had sworn to support by the virtual substitution of numerical for constitutional majorities. It requires of the majority of the college to surrender their judgments and their oaths to the will of a minority. It destroys the only ground upon which a representative republic can be maintained, and consequently aims a fatal blow at all our forms of government, state and general. This might be shown by a variety of illustrations. One will be sufficient. A candidate for the presidency (Mr. Van Buren for instance), might be elected by a very large majority of the electoral votes, a constitutional majority, and his right to office would be clear beyond all doubt. By recurring, however, to the votes given in the different states, at the same election, it might be that an overwhelming numerical majority was against him. For example—Suppose the following states to vote for Mr. Van Buren, in the order, and by the majorities given, to wit:

New York	40	electors by 500 majority.
Pennsylvania	30	500
Virginia	23	500
Kentucky	15	500
Ohio	21	500
Tennessee	15	500
Massachusetts	15	500
	158	3,500

Here would be 158 electors, a considerable majority of the whole number, elected by a majority of only 3,500 votes. Now suppose all the other states, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Vermont, Louisiana, Indiana, Alabama, Mississippi, Illinois, Maine and Missouri, were to elect their 130 electors, all opposed to Mr. Van Buren, by majorities in each of 5,000 votes, or in all 85,000, there would be a numerical majority against him of 81,500 votes. Now what would be thought of the one hundred and thirty minority electors, if they were to require of the president elected by a constitutional majority to resign in favor of the candidate of their choice, because they had been elected by a large numerical majority of all the votes given in the union, and that to such majority he was decidedly obnoxious.

What would the nineteen, who, as they proclaim to you, now refuse to unite with us upon such a ground alone, say to such a proposition and above all what would be said by every good citizen, every lover of his country, if, failing in the election of their own candidate, the states electing the minority electors should refuse to perpetuate the constitution of the United States, by refusing to send senators or delegates to congress? Can any man doubt that such a course of conduct would receive, as it would deserve, the indignant reprobation of every freeman in the land? It is unnecessary to give any other example of the dangerous tendency of such a doctrine. Give it full force and the government of the union and of every state composing it, is destroyed. It is at war with the theory and practice of all representative republican governments. They cannot exist an instant under its influence, and we solemnly warn you against giving it a momentary sanction.

But, in this particular case what becomes of the principle of the nineteen, as applied to themselves. Which of the undersigned was elected by so small a popular vote as the elector from Annapolis, and yet he is one of those claiming the right to dictate to a majority of the college, because he and his associates, as they say, represent the larger part of the white population of the state. Now which of the counties has not more than double the population of that city? They maintain that the undersigned do not represent the people of their respective counties, and should not therefore, select senators from such counties, except at their nomination. If this doctrine be sound, what reason can be assigned why any elector has the right to vote upon his own judgment and conscience for any other senator of the whole fifteen than the one who may be selected from his own particular county? Why is it that we are not as much the representatives of the people of Baltimore, as are the electors, from Caroline county, or as much entitled to choose a senator for Frederick county as are the electors from Queen Anne's. We find these four gentlemen, a part of THE NINETEEN, representing the smaller counties and elected by fewer popular votes than many of the undersigned, and yet they are of the number who claim to dictate terms to us, upon the gratuitous assumption that they represent the larger portion of the population of the state. It is impossible, not to perceive the gross injustice of such pretensions. What public reason can exist, why greater power should be allowed to them than to the majority of the college? Or what propriety is there in considering them the especial representatives of the more populous part of the state? Is it because there is some magic influence in being an advocate for the election of Mr. Van Buren to the presidency of the United States. Will a mere party name invest electors, chosen under their own state constitution, with powers utterly subversive of the very constitution, which, if they qualify, they swear to support? Have his partisans the uncontrolled right to violate clearly defined constitutional duties, to destroy long established forms of government, if it is believed his election will be thereby promoted? The honest friends of that candidate, and doubtless he has many such, may hereafter deeply deplore the excesses into which, in times of high political excitement, some partisans seek to involve them. The question now in Maryland is infinitely above all mere questions of presidential preference. It is a question of constitutional freedom. If the state government is to fall by the means now taken to overthrow it, the calamity will be felt long after the names of Harrison, White and Van Buren shall have been forgotten. We never can acquiesce in the demands of the nineteen unqualified electors. Our rights and powers are known to and derived from the constitution alone. The whole body of electors represent the people of the whole state, elected from separate districts, on a particular day, and in a prescribed form.

They are not elected to subvert the views of any political division of the people of any county or city from which they may respectively come, but bound by the most solemn obligations to their country and their God, to be faithful, and true allegiance bear to the state of Maryland, by supporting her constitution—as it is, they are not invested, nor was it designed that they should be invested with any power to render negative a single one of its provisions.

If they have a right to disregard any one article, they may with equal propriety refuse to acknowledge the whole. If any nineteen of them refuse to elect a senate because the majority will not violate their own plain and palpable duties, by permitting them to select a majority of the senate, they may, with like reason, hereafter, upon a similar plea of numerical majority, deny to the Eastern Shore her constitutional right to six members of the body. In a word, there is not a single wholesome provision by which the territorial rights of the two great sections of the state are secured by the present constitution, which may not, and in all probability will not, be subverted by this heresy of the absolute and controlling power of a numerical majority, and the mere agents of such a majority may disregard the plain written words of the constitution, to accomplish their immediate purpose—ruin, inevitable ruin, must be the consequence.

But if the nineteen had no other object in view, and as yet they have avowed none other, than the election of a senate favorable to a reform of the constitution, why did they not come into the college, take the oaths of office and vote for such a senate? Who can say that a senate of that description would not have been elected? It was perfectly well known that there were amongst the undersigned many favorable to reform, and if nothing more was desired by the nineteen than the selection of a reform senate, their plain course was to have met the college and united their votes with those of the undersigned who are constitutional reformers. Many of us desired to see material changes in the constitution, and are not now for the first time expressing that opinion, as will appear by our recorded votes as members of your house of delegates. Indeed there is not one of us who is not willing that such amendments of the constitution should be made as are just and necessary; but we desire to see them accomplished in a peaceful and constitutional mode, without a gross usurpation of power on our part, or a violent disruption of the bonds, which for upwards of sixty years, have so happily united the people of Maryland in peace and security. All that we can do to ensure your safety, we are solicitous and determined to perform. It is our business to elect fifteen men of the most wisdom and experience and virtue in the state to constitute one branch of your legislature. It is not our province to blot a letter from the constitution. Our power is in no sense a legislative one. It is the senate, together with the co-ordinate branch of the legislature, the house of delegates, acting under a proper sense of duty, guided by an enlightened public opinion who can, alone, constitutionally legislate for your wishes or your wants. All that we are selected to accomplish is the choice of as capable and virtuous a senate as we can make—that done, our functions are at an end, and in our opinion not until then. We assert no right to resign the trust you have imposed upon us—it is a duty we have assumed for the public good under the sanction, of the constitution which no elector can, in our opinion cast off at pleasure, more especially when he has sought the office at the hands of the people. Should we decline its exercise, we have no doubt that the laws might be appealed to against us—It is impossible that the mere agents of the people—trustees appointed to do an act necessary to the continuance of their government, can with impunity decline the trust and thereby possibly involve the state in all the horrors of anarchy.

PEOPLE OF MARYLAND, the crisis is an awful one—the times are big with the fate of freedom—If the revolutionary spirit, now stalking abroad amongst us, is not promptly subdued by the majesty of your power, upon you will rest the fearful responsibility of being the first in the country of Washington, to give to liberty a mortal wound.—We shall to the last endeavor faithfully to perform our duty to you, and to ourselves—we have remained patiently at the seat of government, keeping the college open from day to day to the present time, and here we are resolved to continue until all hope is lost of the return of the absent electors. We are determined that, if confusion, anarchy and ruin are to come upon us, if all the bright hopes of the people of Maryland are to be forever blasted, and our once fair and happy land is to become a scene of desolation and terror, we will have the consolation of reflecting, in the midst of our afflictions, that we have faithfully performed our duty.

GEORGE S. LEIGH,
BENEDECT I. HEARD,
GEORGE VICKERS,
JAMES P. GALE,
JAMES KENT,
JAMES A. D. DALRYMPLE,
HENRY BRAWNER,
WILLIAM D. MERRICK,
SOLOMON DICKINSON,
GEORGE DUDLEY,
WILLIAM WILLIAMS, jr.
SAMUEL J. K. HANDY,
WILLIAM W. LAKE,
THOMAS H. HICKS,
GEORGE W. DUVAL,
THOMAS G. PRATT,
THOMAS A. SPENCE,
HENRY FRANKLIN,
EPHRAIM GAITHER,
RICHARD BEALL,
ANDREW BRUCE.

Annapolis, September 24, 1846.

GREAT PUBLIC MEETING.

From the Baltimore American of Tuesday last.

One of the largest and most respectable meetings ever convened in the city of Baltimore, was held at Monument Square on Monday, the 26th instant, at 3 1-2 o'clock, P. M. On motion of Columbus O'Donnell, esq. the meeting was organized by the appointment of general William McDonald as president.

On motion of Daniel Cobb, esq. the following gentlemen were appointed vice presidents—John McKim, jr. Solomon Etting, John Dushane, Luke Tiernan, Robert D. Millholland, William H. Conkling, Jacob Wolfe, Solomon Betts, Samuel Hoffman, John Gibson, Joshua Wall and Joseph W. Patterson, esqs.

On motion of S. Owings Hoffman, esq. the following gentlemen were appointed secretaries—Thomas W. Hall, William Crawford, jr. Osmond C. Tiffany and William G. Harrison, esqs.

The object of the meeting having been stated by the president, John V. L. McMahon, esq. offered the following address and resolutions, which he sustained in a strain of unsurpassed eloquence and force.

He was followed by David Stewart, esq. who moved their adoption in a speech fraught with noble and republican sentiments.

They were thereupon unanimously adopted: We, the citizens of Baltimore, opposed to revolution and anarchy, and the supporters of law, order and constitutional reform, have in town meeting assembled, to consider the recent attempts of some of our public agents to break up all the foundations of our government, to cut society loose from all its moorings, and to put us, our wives, our children, our institutions and all we hold dear, adrift upon the troubled sea of revolution. We are here assembled to lift up our voices in denunciation of these attempts, and to call upon our fellow citizens here, and throughout the state, to come up with us to the rescue, to rally around the banner of peace and order, and by the instant and energetic adoption of the constitutional and peaceful measures which yet remain to us, to snatch our hitherto happy and favored state from the horrors of anarchy.

The crisis to which we have arrived, forces upon us the most painful and revolting contrasts. Placed by the hand of a bountiful Providence in a central and commanding position on the Atlantic border of our country—the untiring energy and enterprise of the inhabitants of our beloved city in past times, have conducted it in the lapse of little more than half a century, from the humble station of a fishing village, to the third city of the union. They accomplished this under many difficulties and in the face of much opposition—with rival cities on either side, who had started far ahead of her in the contest for the prize of the great and hourly growing commerce of the great west, Baltimore had not lagged behind in the race, but with gigantic strides continued to approach her competitors. Each day of the contest only made more manifest her advantages in position over all her rivals, and gave her the promise of assured victory, if the state of Maryland, whose proud emporium she was, would but follow and sustain her in the race. For years sectional jealousies, fomented by many of those who now stand prominent in urging her to the measures of revolution, continued to retard her progress. Local interests which were natural allies in the cause of state improvement, were artfully arrayed against each other by adversaries, who rejoiced in thus effecting the overthrow of all. The seeds of mutual distrust between city and county, were thus sown: Baltimore was represented as the self-aggrandizing capital, who sought to centre all the power, influence and wealth of the state in herself, and the counties were, in turn, denounced as so many petty communities clothed with undue political power and wielding it all to the injury of Baltimore. Many of us well remember the results of those causeless distrusts and jealousies, and the recollection of them forces us all to hope they may never return. A few years since state pride, aroused from her long sleep, and touched by her impulses, from that period to this, our local jealousies have been disappearing; the demagogues who sought to inflame the people of our state by exciting in the different sections of it, mutual distrusts of each other's power and influence in the government, were passed by disregarded; and we seemed at length to have become in feeling brethren of one great political family, in every section, intent only upon the welfare and advancement of our common state, and proud of the growing wealth and prosperity of this, its commercial metropolis. All have seen the workings of this change. Baltimore, under the shelter and fostering aid of the state, undertook with Herculean energy, the prosecution of her great works of internal improvement: and at the last session of our general assembly, when our city seemed to be tiring under the effort to continue them, the legislature at one bound provided all the means necessary for their completion, and for the elevation of our city to the pinnacle of commercial prosperity. All our hopes for her welfare seemed at length gratified in prospect. In anticipation, we already beheld her the queen of the commercial cities of the east, the Zenobia of American commerce. Fired by the prospect, the energy of our citizens sprang up to fresh exertions, inactive wealth poured itself out from the coffers where it had long lain into the lap of industry, and the eye of enterprise every where throughout our land was turned to our city. High in credit, rich in our internal and expected resources as a people, our city during the past summer has every where presented the evidences of a rapidly growing and prosperous population.

At this very moment, when we are just about to reap the fruits of state aid to our great enterprises, and when with all the evidences of present and prospective prosperity around us, flowing from the beneficence of our state government, one would suppose we were filled with grateful recollections, the cry of revolution is raised amongst us, the hand of the disorganizer is uplifted to strike down our state government and all its institutions: and we are called upon at the bidding of men, unknown to us in all our efforts for the advancement of our city, or known only as hostile to it, to dash the cup of prosperity from our lips; to suspend all our works of internal improvement; to break our government into fragments and go back into a state of nature to recombine it, and to rekindle in the struggle over its formation, and in the contests for relative political power under it, all the petty, local and sectional jealousies which so long retarded our prosperity. Nor is that all—without a single developed plan, adopted or likely to be adopted for our future government, and agreeing amongst themselves in nothing but the intention to destroy the present, these disorganizers, whose schemes of government are so various that even the lifetime of a Sisyphus could not manufacture constitutions enough to meet them, would have us to take no thought for the future; and having brought us to the brink of revolution would plunge us off and tell us to trust to the accidents of the future for our escape from the gulph of anarchy.

Before we consider this extraordinary proposition, we would ask:

"Who are they who have forced it upon our attention?" This bold proposition to overthrow the whole government at one blow, and to leave us in a state of nature and to the chances of the future for the establishment of a new one, is submitted to us by nineteen individuals, who were chosen electors of the senate of Maryland on the first Monday of September last, and who, in that official capacity, affect to have the right to propose it. They were elected to that office under the provisions of the 14th article of our constitution; and their powers are defined by the 15th, 16th and 17th articles.—The 15th article, as it now stands, declares: "That the said electors of the senate shall meet at the city of Annapolis on the third Monday of September, 1781, and on the same day in every fifth year forever thereafter, and they, or any twenty-four of them, so met, shall proceed to elect by ballot, either out of their own body or the people at large, 15 senators, 9 of whom to be residents of the western and 6 to be residents on the eastern shore—men of the most wisdom and experience, above twenty-five years of age, and residents of the state above three whole years next preceding the election." The 16th article having thus declared in the strongest terms the obligation of those electors to perform this duty, the 16th and 17th articles direct the manner in which they shall qualify and conduct their elections. This is the office which these individuals sought under this constitution; the office of the people's agent under it, selected for the single purpose of electing a senate to continue the government under it.—They stand, therefore, in the attitude of individuals who sought at the hands of the people an office having but a single duty to be performed under it—the election of a senate; and they therefore stood pledged to their constituents, to the people of the state, and to the constitution of their country, to make that election, by the very act of asking the people to devolve upon them the known duty of electing a senate. They stand in the attitude of individuals who knew, when they offered themselves to the people, that they were asking them to put upon themselves the solemn duty of electing that senate. They stand in the attitude of individuals who, by asking the office of an agent under the constitution, stood pledged to their country to act under that constitution, and not against it. Men may sometimes assume offices which cast upon them duties they had not anticipated, and sometimes unexpected duties which put their own judgments in conflict with that of their constituents—we stop not to speak of the propriety of surrendering their official power in such cases, as there is no parallel between such and the case of these electors. Every elector, before he was elected, knew the exact amount of influence he would have in electing a senate: he knew that he could have but one vote out of forty; that, if he was elected, the constitution required that he should elect a senate, and that twenty-one electors, elected from any section of the state, great or small, had, under the constitution, the majority of power in the electoral college. If the power which the constitution gave him when elected was too little, he knew it, and, by accepting it with this knowledge, he agreed to take it and exercise it as the constitution gave it to him, and in no other way.—And even if it were for a moment admitted that, when the power is accepted with a knowledge of its extent, the agent could turn back from the exercise of it upon the pretence that it was not large enough, this is a question the consideration of which belongs solely to his constituents, and with which he has not the least right to meddle. His constituents elected every elector to give his vote under the constitution as their vote, and not as his own: and until they had expressed their discontent with the power they had given him, and enjoined him not to exercise it, it was his bounden duty to act it out as he found it. We do not admit that a constitutional duty thus assumed could even then be properly disobeyed. The people who gave the power under the constitution, and the agent who so took, are alike bound by that constitution to the rest of the state, to exercise it as that constitution gives it.

This being, in our view, the character of the office accepted by these nineteen electors, they repaired to Annapolis at the time appointed for the election of a senate; and, instead of proceeding to discharge their duty of making the election, they refuse to qualify, and, thus declining the duties of that office, they yet claim, by virtue of it, that the other 21 electors shall surrender to them the exclusive right of electing a majority of the senate, and if this be not yielded, refuse to act as electors, upon the sole ground that the very power to which they were elected is not as great as it ought to have been. Of these nineteen, thus acting, a large majority acted wholly without even the color of instructions from their constituents; and we say, without the fear of contradiction, that several of those electors acted not only without such, but, on the contrary, in direct defiance of the will of their constituents, as manifested on every occasion in all past times since the formation of the constitution. Passing by all the rest, the recorded votes of Annapolis, Caroline, Queen Anne's and Montgomery have ever been found rallied in support of the present constitution: and the rights which these have under it are the very rights which were most assailed in this proceeding. Yet these counties furnish six of "the illustrious nineteen:" and if these six, or any three of them, had discharged their duty, the senate would have been now elected. To such a proposition, coming from such a quarter, there could be but one reply from the electors who had qualified. The men who made it had refused to assume their duties, and had therefore no more right to make it than any other individuals in the community. It was a proposition which, on the part of several of the nineteen, struck at the dearest rights of their constituents, and violated their will, as manifested by all their public acts and votes in all past times. It was a proposition which required the twenty-one electors to commit wilful and deliberate perjury, and (in violation of the solemn obligations of their oaths to exercise their own best judgments in the selection of a senate) to elect for a majority of that body such senators as the nineteen might be pleased to select for them. Such a proposition was, of course, not even received: and upon its declension, "the nineteen" turn their backs upon their constitutional duty, refuse to elect, and gravely maintain that "the constitution expressly secured to any seventeen of them the right to defeat the election of a senate," or, in other words, that the constitution, in expressly saying that they shall go in and elect a senate, gives the right to keep out and refuse to elect. Having thus, as far as in them lay, plunged us into revolution, and conceiving that they had thus pulled down in ruins, at one fell swoop, our whole government, they call upon us to come forward and follow them in the work of rebuilding another. These are they, who, without a thought for the future,—having, as they conceive, at one blow, cast down, to its very foundations, the government of a people, who, one short month since, never even dreamed of the possibility of this mad experiment,—now claim to be our pioneers, and undertake to dictate to us in what mode we shall escape from the consequences of their rashness and misconduct, by obeying their instructions in the endeavor to keep peace and order amongst us, and to get up some scheme to protect our lives, liberties and property, and to avert a state of anarchy until the people can agree upon a new government.

Fellow citizens! to you we appeal to answer the question, "where did these destructives find their warrant for this mischievous experiment upon our government? who gave them the power to pull down and build up governments at their pleasure, as if they were the toys of an hour? who authorised them to plunge us without a moment's warning, into a condition where, by their own admission, our lives, our liberties, our property, the security of our homes, the sanctity of our firesides, the honor of our wives and our children, are at the mercy of the lawless and the depredator, unless you, the people, will step in and rescue us from this condition, by some temporary provisions for the protection of all these." They advise you to assemble in November next, to select a provisional government, "clothed with full powers to extend the authority of all civil and military officers now in commission, until a convention, hereafter to be chosen, can be convened, to amend the old or form an entire new form of government for the people of Maryland." We quote their language: and in it you find their own impression of the consequences of their own acts if persisted in, in the necessary inference that if this be not done, your courts are prostrate, your laws have ceased to operate, your governor and all subordinate officers are no longer in authority, and your persons and property left to self-protection, without the aid of laws, courts or officers. Where, fellow citizens, we repeat the question, did these men find the warrant for the attempt to hurry the people of this state, without even a warning into such a condition? They pretend to have found it in your recent elections—will they tell us where? will they point to that county where they even dared to hoist the banner of revolution, or whispered that they sought office to proclaim us in a state of anarchy?—we appeal to you, fellow citizens throughout the state, to answer the question, “did any of them ask you to elect them for such purposes?” We are aware that in several of the counties of this state, as well as in this city, there has been a great and growing desire to reform some obnoxious features of our constitution, and that in these places, at the recent elections, this subject was much agitated—yet, will any of the destructives pretend that even the subject of constitutional reform was touched in one half of the counties of this state? Did the people of Somerset, or of Worcester, or of Dorchester, or of Caroline, or of Talbot, or of Kent, or of Queen Anne’s, or of Charles, or of St. Mary’s, or Calvert, or of Prince George’s, or of Annapolis, or of Anne Arundel, hear any thing in those counties of the necessity even of constitutional reform from the candidates, for their suffrages, at the late election, and more especially from the candidates there, agreeing with the “illustrious nineteen” in their presidential preferences? Did the people of Montgomery or of Allegany hear any thing of the intention of their electors to diminish their representation, and at their expense to increase that of the larger counties? In the remaining counties of Frederick, Washington, Baltimore and Harford, was the design to change the whole form of government even there fully disclosed? It is fresh in all our memories, that one of these very “nineteen,” Mr. Fisher, of Frederick, upon being questioned through the press, immediately after he became a candidate, as to his friendliness for constitutional reform, in a card published in the papers of that county, stated to the people, that “having been brought out against his wishes, he would not consent to be catechised on that subject,” and thus remaining mute in this great reform county, he was nevertheless elected. In fine, fellow citizens, wherever reform was agitated, it is known to you all that it was advocated as reform to be made through the constitution, and by your constitutional agents: and that even where thus advocated, it was used as the vague and undefined watchword of parties, without even a definition of what it meant. And if plans of reform ever were proposed, like the Chamelcon, they took their color from the soil they were placed upon.—In Allegany they meant one thing, in Montgomery another, in Washington and Frederick another, in Harford another, in Baltimore city something very different from all the rest. Yet, admitting the design of reform to have pervaded these counties, did any of you, fellow citizens of the counties, ever hear of reform to be accomplished by revolution?—Did you, the people of Allegany, or Washington, or Baltimore, ever hear of the design to break down your government, to suspend all your great improvements until you could get a new one, to revive all your old sectional squabbles and jealousies about relative powers under it, and to check the high tide of your prosperity until these could be adjusted amongst yourselves and with your sister counties, and then to take your chances under the new government, for regaining all the benefits already secured to you by the law of the last session, and lost to you without the sanction of the new government, if the measures of the destructives be persisted in? Did you, the people of the slave counties of this state, embracing nearly all, ever hear of the design of a revolutionary reform to be based upon an attack on federal numbers?

Fellow citizens, shallow as this pretence of the destructives is, there is yet another feature which reveals more fully the secret purposes of the anarchists. Reform (until this attempt) has always been advocated as a measure into which party considerations were not to enter; and even now the attempt is to be made to lull us by that cry. In the great county of Frederick, particularly, it was conducted avowedly upon that basis: and many whigs there and elsewhere are enlisted zealously in the cause. Now, however, reform can be entrusted only to Van Buren electors: and revolution we are to have in all its dreadful consequences, unless the twenty-one, will not only consent to elect a reform senate, but also a reform senate, the majority of which is to consist of Van Buren electors.

Fellow citizens of the Van Buren party, we speak to you with more sincerity than have hitherto these pretended friends of reform without distinction of party, when we say to you, the question which these destructives have presented to you, is one far above all party considerations, and we know that many of you will so regard it. Whatever office seekers, men who have nothing to lose and every thing to gain by revolution, men who scruple at no means to accomplish their ends, men who hate peace and riot in change, may think of our present crisis, we know that there are amongst you as amongst us, many actuated by a sincere desire to act uprightly in all things, and to advance the welfare of our common state and the happiness of its people. Behold this measure of revolution therefore, exhibited in all its nakedness, as a mere expedient to gain a temporary party advantage! Are you prepared to sanction such a measure? Are you prepared to justify a high public officer in willfully violating a high public duty involving the very continuance of your government, for the hope of a momentary party triumph? Are you prepared, in the effort to promote the elevation of a New York candidate for the presidency, to blight for the present all the fair prospects of your own state, and your own city, to give a dangerous if not fatal stab to the credit of your state and city by shaking all confidence in the security and stability of your institutions, and to commit yourselves and all you hold dear, to the hands of such revolutionists? It may suit the views of New York to produce all these results, at this moment when with gigantic strides your state is reaching at the commerce of the west. It may suit her views at this moment, when it is known to you all that the people of the south irritated at the continued attempts from that quarter to inflame their slave population, are turning to Baltimore as free from the disorganizing spirit. What are presidential questions to you, compared with the preservation of peace, law and order amongst you, with the constant and steady inculcation of respect for these, with peace and security at home, with tranquillity and prosperity throughout your state? A few short years hence, and the very presidential preferences you feel will be forgotten. But the step of revolution once taken on such pretext, the sense of public or private security once shaken by such a measure, who can tell the impression it will make upon all the future prospects of your state? The downward step to anarchy and tumult is easy: but once taken, who can tell the time of your recall from it?

But fellow citizens of all parties—friends of law, order and religion, to you we appeal to mark the crisis at which this revolutionary attempt has uplifted its head amongst us—The beginning of the end now is—The enemy of all republican government is amongst us—It comes, as it ever has come in all such governments, under the guise of jacobinism—with great affected respect for the rights of the people, it strikes at the very root of their security by inculcating insubordination to our laws and institutions, and substituting the lawless and licentious impulse of the moment for the well regulated liberty of the freeman—with great pretended regard for the poor, under a government which opens to every man and to every man’s children the door to the highest offices and stations of the nation, it strives by its base appeals to envy, to excite discord in the relations of employer and employed, and to make these relations of mutual benefit and protection, sources of social strife—Property acquired by honest industry is held up as a cause of jealousy and offence; and a sincere desire for the peace, order and stability of society is denounced as warring against the supremacy of the people—It is the cardinal maxim of such a spirit that there is no right of personal liberty or private property so sacred, that it ought not to be subject to instant demolition, at the will and bidding of any demagogue who can excite and turn upon it a momentary odium. To restrain such a spirit all governments are established: and in the anxious care and numerous provisions of the constitution of the United States, and of all your state constitutions, to protect the government, themselves and all rights of person and property under them from the hasty inroads or lawless assaults of faction or violence, and to subject them only to the calm, deliberate and settled action of the people through their laws and authorities, you find your fathers of the revolution manifesting their horror of that spirit—they knew that such a spirit, unhinging all public and private morality, diffusing distrust and jealousy through all society, and inculcating habitual disregard for every thing like the authority of government, was the sure forerunner of social and political anarchy; and that from such a state there was but one step to despotism. Already is the bold and decided action of this spirit manifest in two of your sister states, in the open assault upon rights of private property as much protected by the constitution of your country and the laws of the states as any right of any of you to any property you have. Admitting as its chief advocates do, that the rights of prosperity thus assailed are expressly protected by the constitution of the United States, and that legislatures cannot and ought not to spare them because they are rights of private property originating in and protected by contracts and the laws of the land.

A convention is to be the process by which the gordian knot of public truth and honor, public law and private rights is to be averred—Even here by some amongst us, the doctrine is already proclaimed, that private rights of property are to be at the mercy of this process amongst us—We ask you then, to whom we make this appeal, to go with us a little further in marking the traces of this spirit in the revolutionary movement of the destructives in our own state.

Assuming that the case justifying instant revolution in our state government has arisen, the destructives affect to rest their right to bring it about upon the assertion of the right of revolution, in our bill of rights—of that right we shall speak hereafter: and we now only ask: whose right is there asserted?—the right of the people, or the right of mere officers and agents under the government? Who gave these insubordinate and disobedient agents the right to proclaim revolution? The sole right resides in the people of the state to change their government: and when have the people delegated to them the right to make revolution? They elected them to make a senate: do they find in that the power to overthrow the government? They elected them as officers who were to be sworn to act and elect under the constitution: do they find in that the warrant to demolish it all at one blow? No, fellow citizens, disguise it as they will, they know that in this step they have acted the parts of the sheer usurpers of your rights: and having as they conceived by one rash step plunged you into revolution without authority or notice, they want to father the bantling of their mischief upon you. We recognize amongst them several who have heretofore filled high stations under our state constitution, and took their official oaths to support that very constitution: and who, therefore, in our judgment had still less right to attempt its overthrow.

But, fellow citizens, what is the right of revolution? Is it a plaything to be wielded in every moment of excitement? Is it an instrument to be used whenever party expediency may require it; or discontented office seekers may lament the temporary loss of power? Is it not on the other hand, the last fearful resort of a free people, when all other means have failed; when every spark of hope is extinct; and when it is calmly and deliberately settled after the fullest consideration, that they are suffering actual practical tyranny and oppressions from the government under which they live, of so intolerable a character, that it is better to incur all the evils of anarchy than continue to endure them, and when there is a rational hope that by the step of revolution they may relieve themselves from such oppressions?

In a word, it is like the thunder of Jupiter, only to be wielded on these great occasions of elemental strife between society and government. What rational man ever dreamed of precipitating a people into revolution for mere theories in government; for mere improvements in its form, or in a word, for any thing but actual and intolerable oppression? Government is not an end but a means. It is a mere instrument to protect the rights of the citizen, and advance the happiness and prosperity of the people; and the causes of its overthrow in our favored land are to be found only in its utter prostration of these.

Fellow citizens, before we speak of the pretended necessity for revolution alleged by the destructives, we deem it proper to say that we are the friends of constitutional reform in our state government, and that we believe it may and ought to be improved by amendments in several particulars.—Whether we will agree with the destructives in all their contemplated reforms, we are unable to say; for to this day reform has been “THE VEILED PROPHET,” which they call upon men to fall down and worship, and yet will not show us its features. If they desire to change the representation in the house of delegates, they will not tell us whether they mean to adopt representation according to population, so as to place Baltimore at the head, or whether they will take arbitrary numbers, which only put Baltimore with twice the population, on a level with Frederick county, and thus by adopting a rule without any fixed basis of representation engraft the very same inequality in the new constitution, to be a subject for future squabble and perhaps attempts at revolution. If they seek to break down the senate, where we have almost always had two senators, or two-fifteenths of the power of that body, to give us in its stead one senator out of twenty, or one-twentieth of its power; they will not tell us whether they will make up this loss in that body by a proportional increase in the house of delegates. And so it is with every proposed reform. "Reform" means "reform," and that is the only definition we can get from them. The destructives have however given us an insight, into their views, or views of some of them as to the proper ratio, in their modest request to us to go into an election on the first Monday of November next, to elect for their conservative by six delegates from each county and city; or in other words, from Annapolis, with her three hundred voters, as well as from Baltimore with her ten thousand, and twelve from Frederick county, as she too has a city in her limits. This is called reform!!!

But, fellow citizens of the counties, whilst we who address you, agree in the propriety of moderate and constitutional reform, and will co-operate with the majority of the people of the state, in the endeavor to procure the amendments they may desire in the proper mode, we are not amongst those who call you our tyrants and oppressors. If you have sometimes by your legislation acted injuriously upon our interests and against our remonstrances, yet we deny that your course to us has been one of systematic, wanton and long continued oppression—were we to make this assertion, the millions which you have poured out by your legislation for the last eight or ten years, to aid us in works of improvement, all leading to our own city, would stamp upon it the character of a libel—we remember the period when, as we have already said, sectional jealousies infested our state, to the great prejudice of Baltimore: fomented too by many who are now leading in the cause of destructive reform—And yet at that period when Potomac interests, and Eastern Shore interests, and country interests, generally, were sought to be arrayed against Baltimore, and the want of due power in the legislature was most felt, did any of the pretended reformers cry out "revolution," much less attempt it—Where were they found in the counties?—For the most part, in the ranks of demagogues, inflaming country jealousies, and railing at propositions merely to increase the delegation of Baltimore to four!—But in the last eight or ten years we have perceived and hailed with pleasure the gradual subsiding of all these causeless jealousies of us, and have seen you with delight taking a pride in the advancement and welfare of our city, as identified with the prosperity, power and happiness of the state.

And, fellow citizens of the Eastern Shore and of the lower counties on the Western Shore, we cannot but remember that at the last session of our legislature when the counties of Baltimore, Frederick, Washington, Harford and Cecil, either in part or in whole, were all agitated either in hostility to the aid of the state to our improvements, or to clog it with restrictions, to your generous and public-spirited support were we indebted for that aid—Nor can we trace your hostility to us in the legislation of the last eight or ten years—If our chartered rights to appoint the inspectors of flour, or whiskey, or fish were wrested from us, we know that it was the work of the great reform counties of Frederick, Washington, Baltimore, Harford and Cecil, constituting in their combined action for these purposes what was factiously termed by one now a revolutionist, "the holy alliance"—If our auction duties were taken away in 1827, we know that it was the act of the representatives of a large majority of the people, led on by the now very head and chief of the revolution-party of Frederick and of the state. If the right to regulate your markets was assailed, the blow came from Baltimore county, aided again by the large and reform counties—These are not injuries we can trace to your having too much power in the government: for the recorded votes on all these subjects show that with any representation which any plan of reform would give us the large counties, would still have accomplished all these measures—The legislation of Maryland for the last eight or ten years shows conclusively that instead of being our peculiar oppressors, the action of the small counties towards Baltimore has been more kind and beneficent than that of the large counties.

But even upon the subject of reform, where did these destructives find the proof that every possible hope of amendment without revolution had failed—You are all aware, fellow citizens, that our constitution embodies in itself the mode of its amendment: and that that mode is by a law passed at one session, then published and submitted to the people of the state for their consideration before the next election, and then confirmed by the next legislature. One legislature proposes the amendment to the people: and the next legislature either adopts or rejects, according to the will of the people as ascertained at the election when it is submitted—We know that it is the fashion in these days, with some of the revolutionists, to deride and laugh to scorn our forefathers of the revolution, the men of '76, who rescued us from tyranny, who gave us a name among nations, and built up for us the government under which we live—Whatever we may think of their mode of amendment, we respect their opinions and reverence their memories; and the times are sadly out of joint, when coarse sneers upon them and their works, such as some of us have recently heard amongst us, could not only pass without censure, but even receive applause. In adopting that mode, the men of '76 have handed down to us their opinion that every amendment of a constitution ought to be specially submitted, well considered and deliberately sanctioned. Now what has been the course of many of the reformers towards the legislature—Have they, or a majority of the people or their representatives ever gone forward to the legislature at any time presenting specific propositions of reform, and asking their adoption in the constitutional mode? Have the majority of the people or their representatives ever yet distinctly told the legislature the exact reform which they want?—Nay have the majority ever been able to agree even amongst themselves as to the reform they desire?—Have reform conventions themselves been as yet able to agree upon any definite plan of amendment?—Whenever a majority of the people of this state shall distinctly and unequivocally declare to the legislature the amendments they desire, we cannot but believe that full justice will be yielded to them—We know that our brethren of the smaller counties are animated with a very different spirit from that of the destructives, and would not involve us in discord and revolution rather than make reforms which might involve a sacrifice of some of their political power—And if those of the nineteen from the smaller counties have truly represented their constituents, there is at once a sudden accession of power to accomplish such amendments from sections of the state hitherto in the front ranks of opposition to reform.

In the face of all these facts, what language, fellow citizens, can characterize this measure of revolution. In a moment of general tranquillity and prosperity, when the citizens of the state were dwelling together in most perfect amity, and each day was drawing all of them nearer to each other in feeling and in interest; when the proper steps were just about to be taken to conduct to speedy consummation our great works of internal improvement, on which all the future prosperity of our city depends, when every citizen was in the full, secure and uninterrupted enjoyment of every right of person and property, the firebrand of revolution is hurled amongst us, like the thunderbolt from a clear sky. We hope the rash men who have done this, have ere this felt regret for their step. They have, in our judgment, not only degraded a high duty, but have also committed a high misdemeanor against our laws. But if deluded by the excited purposes of party feeling, their consciences whisper no reproaches for the step they have taken, we know there is a tribunal to whose award they cannot be indifferent—public opinion is the greatest of all reformers. Let but the people of Maryland speak but in their majesty: and we have no doubt these towering revolutionists will sink into obedient public agents. An occasion for the people so to speak is at hand. On the first Monday of October next an election for delegates takes place under our constitution. On that day, let all the friends of law, order and government; let all who fear revolution; let all who desire reform by peaceable and proper means; let all who would preserve for their families, themselves and their fellow citizens protection and security; let all who love peace and hate anarchy, rush to the polls, and with united voices proclaim that they are not revolutionists. By their votes and proceedings on that day let them make that manifest. This done, we have no fears for the future. These agents, who have attempted to subvert the government, will then know their duty beyond the possibility of doubt; and if knowing they still disregard it, we know there is yet redeeming power enough in our judiciary to enforce the performance of a high public duty, thus made manifest even to the agent. He will then learn that high public trusts involving the very continuance of the government, cannot be abandoned at his pleasure.

For ourselves, fellow citizens of Maryland, under the stripes and stars of the glorious old thirteen, we take our stand in the defence of our government and institutions—we want no revolution, and least of all such as these would bring us—we are here assembled to pledge ourselves one and all to that men can do to save us from anarchy. On the first Monday of October next, we hope to shew you that

Baltimore is not for revolution—Our motto is "constitutional reform and no revolution."

Therefore resolved, by us citizens of Baltimore in town meeting assembled, That the nineteen electors of the senate, in their refusal to elect that body, in our judgment have disobeyed the express command of our constitution; have disregarded a high public trust involving the very continuance of government, and the security of our persons and property; have committed a high misdemeanor by their wilful abandonment of a high public duty to the discharge of which they stood pledged by their acceptance of it, and merit the severest reprobation of the people of Maryland, and of the friends of liberty, order and good government throughout the union.

Resolved further, That in their attempt to overthrow the government of this state, and to introduce anarchy and revolution in its stead, the said nineteen electors have warred against the peace, order and happiness of society; have sacrificed the best interest of the people of Maryland, have endangered the present prosperity, and blighted for a time all the fair prospects of this city; and that in so doing, they have proved themselves destructives, and forfeited all claim to the title of reformers.

Resolved further, That in their proclamation of revolution, and in their attempt to dictate to the people of this state the manner in which they shall form a new government to escape the consequences of anarchy, the said nineteen electors have usurped the sovereignty of the people of Maryland, and put in jeopardy the vital principle of all republican institutions.

Resolved, further, That in the attempt, and by the disregard of a high public duty, to prostrate the government, laws and institutions of this state, for the accomplishment of mere party ends, the said nineteen electors have forfeited all claim to the support of the virtuous and patriotic of all parties, who abhor the use of wrong means to accomplish any end, and who hold the welfare of their country and the permanent prosperity and happiness of their state and city above the mere expedients of party.

Resolved, further, That the twenty-one electors of the senate, who have qualified for the discharge of their duty, and who are still continuing their sessions at Annapolis from day to day, for their endeavors to preserve to us the inestimable blessings of peace, order and government, are entitled to the confidence and affections of the people of Maryland; and that it is the most earnest wish and request of this meeting that the said electors will there remain prepared to discharge their duty of electing a senate, until the people of Maryland shall have had time, by the power and majesty of public opinion, to quell revolution, and to return their agents to the post of duty.

Resolved, further, That the said 21 electors, in refusing to receive propositions coming from individuals who would not assume the office under the color of which they professed to act, and propositions, too, involving a degrading surrender of their duty, and asking nothing less than the commission of deliberate perjury in their surrender of their own right of choice, have acted the part of honorable men and faithful public servants.

Resolved, further, That we are for reform, and against revolution.

Resolved, further, That, to make manifest to the people of the state, and to our fellow citizens throughout the union, that Baltimore prefers peace, order, good government, stable institutions, and inviolate public and private credit, to faction and revolution, this meeting will proceed forthwith to nominate two suitable persons as candidates for the office of delegates from this city to the next general assembly of Maryland: and that, for that purpose, the president of this meeting be requested to nominate forthwith a committee of 12 to select and report to this meeting for their approbation two suitable individuals for those offices.

Resolved, further, That, from this period until the first Monday of October next, we will devote our time and energies in the endeavor to make manifest, by the success of our candidates, "that Baltimore is against revolution:" and that that day we will set apart as a day sacred to the cause of peace, order, and the preservation of our institutions, persons and property, and, on that day, closing our shops, our stores and our offices, and abandoning all other avocations, we will devote ourselves to the endeavor to secure the success of the candidates whom this meeting may select.

On motion, a committee was appointed by the president, consisting of S. C. Leakin, J. Frazier, Wm. H. Conkling, Thomas Kelso, Thomas Wildey, G. R. Gaither, A. E. Warner, F. Tensfield, Thos. Sheppard, Joshua Dryden, Thomas W. Hall, and Joshua Medtart, esqs. to consider and report suitable persons to be nominated as candidates for the legislature. The committee, having retired, reported the following resolution, which was unanimously adopted:

Resolved by this meeting, That SAMUEL JONES, jr. and SAMUEL THOMPSON be and they are hereby nominated as delegates from this city to the general assembly of Maryland, and that we pledge ourselves to use all fair and honorable means to secure their election.

WM. McDONALD, president.
VICE PRESIDENTS.

John McKim, jr.	Jacob Wolfe,
Solomon Etting,	Solomon Betts,
John Dushane,	Saml. Hoffman,
Luke Tiernan,	John Gibson,
Robt. D. Millholland,	Joshua Wall,
Wm. H. Conkling,	Jos. W. Patterson.

Secretaries.
Thos. W. Hall, O. C. Tiffany,
W. Crawford, jr. Wm. G. Harrison.
Baltimore, Sept. 26, 1836.

The Van Buren central committee of Frederick county, in the present condition of things, deeming the election of a delegate ticket inexpedient and useless, have, as will be seen by their proceedings, recommended the withdrawal of their ticket,—and that their candidates have, accordingly, withdrawn.

Monday evening, 26th Sept. 1836.

Central committee met, Henry Nixdorff and John Kunkle in the chair, and Wilson W. Kolb and Michael Baltzell, secretaries.

Whereas, by the arbitrary and arrogant demand of the representatives of a small minority of the people of this state, the spirit and letter of the constitution of the state have been violated, and the election of a senate has been frustrated by their refusal to allow the representatives of a large majority to participate in the creation of one branch of their legislature, arrogating to the minority the right to choose one entire branch of the legislature. And whereas there is not the most remote probability of any of the representatives of the majority succumbing to the unreasonable demands of the minority, and that consequently no senate can be chosen for the state of Maryland. And whereas, under such circumstances, the election of a delegate ticket is inexpedient and useless; therefore,

Resolved, That we, the central committee of Frederick county, in view of all the circumstances above rehearsed, recommend that the republican Van Buren delegate ticket for this county be withdrawn—at the same time we thus recommend to the republican party to withdraw their delegate ticket, we would suggest to the people the propriety of attending the polls, not only for the purpose of electing a sheriff, but to carry out the measures recommended in the address of the nineteen electors.

Resolved, That we not only approve of the course pursued by the nineteen electors in the discharge of their duties as representatives of the people in the electoral college, but that we also recommend to all good citizens to carry out the measures proposed by them in their address, by repairing to the places of holding their respective elections in the districts, on the first Monday of October next, for the purpose of holding meetings, to appoint delegates to attend a county convention in Frederick, on the second Monday of October next,—which convention is to nominate six persons to represent this county in a convention to be held in Annapolis, as recommended by the nineteen electors, and approved by the republican meeting at this place on Saturday last.

Resolved, That these proceedings be signed by the chairmen and secretaries, and published in the papers of the county friendly to reform.

HENRY NIXDORFF, } chairmen.
JOHN KUNKLE.

MICHAEL BALTZELL, } secretaries.
W. W. KOLB.

TO THE PUBLIC.

The undersigned, having been nominated as candidates for a seat in the house of delegates of this state, avail themselves of this mode to withdraw their names from the canvass, in obedience to what they believe the wishes of a large majority of the party who nominated them, and in accordance with the recommendation of the republican central committee of this county.

The reasons which have induced the party to suggest, and us to comply with the suggestion, being contained in the preamble and resolutions adopted by the central committee, supercedes the necessity of our recapitulating them.

ISAAC SHRIVER,
HENRY KEEFER,
JOHN SIFFORD,
JOHN W. GEYER.

In Allegany county, the Van Buren party, as appears from the following card from their candidates for the legislature, are opposed to the course pursued by the members of that party in Frederick, and are resolved to keep their ticket in the field.

TO THE VOTERS OF ALLEGANY COUNTY.

As we are candidates before you asking your support for a seat in the next general assembly of Maryland, it is your right to ask and know our views on the prominent measures now agitated in the state; the more especially when various rumors are industriously set afloat misrepresenting our sentiments on these important topics.

1st. Then, we are and have been the warm and undisguised friends of internal improvements.

2d. We are decidedly reformers: but be it distinctly understood, that we do not advocate or support representation according to population or numbers: that we are deeply interested for the welfare and best interests of Allegany county and the state, WE ARE DECIDEDLY OPPOSED TO ANY MEASURE TENDING TO REVOLUTION BY ANY PARTY.

JOHN M. BUCHANAN,
JEREMIAH BERRY, Jr.
THOMAS PERRY,
HENRY HAMMILL,

Van Buren candidates for the house of delegates.

The following preamble and resolutions were also passed by the citizens of Allegany county.

THE VOICE OF ALLEGANY.

Large meeting of the constitutionalists. In pursuance of public notice given to all parties, an unusually large assemblage of the citizens of Allegany county convened at the court house in the town of Cumberland, on Saturday evening the 24th September, 1836. The meeting was organized by calling John Hoye to preside, assisted by David Shriver and John Gephart, and appointing Thomas J. McKaig and Joseph Shriver, secretaries.

The object of the meeting, which was to express the sentiments of the people in relation to the recent revolutionary proceedings at Annapolis, was then fully set forth by B. S. Pigman. S. M. Semmes then, after some appropriate introductory remarks, offered a preamble and resolutions for the adoption of the meeting, which, upon full discussion, in which many of the citizens joined, were with some amendments, separately and deliberately adopted without a dissenting voice, as follows:

Preamble and resolutions, adopted by a meeting of the citizens of Allegany county, held at the court house, in the town of Cumberland, on Saturday evening, the 24th September, 1836.

WHEREAS, from information received of the proceedings of a portion of the senatorial electors, recently chosen by the people to elect a state senate, it appears to this meeting that an important crisis has arisen, not only involving our character and standing in the estimation of people abroad, but the very existence of our government itself; and whereas, it is the unanimous voice of this meeting, that all such violent measures merit the strongest disapprobation of every good and peaceable citizen; and that, in order to protect their right and liberties, it is incumbent upon the people every where to assemble and unite in discontinuing all proceedings of a revolutionary character; Be it therefore,

Resolved, That we are ready, at the risk of our lives and our property, to sustain the constitution and laws of the state.

Resolved, That the course of the twenty-one electors, who met and were ready, in fulfilment of the law, to do their duty, is highly approved of by this meeting.

Resolved, That in the opinion of this meeting, it would be wise in the people of the several districts of this county, to meet and organize, so as to be ready at the first warning, to carry into effect such measures as may be deemed most advisable to protect the rights of property and to preserve the liberties of the people.

Resolved, That the president appoint a committee of vigilance for the Cumberland district, consisting of nine members, whose duty it shall be to communicate information of any revolutionary movements to the several committees appointed in other districts, and to advise with them as to the best course to pursue.

Resolved, That these proceedings be forwarded to the electors from this county, and that they be requested to lay the same before their colleagues.

Resolved, That the proceedings of this meeting, signed by the officers, be published in the newspapers of this place, and forwarded for publication throughout the state.

The following gentlemen were then announced by the president as the committee of vigilance:

B. S. Pigman,	John J. Hoffman,
S. P. Smith,	Saml. M. Semmes,
Thos. J. McKaig,	Alpheus H. Gross,
Gustavus Beall,	George Rizer.
Joseph Shriver,

On motion, the meeting then adjourned.

JOHN HOYE, pres't.

DAVID SHRIVER, } vice pres'ts.
JOHN GEPHART, }

Th. J. McKaig, } secretaries.
Joseph Shriver, }

It is stated that the Van Buren ticket in Anne Arundel county has also been withdrawn.

The following handbill is circulating in Anne Arundel and the other small counties.

TO THE PEOPLE OF MARYLAND.

A handbill has been circulated and is now going the rounds in the several counties of the state, which is a gross libel upon the democratic citizens of Baltimore. It charges them with desiring to obtain for themselves a representation in the house of delegates proportioned to the population of the city.

The reformers of Baltimore look for nothing more than a representation adequate to their wants, one which will render irresponsible lobby members [those bane of just legislation] unnecessary.—They wish to see the palpable abuses of the old constitution abated, and will be content with whatever a fair reform convention shall grant them; they know that it will be their duty to submit to the will of the majority, and they have full confidence in the justice of their fellow citizens of the counties. We believe that a representation for Baltimore, equal to that to which the largest county will be entitled, would be acceptable to her people, and that their fellow citizens throughout the state could not and would not object to it.

On behalf of the democratic general committee of Baltimore.

WM. KREBS, president.

J. J. GRAVES, } vice presidents.
JOSHUA TURNER, }
SAMUEL LUCAS, }
WM. H. COLE, }

M. H. Keene, } secretaries.
James R. Hayman, }

Baltimore, 27th Sept. 1836.

MILITARY CONTROVERSY.

It seems to be necessary to a proper understanding of the merits of the controversy involving the names general Scott and general Jesup, and an individual in this city not officially connected with the army, that we should copy from the official paper the subjoined publication. We insert it as we find it, comment and all, that the parties concerned may have the full benefit of their united statements.

[Nat. Intel.]

From the Washington Globe.

GEN. SCOTT AND GEN. JESUP.

Some time after the publication of general Jesup's note to the editor of this paper, (which was made necessary by the aggravated misrepresentation of its contents and objects by the Courier and Enquirer), we were informed that its publication was considered unjust to general Scott, inasmuch as the character of the transaction presented by gen. Jesup's note was calculated to prejudice the former, containing as it did the opinion only of one of the parties interested, without the correspondence to which it referred, and which contained the views of both the parties. We understood that this circumstance would probably prompt general Scott to make a publication embracing the correspondence. This intention, it appears, was not persisted in, and was probably deemed superfluous by general Scott after the elaborate anonymous article put forth in the National Intelligencer on his side, but without his knowledge. This paper most shamefully traduced the president, general Jesup and the individual who had committed no offence save that of receiving and delivering general Jesup's letter. It was our purpose to have replied to the calumnies of the labored anonymous article of the Intelligencer, but finally concluded that it was proper to leave the vindication of the truth, and the motives of those who were impeached by the Intelligencer's communication, to the facts which would be elicited before the court of inquiry which is to pass upon the subject.

We communicated the course we had resolved upon to general Jesup, but suggested that, in justice to himself, as well as to general Scott, we thought it would be proper that the letters of general Scott to him, and his reply, should be laid before the public. In consequence, we suppose, of general Jesup's multifarious engagements, we received his reply to our letter only a few days since. We lay it, and the copy of the correspondence we asked of him, before the public. The explanatory notes accompanied the copies of the letters.

Tallahassee, (Alabama), Sept. 3, 1836.

DEAR SIR: I regret that I should have been the cause of bringing you into difficulty. I wrote to you at the moment information reached me, that general Scott had not only sent copies of his extraordinary letters to me to the war department, but that he was representing me in his conversations as having deranged his plan of campaign, and brought a starving corps of two or three thousand men to consume the small quantity of subsistence and forage which he had collected for the Georgia volunteers and regular troops. Writing under the influence of the exasperated feelings produced by the wrong which I believed he had done me, and which I shall be able to show at the proper time he did me, I used language stronger, perhaps, than I should under other circumstances have thought necessary; but the language used expressed my opinions then; it expresses my opinions now.

Occupied with my public duties, I have no time for defence; and as I do not meddle with the politics of the country, I would not consent to be defended on party grounds. The questions in regard to the campaign should be decided on their own merits. I wrote to you, not as a party man, but as a private friend. It is true, I wrote to you because you happened to be the editor of the Globe, in the columns of which I expected to see general Scott's letters spread before the public. I requested you to show my letter to the president, as a measure of defence against the charges contained in general Scott's letters. The result was such as I neither expected nor desired. My command having been halted by general Scott when in the presence of the enemy's principal force, I believed the Indians would disperse into small parties; and that in place of fighting their force united, we should have to hunt their parties through the swamps, as had been necessary in Florida. Having been censured for that which I considered the true course of operations, and believing I could render no useful service to the country in chasing small parties through the swamps, I desired, at the time I wrote, to be withdrawn from the army. I informed general Scott officially, on the 20th of June, that I should apply to the president to be relieved, and should demand a court of inquiry. On the evening of the 23d we met, and an explanation took place. About ten o'clock that night, he put into my hands a letter addressed to the secretary of war or the adjutant general, I do not remember which, to part of which I objected in the presence of his aid and mine. On the morning of the 24th, he informed me he would ask to withdraw from the files of the war department the offensive letters; and on the 25th I addressed a letter to the secretary of war, in which I expressed my readiness to continue under his command until the close of the campaign. I considered all personal difference at an end; but I believed, and so expressed myself to those around me, that the government owed it to the country to have the whole subject of the campaign investigated. I considered it no longer a question between general Scott and me, but between him and the country, or me and the country. Respectfully, your obedient servant,

TH. S. JESUP.

Francis P. Blair, esq. Washington city.

Head quarters, army of the south,
Columbus, (Geo.) June 16, 1836.

SIR: Since I wrote to you on the 12th, I have heard of the arrival at Hawkinsville and Macon of most of the supplies I had ordered via Darien.—These are now in wagons, and within two, three and four days of this place. I have also just heard that the muskets ordered from Augusta may be expected here perhaps to-morrow. With these arms and the 1,800 accoutrements from Hawkinsville, nearly the whole of the Georgia line may be fitted for the field. At present, of the 2,200 men maj. gen. Sanford has in his camp on the other side of the river, only about 400 are armed. All the other armed men have been detached below to guard the river, and which, as yet, from the want of men, is but very imperfectly guarded.

After writing to you on the 12th, I received your letter of the 8th. This would completely have mystified me, but for the explanations given by some of the Georgia gentlemen who accompanied you from this place. For example, you wrote to me on the 6th that you were just about to set out for Montgomery, and yet I find you back at Tuskegee on the 8th. You do not tell me that you had been absent so far as Live creek, and that you there had met the governor. You are silent as to any interviews you had had with him, either at Live creek or at Tuskegee, to which place, I understand from others, he followed you. Some difficulties you undoubtedly experienced in getting the command of the Alabama troops; but what those difficulties were, you carefully conceal from me. You content yourself with saying: "I have not yet obtained the command of the troops, but if I obtain it at all, I shall probably enter on duty to-morrow."—But why you had not at first obtained the command of the troops, and why the doubt whether you would obtain it at all, you again carefully conceal from me.

In a subsequent part of your letter you say: "I learn from the governor that gen. Moore will," &c. How did you learn this from the governor? You do not tell me that you had met him at Live creek, and that, turning back yourself, he had followed you to Tuskegee. It might have been by letter.*

Allow me to say that the whole letter is mysterious and enigmatical in the extreme, and that it is not such a communication as you ought to have made me." If the governor made the difficulties about placing you in the command of the troops, that important fact ought not to have been concealed from me; and if he did not, who else interposed difficulties?

You further tell me that "if a movement be determined on, I will send you information of it by a runner." A movement to be determined on by whom? The Alabama commanders, or those in conjunction with yourself? Either you were placed in command, or you have not been. In the first place, you would certainly determine on no scheme of offensive operations without my previous concurrence and readiness to co-operate; yet, without receiving any runner from you, or communication of any kind, since the 8th instant, a passenger in the stage by the upper route, just arrived here, reports that you, at the head of about 3,000 Alabamians and 1,000 friendly Indians, were about to march upon Neo Mico's band, and to commence offensive operations on a grand scale! I have no doubt there is a gross mistake in this report. You may, perhaps, have been about to make some defensive movement or operation to clear a frontier settlement of a portion of the enemy; but I will not believe that you have declared your independence of my authority.

It is certain that brigadier general Moore, of Alabama, has commenced a course of offensive operations, from Irwinton up the country. From this fact, I have rather inferred that you have not even yet been invested with the command of the Alabamians, or you certainly would have stopped his premature and isolated [movement]. These doubts and conjectures, in the absence of all direct intelligence from you, are sufficiently harassing. I mean to be explicit and precise on my part. I desire you instantly to stop all offensive movements (if you are in command) on the part of the Alabamians, until the Georgians are ready to act, say on the 21st instant, when the greater number of them will be armed and ready for the field. By that time, too, there will be on the frontier the greater part of the regulars and marines ordered from the north. On that day, if the movements of general Moore shall not render a modification of my plan necessary, I shall begin to assemble the troops on this side of the nation, somewhere in the neighborhood of Irwinton, and operate up the country. It is my desire that you meet me about that time and place, and that you bring with you any disposable force you conveniently can, or that you hold the whole of the Alabamians in defensive positions on the frontier settlements till I shall bring the war into their neighborhood, when you can come into the general line of operations with me.

No quartermaster has arrived here but Dr. Waite. Captain Page says that, under his instructions from the war department, his presence in this quarter is indispensable. No flints and no ammunition have yet arrived.

I have heard of shipments from New Orleans of army supplies, but none have arrived. Subsistence, with arms and accoutrements, from Hawkinsville, will begin to come in to-morrow.

I shall cause a large deposite of subsistence to be made at Irwinton, another at Fort Mitchell, and a third at this place. I am inquiring, and may establish a fourth depot at some convenient point between Irwinton and Fort Mitchell.

Six companies of regulars have arrived here to-day, and Munro's three days ago; they are sent to guard the Indians at Fort Mitchell.

I remain, with undiminished confidence, yours, most respectfully, WINFIELD SCOTT.

Major gen. T. S. Jesup, U. S. A. com. &c.

Head quarters army of the south,
Columbus, (Ga.) June 17, 1836.

SIR: I have this moment received your two letters of the 15th and 17th instant.

(Note furnished with the copy.)

*So the fact was communicated, the importance of adding that it was communicated by letter or orally cannot be perceived.

I am infinitely astonished and distressed to hear of your near approach, and in a starving condition,* to Fort Mitchell. You knew that your forces were not wanted there; you knew that no supplies could reach even Irwinton from New Orleans earlier than the 21st instant, if so soon; and you knew, by my letter of the 10th, that nothing had arrived as high as Hawkinsville, upon the Oakmulgee, and consequently nothing could have reached this place by the present date from that river. I also ought to add that you knew when you left here that the troops, daily increasing, were living from hand to mouth on the precarious supplies of the neighborhood. Under these circumstances, imagine my astonishment to learn that, instead of marching the disposable force of Alabama upon Irwinton, with subsistence for at least ten or five days in advance, to hear that you have come through the heart of the Indian country, seeking private adventures, which, if successful, could hardly have advanced the war, and against my known plan of operations, to Fort Mitchell, forty-five miles out of position! It is precisely general Gaines's movement upon Fort King, where there was no subsistence; and there is none, as you ought to have known, at Fort Mitchell.† My grief and distress are at their utmost height.—This strange movement you have made without giving me the slightest notice. You had not informed me, you do not even now tell me, that you are in command of the Alabamians, and your last letter, of the 8th instant, stated that it was doubtful whether you would even be invested with that command. All this is infinitely strange, and was the last thing in the world that was to be expected from you.

Well, to prevent starvation, I have called for the quartermaster and commissary, and demanded from them what rations and forage they could supply. Lieutenant Waite, the quartermaster, had, with great difficulty, provided some corn for my movement, at the head of the Georgians, on the 21st or 22d, and lieutenant McCrabb had just nearly exhausted the market to obtain two or three days' rations for the troops already at Fort Mitchell. At the risk of starving the troops on the river, (the Georgians and regulars), I have ordered the quartermaster to send you five hundred bushels of corn, and the commissary to move heaven and earth to send two or three days' subsistence for the troops brought with you. To prevent, however, all further erratic movements, I desire you to encamp your forces somewhere in the neighborhood of Fort Mitchell till further orders, or until I can see you. We will keep your forces, and those previously on the river, from starving, if possible, till the arrival of the Oakmulgee supplies, which I suppose will precede those from New Orleans by some days.

The first, and one of the worst effects of your arrival, will be to prevent a movement of the Georgians and regulars as early as I intended. The former have pushed their impatience for active operations almost to a state of mutiny; a result which I may not be able to prevent, if they should learn that the arrival of the Alabamians is to hold them in a state of inglorious activity many days longer.

I wrote to you yesterday, and despatched the letter by a runner from Fort Mitchell. I shall endeavor to visit Fort Mitchell to-morrow or the next day. Though in grief, I still remain yours, with great regard, WINFIELD SCOTT.

Some wagons with subsistence are despatched to-night, but cannot arrive, I learn from Mr. Waite, till to-morrow morning. Some corn (two hundred and fifty or three hundred bushels) will be down by ten o'clock to-morrow, in a boat. W. S.

Head quarters second army corps, southern army,
Camp on the waters of Halchechubbee, June 17, 1836.

GENERAL: I have this instant received your letter of yesterday. I regret that my operations have met your disapprobation; but they were commenced, and have been continued, for the purpose of staying the tomahawk and scalping knife, and preventing the devastation of entire settlements or neighborhoods on the frontier. They have had the effect of tranquilizing, in some measure, the frontier people, and of inducing them to remain at their homes. I regret the censure implied in your remarks, because it is unmerited. I acted in accordance with what I believed to be the spirit of your instructions; but, even were my conduct in direct opposition to your instructions given at a former period, the altered circumstances of the country are, I should think, a full justification. I consider it so, for I have none of that courage which would enable me to remain inactive when women and children are daily falling beneath the blows of the savage. Writing in the open field, where I am interrupted every moment by matters of detail of every kind, even to the placing of a wagon, I cannot now explain the remarks in my letter which you have considered so enigmatical, further than to say, in justice to governor Clay, that he made no opposition to my assuming command, but made every effort to sustain me; and to add that, if successful in my present operations, I shall owe much of that success to his able arrangements. The troops, or rather a part of them, were opposed, not to me personally, but to any officer of the United States taking command of them; and I would take command of militia and volunteers on no other terms than their consent. I would resign my commission first.

(Note furnished with the copy.)

*When general Jesup arrived at Fort Mitchell, on the night of the 18th of June, he found a steamboat with seventy thousand rations, which he had ordered from New Orleans before he left Washington city, and he found in the neighborhood several thousand bushels of corn, which he had directed captain Page to secure early in June. He was surely entitled to some small share of the benefits of his own arrangements. If general Scott was not acquainted with the resources at his command, it was not the fault of general Jesup.

†General Jesup knew that the navigation was good, and he expected the arrival of steamboats with supplies at Columbus by the 15th of June. He had subsistence sufficient for the troops under his command to the 22d of June.

I am now within five miles of Enea Mathla's camp, with twelve companies of volunteers and four or five hundred Indian warriors. Eleven hundred warriors, under Hopothle Yoholo, will join to-night, and perhaps five hundred volunteers from Alabama. I made such arrangements for the defence of the settlements in my rear, that I feel assured of their entire security. I would have struck the enemy to-night, but for your letter; if he is not struck to-morrow morning, he will escape for the present, but the force I have in the field is sufficient to pursue and reduce him.

With every disposition to perform their duty, the volunteers and militia are necessarily extremely irregular in their returns, &c. I am not, therefore, able to send you a return in form of the force under my command. I am, sir, respectfully, your obedient serv't,
T. S. JESUP, major gen. com.
Maj. gen. Scott, com. of southern army, Columbus, Ga.

RECEPTION OF THE PRESIDENT AT NASHVILLE.

From the Boston Morning Post.

The Nashville Union states that the president, on his journey to the Hermitage, accompanied by maj. Donelson, and a few friends who had previously joined him, was met about thirty-five miles from Nashville, by the citizens' committee and by the young men's committee of the city and county, early in the morning of the 4th ult. on the road about three miles east from Lebanon. When the citizens' committee approached him in form. The hon. George W. Campbell, their chairman, saluted him by the delivery of an eloquent and appropriate address, of which we give the following brief epitome.

Impressed with a lively sense of the great and important services which the president had rendered the country, in the various exalted stations in which he had acted, they were happy in this opportunity to express to him and the world the high estimation in which they held them. In regard to his military achievements, they had already become the property of the nation, and of the civilized world. But the speaker would refer to some of those peculiar traits of character which have not always attracted the notice which they deserved. Among these, he mentioned a readiness to risk all dangers, at every personal hazard, when the good of his country required it. Thus, when, during the late war, gen. Jackson marched with raw troops against the savage Indians, when harrassed by the superior numbers of the enemy, destitute of supplies, which occasioned indications of a mutiny among his men, he hazarded life and reputation, sustained his ground, and shared their wants and offerings until supplies and reinforcements arrived—then attacked and demolished the savage enemy.

His enemies at that time were disappointed, and no, a few of those who acted a reprehensible part then, appear to form the nucleus of the party in Tennessee who are most opposed to the measures of his administration. Again, when a powerful force landed in New Orleans, to seize that city, general Jackson hastened to the rescue with an inferior force, to attack the most distinguished troops of Europe, and saved the city preparatory to the great victory of the 8th of January. Great clamor was raised against him for adopting martial law in the defence of New Orleans, which, however, proved ultimately the best expedient that could have been adopted. This was another proof of a patriotic recklessness of self. The victory of the 8th of January, over a force vastly superior to his own, has not only immortalized his military fame, but greatly elevated the American character. It was viewed in Europe as the most brilliant achievement of modern times, and placed the American character on a level with that of the noble Roman. Since general Jackson has been chief magistrate of the nation, he has realized the most sanguine expectations of the people, and signally disappointed his enemies, while every effort has been made to embarrass him. His first veto upon the right of the general government to make internal improvements within the jurisdiction of the states, has been sustained by the people by increased majorities at the ballot box. The next great work of his administration, which was also sustained by the approbation of the people, both friends and foes, was the strangling of the doctrine of nullification. His measures against the bank have likewise been approved ultimately by the people, notwithstanding the embittered clamor of the opposition. The result was universal prosperity. The extraordinary censure of a majority of one branch of the national legislature will finally be annulled by the expunging resolutions, and be remembered only to show the injustice and recklessness of its authors. Another great work of his administration is the rallying of the democratic party, and the restoration of the great practical principles of Jefferson. Those who formerly belonged to the democratic party, but who have opposed the present administration, will, it is believed, ere long, repent the course they have pursued. The distinguished acts of his eventful life will be handed down to the most distant posterity when his enemies are forgotten. The speech then closed with expressing the joy which the citizens then felt in the opportunity of doing (to use the words of Jefferson) "honor to him who has filled the measure of his country's glory."

After Mr. C. concluded his remarks, the president replied as follows:

Sir: I am at a loss for words to give utterance to the feelings which have been excited by the terms you have employed, on this occasion, in tendering me the welcome of my neighbors and friends. Availing myself of a short respite from the cares of office, I left the seat of government entirely from a wish to look into my private affairs, which, after a long separation from them, required a little of my personal attention. So general and lively a manifestation of the respect of my fellow citizens as this is, and as I have received frequently on other occasions throughout my journey, was therefore unexpected. It is, however, not the less acceptable—on the contrary, I regard it as one of the most flattering evidences I have ever received of the interest the people take in the operations of the government; and I should be callous indeed, if, after the events of the last seven years, when my conduct has engaged so much of the public attention, I did not feel profoundly and gratefully the obligations which belong to the assurance that those for whom I have labored to do justice, not only to my intentions, but far more than justice in the extent they are pleased to give to their approbation of all the leading measures of my administration. That this assurance, sir, comes from you, as the organ of so numerous and respectable a portion of the citizens of Nashville and its vicinity, enhances its value. You have been acquainted with my public and private life. You have filled elevated and responsible stations in the public service, particularly in the administration of Mr. Madison; and you have been a uniform supporter of the principles of the republican party which brought that illustrious statesman into power.

You have adverted, sir, to some of the most prominent acts of my military and civil career, but have traced in terms of too much partiality to me the considerations which gave them a claim to the notice of my country. In the most of them I was but the agent of the power derived from the masses of brave and intelligent citizens who were associated in the service with me—in all of them, the co-operation and assistance necessary to give them success show how small can be the claim of a single individual to the applause which may be due to them, as causes of the public good. That those acts should have met with opposition from those who doubted their justice or policy, was natural, and that it should have been directed at me personally, in the spirit of fairness and candor, was to have been expected. In proportion, however, as this opposition has singled me out as the mark of unsparing abuse—in proportion as it has sought by unfair means to degrade me, for the purpose of rendering inefficient and odious the results of a service called for by the interests of the country, have I felt myself unduly honored. Such a course of opposition could not weaken the sentiments of justice and magnanimity in the bosoms of my countrymen, and it could therefore do no injury, except to make me an object of too much favor in their affections.

In respect, sir, to those portions of my military conduct which arrayed against me the power you have described as not without a political influence in the present day, it affords me pleasure to find that your approving voice does justice to the patriotic sacrifices of the brave men who were my companions in arms. The steps which were necessary to put an end to the ravages of the tomahawk and scalping knife, and free our territory from foreign invasion were pursued with energy and were crowned with success. If, in their execution, there were those, who from feelings of mistaken humanity, could not yield their co-operation, or from other causes, could not sanction the means pursued by me, it was for the country to judge how far they were right or wrong. To this tribunal I cheerfully left the judgment which the historian will record, and it will be honor enough for the gallant spirits whose prowess was signalized in the Indian forest and on the plains of New Orleans, to know that it is in accordance with the favorable judgment you have expressed on this occasion, and may forget that there ever was an attempt made to cast a shade over their actions. It is true, sir, that in many of these operations my conduct for awhile was misrepresented to my countrymen, and my character was denounced as an object of execration. I was held up then as a violator of the public law, and as a tyrant and usurper; but the intelligence and virtue of the people could not long tolerate the prevalence of error and prejudice, and shielded by their power, I was soon placed beyond the reach of the shafts of calumny and detraction.

It may be too much, sir, for me to cherish the expectation that such will be fate of all the bitter effusions which are now directed at me because of the manner in which I have performed the duties of the presidency. Your flattering language, however, on this occasion, and the support already given to the leading measures of my administration, make my obligations on this score to the discernment and firmness of the people, far greater than those I have acknowledged in the humbler relations of my life.

At no period of our political history have there been questions of deeper import to the union and perpetuity of our free institutions than those which have arisen under my administration. This was the natural effect of the long peace which prevailed, and of the great stimulus it communicated to the numerous sources of our national and individual wealth and prosperity. Hitherto the recollections of the revolutionary struggle, and the impulses of our war with Great Britain, had brought into action chiefly those influences which guarded us against foreign invasion. These influences tended to harmonize all the sections of our confederacy as long as the situation of the country gave them a claim to the popular attention. But the time had arrived when thirteen millions of freemen ceased to feel much apprehension about the power of foreign nations, and the public mind necessarily turned its chief attention to domestic affairs, and to the various schemes calculated to develop their improvement. In this state of things, the internal action of the government had to be tested in many aspects that were new, and principles heretofore considered plain and undisputed, became complicated and confused in their application to the various interests which sprung up in the different sections of the union. Under such circumstances, it was not to be expected that I could avoid difficulties in the administration of the government. That I have treated, in the manner the best calculated to reconcile them to the public good, and prevent their weakening the bonds of our happy union, is more than I can hope; but I trust that my conduct, when impartially examined, will be found to have been controlled at least by an anxious desire to preserve the principles of the constitution, and to keep the general government within the limits of its legitimate authority. Those difficulties have doubtless in some instances been rendered more embarrassing by the acts of factious politicians, but in the far greater number of cases, as you have justly intimated, they have sprung out of the radical difference which has ever distinguished the republican and federal parties.

There was a time, sir, when I thought the democratic principles of our system might be maintained with less of the rigidity, in the policy which excluded their opponents from a leading influence in the councils of the government than had been observed by some of the administrations which preceded mine. Experience, however, soon satisfied me, that in the latitude in which I indulged this opinion, I did not give due weight to the causes that influence the conduct of public men. I could not fail to learn by the circumstances to which you have alluded, when tracing the means resorted to by the bank of the U. States, and by the advocates of nullification on the one hand, and of consolidation on the other, that it will be almost impossible to obtain an administration true to the constitution and faithful to the great trusts it creates for the good of the people, unless the people themselves exercise the most sleepless vigilance, not only in respect to the measures of government, but to the agents they employ to carry them into execution. It is true that the chief interest of the people is in the measures of the government. But measures cannot be carried into effect without agents, and they must from the nature of things fail unless these agents are faithful representatives, and give their hearts as well as their promises to the constitutional objects of their appointment. Practically, therefore the difficulties of an administration consist less in knowing and adopting what is just and proper in itself, than in being able to obtain that co-operation through agents which is necessary to secure to the people the advantages they have a right to expect from a government established for their good alone. Thus whilst we have seen, in the system of local improvements by the general government—in the encroachments and corruption of the bank of the United States—in the resort to disunion through the process of nullification—in the attempt at consolidation by the exercise of power defined only by the discretion of congress—the various forms through which the old enemy of republicanism has attempted to engraft new features on the constitution, and make it by construction and implication what the people never intended it to be; we have also seen how greatly the dangers of this foe can be increased by its power to interest in its cause those who owe their elevation to the people, and who have professed an attachment to republican principles in the very acts of their betrayal of them.

If, sir, by the course which I have pursued, I have disappointed this secret, but ever active foe to the true and lasting interests of the country, and shall have awakened the people to a more vivid and salutary sense of the importance of their vigilance and union, in digesting and executing the measures calculated to perpetuate a system of government founded upon their supreme will and authority, I shall deem myself fortunate indeed. The consciousness, at least, of having labored assiduously to produce this effect, and the assurances I have already received of the public approbation, will render powerless the attempts which have been made to misrepresent my acts and calumniate my motives.

I was aware of the responsibility devolved upon me when the people elevated me to the presidency, and I was not long in perceiving that the attempts to curtail their rights and privileges would have to be met by bold and energetic measures, differing in the extent of their importance and delicacy of their execution from those which I had been called on to pursue in the military service, but similar in the risks to which they exposed me. To be now called a dictator and a usurper can therefore be no new terrors to me, whatever impressions such epithets may make for the moment. I have too much confidence in the virtue and intelligence of my countrymen to suppose that their judgment will ever be founded on any other considerations than those of truth and justice.

Allow me to thank you again, sir, for your kindness on this occasion and to assure my neighbors and friends, so many of whom are within my hearing, that I shall always feel proud of their confidence and attachment.

After the president had done speaking, Andrew Ewing, esq. of the young men's committee, then greeted the president by the delivery of a handsome and appropriate address—peculiarly appropriate, as coming from a son of one of general Jackson's esteemed friends, now no more. The president replied to Mr. Ewing briefly, but in an eloquent and dignified manner. General Jackson was then escorted, by the committees, to the Hermitage, stopping to breakfast at Lebanon and dining at Mayson's, where he was met by a large concourse of friends, on whose behalf he was addressed by captain Peter Mosely, which was delivered in all the warmth and sincerity of old friendship.

DINNER TO MR. CALHOUN AND GENERAL THOMPSON.

From the Pendleton Messenger.

The dinner to Mr. Calhoun and general Thompson, on Friday last, was well attended. Indeed a considerable number of the citizens of the district supposing probably, that it was to be a barbecue, or dinner out of doors, assembled in the village, and as it was altogether certain that not the fourth part of those present could be accommodated, even in the large room where the dinner table was to be provided, it was suggested to gen. Thompson that an address from him previously, would be very acceptable, which all might have an opportunity of hearing. This request he promptly complied with, and previous to the arrival of Mr. Calhoun, addressed his constituents for an hour or more, on the general topics which occupied the attention of congress at the late session. He gave an eloquent and startling account of the corruption and political profligacy of the times, and we have no doubt, awakened the attention of some who had not been before aroused, to the dangerous and rapid strides of abolitionism at the north. The passage of the bill distributing the surplus, and thus taking away from the government the means of corruption he alluded to as the only bright event of the session. The address was listened to with great attention and manifest approbation.

Near a hundred persons sat down to the dinner in Dr. Reese's long room; col. Edward Harleston acting as president, and capt. Jacob Warley as vice president of the day. Among the regular toasts was the following.

Our distinguished senator in congress, the hon. John C. Calhoun—His long political career has been characterised by devotion to the best interests of his country; and he now stands pre-eminent among the advocates of the rights of the states and the people, and the opponents of irresponsible power and misrule.

After the applause which followed this toast had subsided, Mr. Calhoun rose and addressed the company with great animation, for half an hour or more. The following is the substance of his remarks.

SUBSTANCE OF MR. CALHOUN'S REMARKS.

Mr. C. said: After 25 years, fellow citizens, of interrupted service in the councils of the union, in various capacities, and during a most trying period of our history, that I should receive the cordial and unqualified approbation of my neighbors and immediate friends, who had the best opportunities of judging of my motives and character, could not but be highly gratifying to me. In responding to the general approval of my public conduct, contained in the sentiment just offered, it would hardly be expected that I should enter into a general recapitulation of my political course, beginning with a second war of independence, the first measure of importance in which I bore a prominent part, after I became connected with the general government, and ending with the deposit bill, which has just received your warm approbation. But I may say of these measures, the first and last in which I had an effective agency, that as wide apart as they stand in point of time, and as dissimilar as they might seem to be, yet in one important particular they are identical. They had a common object, the preservation of the constitution and liberty of the country, endangered at the former period by a foreign foe, and at the latter by a domestic. And let me add, as great as the danger was in 1812, it was not half so formidable as at the present time. It is true, that then our ships were seized, our sailors impressed, our commerce recolonized; yes, as completely so as it was before the Declaration of Independence, and this by the most powerful nation on earth, for such she proved to be in after events. To submit to such outrages, long continued and daily increasing, without any prospect of termination, would have been followed by national degradation, and by consequence, contempt for our institutions, to the debasing effects of which such cowardly submission would have been attributed. This was seen and felt at the time. If such was the danger of longer submission, that of resistance to such a foe, under the circumstances in which the country was then placed, seemed not much less formidable. It was at this moment, when our affairs stood between these dangerous alternatives, I took my seat for the first time in the councils of the union. The war session, as it is called, was my first session. I then was a young man without experience, having never served previously, excepting two short sessions in our own legislature, in any deliberative body. Circumstances placed me at this critical juncture, young and inexperienced as I was, at the head of the committee on foreign relations, the most important at the time of all the committees. I saw to the full extent the danger and felt the responsibility, but did not hesitate.

The country was unprepared, almost without ships, without fortifications, without munitions, without an army, and without a revenue, with a party powerful for talents, wealth and numbers, opposed to resistance; yet these difficulties did not intimidate. If to resist was full of danger, to submit was not less so; with this striking difference, which, with me was decisive, that if we failed in the former we would fail like men honorably and nobly resisting wrong, and struggling to maintain our independence and institutions, instead of basely sinking like slaves in humble submission, the scorn and contempt of the world. Fortunately for the country manly councils prevailed. The danger was met and surmounted, and a rich harvest of renown and prosperity followed. The peril of the contest was indeed great, but the danger was without. The country was free from corruption. The people were patriotic and the public morals untainted. However violent party spirit may have been at the time, no party, nor any public character of any party, was suspected of corruption; but now the danger is within. The foe is in the bosom of the country, and in possession of the government. A powerful faction, (party it cannot be called), held together by the hopes of public plunder, and marching under a banner whereon is written, "to the victors belong the spoils," has made successful war on our institutions, and converted all the power and influence of the government into instruments of gain. Ampler means for this purpose were scarcely ever placed in the hands of a dominant faction. With available means, five times greater than is required by the legitimate wants of the country; with the administration of a boundless public domain; with the unlimited control, till the passage of the deposit bill, over the public funds, and through them over the currency and banking institutions of the country, with 100,000 dependants on the bounty of the government; and, finally, with an organized, rigid and severe system of discipline, having its centre in Washington and extending in every direction over the wide circle of the country, a scene of speculation and corruption has been opened, reaching from the capitol to the extremities, embracing the high and the low, those in and those out of office, the like of which has scarcely ever existed under the most despotic and profligate governments. It is this powerful and corrupt combination, in actual possession of the government, against which the honest and patriotic have now to wage war. It is against them, that the deposit bill was levelled. I shall not venture to say, that the blow will be effectual. It may be, that corruption has struck its roots too widely and deeply to be eradicated; but I do assert, that without the measure, there would not be the slightest hope of reform. Leave the immense surplus in the hands of the government, with the means of controlling the circulation and the banking operations of the country, and of making whatever disbursements it pleased with the view to purchase states or individuals, and how idle would be the hope of reform! but as it is, divested of the surplus, with the public deposits and deposit banks placed under the protection of law, and beyond the control of the executive, the patriot may still hope. It is indeed a dawning—a gleam of light to those who love the country and its institutions. If we had no other evidence of its efficacy, the stern and bitter operation, I will not say of the party, but of its more prominent leaders, headed by the president himself, and the loud and continued wailing of all the organs of the faction ever since the passage of the bill, would of themselves afford sufficient. With such an opposition it is wonderful that the measure was adopted; but let me add, as an act of justice, that the more wonderful the passage of the bill, the more honorable to the independent and sound portion of the administration party in both houses, by whose co-operation it was effected. When I saw so many in the ranks of the party standing firm, and sacrificing party attachments to love of country, on this great occasion, under all the pressure which was brought to bear on them, new hope for our country and its institutions revived in my bosom.

But, whatever may be the success of the measure, whether it be destined to open the way to thorough and complete reform of our political system, or to prove by its failure that the disease is too far gone for medicine, there is one view of the subject that brings it home to us, and which cannot fail to excite an interest in the breasts of all who hear me. The act is the consummation of the Carolina doctrines, carried out in their practical consequences. It would be idle, before such an audience, to discuss the nature of these doctrines, and the object we had in view in their practical assertion. It is sufficient to say that our leading object was to arrest the tariff or protective system, with the view, first, to throw off an oppressive and unconstitutional burthen, which weighed down all the springs of our prosperity, and was rapidly reducing us to poverty; and, next, to reform the government by drying up the sources of a revenue, which we saw would so overflow the treasury on the payment of the public debt, as to corrupt the government and destroy our liberty, unless diminished by a great and decisive reduction of the tariff. These were the motives which governed us—motives, let me say, worthy of our patriotic and gallant state. Fixed and resolved in our determination, we were in no haste to act. We waited patiently till it was announced the debt was paid, till the act of 1832 was proclaimed on both sides, by the administration and the opposition, as a final adjustment of the tariff in the new state of things consequent on the payment of the debt,—an act which we clearly saw at the time, and which all must now acknowledge, fell far short of applying a remedy to the fatal disease against which this state contended. It was then, and not till then, the state interposed its sovereign voice—wisely and patriotically interposed, as every impartial observer, enlightened by after events, must see, and so posterity will with one voice admit. But, as powerful as was the remedy, it could not of itself at once arrest a disease so inveterate and deep.—There is in the nature of things an interval—a convalescent state, between disease and health, both in the physical and political world. It is not in the power of the most potent medicine to restore the patient to instant health, nor of the most effective measure to restore the body politic, when diseased, at once to a sound condition. Time had to be allowed for the reduction of the duties to the point which the constitutional wants of the country might require. A sudden reduction would have prostrated the manufacturers with the loss of an immense amount of capital and skill, and the danger of a reaction that might prove fatal to the country. We intended no war against the manufacturers. We wished them no ill, and were at all times, both then and before, willing to allow ample time for a reduction so gradual as to avoid a shock, both to them and the country. This was effected by the compromise bill, which, while it repealed all the duties on articles which were thought to require no protection, allowed eight years for the reduction of the duties on protected articles.

I saw at the time, that, notwithstanding the vast amount of the reduction, (as I shall hereafter shew), there would be a considerable surplus, and that, as much as it would comparatively be, yet it would be sufficient to perpetuate power in the hands of those in possession of the government, and who had by their past acts left no doubt that it would be used for the corrupt and dangerous purpose to which it has since been preferred. I stated my impression to the distinguished senator from Kentucky, who acted a part so honorable to himself and useful to the country on the occasion, with the view that, in the adjustment of the details, the evil might, as far as possible, be guarded against. He was not insensible of the danger; but could not, in his opinion, consistently with what was due to the interest he represented on the occasion, and without losing its support, do more than was done.

What I anticipated followed. It became apparent the next year there would be a surplus, and my attention was, at an early period, directed to the subject, with the view of devising and applying some measure which might in its effects anticipate the action of the compromise act, and thereby apply a remedy to a disease which could not be fully reached at once, for the reasons stated, by a simple reduction of the duties. With this view, I moved, session before the last, for a special committee on the subject of executive patronage. A numerous and able committee was appointed, selected from the three parties in the senate, which, with other measures, reported a bill to regulate the deposit banks, and a resolution to amend the constitution, so as to authorize the distribution of the surplus revenue among the states during the operation of the compromise act. It was too late in the session for definite action then.

I reviewed both at the last session, and had the good fortune to succeed in passing them in one bill, in the form which they finally assumed in the deposit act. The effect will be, to restore to the states, as the immediate representatives of the people, all the money not needed by the government; and, of course, so far as the diseased state of the government depends on a surplus, at once eradicate the disease as effectually as if the duties had been at once reduced to the legitimate and constitutional wants of the government, and that without in the slightest degree injuriously affecting the manufacturing interest of the country. It does more—vastly more. It not only takes the surplus from the government, but, by placing it in the custody of the states, puts it into the opposite scale. The effects will be to convert the state governments into active and vigilant guardians of the common treasury, and to enlist them by their interests to become the advocates of economy and retrenchment in the general government, without which there can be no effectual reform. While accomplishing this important service, it will at the same time restore to the staple states a large portion of that excess which they pay into the general treasury through the duties. To the extent of this difference between what we pay and what we receive back by the act, we will still be losers, in a money point of view, till the compromise bill complete the reduction. The difference is not large. It may be something more than a third of the excess of our contribution; but, whether it be more or less, I feel confident that a fund applied in a manner so well calculated to enlist all of our copartners in the union in the great work of reform, for which our gallant little state has so long contended almost alone, will be considered by you as fully returned in the shape of the most substantial political benefits, particularly if the share which may fall to us and the other states interested shall be applied to the construction of the magnificent work of connecting by rail road the southern Atlantic ports with the Mississippi and Ohio. Having thus by this last measure consummated the great object for which our doctrines were called into action, it is time to pause and inquire, what have we done? What good have we effected? Have we been compensated for our long and arduous struggle in defence of our interests and the liberty and constitution of the country?

That there has burst upon this and the southern states a tide of prosperity within the last three years, to which they had been for a long time strangers, none will deny. On whatever side we cast our eyes, we witness its effects in the improved condition of the country, and the easy and independent circumstances of the people. To what is this to be attributed? I doubt not that much may be traced to general causes growing out of a long peace and the vast improvement in all the arts, mechanical and chemical, which has distinguished the last fifty years, and the full benefit of which begins now to be realized, in the increased prosperity of the civilized world. But how has it happened, that this growing, general prosperity, which has been so long visible in many portions of our country, as well as others with which we are commercially connected, has been scarcely felt in the southern sections of the union, till within the last three years? And how is it to be accounted for, that it broke in on us so suddenly about that time? How did it happen that we just then passed from a state of depression into one of prosperity, which has been ever since increasing? To these questions but one sensible answer can be given; that it was then that the shackles of commerce, which had long bound our industry and pressed down the springs of our prosperity, were struck off. Yes, struck off, by the wise, bold and timely interposition of our state—by nullification—not only for her own benefit, but for the whole south; and, I may add, in a wider sense, looking to political consequences, the whole union. Our prosperity as a great agricultural people, the producers of cotton, rice and tobacco, which depend for their consumption on the general market of the world, must depend on a free exchange of our products with the rest of the world. The protective system, in striking at this exchange, struck at the root of our prosperity, which felt the blow to its remotest branches. Under the tariff of 1828, nearly one-half of the back return of our exchanges with foreign nations, passed into the coffers of the general government, to be disbursed, through its appropriations, almost exclusively to other sections. Hence the distress and poverty which weighed down the south, and hence the sudden prosperity which has followed the overthrow of the system.

I have been looking over (said Mr. C.) the commercial returns for 1835, since the adjournment of congress, and comparing it with those of 1832, the year which immediately preceded the interposition of this state; not with a view of addressing you, but to keep myself informed of the progress which our commerce and prosperity have made since that important epoch in our history. The results are surprising. They more than realize what the most sanguine among us anticipated. I will state a few facts, beginning with the domestic exports of the country.

Our exports may be said to be the measure of our commercial prosperity. On them depend the imports, and on these the revenue of the country, with its commerce and navigation. How then stands the exports of domestic products at the two periods, '32 and '35, the year preceding the action of the state and the last year, with an interval of only three years between? That of '32 in round numbers amounted to $63,000,000, and that of '35 had increased in this short period, to $101,000,000. But what is more striking still, of the sixty-three millions in '32, as near as can be ascertained, the exports from the staple states, I mean that portion that grows cotton, rice and tobacco, amounted to forty millions of dollars, and that from the rest of the union to about twenty-three millions; while in '35, the former amounted to about eighty millions, and the latter to but twenty-one millions, showing that the southern exports had doubled in this short period, while that of the rest of the union had rather fallen off. I doubt, if there be any thing on the record of history to be compared to this extraordinary commercial growth. To double in three years, and that not compared with a disastrous year, for that of '32 was a year of prosperity compared with those which preceded it. To increase more in three years than in the preceding forty-five, going back to the commencement of the government, and as much as through all the previous period from the first settlement of the country! Making every allowance that fairly can be made for other causes; the general prosperity of the world; a favorable commercial vibration, and others, if there be others; yet this result is too great to be attributed to them. Nothing but a burden taken off; commercial shackles removed; toll gates taken down; and freedom restored to our commerce and exchanges with the world, can adequately account for a prosperity so great and sudden, corresponding as it does, with the great change in our commercial code, and the predictions of those who effected it.

If we return from the exports to the imports, we shall find, as might be anticipated, a corresponding increase. The imports for consumption in the year '32, that is the imports after deducting the reshipments, amounted to $80,000,000 in round numbers, and that of '35 to $129,000,000. The duties levied on the former, if my memory serves me, was upwards of $35,000,000, (I speak of the gross revenue from the imports, including the expense of collection and some other charges that do not come on the treasury), while that of '35 was to be put down at about $22,000,000. You will ask how happens it, that so small a sum in the latter was collected on so large an amount of imports, when in the former so large a sum was collected on comparatively so small. The commercial returns will explain. In '32 out of $80,000,000 of imports but $5,500,000 in round numbers were free of duty, while in '36 out of $120,000,000 sixty-five millions were free of duty, rather more than half. This with the reduction of duties on protected articles already effected by the compromise act, explains the difference. If the act of 1828 had remained unmodified, the revenue on the imports of '35 instead of twenty-two millions, would not have been short of sixty millions, and the share that would have fallen on our portions of the foreign exchanges, estimated, as I have stated, our exports at eighty millions, would not have been less than thirty-seven millions instead of thirteen, which may be estimated as the sum collected on our share of the foreign exchanges the last year. The difference shows what has been gained to us by the reduction of the tariff of '28, and will account in no small degree for our present unexampled prosperity. I do not claim the whole of this reduction as the result of the interposition of this state. Some reduction had been made by previous acts; but more than two-thirds of the whole reduction may fairly be attributed to our exertions. In the mean time, the compromise act is gradually taking off the remaining protective duties, and will by the year 1842 remove the whole, if the act be left undisturbed, by which time from ten to twelve millions annually, in addition to the present reduction, will be taken off.

The result, my fellow citizens, on the whole is, that a reduction of $37,000,000 annually in the imports has already been effected, being nearly two-thirds of the whole; and that in the next six years from ten or twelve millions more will be taken off under the compromise act, when only about one-sixth of those of '28 will remain.

We may see, said Mr. C. from these brief statements, the real cause of our great prosperity; and that the cause which has effected already so much, is still acting with increasing force. If we be but true to ourselves, and firmly maintain the position which we have acquired by such mighty exertions, I hazard nothing in saying that without some unexpected disaster, resulting from the visitation of Providence, or the calamity of war such as we were exposed to last winter, by the folly and vice of the administration, (which sought to involve the country in a war with France as anxiously as a wise and virtuous administration would have done to preserve peace), that a degree of prosperity unexampled, awaits us. We may judge of what is to come, after all the causes are fully developed and in full operation, when such fruits have followed a partial development, and the very commencement of their operation.

Here Mr. C. noticed the proceedings of congress, on the abolition question, and stated his impression, that though much was done by the discussion of the subject at the last session, to enlighten the public mind, both at the south and north, in relation to it, yet in conceding the right to abolish slavery in the District and territory, and establishing the principle that congress was bound by the constitution, to receive abolition petitions, every thing had been yielded to the incendiaries, for which they could have hoped. He saw in these concessions, the cause of increased activity and exertion on their part, and danger on our. As yet, the enlightened of all parties at the north with little exception were sound; but with the ample means possessed by the abolitionist—ample funds—complete organization an energetic press—the young, the thoughtless and the enthusiastic would receive the poison. The whole section, if nothing should be done to arrest the progress of the disease, must become infected, when consequences such as all must deplore, would follow. Mr. C. stated also, as his impression, that we had nothing to hope from the north; that nothing effectual would be done there to arrest the danger; and that we must look to ourselves. Fortunately, he said, the constitution left ample means in our hands to protect ourselves, as has been fully shewn, during the session. All that we wanted, were union and concert, and spirit to apply them; and, in his opinion, the sooner applied the better, both for ourselves and the nation. He concluded this part of his remarks by saying, that the situation of the slaveholding states was new and extraordinary; that they were exposed to dangers of unexampled magnitude; but great and novel as they were, our means of meeting and overcoming them were ample, provided we should prove to have the sagacity of seeing in time, the danger, with the remedy, and spirit to make the application. He said the destiny that awaits us is no ordinary one. If we successfully meet the perils that surround us, we would be among the first and greatest people of modern times; but if not, our lot would be worse than that of the savages we have driven out, or the slaves we command.

Mr. C. resumed his remarks on the present prosperity of the country. I foresee, said he, in the midst of this prosperity, a danger of no small magnitude, symptoms of which I fear are already visible. If we be not on our guard, the love of gain will overspread the land to the absorption of every other passion and feeling. In the eager pursuit of wealth, we are in danger of forgetting the struggle by which our prosperity was won, as well as the principles on which it rests; and of forgetting almost that there is a government in existence, on whose movements our destiny so much depends. I rejoice to see the spirit of industry, activity and enterprize now awake in the land. We of the south have had, heretofore, too little of this spirit. I shall say nothing to repress it when within proper bounds. His object was to warn against its excess, to the neglect of higher objects than the mere acquisition of wealth. In the spirit in which he made these remarks, he would offer the following sentiment:

The people of the south—May they not forget in the midst of their ardent pursuit of gain, that virtue, patriotism, honor and intelligence, and not wealth, are the only certain and durable foundation of national prosperity and greatness.

PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT.

House of lords, Saturday, Aug. 20.

This day parliament was prorogued with the usual formalities by his majesty in person. The muster of female beauty of fashion was more than ordinarily numerous. The attendance of peers was rather scanty. The members of the corps diplomatique filled completely, and indeed somewhat inconveniently, the space set apart for their reception. The body of the house presented a very animated and interesting scene. The coup d'œil from the gallery was extremely beautiful.

Soon after 12 o'clock the lord chancellor took the woolsack.

Prayers were read by the bishop of Bristol.

At 20 minutes after 2 his majesty entered the house, attended by the great officers of state. The sword of state was borne by viscount Melbourne, the cap of maintenance was borne by the earl of Shaftesbury.

His majesty having taken his seat on the throne, the gentleman usher of the black rod was directed to command the attendance of the commons forthwith to hear the royal assent given to the number of bills, and to witness the prorogation of parliament.

The speaker, in his state robes, accompanied by a large body of members, soon after appeared at the bar, when the right hon. gentleman addressed his majesty in nearly the following words:

"Most gracious sovereign: Your majesty's faithful commons have, during the progress of the session which is now about to be closed, taken into consideration many of the subjects recommended to their attention by your majesty's most gracious speech from the throne at its commencement. The commons have passed a measure for the commutation of tithes in England and Wales, after long and anxious deliberation. It is a question beset with many difficulties; but your majesty's commons have grappled with them, and have passed an act in which the rights of property have been carefully respected, and due caution has been taken to protect those rights with sufficient safe guards. It is a measure calculated to remove all cases of dissension between pastors and their flocks, and to give security and certainty to the income of the clergy, as well as to afford free scope and encouragement to agricultural skill and labor. Even if it shall hereafter be found that particular provisions in the act require revision and alteration, still your majesty's commons entertain a confident hope and belief that this measure is based on principles which will ultimately be found satisfactory and beneficial. In entering on the examination of the reports of the commissioners appointed to inquire into the state of the established church in England and Wales, your majesty's commons have proceeded with that respect which was due to the high authority from which these reports emanated, and with that cautious feeling which was so necessary when changes and alterations were about to be made in those ancient institutions which have so long commanded the reverence and respect of a large portion of your majesty's subjects. The act which your majesty's commons have passed with reference to this subject, by providing for a more equal distribution of episcopal duties and revenues, is most materially calculated to weaken, if it do not wholly remove, the motives for the translation of bishops, and by recognizing the principle and earnestly keeping in the mind the due proportion and balance between the amount of duties to be performed, and the extent of emolument to be received. Your majesty's commons believe that the measure will add to the efficiency and usefulness of the church, and will tend to strengthen its hold on the affections of the people. While your majesty's commons have accordingly passed two acts—one which makes considerable alteration with respect to the celebration of marriages; while the other provides for a more complete registration of births, deaths and marriages all classes of your majesty's subjects, must feel deeply interested in the successful operation of these measures, which bear so strongly on the various relations of domestic life, and on the safe transmission of property. The provisions of these acts have been framed in a liberal spirit, with an ardent desire to remove just causes of complaint, and with the hope of rendering the law generally acceptable, by making it equal and impartial, and manifesting a becoming respect for the feelings and conscientious opinions of those who dissent from forms of the established church. It has been highly gratifying to your majesty's commons, that such is the prosperous and flourishing state of the public revenue, that while they have provided with liberality for the ordinary expenses of the public service and also for some extraordinary exigencies which circumstances render necessary, in order to meet engagements formerly contracted for the most generous and honorable purposes, your majesty's commons have yet been able to make a considerable remission of taxation. In the settlement of duties to be regulated and taxes to be removed, your majesty's commons have taken care that the relief should be so applied as to give the greatest aid in cases where there was the most unequal pressure, or where the enforcement of the existing law was found to be vexatious. By the equalization of the duties on sugar, the benignant influence of an enlightened legislation will be felt by some of the inhabitants of your majesty's most distant possessions. I have now only to present to your majesty the two last bills of supply—the one for applying the sum of £4,000,000 out of the consolidated fund to the service of the year 1836, the other for raising the sum of £14,007,950 by exchequer bills for the service of the year 1836."

The royal assent was then given to sundry bills. His majesty then delivered the following most gracious speech:

KING'S SPEECH.

"My lords and gentlemen: The state of the public business enables me at length to relieve you from further attendance in parliament; and in terminating your labors, I have again to acknowledge the zeal with which you have applied yourselves to the public business, and the attention which you have bestowed upon the important subjects which I brought under your consideration at the opening of the session.

"The assurances of friendly dispositions which I receive from all foreign powers enable me to congratulate you upon the prospect that peace will continue undisturbed.

"I lament deeply that the internal state of Spain still renders that country the only exception to the general tranquillity of Europe, and I regret that the hopes which have been entertained of the termination of the civil war have not hitherto been realized.

"In fulfilment of the engagements which I contracted by the treaty of quadruple alliance, I have afforded to the queen of Spain the co-operation of a part of my naval force, and I continue to look with unabated solicitude to the restoration of that internal peace in Spain, which was one of the main objects of the quadruple treaty, and which is so essential to the interests of all Europe.

"I am happy to be able to inform you that my endeavors to remove the misunderstanding which had arisen between France and the United States have been crowned with complete success. The good offices which for that purpose I tendered to the two governments were accepted by both in the most frank and conciliatory spirit, and the relations of friendship have been re-established between them in a manner satisfactory and honorable to both parties.

"I trust that this circumstance will tend to draw still closer the ties which connect this country with two great and friendly nations.

"I have regarded with interest your deliberations upon the reports of the commission appointed to consider the state of the dioceses of England and Wales, and I have cheerfully given my assent to the measures which have been presented to me for carrying into effect some of their most important recommendations.

"It is with no ordinary satisfaction that I have learned that you have with great labor brought to maturity enactments upon the difficult subject of tithes of England and Wales, which will, I trust, prove in their operation equitable to all the interests concerned, and generally beneficial in their results.

"The passing of the acts for civil registration and for marriages in England has afforded me much satisfaction. Their provisions have been framed upon those large principles of religious freedom, which with the due regard to the welfare of the established church in this country, I have always been desirous of maintaining and promoting; and they will also conduce to the greater certainty of titles and to the stability of property.

"It has been to me a source of the most lively gratification to observe the tranquillity which has prevailed, and the diminution of crimes which has lately taken place, in Ireland. I trust that perseverance in a just and impartial system of government will encourage this good disposition, and enable that country to develop her great national resources.

"Gentlemen of the house of commons: I thank you for the liberality with which you have voted, not only the ordinary supplies of the year, but the additional sums required to provide for an increase in my naval force.

"I am also gratified to perceive that you have made provision for the full amount of the compensation awarded to the owners of slaves in my colonial possessions, and that the obligations entered into by the legislature have thus been strictly fulfilled.

"The increased productiveness of the public revenue has enabled you to meet those charges, and at the same time to repeal or reduce taxes, of which some were injurious in their effects upon my people, and others unequal in their pressure upon various parts of my dominions abroad.

"The present condition of manufactures and commerce affords a subject of congratulation, provided the activity which prevails be guarded by that caution and prudence which experience has proved to be necessary to stable prosperity.

"My lords and gentlemen: The advanced period of the year, and the length of time during which you have been engaged in public affairs, must render you desirous of returning to your respective counties. You will there resume those duties which are, in importance, inferior only to your legislative functions; and your influence and example will greatly conduce to the maintenance of tranquillity, the encouragement of industry, and the confirmation of those moral and religious habits and principles which are essential to the well being of every community."

The lord chancellor then, in the usual form, declared it to be his majesty's will and pleasure that the parliament should stand prorogued to Thursday, the 20th of October next.

FOREIGN CHRONICLE.

The Baltic trade. The Russian government has published an ukase by which foreign ships proceeding from one part of the Russian provinces on the Baltic to another part of the same province to complete or trade in their cargoes, shall be free from the double navigation duty imposed for the benefit of the treasury and custom house officers, and shall pay duty only in the first port in which they enter, like ships with a cargo.

Rail road iron. Bills have passed parliament this season for 1,100 miles of rail roads, which will require a total of 290,000 tons of iron, to be supplied within the next four years. When this is taken in conjunction with the demands for rail road iron from the U. States, it is obvious we shall have to be thrown upon our own resources, and commence the manufacture at our own works. We think we have iron of quality as good as any in England.

Sir Frederick Adam has resigned the government of Madras.

The following announcement may possibly be interesting to somebody.

Married at Torgul, on the bank of the Ghutaprabha river, on the 7th of March, the young rajah of Akulcote, to the daughter of Luxoomun Rao Sinday of Torgul.

Mr. Driabrow's plan of boring for water has been adopted, it seems in Calcutta. In one boring, at the fort, the rods had been carried to the depth of 120 feet, and the water had risen to within fourteen feet of the surface. A similar experiment was in progress at Delhi.

A steamboat called the Banian is plying between Calcutta and Singapore, Penang, Malacca, and other places near the straits of Malacca.

A man named Robertson has been making a balloon ascension from Calcutta. Being the first ever attempted there, it excited immense wonder among the natives, who came in some instances 40 and 50 miles to see it. The public were very eager for another, which Mr. R. professed his willingness to make, provided he were paid 10,000 rupees in advance.

Lord Auckland is endeavoring to introduce the culture of the cochineal insect into India.

The subject of steam communication with Europe appears to excite great interest in every part of British India. Petitions to the British government for measures to promote it were in circulation, and obtaining vast numbers of signatures.

Miramichi a free port. We have much satisfaction in being enabled to state that a letter has been received by the last British packet from our persevering and indefatigable provincial agent, H. Bliss, esq. stating that the petition sent from this place, we believe in June last, praying that Miramichi might be made a free port, has been complied with; and that the necessary instructions for carrying the same into effect will be forwarded by the September packet.

[Miramichi Gleaner.]

A Bible that was once the property of Charlemagne, was recently sold at auction in London for £1,500. This extraordinary volume, perhaps the most extraordinary in the world, is entitled in the catalogue "Biblia Sacra Latina ex versione Latina Sancti Hieronymi. Codex membranaceus sæculi VIII, scriptus manu celeberrimi Alcuini et Caroli Magno donatus, die quo coronatus fuit."

It is a magnificent folio bound in velvet, the leaves are of vellum, and the writing is in double columns. It contains 449 leaves. Prefixed is a richly ornamented frontispiece in gold and colors. It is enriched with four large paintings exhibiting the state of the art at that early period; there are, moreover, 34 large initial letters, painted in gold and colors, and containing seals, historical allusions, and emblematical devices, besides some smaller painted capitals. This rare book is in fine preservation: it is understood not to contain the disputed passage at the commencement of St. John, and not to contain the passage of St. Luke, "Get thee behind me, satan."

A stone coffin was recently discovered in the church yard of Hamel Hempstead, on the lid of which is an inscription partly effaced by time, yet still sufficiently legible to prove it contained the ashes of the celebrated Offa, king of the Mercians, who rebuilt the Abbey of St. Alban's, and died in the eighth century. The coffin is very curiously carved, and altogether unique of the kind.

The porte and Mr. Churchill. The Liverpool correspondent of the New York Express says—

The porte has agreed to make the amende honorable to Mr. Churchill. The director of the prison at Scutari is dismissed; the sultan grants Mr. Churchill an indemnity of £2,000; the reis effendi grants him and his family some exclusive commercial privileges. On July 23d, all the English merchants in Constantinople gave an entertainment on this amicable adjustment, and Lord Ponsonby attended.

Lately, in the coal mines of Anzin, at 1,100 feet below the surface, a fossil palm tree was found. It was in an erect position, with its roots fixed several feet deep in the soil below. The trunk is about 36 inches in diameter. It is intended to be sent to the gallery of natural history at the garden of plants.

A sloop of war named the Triomphante, constructed upon a new plan, is at this moment being got ready for the sea at Cherbourg. Her guns are arranged in a novel manner, and she has neither fore nor hind castle. She carries 4 short 18-pounders, and 16 mortars 30-pounders. The mortars will fire solid or hollow projectiles, and one of the latter falling on the enemy's vessel will be able to set her on fire. A ship of the force of the Triomphante, will be able to cope with a 46-gun frigate built after the old plan.

While, in England, Jews are excluded by law from holding any public situations, and virtually debarred from the professions, there are in France, of that persuasion, 1 lieutenant general, 30 other military officers, 18 councillors, 27 physicians, 3 authors, 3 notaries, 12 heads of extensive private business, 2 bankers, (barons Rothschild), 1 deputy, and 1 member of the institute of France. In England, the clergy of the established church preach against the emancipation of the Jews.

It appears by the calculation of a Spanish writer that the annual produce of the English coal mines, is 18 millions of tons bringing a revenue of 450,000,000 of francs while the gold and silver mines of America yield but 220 millions leaving for the coal a difference of more than double.

Galloway bey. A young man who bore in Egypt the title of Galloway bey, the second son of Alexander Galloway, esq. of London, died on the 3d of July, at Alexandria. He had devoted his talents and industry in the service of the pacha of Egypt, as his chief engineer, for the last twelve years, and as a reward for these services, two years ago, he received the above title. He only left England in February last, for the purpose of carrying into effect the gigantic work of directing the execution of the rail road from Cairo to Seiz, for which he came to Europe to make all the arrangements on behalf of the pacha, with his father and brothers. His decease was caused by a liver complaint, occasioned by the climate. The rail road will still be carried into effect, and the executing of it will devolve upon the bey's brothers, two of whom are in Alexandria.

The London Court Journal speaks of the fact, as a remarkable act of condescension, that the duke of Portland worked at the pump to save himself from sinking in his yacht, off the coast of Norway during a violent storm.

DOMESTIC CHRONICLE.

White blackberries. The Augusta (Geo.) Courier states that there is a fine patch of white blackberries, growing on the plantation of col. Joseph Taylor, in Anderson district, S. C. The fruit grows on a bush similar to the common blackberry, but it is much sweeter.

Bridge over the Ohio. The corner stone of the first bridge ever built over the Ohio, was laid with much parade, and with appropriate ceremonies, at Louisville on the 5th ult.

The Bank of the U. S. have established a branch at New Brighton, Beaver county, and appointed Wm. H. Denny, late of this city, cashier. [Pittsburgh Her.]

Eight hundred and fifty-three buildings have been erected in New York from the 1st of May to the 15th ult. being a period of less than six months.

Coal. We learn from the New York Journal of Commerce, that the high price of coal this year has induced the board of assistant aldermen of New York to appoint a committee for the purpose of inquiring into the expediency of petitioning congress to repeal the duty on foreign coal. The price of anthracite coal in New York is $10 per ton.

Fire. A very destructive fire occurred at Quebec on the 10th ult. which destroyed ten dwelling houses and six warehouses or stores. The Catholic church in the market square was several times on fire and was saved with much difficulty. The total loss is estimated at from $250,000 to $300,000—about half insured.

Tobacco. A building for the storage and inspection of tobacco is about to be erected in New Orleans. It will be 4,000 feet front 4,000 feet deep, and capable of containing 25,000 hogsheds.

Steamboat explosion. The last "accident" of this kind that we have seen noticed, was on board of the boat Commerce on her upward passage from Louisville, Ky. She had been running a race with the Paul Pry, and stopping at night to land some passengers, instead of letting off her steam increased it. The consequence was, an explosion of the boiler as soon as she got under weigh, by which three persons lost their lives.

The grand jury refused to find a bill against the captain of the steam-ferry boat which ran down the boat Gen. Jackson in the harbor of New York.

It is said that the bodies of the right rev. bishop White and Robert Morris, the financier, now repose in the same vault in Christ church burial ground.

Beets and banking in New Jersey. Notice is given in the Paterson Intelligencer that "an application will be made to the legislature of this state, at their next session, to incorporate a company for the purpose of manufacturing sugar from beet, to be located in the counties of Bergen and Essex, with a capital of 500,000, to be styled the 'Beet Sugar Manufacturing company,' with banking and trust powers!"

We eschew this alliance of the root of evil with the beet root. The cultivation of the last, either by private enterprise, or by incorporated companies, will, no doubt, prove profitable and advantageous. But if they are to be raised by the aid of a beet bank, we fear more attention will be paid to it than to the beet-beda.

Color of flowers. It is said in the last number of the Scientific Tracts, that out of 435 species of plants and flowering shrubs indigenous to our soils, in New England, including nearly all the most common species, bearing conspicuous flowers, 180 species bear white flowers, and 117 yellow. Only 90 are red, and 48 blue; and of the former, only about three or four bear proper scarlet, or brilliant red flowers; and there are said to be none native in England. In the above estimate, the green, (or, in the language of botanists, colorless), and inconspicuous flowering plants had been included, the proportion of showy flowers would appear much more inconsiderable. [Bost. Trans.]

Silk print works. The Philips mills at Lynn, Mass. have recently been purchased by Henry A. Breed, esq. and thoroughly repaired. A new brick building, 88 by 40 feet and five stories high has also been erected for the printing of silks and gingham. The goods put up at this establishment are said to surpass in beauty any thing of the kind in this country. Many families, chiefly Irish, are already in the employment of the proprietor, and we learn he is about forming a company, with a capital of $100,000, for the energetic prosecution of this branch of the silk business.

Harvard college. The Plymouth (Mass.) Memorial, in noticing the recent centennial celebration at Harvard college, says—"Of the class of 1778, there were two present, viz: rev. Dr. Brainerd, of Worcester, and rev. Mr. Willis, of Kingston. These, it is believed, were the oldest classmates who met to congratulate each other on the occasion."

The burnt district in New York. Almost every trace of the frightful conflagration with which New York was visited last winter has been obliterated. A statement is published in the Journal of Commerce, from which it appears that the buildings on 419 lots were consumed, and their present situation is as follows:

Lots vacant	78
Buildings commenced	82
" roofed	64
" finished but not occupied	58
" and occupied	167
Total	419

The following states have already prohibited their banks from issuing any notes under five dollars: New York, Pennsylvania, Virginia, Georgia, Louisiana, Indiana, Alabama, New Jersey, Maryland, North Carolina, Tennessee, Kentucky and Maine.

A paragraph is extensively circulated in the papers, in which it is stated that the Salem and Boston Stage company has failed, and that its debts are said to amount to $600,000. The Salem Gazette corrects the error by stating that the whole liabilities of the company are only about $20,000, and that they have a stock which cost, and which would be worth to the company to carry on the business, $45,000.

Value of a dog. The ship Michigan, arrived at New York from Liverpool, when off Tuskar, on the 15th ult. would have run into an English brig, but for the barking of a dog, (the other hands being asleep), which no doubt preserved their lives.

Referring to the notice in the London papers of the death of bishop White, and the comparative mediocrity of his salary, the U. S. Gazette beautifully and truly says—"Bishop White enjoyed a revenue beyond a monarch's command—his daily income was beyond harem computation. If he went forth, age paid him the tribute of affectionate respect, and children 'rose up and called him blessed.'"

A metal has been recently discovered, that is said to combine all the qualities of real silver, at less than half the price. Mr. Hopkins, acting professor of chemistry at West Point, after various experiments, has certified that it may be used with safety for any purpose to which silver is usually applied in a family.

In the three counties of Barnstable, Plymouth and Norfolk, in Massachusetts, embracing nearly the entire territory of the old Plymouth, and a population of more than 100,000 souls, there is not a single licensed retailer of ardent spirits.

NILES' WEEKLY REGISTER.

FIFTH SERIES. No. 6.—Vol. I.]

BALTIMORE, OCTOBER 8, 1836.

[Vol. LI.—Whole No 1,306.

THE PAST—THE PRESENT—FOR THE FUTURE.

EDITED, PRINTED AND PUBLISHED, BY WILLIAM OGDEN NILES, AT $5 PER ANNUM, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

The president of the United States returned to Washington on Saturday last, much improved in health by his visit to Tennessee.

Mr. Forsyth, secretary of state, is absent from Washington on a visit to Georgia.

GO. We present returns of the election which took place in Maryland on Monday last; from which it will be seen that the whigs have elected sixty, and the friends of Mr. Van Buren nineteen members of the house of delegates. This result is considered an expression of the opinion of the people of Maryland in reference to the conduct of the nineteen recusant members, and is claimed as a triumph by both parties to the question. The contest was conducted with much spirit, and the result may be considered a fair criterion of the strength of parties in those counties where they were arrayed in opposition. In Frederick the Van Buren delegate ticket was withdrawn on the ground that, as it had been determined to hold a convention in Annapolis on the 3d Monday of the ensuing month, to make provisional arrangements for the continuance of the government, until the old constitution is amended or a new government instituted, it was not necessary to elect delegates to the assembly. What effect this decision of the people will have upon the recusants cannot yet be ascertained; it is, however, stated that John S. Sellman, esq. of Anne Arundel, one of the number, regarding the late election in his county as an instruction from his constituents, has entered the college and qualified as an elector—thus making twenty-two members now in session.

DEATH OF MR. GOLDSBOROUGH. The hon. Robert H. Goldsborough, one of the representatives of the state of Maryland in the senate of the United States, died at his residence, near Easton, on Wednesday last. The distinguished virtues of the deceased had endeared him to a large circle of friends, and his talents, acquirements and experience rendered him a valuable representative of his native state, which had for the second time placed him in the senate of the United States.

GEN. GAINES' letter to the governor of Tennessee, justifying his call upon that functionary for troops to aid in the defence of the western frontier, is published in the present sheet. It is a curious document, and will be quoted as another evidence that "passive obedience" is not always found among those who teach it. The authority under which the general acted is clearly established—but he has overlooked the fact that the government only differed from him on the question of expediency, and justly decided that treaty obligations ought not to be violated on grounds of mere conjecture. Precaution is the parent of safety—but the power to punish sometimes invites aggressions. Even if the government had committed itself in its instructions to gen. Gaines, the manner in which it redeemed itself was full of dignity and self-respect.

MILITARY COURT MARTIAL. The Georgetown Metropolitan states that the president has ordered a court of inquiry, to consist of major general Macomb, as president; brigadier generals Brady and Atkinson, members; and captain Samuel Cooper, as judge, advocate and recorder; to be held at Frederick, Maryland, as soon as the state of the service will permit; of which the president of the board will be the judge, to investigate the causes of the failure of the campaign in Florida under general Scott and general Gaines, and of the delay in prosecuting the campaign against the Creek Indians in Alabama.

THE FRENCH MINISTRY. By our abstract of foreign news, it will be seen that M. Thiers has retired from the French ministry, which, it is said, has been dissolved, in consequence of the conflicting views of the king and his ministers as to the policy of a forcible intervention in the affairs of Spain.

MICHIGAN. The editor of the New York "Courier and Enquirer" has received a letter from Detroit, dated on the 28th ult. which states that the final vote had been taken in the convention, in session at Ann Arbor, on the proposition to admit Michigan into the union on the condition that she will assent to the boundary line fixed by the act of congress, and that it was negatived by a majority of seven!

This decision will again open the boundary question, and may produce disastrous consequences unless moderation is observed by both parties.

ARKANSAS. The legislature of the new state of Arkansas assembled on the 12th ult. S. C. ROANE was elected president of the senate, and JOHN WILSON was chosen speaker of the house of representatives. On the first day of the session, a bill was introduced in the house (twice read and referred to a committee) to provide for the election of electors of president and vice president: The vote for governor was ascertained, and was as follows: for JAMES S. CONWAY, 5,338; for ABSALOM FOWLER, 3,222.

BANK OF THE U. STATES. Cornelius W. Lawrence of N. York, Henry D. Gilpin of Philadelphia, and John White of Baltimore, commissioners appointed by the secretary of the treasury to arrange the affairs of the government with the bank of the United States, after sitting for some days in Philadelphia with a committee on the part of the bank, have adjourned for a short time. The business, thus far, "has been conducted with the kindest feelings on both sides."

The National Gazette says "the bank is ready to account with government for its stock at the rate of $111 47 for each share—the periods of payment, as in the case of the other stockholders, to be regulated by the gradual winding up of the affairs of the institution."

SURPLUS REVENUE. Treasury department, 6th October, 1836. In compliance with the resolution of the senate of the United States, passed July 1st, 1836, directing that "during the ensuing recess of congress the secretary of the treasury cause to be published at the commencement of each month a statement of the amount of money in the treasury subject to draft, and also the amount standing to the credit of disbursing officers," the undersigned hereby gives public notice that "the amount of money in the treasury subject to draft," as shown by the running account of the treasurer, was, on the 1st instant $41,283,654 98; and "the amount standing to the credit of disbursing officers," as shown by the latest returns received, was $5,326,476 79.

LEVI WOODBURY, secretary of the treasury.

GOLD COINAGE. The coinage of gold commenced in 1795, and from that period till 1833, as we learn from the "Globe," there were struck, 132,592 eagles, 2,069,963 half eagles, and 141,562 quarter eagles, amounting to 2,344,127 pieces of gold, and equal in value to about twelve millions of dollars, (to be precise, 11,965,715 dollars.)

The coinage of silver commenced also in 1796, and up to 1835, the number and value of the several pieces coined were as follows:

	Number of pieces.	Value.
Whole dollars,	1,439,517	$1,439,517 00
Half - do	77,721,973	38,760,986 50
Quarter do	4,967,629	1,241,907 25
Dimes,	10,630,100	1,063,010 10
Half dimes,	10,558,243	527,912 15

Total, 105,312,462 $43,133,032 92
No whole dollar has been coined during the last thirty years.

Copper. Of this coin there have been struck in cents and half cents, 75,244,515 pieces, equal in value to $717,239 53. This has been great work to the mint, and great expense to the United States; for the copper has to be purchased as well as coined, and all with little or no advantage to the public.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT. By an authentic statement from the treasurer's office, it appears that the funds of this department remaining in bank on the 1st of last month were as follows, viz:

Whole amount in bank,	$383,319 11
Warrants issued and not paid,	58,757 78

Disposable funds on hand, $329,561 33
This amount is rapidly increasing, and will continue to increase, for some months, before arrangements can be perfected for its judicious expenditure. Indeed, so unexpectedly rapid has been the redemption of this department from its embarrassments, that no one apprehended the necessity of making preparations in time to absorb the surplus of revenue which would remain after the accomplishment of that object.

We learn that the increase in the revenues of the department continues. For the quarter ending on the 30th of June last, they exceeded the revenue of the corresponding quarter of last year seventeen per cent.

It cannot be otherwise than gratifying to the friends of the administration to see this department, which has been the occasion of so many unmerited charges, placed on such elevated ground. It promises an honorable close to the glorious administration of Andrew Jackson. [Globe.

According to a statement in the "Globe" of Wednesday last, fifty-two fines have been imposed upon mail contractors for failures in their contracts during the last quarter. These fines vary from two dollars to four hundred and ninety-three, and were imposed for various delinquencies—such as failure in the time of delivery—failures of a day—omissions of Sunday mails in some instances—delivery of wet mails—sending bags of newspapers by the wrong coaches, &c. The heaviest fine imposed is thus stated:

Four hundred and ninety-three dollars and fifty cents, the amount of fare (ten dollars and fifty cents each) for forty-seven passengers from Wheeling to Cincinnati, to be deducted from the pay of J. A. Bryan & Co. contractors on routes No. 1,451 and 1,465; it having been proved that the said passengers were seen in the mail stage on return trips, within the first and second quarters of 1836, in violation of the contract of said Bryan & Co.

The "Globe" speaking of the postmaster general's determination to punish delinquents says—There have lately been many shameful failures on the southern line, which will be followed up with daily fines; and if they do not put an end to them, he will annul the contracts and try new men.—There is now no excuse for failures, and they are undoubtedly caused chiefly by overloading the mail stages with passengers. Contractors must think more of their obligations to the department.

THE LATE TREASURY CIRCULAR. The late treasury circular has caused great complaint in the west, and is bitterly denounced as the source of much embarrassment. From the following it may be inferred that it is intended to modify or rescind some of its requisitions.

From the Louisville (Ky.) Advertiser.

It is reported, on what we believe to be good authority, that some of gen. Jackson's political friends have addressed letters to him, either directly or indirectly, strongly expressing their settled conviction that the late treasury order, unless speedily rescinded, will produce the most disastrous consequences throughout the whole western country.—We know that many of the general's leading friends disapprove the circular, and anticipate from its operation the very worst results, not only to the people in general, but to their party in particular, and we can therefore the more readily believe that they are making a strong and concerted effort to procure its repeal.

The Buffalo Journal of the 1st inst. contains the following paragraph in relation to the subject.

New treasury order. We learn from a gentleman of respectability, a Jackson man, who arrived in this city from Chicago this morning, that an order had emanated from the treasury department at Washington, making certain safety fund notes of this state equivalent to specie, in the payment of lands in some of the land offices in Illinois and Indiana.

MEXICO AND TEXAS. Advices from Matamoros to the 27th August state that, on the 20th, gen. URREA issued a violent proclamation against the Texians and Americans, grounded on the supposition that the United States government had acknowledged the independence of Texas, and sent troops to its assistance. A few days subsequently, having learned the falsity of these rumors, he endeavored to call in the proclamations. The Mexican army at Matamoros consisted of about 8,500 men. Messrs. TEAL and CARNES, the Texian commissioners, were still in close confinement.

MINISTER TO FRANCE. We learn from the "Globe" that the hon. Lewis Cass resigned his commission as secretary of war on Tuesday last, and left Washington for New York preparatory to his departure for Europe,—for which he will sail on the 16th instant in the packet ship Quebec. The National Intelligencer, in noticing the departure of Mr. Cass, says—We should do injustice to our feelings, and we are sure, to the general sentiment of this city, in which governor Cass has so long resided, if we did not say, that he carries with him the good wishes of all who have enjoyed an opportunity of appreciating his estimable personal character, and that of his most amiable family.

Mr. Van Ransselaer, of New York, having, from urgent family reasons, declined the appointment of secretary of legation, for which he was confirmed by the senate, that place has been given to Charles E. Anderson, esq. of New York, who, from a long residence in France, is said to be well qualified to discharge the duties of the situation.

The attorney general, the hon. B. F. Butler, will perform the duties of the department, as acting secretary of war until the close of the present administration. He is at present absent from Washington, but is expected to return about the 15th inst. In the meantime the department will be in charge of C. A. Harris, esq. the commissioner of Indian affairs.

VERMONT. Since our publication of the result of the congressional election in Vermont, we have seen it stated that Mr. Everett was not elected.—The Claremont (N. H.) Eagle states, on the authority of a letter from Woodstock, (Vt.) that Mr. Everett is re-elected to congress, by a majority of from 40 to 50 votes: All the towns in the district have been heard from, giving Mr. Everett a clear majority of about 200 votes over Partridge and Flint, which was reduced to between 40 and 50 by about 150 scattering votes.

THE CENSUS OF WISCONSIN TERRITORY, as shown by the official returns, is as follows:
Des Moines county	6,257
Iowa do.	5,234
Dubuque do.	4,273
Crawford do.	350
Brown do.	2,706
Milwaukee do.	2,893
Total	22,218

FORTIFICATIONS IN THE HARBOR OF NEW YORK. From the following, which we find in the New York Commercial, it would appear that the fortifications in the harbor of New York are neither prepared to welcome a friend or repel an enemy.

Division orders. The salute. It is now established as a fact, by two experiments, that forts are not of much use, except perhaps in the way of passive resistance, unless they be provided with men and cannon. The principal use of the fortifications in our harbor, for some years past, has been to return salutes when vessels of war came into our waters, but at present they are not equal even to this exertion, thanks to the Creeks and Seminoles, who have called away all the troops, and to the poverty of the war department, which has made necessary the removal of the guns to be used at other positions.

Twice has the duty of saluting devolved upon general Morton and his division; and we are happy to say that in both instances it has been performed with a degree of spirit—we may say heroism—worthy of the gallant troops and their veteran commander. The promptitude of the service has not, indeed, been remarkable, but this could not be helped, we suppose, the general not being informed in season that a salute was intended. Hereafter we hope that some better arrangement will be made to give the division reasonable notice when their services will be required.

The following order was promulgated this morning through some of the papers:

First division New York state artillery.

Division orders, New York, October 3, 1836.

His Britannic majesty's frigate Belvidere, captain Burroughs Strong, arrived in our harbor, and fired a salute at the Narrows, and also one on coming up to the city. Of the intention of firing the latter salute, the major general was not apprised. These national courtesies are gratefully received, and are with pleasure reciprocated. The salute of the frigate will be returned to-day, and general Sanford will order a detachment from his brigade to fire a national salute from the battery, at noon, and will direct the city flag to be displayed at the same time. By order of major general Morton:

S. D. JACKSON, division inspector.

SHOCKING RAIL ROAD ACCIDENT. The following account of a most painful accident on the Columbia rail road, was left at our office by a friend, who, it will be seen, was a witness of the painful scene which he describes.

"Fairview, Sunday, about 3 o'clock.

"This afternoon, as the train for Lancaster was approaching Fairview, the axle of the forward car, or car next to the baggage broke, which immediately precipitated the body of the car upon the railway, the fragments of the axle ripping up the bottom of the car in which was a Mr. Gibson of Philadelphia, bound to Cincinnati with his wife and children. His wife and child fell through and nearly the whole train passed over her body. I cannot picture to you the heart rending scene that ensued when Mr. Gibson was called to the spot where his wife lay a mangled corpse, with the child, about 18 months old, by her side, covered with the blood of its dead mother. The top of her head was cut off, and the brains lay on both sides the rail; the body, feet, arms and legs broken to atoms. Heavens! what a sight! the distracted man tenderly dragging from the spot the remains of his 'Julia,' calling upon her in frantic exclamations, but she could only answer by an expiring look of agony. He next picked up his babe, and believing it too was dead, ran around among the crowd imploring assistance, when it was impossible to afford him the least consolation. The child was miraculously preserved. I was next called to witness another scene which beggars description.

"A black man, who had vainly attempted to leap from the car when the accident took place, fell upon the ground, and the car running off the track upon the side he jumped, the wheels passed over both his legs and cut them off in the most shocking manner, grinding the dirt and clothing into the mangled flesh. He lay writhing in the most excruciating agony under the body of one of the cars, until enough of assistance could be rendered to raise the car off him. He will not, it is believed, survive.

"A gentleman in the forward car had his left arm broken and breast much injured, but it is possible he will recover.

"The train was propelled at the rate of fifteen to eighteen miles per hour at the time of the accident, and ran not more than the length of the train, or fifty yards, ere it brought up.

"I was with my family in the next car to the one which Mr. Gibson was in, and the fragments over which we passed tore up the bottom without injury to any of its passengers. It was a miracle that we escaped—one of our wheels was spokeless, nothing but the naked rim left to give assurance it ever was a rail road wheel. Even the rails, for a considerable distance, were torn from their fastenings, and some broken."

This seems to be one of those accidents against which it is difficult to guard, unless by some new arrangement of the wheels and axles of the cars, or perhaps by a thicker flooring to the cars.

It is mentioned to us that the engine and one car was immediately despatched to Lancaster city for medical or surgical aid for the sufferers, and that before it returned, the cars were set in motion.

In the hope of conveying the wounded towards medical aid, they had gone to a short turn, when the locomotive came sweeping round, and was not checked until it came in contact with the cars and did considerably injury. [U. S. Gazette.]

Since the above was in type we have learned from the National Gazette that Mrs. Gibson's child, at first supposed to be unhurt, has since died of its injuries, and that the negro man who was hurt cannot recover.

TRADE OF BUFFALO, N. Y. During the year 1835, there were steamboat arrivals at Buffalo

Clearances	720
	1,440
During the same time there were arrivals of sloops, brigs and schooners	920
Clearances of same	920

1,840
Total of arrivals and clearances of steamboats, brigs and sloops, 3,280. The average tonnage of steamboats was 280, which makes an aggregate of 403,200 tons.

The average tonnage of brigs, schrs. and sloops, is estimated at 80, which gives an aggregate of 147,200 tons.

Total 550,400 tons.

The whole number of clearances upon the canal for 1835 was 5,125. Increase from 1834, 1,118.

The increase from 1834 to 1835, in all kinds of business, was nearly or quite 25 per cent. It will be quite as much from 1835 to 1836. Advances were made here last year on property passing east and west, to the amount of about two millions; and the capital invested and employed by our forwarding in lake and canal navigation, is estimated to amount to nearly or quite three millions of dollars. [N. Y. Daily Ad.]

THE U. S. SCHOONER DOLPHIN. This little gem of a vessel is now lying at her ease opposite the battery, preparatory to her sailing for the coast of Africa in a day or two. We went aboard on Saturday to take a view of her. The commander, W. E. McKenney, esq. the lieutenant, Mr. Ogden, and her surgeon, doctor J. Vaughan Smith were aboard. With the characteristic politeness of our gallant navy, we were shown every curious thing about this craft. She is perfectly new, carries ten 24-pounders, and looks wicked enough for any species of mischief with her raking masts and biting broadside. She is to be manned with 92 men, and the economy with which every bit of room between decks is appropriated is not the least novel part of her construction. She is about 200 tons, strongly built, and intended to go through the water like a racer of the first blood.

This craft is intended to look after the pirates and slave traders on the coast of Africa, in the neighborhood of Liberia, Monrovia and Sierra Leone. We wish her much success. [N. Y. Herald.]

THE CHANGES IN THE BED OF THE LOWER MISSISSIPPI. The total number of decurtations, or cut-offs, which have been made in the direction of the serpentine course of the lower Mississippi by the shifting of its alluvial bed, at various times since 1699, are computed at no less than 180 miles. The channel is estimated, in the Grand Gulf Advertiser, to have been regularly changing for ages at the rate of two miles per year. It has probably thus traversed the whole alluvial surface of the states of Louisiana and Mississippi, particularly the delta of the former, which is so low. The tendency has been towards the east, probably from the diurnal motion of the sun. By a direct route from Red river, leaving New Orleans 100 miles to east, the Mississippi might reach the Gulf 150 miles nearer than it does. The Grand Gulf Advertiser, from which the above facts are taken, adds:

By cutting about ten miles, at an expense not exceeding $50,000, the river between New Orleans and the mouth of Arkansas, which is 160 miles above, may be shortened more than 100 miles.

A line of 360 miles, drawn due north from New Orleans, will pass within six miles of Jackson, in this state, and Memphis, in Tennessee. From the latter town it is 720 miles, by water, to New Orleans.

Many of the bends alluded to are some dozen or 20 miles around, and only a mile or two, and sometimes only a few rods, across. Thus the editor says:

Grand Gulf bend, in which our town is situated, is 9 miles round and 2 across; which gives the advantage of being aware of the approach of steamboats an hour before their arrival here.

Palmyra bend ends above the one just named, is 17 miles round, and only a mile across, through which a sluice passes in high water. It is but 16 miles from Grand Gulf to Warrenton by a road passable ten months in the year; yet it is 40 by the course of the river.

Vicksburg bend, commencing 4 miles above, and ending 8 below, is 12 round, and but 300 rods across, which was passed over by a ferry boat, in 1828.

Warland's bend is 14 miles round, and 50 rods across.

The following are some of the cut-offs commencing with the earliest on record.

1. About 1699, it is supposed that the Yazoo cut-off took place, and Old River was formed; saving miles, 20
2. First Homochitto cut-off in 1720, which saved a distance of 30 miles—previously the river washed the highlands of the present county of Adams; 30
- 3- Point Coupee cut-off, made in 1721, on the grant of M. de Meuse, where tobacco was then planted by the colonists—saved 30
4. Great Cut Point. This cut-off is the one above latitude 33, and was made about the year 1747, and shortened the river 30
5. Second Homochitto cut-off, in 1779. This burst through in one night, while a boat, ascending the stream, lay just above it, 15
6. New cut-off, in 1817, 15
7. Red river cut-off, in 1831, saved 20
8. Bunch's cut-off, in 1832, 20

Total extent of these cut-offs, 180

GEOLOGICAL CHANGES IN GREAT BRITAIN.—That the face of the globe has successively undergone total changes, at different remote epochs, it is now a fact beyond dispute, as also that long anterior to the creation of man this world was inhabited by races of animals to which no parallels are now to be found; and those animals themselves only made their appearance after the lapse of ages during which no warm blooded creatures had any existence. It has been further remarked by zoologists, that the animals which first appeared in these latitudes were analogous to such as now inhabit tropical regions exclusively; and that it was only at a period immediately antecedent to the creation of the human race that species similar to those of the existing era began to appear in northern latitudes. Similar peculiarities have been also found to mark the vegetation of corresponding periods. It would hardly be credited by persons unacquainted with the evidence on which such facts repose, that in the most dreary and desolate northern regions of the present day, there are found groves of tropical plants, or conifers, like the Norfolk and Araucarian pines, of bananas, treeferns, huge cacti and palms; that the marshes were filled with rush like plants, fifteen or twenty feet high, the coverts with ferns like the undergrowth of West Indies.

READING TASTE. The direction of the British mind, and the sort of intellectual food it prefers for its digestion, may be in some measure judged of by the following tabular view, in which it will be perceived, what might have been anticipated, that the more solid and substantial commodities among our British kindred, take the precedence of the light and frothy.

Reading taste. The following is a list of the number of volumes in the different departments of literature consulted by persons attending the reading rooms of the British museum for three months in the year 1835, as delivered in to the committee of the British house of commons:—science 2,713; history, 2,167; topography, 1,286; theology, 1,190; poetry and the drama, 1,187; law, 945; reviews, magazines and modern periodical literature, 870; voyages and novels, 777; classics, 763; biography, 707; art, 624; romances, novels and annuals, 495; antiquities, 431; encyclopædias, dictionaries and grammars, 421; and genealogy, 153; making a total of 15,761 volumes, including in addition, 1,725 miscellaneous.

CREEK FRAUDS AND CREEK HOSTILITIES. Under our advertising head will be seen the "rules and regulations" of the commissioners appointed by the president of the United States to examine the frauds alleged to have been committed in the sale of the Creek lands, and into the causes of the late hostilities of the Creek Indians.

We are pleased to perceive that the commissioners are about to proceed with alacrity to the discharge of the duties assigned to them by the president. From their well established character for business, and as gentlemen of the strictest integrity, we hope that they may be enabled so to discharge the trust reposed in them, as to acquit their own consciences, and to restore confidence in the community.

We believe, however, that all their efforts will prove unavailing. The combination engaged in the demoralizing and illegal business of "land stealing," is too extensive and influential, to be reached by ordinary means. The power given to the court is not sufficient to bring the numerous offenders to justice, and that the proposed investigation will be involved in immense difficulties, any one conversant with Creek affairs cannot for a moment doubt.

Under existing circumstances, in our humble opinion, there is but one kind of court that could avail any thing at all calculated to advance the public welfare, and that would be a committee of intelligent members of congress, clothed with the authority and dignity of the nation, and vested with the most ample powers to compel the attendance of witnesses. Such a tribunal as we have described, might answer a good purpose, but nothing short of an inquisition of the kind could stir up the "charnel house" of corruption and ferret out offenders.

The truth is, the government has permitted the important time for the investigation of the frauds to pass by. The alleged causes should have been inquired into, previous to the emigration of the Indians, when they could have had an opportunity of meeting those who had wronged them, and of confronting their oppressors. Had such a course have been adopted many who now wear "a stolen livery," and like Cæsar's wife, appear "above suspicion," would this day have been condemned as enemies of the human race.

[Montgomery (Ala.) Advertiser

EARLY SNOW. The Catskill and Alleghany mountains are covered with snow. There was a fall of snow at Utica, N. Y. on the 28th ult. that covered the ground—and the Charlestown (Va.) Free Press says that the houses and streets of that town were 'on Tuesday last' clothed with winter's gayest livery.

COLONIZATION. The executive committee of the colonization society of the city of New York, encouraged by the favorable intelligence received from their colony at Bassa Cove, in Africa, have resolved to make arrangements for sending another expedition as soon as practicable.

WOODEN PAVEMENTS. They are now paving the streets of Buffalo, N. Y. with wooden blocks. The delay of the contractor was occasioned by the difficulty he experienced in preparing the wooden blocks with the broad axe and cross-cut saw—which induced him to put in operation a steam saw mill for sawing them, with a guillotine knife for dressing them; all which he has completed, and by their aid can furnish blocks, perfectly dressed and ready to lay down, sufficient for fifty yards of pavement per day.

The following description of the wooden pavements in St. Petersburg, furnished by a correspondent of the New York American, will be found interesting, as giving a good idea of the mode in which they are laid and the manner in which the blocks are fastened or pinned together:

"The streets, like our own, are paved with small round pebbles, and some of the leading ones have a carriage way paved with blocks of wood, very delightful to ride on. These blocks are about eight inches diameter, and the same in length; they are of pine, and all hexagons. This form is given them as being a greater economy of wood than squares; the blocks are first sawed to a length, from logs of about nine inches diameter—then they are shaped in a machine which stamps them out several hundred per hour, by forcing each one edwise through a steel six sided ring, by means of a huge piston, which is placed vertically over the ring, and is worked by steam power. The experiment, however, of the wooden pavements has not yet perfectly succeeded; in the first attempts, the blocks were only supported by the bare ground, well rammed, but very soon they became uneven, from the unequal resistance of the foundation; lately, however, there appears to be a better mode adopted, which is first to lay down thick planks lengthwise, and then stout boards crosswise, covering them with a coat of tar; on this substructure are placed the blocks: I observed that each block has inserted in two sides a small wooden pin, about one inch diameter, and the same in length, and has two holes on two other sides, corresponding with the pins of other blocks, and by which the whole mass is bound together.—The mode of repairing said pavement appeared to me to be simple and expeditious. In our wooden country, I think this kind of pavement might succeed well in Broadway, as we have at present no scarcity of excellent hard wood, and can afford to lay them with simply four square blocks, and of twice the length of those above mentioned. I have endeavored to be particular, as I am aware that your public spirit, and that of your talented sons, might have some influence at the court of Gotham, and that I might, perhaps, find some of our leading streets regenerated, which would be decidedly preferable to being jolted over their present wretched surface, which endangers life and limbs, and tends much to the destruction of wheels, springs, and horses' feet."

THE NEW YORK MONEY MARKET. The pressure that has been felt during the last and present weeks, is mainly to be ascribed to the large amount withdrawn from circulation by reason of paying in the entire capital of the bank of the state of New York, $2,000,000, minus the $200,000 paid in as deposits, on the applications for stock. The balance of $1,800,000 is to be paid in to-morrow, and the necessity of providing so large a sum has naturally tended to check the ordinary flow of the money current. The bank goes into operation on Tuesday next, and as its issue will be $5,000,000, (twice and a half the amount of its capital), the pressure will soon be done away, and money be even more plentiful than it has been for some weeks.

The board of aldermen will take into consideration, on Monday evening next, the subject of the six million loan, with especial reference to its issue in such manner as shall bring it within discount line.

[N. Y. Com.

INCREASE OF BOSTON. By the official returns of the census just taken of the population of this city, it appears that in 1830 the population of the city was 61,381; in 1835 it was 78,603, showing an increase of 17,222 in five years. According to this rate Boston, in 1840, will contain more than 100,000 inhabitants, and in 1860, something like 250,000.

VIRGINIA SLAVES. The Virginia Times says—"We have heard intelligent men estimate the number of slaves exported from Virginia within the last twelve months at 120,000, each slave averaging at least $600, making an aggregate of $72,000,000—of the number of slaves exported, not more than one-third have been sold, (the others having been carried by their owners who have removed) which would leave in the state the sum of $24,000,000 arising from the sale of slaves!"

HON. ALEXANDER PORTER was tendered a public dinner by the Irishmen of Louisville, Ky. which he was forced to decline. In their note the committee say:

"From the high estimate in which are held your worth, talents and patriotism, many citizens other than Irishmen will be present, without regard to politics."

And in his reply Mr. Porter makes the following just remarks:

"I am extremely grateful, gentlemen, for this mark of attention, and would gladly have enjoyed the gratification of meeting you, did not my immediate departure from this city render it impossible for me to do so. The honor you have conferred on me, and the pleasure it has communicated, are heightened by the information, that this evidence of regard comes from men of different politics. In the high excitement of party, which now pervades the country, no compliment to the motives which have actuated my conduct in public life, could be more acceptable to me. And may I add, gentlemen, that it augurs well for the duration of our noble institutions, when in the heat of the civil conflicts to which they give rise, men are found, who can distinguish between opinions and motives, and where our zeal of party, founded on a warm love of country, can respect and make allowances for the same feeling in others. It is by the mutual exercise of this charity that the republic can be maintained.

The following toast was given by judge WHITE at a dinner lately given to Mr. BELL by a portion of his constituents, at which the judge was present as a guest:

"The constitution—May the people preserve it by exercising the powers reserved to themselves, and by prohibiting all others from the exercise of powers not granted to them."

UNEARNED PREMIUMS. It is well known that after the fire of the 16th and 17th of December last, a very large number of unexpired policies of insurance were surrendered to the insolvent companies to be cancelled, in order to facilitate the closing of their affairs, and the distribution of their assets among their creditors. The question however arose, whether the companies were bound to return the whole of the unearned premium, or only a pro rata amount—the same as paid to the other creditors.

The vice chancellor has recently decided the question, and we now present his opinion for the benefit of all concerned. [N. Y. Jour. of Com.

In chancery. Before the vice chancellor, Sept. 27th, 1836. In the matter of the petition of William W. Campbell, Jonathan Goodhue and others, vs. The Traders' Insurance company in the city of New York.

The vice chancellor—"The statute authorises receivers to procure outstanding policies to be cancelled by refunding to the assured such portion of the premium as may be considered unearned, and the amount thus refunded they are authorised to retain before making any dividend among the creditors. The equity of the statute applies as well where the policy has been surrendered to the officers of the company and cancelled before the appointment of receivers, as after their appointment. And I am of opinion the receivers are bound to return the unearned premium on all policies cancelled, with a view to the winding up of the affairs of the insolvent company, and that such policy holders are not to come in pro rata with creditors for a mere dividend.

"Order according to the prayer of the petition, with costs."

Cleaveland and Campbell, solicitors for petitioners; G. Winter, for defendants.

THE LATE COL. BURR. The editor of the Albany Evening Journal, who has no doubt good authority for his assertion, states that the executors of the late col. Burr, named in his will, are Peter Townsend, Mathew L. Davis and Henry E. Edwards. All his documents, pamphlets, journals, letters, manuscripts, &c. public and private, were bequeathed to Mr. Davis, by whom his memoirs are to be written. For the last two years Mr. Davis has been much occupied in reading and arranging these manuscripts with a view to the duty which has now devolved upon him.

Aaron Burr was an extraordinary man. His life was full of events. Much of his history is identified with that of his country, and all of it is deeply interesting. The material for this history is most ample. Copies of all his letters, civil, military and miscellaneous, are preserved, as also are all the letters which he received for more than sixty years. The public, therefore, may look for a full, authentic, and faithful life of this distinguished man, the first volume of which, we understand, will be published some time in November." [N. Y. Gaz.]

BEET ROOT SUGAR. A correspondent of the Philadelphia United States Gazette, speaking of the manufacture of sugar from the beet, says, that an establishment for the purpose will not clear expenses unless it be calculated to make at least from two to five hundred pounds a day; that the greatest advantage will be derived from the employment of steam power, which will be useful in rasping the beets, reducing the liquor "in vacuo," and boiling without burning the syrup; that the juice of the beet in summer decomposes in less than two hours; that the acid must be neutralized and the mucilage coagulated by chemical agents; that refining can be advantageously connected with the manufacture of the raw sugars; that profits are incredibly increased in proportion to the quantity made, and that one-half of the expense may be saved by scientific arrangement of the apparatus. Taking the fair product of an acre of ground within 20 miles of Philadelphia at $25, the writer makes the following estimate of the gain from an acre of beets converted into sugar:

EXPENSES.
One acre of beets, (40,000 lbs.)	$25 00
Two men for twenty-four days,	48 00
Two boys for do	22 00
Fire and rent, &c.	40 00
Total,	$135 00
RECEIPTS.
Quantity of sugar from the acre of beets, would be 2,400 lbs. which at 10 cts. per lb. would be	$240 00
Beet cake and molasses, &c.	20 00
Total,	$260 00
Expenses,	135 00
Profits,	$125 00

Thus it will be seen that the profit will be nearly cent per cent, not taking into account the interest of the capital. The two men, he says, could work twice as much and the apparatus for the increased quantity would cost very little more. Such profits as the above are well calculated to whet the appetite for gain of our worthy farmers who, by raising beets and making sugar, may soon vie with the wealthy planters of Louisiana. [Ball. Amer.]

PUBLIC LANDS. It has been estimated by the Detroit Advertiser, that in the west, and we think, judging from the past, the amount is not too great, that in "the year 1836, the sales will probably amount to twenty millions. The emigration has been much larger than usual; but we doubt whether much more than six millions of acres have been taken by actual settlers. Congress have still nearly, or quite two hundred millions of acres in market, and a great many more millions are soon to be brought into market.

"Since the great west has been opened for settlement under the auspices of congress, more than two hundred millions of acres have been surveyed and brought into market. Up to the beginning of the present year, but little over thirty millions of acres has been sold, if we remember rightly. This was sufficient to supply the immense emigration of the last thirty years."

But great as the rage for speculation is now, and great as it has been for the past few years, it may be remembered that it rages no more extensively than it did seventeen years since. Indeed, if we make sufficient allowance for the greater ability on the part of speculators to speculate now, and their comparative want of ability in 1819 and 1820, we have not yet approximated to the point then reached.

A correspondent of the Newburyport Herald furnishes us the following interesting statistics of the sales of public lands for the last twenty years.

They come from official sources, and may be relied on as correct. The sales in 1816, $3, 567,273; 1817, $5,022,409; 1818, $7,299,997; 1819, $17,681,794; 1820, (first two quarters) $27,606,964. The price was up to this time $2 per acre, and the government gave the purchasers a credit. After the 1st of July, 1820, the price was reduced to $1 25 and cash payments required, and the sales fell off as follows:—In 1820, (last two quarters) $424,962; 1821, $1,169,224; 1822, $1,022,267; 1823, $850,136; 1824, $953,799. From 1824 to 1830, the sales were between one and two millions each year, about sufficient to supply the actual demand occasioned by the increase of population. In the last named year symptoms of the present fever manifested themselves, and the sales rose about two millions, gradually increasing for the next two or three years. The sales being in 1832, $3,115,376; 1833, $4,972,294; 1834, $6,099,981; 1835, $15,810,795; 1836, (first two quarters) $13,500,000.

BONAPARTE'S GENERALS. From that interesting volume of "Harper's Family Library," the Court and camp of Bonaparte—we glean the following memorials of twenty-eight celebrated military men who make up the whole list of those serving under Napoleon, either as marshals of France or generals of division.

Jugereau died 12th June, 1816, of dropsy in the chest; Berthier threw himself from a window of his house as the army of the allies was passing it on the 19th May, 1815, and died instantly; Bessieres was killed by a musket ball at Lutetia; Davoust died of a pulmonary complaint, June 1823; Dessaix was killed instantly at Marengo, by a cannon ball; Beauharnois died of apoplexy at Munich, January 21, 1834; St. Cyr in March, 1830; Junot in a fit of insanity threw himself from a window of his father's house at Montbard, breaking a thigh which resulted in his death, June, 1813; Kleber was assassinated at Cairo, Egypt, (on the same day that Dessaix was killed at Marengo) by the hand of a youth of 18, who secreted himself in a garden, and on the approach of his victim went and presented him with a bit of paper folded like a letter, and while Kleber was opening it the assassin drew from his cloak a dagger, and inflicted a wound causing immediate dissolution. He stated that he left Damascus on foot, by order of the grand vizier, who entrusted him with the mission of repairing to the French army to take Bonaparte's life. Lannes expired from the effects of a cannon shot which carried away his right leg, and the foot and ankle of the left, at Esling, 22d May, 1809; Lefebvre died in Paris, Sept. 1820; Loison at Liege, in 1816; Massena expired on the 4th of April, 1817; Moreau fell when near the emperor Alexander (being in the Russian service at Dresden), in August, 1813. A cannon ball from the French artillery carried away his right leg, and passing through his horse took off a portion of the left. The remaining portion of the left was cut off by a surgeon—and during amputation and dressing the brave officer smoked a cigar—scarcely moving a muscle of his face during the painful operation. He lingered till the 2d September. Murat was condemned to death at Naples in 1815, and shot—looking steadfastly at the soldiers, and desiring them to aim at his heart and save his face. The fate of Ney—"the bravest of the brave"—is familiar to all. "He who fought five hundred battles for France—not one against her—was shot as a traitor," being in the 47th year of his age. Pichegrue was found dead in a dungeon, with a black silk handkerchief, twisted round his neck, and a stick thrust through the knot, whether by his own hands or the hands of others seems to be undecided; Suchet expired at Marseilles, Jan. 1826, and Mortier was assassinated last July, by Fieschi's "infernal machine,"—making 16 of the 28 who no longer survive.

Of the remaining nine, Bernadotte is king of Sweden; Grouchy left France for this country after the second abdication; no mention is made in the work before us of the death of Moncey and Jourdan. Macdonald, Marmot, Mortier, Oudinot, Soult and Victor severally gave in their adhesion to Louis Philippe in 1830, and for aught we know all are still living. [Star.]

INDIAN TREATIES. Mackinac, Sept. 17, 1836. There are now on this island about 4,000 Indians and about 500 half breeds, assembled for the purpose of completing their treaty of cession. The treaty was made in Washington last winter, and by it the Ottawa and Chippewa nations cede to the United States all the land lying between lakes Huron and Michigan, north of Grand River on one side, and Thunder Bay river on the other, and all the lands lying north of lakes Huron and Michigan, west of the straits of St. Mary and east of the Chocolate river, on Lake Superior. The price is $2,000,000.

The Indians set apart $300,000 of their money to pay their debts, and $150,000 as gratuity to their half breed relatives. The former matter is undergoing the examination of Mr. Schoolcraft, the Indian agent, major Whiting, of the U. S. army, and John W. Edmonds, esq. the commissioners appointed under the treaty. The latter matter is under the supervision of Mr. Edmonds alone. They have also the joint duty to perform of distributing to the Indians $150,000 worth of goods, and about $70,000 in money. All these constitute an arduous duty, and necessarily delay the execution of the treaty.

When I arrived here, about the 17th ult. there were about 2,000 Indians assembled. They had free access to the traders' stores, and scenes of rioting and drunkenness were exhibited. Such arrangements were however made, that, since the 1st instant, no liquor has been sold to the Indians, and they are as orderly and well behaved as can be desired. Before the 1st, one could hear the sounds of revelry all night long; but now you can pass among their lodges in the evening, and be unconscious (were it not for the appearance here and there of a lighted tent) there was an Indian on the island. Some of the bands have already received their presents and money, and have returned home, and not an instance is known of a drunken Indian.

This is an unparalleled state of things. It has been universally the case, when the Indians assembled either to make or complete a treaty, or to receive their annuities, that they indulge very freely in the use of liquor, and violence and bloodshed frequently ensue. But the contrary experiment has now been tried, and has succeeded to admiration. It is mainly owing in this instance to the agent, Mr. Schoolcraft, (who is well known to the reading public for his scientific attainments), and he has been heartily seconded by the traders and inhabitants here, and of course by the gentlemen associated with him in the execution of the treaty. [Albany Argus.]

CHOLERA IN CHARLESTON. The board of health reported the following cases from September 27th to October 1st inclusive.

Sept. 27—44 cases—11 whites, 33 blacks—9 dead.
28—39 cases—9 whites, 30 blacks—5 dead.
29—28 cases—7 whites, 21 blacks—4 dead.
30—14 cases—3 whites, 11 blacks—4 dead.
Oct. 1—10 cases—2 whites, 8 blacks—1 dead.

ELECTIONS. On Tuesday next the elections for members of congress and the state legislature, take place in Pennsylvania and Ohio. In Georgia the election was held on Monday last.

NAVAL DEPOT. Commodores Rogers, Chauncey and Morris have, in compliance with a vote of the senate, examined the several scutes designated in Narragansett bay, that they may report to that body at its next session the most suitable location for a naval depot. After they had completed the above duty, they proceeded to make their usual annual visit to the navy yards at Charlestown and Portsmouth.

NOVEL SUIT. It is stated in several of the papers, says the New York Commercial Advertiser, that a suit has been commenced by Robert Sedgwick, esq. on behalf, or at the instigation of the Anti-Slavery society, against the hon. Richard Rikar, recorder of New York, for the recovery of the penalty of five hundred dollars, to which he is alleged to have made himself liable by disobeying the writ de homine replegiando, sued out in the case of the claimed slave Jesse Collier, alias Abraham Gosley, who was, under the decision of the recorder, recovered by the claimant.

SALE OF ARTICLES FORMERLY BELONGING TO NAPOLEON. As we have not before seen a complete list of these articles, sold among the effects of Barry O'Meara, we subjoin it:

"The articles formerly belonging to the emperor Napoleon, came to the hammer yesterday being reserved for the second day's sale of the effects of the late Barry O'Meara, esq. A magnificent Turkish sabre, with a real Damascus blade and chased handle, worn by Napoleon in Egypt, and presented by him to his brother, Louis, by whom it was given to Mr. O'Meara, was knocked down for 45 guineas. A richly chased silver gilt snuff box, with curiously engraved entablature £21 2s. A miniature of Napoleon, £2 2s. A most exquisitely carved full length ivory miniature of Napoleon, standing on a plinth, which represents a beautiful raised carving of his tomb at St. Helena, £6 6s. A gold knife and fork, and spoon engraved with the imperial arms, with an autograph certificate from king Joseph, declaring it to be presented by him to Mr. O'Meara, on account of his fidelity towards Napoleon, in a morocco case, £14 14s. A silver gravy-spoon engraved with the imperial arms of France, used by Napoleon at St. Helena, £5 5s. A table-spoon, also used by Napoleon at St. Helena, engraved with the imperial arms of France, £2 5s. Nine table-spoons were then put up at auction in separate lots, the average prices of which were from £3 to £3 10s. each. Half a dozen tea-spoons, also said to have been in actual use at St. Helena, were next put up in the same manner, and fetched about 80s. each. A bronze model of the column in the Place Vendôme, 22 inches in height, presented by princess Caroline to Mr. O'Meara £7 7s. A few lines of Napoleon's hand writing; this was a confidential communication from Napoleon to prince Eugene, conveyed from St. Helena by Mr. O'Meara in the sole of his shoe. It was translated as follows: "I beg of my relations and friends to assist Mr. O'Meara with respect to his personal interest; and believe all he states relative to my present position, and sentiments I entertain." There was considerable competition for this lot, and it was ultimately knocked down for £11 11s. The next lot was a gold coronation medal, representing Napoleon and Marie Louise before the altar on one side, and profiles of them on the other. There were only twenty of these originally cast, and intended solely for the possession of Napoleon's family and the potentates of Europe, £15; understood to have been purchased by Mr. Phillips, the barrister. A pontifical ring, consisting of an amethyst set in gold, on which is engraved in relief the head of Christ, presented to Mr. O'Meara by cardinal Fesch, was knocked down for £12 1s. 6d. A small quantity of Napoleon's hair, it was preserved under a glass cover; its color was light auburn, of a silky texture, and the appearance of being the lock of some very young person—it sold for £2 10s. A tooth of Napoleon, which seemed not to much decayed, sold for 7 guineas and a half and the instrument with which it was extracted for 3 guineas. There were many veteran French officers present, who seemed never to have deplored the want of money so much as when they saw many of the relics of the late emperor put to sale, to them invaluable, and in their estimation sacrificed.

[N. Y. Star.]

MARYLAND ELECTOR FOR THE HOUSE OF DELEGATES.

BALTIMORE CITY.

	Whig.		Van Buren.
	Jones.	Thompson.	Richardson.	McLane.
Wards.
1	367	367	322	323
2	359	359	300	301
3	386	384	579	580
4	373	373	607	609
5	541	538	417	417
6	452	446	540	547
7	623	615	255	263
8	346	342	601	611
9	606	601	319	322
10	400	386	552	556
11	595	581	543	558
12	449	436	701	706
	5,502	5,428	5,736	5,793

Mr. McLean's majority over Mr. Jones, 291
Mr. Richardson's do. do. do. 234
Average Van Buren majority, 299

BALTIMORE COUNTY.

	Risteau.	Ely,	Worthington.	Showers,	Orrick,	Brown,
Districts.
1	334	384	334	339	74	145
2	94	156	85	95	166	199
3	60	73	62	62	195	257
4	144	137	145	145	49	70
5	109	155	168	107	170	195
6	279	311	321	336	160	83
7	276	306	268	265	195	205
8	121	150	182	128	198	193
9	213	246	223	193	137	63
10	64	76	60	60	106	74
11	176	178	150	142	132	166
12	153	184	126	134	82	100
13	149	210	204	181	89	64
	2,172	2,566	2,328	2,187	1,773	1,814

Messrs. Risteau, Ely, Worthington and Showers, are friends of Mr. Van Buren.

Mr. Walker is elected sheriff of Baltimore city and county by a majority of 1,372 votes over Mr. Kernan, the next highest candidate.

ANNAPOLIS CITY.

	Whig.	Van Buren.
Culbreth	154	Harwood 137
Alexander	159	Welch 140

HARFORD COUNTY.

	Whig.	Van Buren.
Billingslea	1,181	Maulsby 1,248
Gough	1,154	Nelson 1,196
Boyd	1,148	Forwood 1,146
		Jewett 986

CECIL COUNTY.

	Whig.	Van Buren.
Parker	1,174	Comegys 1,258
Foard	1,121	Henderson 1,234
Broughton	1,119	Taylor 1,232
Connard	1,104	Pierson 1,211

WORCESTER COUNTY.

	Whig.	Van Buren.
Townsend,	1,015	No opposition.
Fooks,	1,011
Handy,	1,000
Powell,	980

FREDERICK COUNTY.

	Whig.	Van Buren.
Doub,	3,082	No opposition; the Van
Bowlus,	3,093	Buren ticket having been
Brengle,	3,103	withdrawn.
Matthias,	2,821

WASHINGTON COUNTY.

	Whig.	Van Buren.
Kershner,	1,956	Mann, 2,239
Nesbit,	1,899	Swingley, 2,229
Van Lear,	1,892	Rentch, 2,211
Witmer,	1,664	Gaither, 1,998

CAROLINE COUNTY.

	Whig.	Van Buren.
Carter,	610	Hardcastle, 590
Jump,	602	Keene, 590
Nichols,	596	Thrawley, 583
Charles,	588	Fountain, 573

CHARLES COUNTY.

	Whig.	Van Buren.
Carpenter,	827	Matthews, 566
Hawkins,	550
Garner,	476
Jenkins,	471

MONTGOMERY COUNTY.

	Whig.	Van Buren.
Harding,	938	Adamson, 725
Darby,	922	Dade, 699
Waters,	884	Dorsey, 745
Dawson,	810	Valdenar 677

TALBOT COUNTY.

	Whig.	Van Buren.
Townsend,	684	Colston, 580
Martin,	666	Lowry, 567
Kerr,	664	Sherwood, 563
Boyle,	662	Horney, 561

PRINCE GEORGE'S COUNTY.

	Whig.	Van Buren.
Coombs	778	Day, 631
Ghiselin,	776	Scott, 625
Tuck,	773	Baldwin, 589
Gantt,	750	Crawford, 549

ANNE ARUNDEL COUNTY.

	Whig.	Van Buren.
Chas. S. Ridgely,	1,181	R. W. Higgins, 1,011
Leonard Iglehart,	1,128	Dr. R. Franklin, 988
Dr. Benj. Hood,	1,109	Dr. Allen Thomas, 987
Cephas Simmons,	1,104	Chas. D. Warfield, 877

SOMERSET COUNTY.

	Whig.	Van Buren.
Hyland,	1,008	Lankford, 324
Donoho,	990	Disharoon, 264
Ballard,	954
Crisfield,	926

DORCHESTER COUNTY.

	Whig.	Van Buren.
Thos. H. Hicks,	1,085	John Rowins, 834
T. Q. H. Eccleston,	1,055	Richd. Pattison, 829
B. G. Keene,	1,071	Henry Keene, 842
W. Folengin,	1,142	L. D. Traverse, 823

QUEEN ANNE'S COUNTY.

	Whig.	Van Buren.
Dunbracco,	636	Roberts, 597
S. T. Harrison,	670	Wareham, 544
Palmer,	650	Kensy Harrison, 585
Hemsley,	603	Tate, 578

As we have not received official returns from Allegany, Calvert, St. Mary's or Kent. The results, are, however stated in the recapitulation below.

RECAPITULATION.

	Whig.	Van Buren.
Allegany	2	2
*Washington	1	3
*Frederick	4	0
*Montgomery	4	0
Prince George's	4	0
Calvert	3	1
Charles	3	1
St. Mary's	4	0
*Annapolis city	2	0
*Anne Arundel	4	0
Baltimore city	0	2
Baltimore county	0	4
*Harford	2	2
Cecil	0	4
Kent	4	0
*Queen Anne	4	0
Talbot	4	0
*Caroline	3	A TIE.
Dorchester	4	0
Somerset	4	0
Worcester	4	0
Total	60	19

Those marked thus (*) returned Van Buren electors at the electoral election held in September last!

WAR IN FLORIDA.

The editor of the Jacksonville Courier gives the following particulars of another battle with the Indians, fought near Newnansville, on the 18th ult.

On Saturday evening, the 17th, the Indians came within a mile of that fort and captured a cart, and fired on three whites and two negroes. As it was too late and rainy to make a successful attack that night, spies were sent to discover the position of the Indians. They were posted in the neighborhood of San Felasco hammock. Sunday morning col. Warren marched out to give battle with 100 mounted men, being detachments from captains Walker, Ward and Garrison's companies, with 25 gentlemen under capt. Beckham, who, their time of service having expired, volunteered for this special service, and capt. D. D. Tomkins, 1st regiment U. S. Artillery, with a 24 pounder howitzer, and 25 of his men. The advance was in three columns—the right under col. Warren, the left under lieut. col. Mills, and the centre under capt. Tomkins.—When within three-fourths of a mile of the hammock, they met the Indians and the battle commenced along the right wing and centre.

The Indians attempted to turn the left flank, but were charged with spirit by that wing, and driven into a thick oak scrub, thence into the border of the hammock, where the artillery played on them with considerable effect.

Then they attempted to turn the right flank, but were driven off by that wing, and into range again of the artillery, which opened upon them with great effect. The Indians made desperate attempts to maintain their position. They charged twice on the artillery. They were beaten off at all points, and driven a mile and a half into a dense hammock where they could not be pursued with advantage. The action lasted one hour and a half—one hour of which time, the fire was heavy on the whole line. Their force was estimated at 300 men.

Indians were seen to fall before the fire of the artillery, particularly on the left. Several persons report that they saw a mounted Indian (from his appearance giving orders, and a chief), fall before the fire of the artillery. Adjutant Gilliland reports that he saw a large fellow mounted in front of the right, and from his recollection of his person, thinks he was Jumper. Adjutant G. ordered a platoon fired at him, and several assert that he fell. No Indians were found dead—but from the traces of blood, many must have been killed and wounded.

Col. Warren, lieut. col. Mills, capt. D. D. Tomkins, adjutant Gilliland, capt. Beckham, Walker and Ward, lieuts. Breeton and Hindley, distinguished themselves by their bravery and good conduct in the action, also Drs. Pelot and Terbelot, and private Weyman stationed at the howitzer, who was wounded at the first fire, but refused to quit his post until compelled by loss of blood.

List of wounded. Jeremiah Burnett, mortally; Matthew Hindley, Jesse Long, Samuel Russell and Weyman, not dangerously.

The Tallahassee Floridian of the 24th ult. states that "the Tennessee volunteers, two thousand and upwards in number, under the command of general ARMSTRONG, (who is accompanied by colonel Wm. WYATT, of Florida, as a member of his staff), took up the line of march for the seat of war," on the 19th ult. in fine spirits; and, also, that gen. JESSE, who has command of a body of friendly Creeks, was on his way to the Seminole country, with his command, in steamboats, from the Appalachicola, and was expected to reach the seat of war in time to co-operate with the troops that were proceeding by land. The same paper contains information of the death of major WASHINGTON, of the Tennessee volunteers.

The following are extracts from a letter received by the editors of the Savannah Georgian, from their correspondent in Florida, dated

"St. John's River, (E. F.) Sept. 18, 1836.

"SIR: Six hundred of the Tennessee volunteers have reached Newnansville; the others are on their way. They are accompanied by governor Call, who writes that he will rid the country entirely of this daring, wily foe, or leave his bones and blood to mingle with those of the heroic Dade and gallant Izard, in fattening the soil of the Seminole."

"The command of all the regulars is given to the gallant major Pierce, who has already given an earnest of what may be expected of him, entrusted with this command. All the regulars fit for duty are to march against the enemy, leaving the volunteers on the east side of the St. John's to protect their families and homes. The season of the year, the officers, the troops, all seem auspicious for the opening of the new campaign. The recent skirmishes of a fearless few have proved the enemy not invincible, if daring. To the movements of the governor and the Tennessee volunteers all eyes are now turned. Alas! if that hope proves a broken reed. Yours, &c."

From the National Intelligencer of the 6th inst.

TO THE EDITORS.

Fort Mitchell, (Ala.) Sept. 26, 1836.

GENTLEMEN: A communication from "an officer of the Tennessee brigade," which appeared in the "Montgomery (Ala.) Advertiser" of the 3d inst. and extracts from which were published in the "Intelligencer" of the 16th instant, under the head "From Florida," appears to render necessary the publication of the enclosed extract from a letter addressed to brig. gen. ARMSTRONG by maj. gen. JESUP, dated the 25th of August.

The communication referred to contains the following expression: "Gen. ARMSTRONG applied, some days since, to gen. JESUP for permission to march to Florida." Gen. ARMSTRONG was, no doubt, always ready to move to Florida; but he had not to apply for permission, as the extracts which are enclosed will plainly show. The letter from which these extracts are taken was addressed to gen. ARMSTRONG, in consequence of communications received by gen. JESUP from gov. CALL, representing the distressed state of the territory, and asking assistance.

Your early publication of the extracts will place the matter in its true light, and oblige, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. A. CHAMBERS, lieut. & A. D. C.

EXTRACT.

Head quarters, army of the south, Tallahassee, August 25, 1836.

GENERAL: "The condition of Florida, as disclosed in a despatch from gov. Call, received to-day, is such as to require immediate succor.

"The regular troops cannot be spared for some time from the service on which they are employed in the Creek nation. I therefore desire that col. Trousdale's regiment of Tennessee volunteers be pushed forward immediately through the southern counties of Georgia, by the best route, to Tallahassee; and that col. Bradford's regiment be held in readiness to follow, so soon as the band of Indians in this vicinity, and those near Wetumpka, shall have taken up the line of march to the west.

"I will thank you, general, to cause both regiments to be completely equipped, and prepared for the most efficient action." I am, general, most respectfully, your obedient servant,

T. S. JESUP, maj. gen. com.

Brig. gen. Armstrong, com. Tennessee volunteers, Near Tallahassee, Ala.

Adjutant general's office, army of the south, Fort Mitchell, Sept. 25, 1836.

I certify that the within is a true extract from a letter by major general Jesup to brigadier general Armstrong, of the Tennessee volunteers, as recorded on the books of this office.

HENRY STANTON,

Lt. col. and adjt. gen. army of the south.

FOREIGN NEWS.

At New York, Paris papers have been received to the 24th of August, containing the following items of news.

SPAIN.

Despatches had been received at Paris from Madrid, dated August 17th announcing that M. de Rayneval, the French minister to the court of Spain, died on the preceding day, at half past six in the evening, at St. Ildephonso, after six day's illness, of a complicated pulmonary complaint, and attack of gout in the head. The same despatch announces that the two queens entered Madrid on the 17th, and that the city was tranquil.

On the 17th of August; gen. Lebeau, the new commandant of the French auxiliary legion, attacked the Carlists, whose battalions were on the line of the frontier, and beat them back on the Bastan and the Velzama, after having killed and taken prisoners a considerable number of their men. He also carried and destroyed the works of the Carlists at Engui, and took possession of their magazines.

The Phare de Bayonne of the 20th has the following: In spite of all that people state, upon what they may call unquestionable authority, relative to Gomez being in the Asturias, the kingdom of Leon, and in Galicia at the head of 22,000 men; we can affirm, that all such reports are unfounded, and mere speculative inventions.

We will further state, that this Gomez, who is represented as having such commanding force at his disposal, was defeated at Escaro, on the 8th, by general Espartero, and his army put to flight and pursued by the enemy in every direction; many of his soldiers subsequently joined general Espartero's corps.

Extract of a letter of the 19th from Bordeaux.—"Persons likely to be well informed assert that intelligence from Barcelona of the 14th inst. and consequently much more recent than Mina's proclamation, announces a commotion having broken out in that town. Several persons accused of being Carlists have been massacred. On the 12th, in the evening, a threatening address to the queen was signed, demanding the dismissal and arrest of M. Isturitz, an assembling of the cortes on the 20th inst. and a popular administration. Two deputies were sent off the following day to present the address, accompanied by the nine procuradores of the province. According to letters of the 12th from Saragossa the Junta has decided that the plate and bells of the churches shall be melted down and converted into money. It is said that Valencia has also had its insurrection, but no details have reached us. It is added, however, that no serious excesses have been committed. The Carlists turn to account the kind of suspension of arms arising out of what is passing in Spain to organise themselves. Cabrera, in his excursions, has succeeded in collecting 2,000 horses which he has placed at the disposal of Don Carlos, and which ere long will be equipped and mounted. Don Carlos as a recompense, has sent him the grand cordon of St. Ferdinand. As to Gomez, if the Carlists accounts are to be credited, he has got together many recruits and much money in his excursions in the Asturias, Galicia and Leon, but he is deficient in arms to complete the organization of a respectable corps."

FRANCE.

The French provincial journals are full of the most distressing accounts of the late storms which have raged throughout the country. The department of the Ain, particularly the neighborhood of the Bourg, seems to have suffered immense damage; the hurricane which broke over this rich country on the 14th seems to have been as violent as any that has ever been witnessed in the Antilles.

The Nouvelliste Vaudois gives the following, under date of Liestal, Aug. 13:—"Notwithstanding all the assertions of the journals, I can assure you that the persecutions of France against the citizens of Basle country are still continued. The rich harvests of the year, and particularly the corn, will be condemned to rot on the ground which they hold on the territory of France. The hay and corn may be consumed by the horses of the French dragoons and hussars stationed on the frontier. Even our own territory is not respected. Should this continue much longer, our fellow countrymen will be condemned to make reprisals, let the consequences be what they may."

PORTUGAL.

The Journal du Commerce of the 22d has his significant paragraph:—

The king of England says nothing in his speech respecting Portugal. Private letters from London, however, state that the situation of affairs in that country are of such a serious nature that a vessel of war has been ordered to the Tagus, and another to Oporto. The resolution of ministers to adjourn the meeting of the chambers may produce an explosion; and it is said the English cabinet, foreseeing a movement analogous to that which agitates Spain, has informed the queen that it feels itself obliged by treaty to lend its aid for the maintenance of its authority.

ROME.

The Courier de Lyon of the 19th instant, says: "We have a letter from Rome which announces that the son of Lucien Bonaparte, who was imprisoned in the castle of Saint Angelo, has been secretly removed." The Augsburg Gazette in allusion to the same subject, gives a letter from Rome, which contradicts the statements of the French journals as to any fire arms having been discharged at the time of the young prince being arrested. His wound was occasioned by the irritation of the carbineers at seeing their officer killed and some of their comrades wounded; they knocked the young prince down because he offered so violent a resistance. This story which at first made a great noise there, is now almost forgotten at Rome. All the reports relative to the previous conduct of the brothers are false; their faults are to be regarded more as errors of youth, than as criminal actions.

AFRICA.

A late letter from Algiers says that the affairs of Africa are to be carried on with great vigor. There are to be 30,000 French troops and 9,000 natives employed, who will be distributed nearly in the following manner—at Algiers there were to be 9,000 troops, and in the neighborhood 1,500, with 1,000 more in two entrenched camps. Added to these there is to be a moveable force of 5,000 at Algiers, and 5,000 more at Oran. A letter from Oran of the 5th August says, that the French force is wholly inefficient for the duties required of them.

LATER NEWS.

By the ship John Taylor which arrived at New York on Wednesday last, the New York editors have received London papers to the 29th of August and Liverpool to the 30th inclusive. The most interesting news received, is that of a dissolution of the French ministry, the causes of which are not very plainly stated in the advices from Paris, contained in the following paragraphs. But it is believed that recent events in Spain have indisposed the king to a forcible intervention in the affairs of that country, whilst M. Thiers continued to advise that measure.

London, Aug. 29. We announced by an extraordinary express from Paris, on Saturday morning, that M. Thiers, with five of his ministerial colleagues had resigned their places in the cabinet, on the ground of differing from the king upon the question of intervention in Spain. That statement was made expressly upon the authority of the Journal de Paris, an evening paper, which has been hitherto regarded as an official organ of the government.—On the following day, (Friday), however, in consequence of some juggling which had taken place during the night, the Moniteur, the avowed organ, published the following bulletin, which, as may be imagined, produced not a little surprise in Paris:—"The president of the council, minister of foreign affairs, has to-day tendered his resignation to the king."

From which it would appear that the resignations were confined to M. Thiers himself. Upon this topic, which would be inexhaustible for surmise, we shall not at present offer any speculation particularly as before going to press, we may have more recent intelligence, but will extract from one or two of the papers all that could be said.

Paris, Aug. 26, 10 A. M. The National, quoting from the Moniteur the resignation of M. Thiers, adds:

"Let the reader compare this with the note published by the Ministerial Evening Journal, and let him explain why this note, inserted in a paper which has every character of an official journal, does not agree with the Moniteur."

"Have five members out of six who resigned yesterday, thought better of it during the night? It would not be the first time that the inflexibility of a ministerial opinion has yielded to the charms of power."

"The Journal des Debats seems to be better informed than the Ministerial Evening Journal. It says that well informed persons believe that the only resignation of which there is no doubt, is that of the president of the council. At all events, it is clear that this resignation brings with it in fact the dissolution of the cabinet." Second edition of the National, Aug. 26th.

Since writing the above, the Paris papers of Saturday have come to hand. They are fully engaged in discussing the ministerial whereabouts. The Courier Francais most unfairly asserts that "the Moniteur has ceased to be the official journal."—Notwithstanding the indirect denial of the Moniteur of Friday, the Journal de Paris of that evening publishes the following bulletin.

"Several morning papers of this day appear to believe that M. Thiers had retired alone from the ministry, and that, consequently, the cabinet still exists."

"These journals were misinformed. The cabinet is dissolved. We are authorised by M. M. Passy, Sauzet, Duperre, Maison and Petit de la Lozere, to declare that they meant to concur in the resolve of M. Thiers."

With this singular drama the Paris press of Saturday are fully occupied, but the simple statement of facts above given is all we deem necessary for the moment to copy from our Parisian contemporaries. On the subject which led to this crisis—intervention in Spain—the Paris papers are equally diffuse in comment.

The London papers—or such of them as have no affection for Louis Philippe—allege that his perceptions of the impolicy and impropriety of assisting the queen of Spain, have been sharpened by certain intimations from the ministers of Russia, Prussia and Austria. Without crediting this report, it is easy to believe that the political condition of Spain is too hazardous and uncertain to admit of so decided a measure on the part of France, and especially of the French king, who has enough trouble on his hands within his own kingdom.

SPAIN.

General Espartero has been appointed ad interim commander-in-chief of the queen's army in the north. Iturralde, one of the Carlist generals, is said to have surrendered to the Christians, with a portion of his force. There have been fresh disturbances in Madrid.

London, Aug. 29. Letters and papers received last night from Madrid come down to the 22d inst. That capital had been the scene of fresh military disturbances. In the evening of the 18th, a report having been circulated that the first battalion of the 3d regiment of the Guards was hostile to the constitution, the two battalions that had proclaimed it at San Ildefonso, together with the National Guards, took arms, and attacked them in their barracks.—The soldiers from within returned the fire, without well knowing why they were attacked, and fourteen or fifteen persons were killed or wounded in the affray. On the next morning the soldiers of the two corps fraternised and a reconciliation took place. General Evaristo San Miguel had been named generallissimo of the army of the centre, in Arragon. The 18 procuradores dismissed by Isturiz from the situations they held in the administration, on account of their having voted him unworthy of the confidence of the nation, had been reinstated in their functions. By another royal decree, the censorship has been abolished, as incompatible with the constitution of 1812, and all the liberal journals suppressed by order of Quesada had reappeared. El Mundo was the only ministerial newspaper that had survived the downfall of Isturiz. The Calatrava cabinet was not yet completed. On the 21st, an attempt to place Arguelles at its head had been unsuccessful. It was rumored that Rodil would again be invested with the war department. All the under secretaries and clerks of the late administration have sent in their resignations. Isturiz and Galiano are understood to have succeeded in making their escape, and are now upon their road to France.

General Evans was almost restored to perfect health, and was preparing to make a dash at the Carlists, and redeem the somewhat tarnished honor of his legion. He complains bitterly of Cordova, whose treachery appears no longer doubtful. Cordova is said to have fled to France to escape the popular indignation.

THE ARMY—OFFICIAL.

GENERAL ORDER, No. 64.

Adjutant general's office, Washington, Sept. 30, 1836.

The resignations of the following named officers have been accepted by the president of the United States, to take effect at the dates set oppose to each respectively, to wit:

2d lieutenant. Roswell Park, corps of engineers, 30th September, 1836.

Capt. Robert P. Parrott, ordnance, 31st October, 1836.

1st lieutenant. Gaines P. Kingsbury, 1st dragoons, 15th October, 1836.

2d lieutenant. Lloyd Tilghman, 1st dragoons, 30th September, 1836.

Bvt. 2d lieutenant. Henry C. Moorhead, 1st dragoons, 30th September, 1836.

Capt. Charles Dimmock, 1st artillery, 30th September, 1836.

2d lieutenant. A. P. Crittenden, 1st artillery, 30th September, 1836.

Bvt. 2d lieutenant. Arthur B. Lansing, 1st artillery, 30th September, 1836.

1st lieutenant. A. A. Humphreys, 2d artillery, 30th September, 1836.

2d lieutenant. Wm. B. Wallace, 3d artillery, 30th September, 1836.

2d lieutenant. Benj. S. Ewell, 4th artillery, 30th September, 1836.

Bvt. 2d lieutenant. George W. Shaw, 1st infantry, 31st October, 1836.

Capt. James Dean, 3d infantry, 15th November, 1836.

Capt. William Martin, 4th infantry, 23d September, 1836.

1st lieutenant. F. D. Newcomb, 4th infantry, 30th September, 1836.

Bvt. 2d lieutenant. A. Campbell, 6th infantry, 30th September, 1836.

By order of major general MACOMB:

S. COOPER, acting adjutant general.

THE UNITED STATES AND MEXICO.

Extract of a letter to the editors of the "National Intelligencer," dated Natchitoches (La.) Aug. 28, 1836.

"On my return through Texas, an accident detained me a number of days at Nacogdoches, seventy miles west of the Sabine, the United States boundary. There I found encamped two regiments of our army—dragoons and infantry, and felt myself fortunate to find among them an old friend, a wanderer like myself from the far north. To him I am indebted for most of the particulars that follow.

General GAINES, retiring in January last from Florida, * * * hurried to this regiment * * * A regiment was first ordered from the north to constitute the nucleus of his "army of observation."—On hearing a report in April of a rapid invasion of Texas, and a panic among the women, he marched his forces to the banks of the Sabine, and made a call upon the governors of many states for volunteers, amounting in all to six thousand or eight thousand men. By the time these draughts were mustered into service, the rumors on which this most important step was founded proved to be in a great measure false. The volunteers were discharged the service, but in the mean time large supplies for their use and consumption had been purchased and transported many hundreds of miles by water and land. To state one article: there are now at Camp Sabine 136,500 bushels of corn! (see general Gaines' letter to governor Carroll, "corn for 3,000 horses for six months.") This is now said to be all rotten.

The president of Mexico being captured and his army destroyed at the memorable battle of San Jacinto, and Texas rid of the last of her invaders, a stray captain or two, called "commissioners," prisoners at Matamoras, Mexico, wrote a letter bidding the Texians to prepare for another immediate invasion; at the same time some reports of Indian murders in Texas were raised by the interested.—Fired by this rumor of war only 800 miles beyond our frontier, and the Indian stories, our venerable general again called upon the governors for many more regiments of volunteers, and, attracting by this grand parade the public attention to himself on the right side of the Sabine—the rubicon of national honor—passes it obscurely with the garrison of Fort Gibson.

Fort Gibson, the most exposed of our outposts, the centre of all the emigrating tribes, the immediate region where the sullen and blood-stained savages of the south are sent, being thus left with a nominal garrison, the governor of Arkansas was called upon to send 1,000 men to reinforce Fort Tison, on Red river, in the midst of the Choctaws; a race who, strange to say, never scalped a white man, and who had recently volunteered to fight for the United States against her enemies, whoever they might be.

One of the ostensible causes of this permanent military occupation of Texas is the reported disaffected state of a number of tribes or fragments of tribes, of Texian Indians, and some that once lived on the United States territory. The inhabitants of Texas, rejoicing at the countenance of our troops to their cause, (and perhaps pleased with their expenditures), are highly interested in their presence, and, with great policy, raise or spread rumors and reports of these threatened attacks, &c. being aware, perhaps, that such monstrous propositions as the following would be seriously listened to in the proper quarter, and promote their views, to wit: That these scattered bands of Indians, set on by Mexicans, (not one of whom now treads the soil of Texas), conspired the immediate destruction of Nacogdoches, in the presence of two regiments of regulars, their protectors! the same Indians who, before their arrival, when Santa Ana, flushed with victory, penetrated the heart of Texas, and the few citizens of Nacogdoches present were panic stricken, remained quiet as lambs!

These details may not prove so interesting as circumstances made them to me. Suffice it, that our army has taken a part of much importance in this war; that now, while all is peace in Texas, and they are engaged organizing a civil government, our troops have been stationed more than a month among them, and their winter supplies have been sent for 400 miles to Fort Gibson, where their presence is so much needed; that general Gaines is embodying on the frontier large bodies of militia, who, he tells governor Carroll, (see his published letter), may calculate on a "comfortable as well as profitable tour of service," and, having learned their tactics, "would then, when added to the regular forces, under any probable change of circumstances, afford complete protection.

MILITARY CORRESPONDENCE.

The governor of the state of TENNESSEE has caused to be published in the Nashville papers the following letter from general GAINES:

Head quarters, western department,

Camp Sabine, Aug. 28, 1836.

SIR: I had the honor to receive by the last mail your excellency's letter of the 8th of this month, advising me of the suspension, by the president of the United States, of the movement of the regiment of mounted gunmen, which you did me the favor a few days previously to notify me were about to assemble at Jackson preparatory to their march to this frontier.

I deeply regret the trouble and disappointment to the brave and patriotic volunteers, and more especially the embarrassment to yourself individually, which my requisition has occasioned.

However much I may have erred in the hope and opinion which I entertained and expressed in my letters of the 28th of April and 10th of May last, that this frontier was no longer in danger of being attacked or again menaced by a formidable savage foe, I have the satisfaction to find that no great evil or injury to the service has as yet resulted from the error—an error into which the wisest and best of our statesmen appear to have fallen—and from the same causes which had operated upon my mind and misled me, namely, the apparent prospect of a speedy termination of the war between the Mexicans and Texians. I cannot, however, admit that I have erred in requesting of your excellency the regiment of mounted gunmen in question.

I have, during the last and present month, been strongly impressed with the belief that the whole of this frontier would be involved in an Indian war as soon as the threatened hostilities between our blood-thirsty neighbors of the west should be renewed.

When I learned from the secretary of war that the president of the United States approved my views, reported to him in March and April last, to assemble upon this frontier an effective force of mounted men, equal to that of either of the belligerents—a force that would enable me to speak to both in a language they could not fail to hear and to heed; and when at the same time I found myself expressly instructed by a letter from the department of war, dated May 4, 1836—(of which a copy is annexed, No. 1.)—that the president will sanction the employment of whatever force may be necessary to protect the western frontier of the United States from hostile incursions; and that the department of war had addressed the governors of the states of Louisiana, Mississippi, Tennessee, Kentucky and Alabama, requesting them to call into the service such militia force as I may find necessary in carrying into effect the instructions heretofore given to me, adding, "the theatre of operations is so distant from the seat of government that much must be trusted to your discretion!" "The two great objects you have to attain are, first, the protection of the frontiers, and, secondly, as strict a performance of the neutral duties of the United States as the great object of self-defence will permit;" and when to this is added the secretary's letter to you of the same date, of which the following is an extract: "I am instructed by the president to request your excellency to call into the service of the United States the number of militia which have been or may be required by general Gaines," there can be no ground to doubt that I was fully authorised to request of you the regiment in question.

That from 4,000 to 10,000 Indian warriors will be employed against the inhabitants of the disputed territory, as soon as the theatre of the war between Mexico and Texas is extended to the left bank of the Brassos, I have no doubt; unless, indeed, the prospect of our having on this frontier sufficient mounted force to repel the invasion of the disputed territory, and afford to the defenceless inhabitants that protection which we have promised to afford them.

I am more than willing to risk myself with 1,600 men for the protection of a thinly settled frontier of 400 miles in extent; but with full authority from the department of war to call for whatever force I may deem necessary and proper for the purpose, I am not willing to have less force than I have called; for, without a force of 7,000 men held ready for action upon this frontier, the Indians can in one month destroy nine-tenths of the inhabitants within the disputed territory, with a great part of the adjacent settlements, including those upon the Red river from Alexandria to Fort Towson, embracing a large portion of the original inhabitants when ceded to the United States, with the finest cotton-growing section of the United States, whose annual crop has already amounted to millions of dollars.

If it be true that the Indians have determined to commence hostilities as soon as the Mexicans approach the settlements east of the Brassos, (and that this is their settled plan I have not a doubt), then it must be evident that we cannot obtain from Tennessee, or from any of the central or western states, sufficient force to prevent the apprehended depredations, as they may be to a great extent perpetrated whilst the requisitions for force are on the route to the states authorised to furnish it. With this impression, I cannot but consider our promise of protection to this frontier wholly unsubstantial, and calculated to excite hopes and expectations which we shall not have the sure means of fulfilling. I cannot willingly be instrumental in producing on this border scenes such as have occurred in East Florida—a frontier ravaged and desolated before troops for its protection have been marched or authorised to march from their homes.

In my letter to the secretary of war of the 7th of June, acknowledging the receipt of his letters of the 25th of April and 4th of May, I concluded as follows: "Although I have upon the whole of this frontier about 1,600 regular troops, mostly infantry, yet it will be recollected that this force has to guard an extent of 400 miles of frontier, unsupported by any other than very sparse settlements; and that the chivalry of Mexico may be expected soon to fly to the rescue of their president, and reinstate his red allies, and inspire them with a spirit of revenge against their white neighbors recently screened from their barbarism. Under those impressions, I have deemed it proper to request governor Cannon to authorise the brigade of Tennessee volunteers, enrolled under his proclamation of the 28th of April last, to calculate on the probability of another call at this place, and that, should I have occasion for volunteers, as I apprehend I shall, those enrolled shall have a preference to all others." In answer to which I received, on the 3d instant, a letter from the secretary of war, dated the 11th of July, (of which I annex a copy, No. 2), in which you will perceive no expression disapproving my purpose to call for a brigade of Tennessee volunteers. The secretary, however, expressly authorises me to call on the executives of Missouri and Arkansas for one thousand men each. But this authority did not reach me until the 3d of this month, when I had reason to believe the regiment of mounted gunmen, requested of you, had been raised, and would be here before I could have suspended their movement, if indeed I had deemed it proper so to do.—This, however, did not appear to me proper; on the contrary, I deemed it necessary to request of the governors of Missouri and Arkansas the two thousand men authorised as additional force, for reasons set forth in my letter to gen. Arbutckle, (of which I annex a copy No. 3). Of these measures the war department has been regularly advised.

Some of our fashionable party leaders, editors and others, seem very much shocked at my preparatory measures to cross a little muddy branch of the Sabine bay (which branch some are pleased to call the Rubicon), to hold the savages in check, merely because some few white men have been killed by them, and some women and children, the wives of the slain, have been taken prisoners and carried off to the bosom of the wilderness!

In reply to such silly effusions of the selfish slaves of party, I need only remark that in deciding upon the course of measures proper for me to pursue, in reference to the outrages committed by the Indians near me, I think it my duty to consider the poorest frontier family menaced with the Indian scalping knife as entitled to the same attention, and the same vigilant measures of protection, as the most fashionable of our interior citizens. If I were capable of making an invidious distinction in such a case, between the rich and the poor, the lordly politician and the humble pioneer, and of taking more or less care of the one than of the other, I should thereby prove myself to be wholly unworthy of the trust reposed in me.

But I am exultingly reminded by some, that the people killed, and those menaced by the Indians, are not citizens of the United States. I reply that most of them are citizens of the United States; and that whenever the national boundary line is established in the manner provided for by treaty, many, if not all of those who find themselves left upon the Mexican side of the line will return to our own beloved country. But, until then, we must protect them from savage massacre.

Since I sat down to write this letter an express has arrived, with a positive declaration that he had seen and conversed with a Mexican officer at an Indian village, forty miles to the north west of Nacogdoches, who was understood by the Indians to be engaged in setting on foot an expedition against Nacogdoches. This I believe to be true, because it is in accordance with the previous statements of several persons who are entitled to credit.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your ob't serv't,

EDMUND P. GAINES,

Major general commanding.

His exc'y, N. Cannon, gov. of Tennessee, Nashville.

THE GREAT RAIL ROAD.

Letter from Mr. Calhoun on the Charleston, Louisville, Lexington and Cincinnati rail road.

Fort Hill, Sept. 22d, 1836.

To the editor of the Pendleton Messenger:

DEAR SIR: Believing it to be the duty of every citizen to lay before the public such facts as may come to his knowledge, and which may contribute to the selection of the route for the contemplated rail road from Charleston to Louisville, Lexington and Cincinnati, I have selected the Messenger as the medium of communicating some information that may not be unimportant, which I acquired in a recent visit, in company with colonel Gadsden, to the portion of the Alleghany chain lying along the head waters of the Keowee river.

Concluding, as well from what I heard as from the peculiar formation of the mountains in that quarter, that there was a favorable prospect of a gap, I determined to visit the region personally, in order to ascertain how far my impression might be correct. Knowing, from a conversation with colonel Gadsden last fall, that he had similar impressions, I requested him by letter to join me, if his duties and convenience would permit, with which he readily complied, as well to test the truth of his own, as my impression. Mr. W. Sloan, my neighbor, at my request, accompanied us; and we were joined near the mountains by Mr. James McKinney, whose thorough knowledge of that section of the mountains was of the greatest service. We commenced our examination near his residence, and extended it to the gap in the mountain, in which the White Water, one of the western branches of the Keowee, takes its source, and thence down the Tuckasiege, which rises on the western side of the same gap, to where it joins Little Tennessee; the distance about forty-five miles by estimation. On our return, we examined the parts of the route that required further attention, and extended the examination from where we first commenced, across the Keowee river just below the old fort, along the old Indian path, to Mr. Perry's. From thence to where the route would strike the dividing ridge between the waters of Saluda and Savannah, about eight or ten miles below Pickensville, there can be no difficulty, as there can be none from that point to Charleston.

Our entire examination, then, extends from Mr. Perry's to the mouth of the Tuckasiege; a line of about eighty-four miles, to which we devoted eight days of incessant labor, examining on foot the most difficult and inaccessible points. The result was satisfactory beyond expectation. I can only speak for myself. Colonel Gadsden will of course reserve his opinion till it is his duty to speak officially.

In order to give any thing like a satisfactory view of the route over which we passed, it will be necessary to divide it into sections, and to present the facts connected with each separately. The first section, proceeding west, extends from Mr. Perry's to the point near Mr. McKinney's at which we commenced our examination on our way out. Its length is about ten miles. It is cut by the Keowee river, which, as its banks are high in places, and the river small, may be passed at a great elevation and moderate cost. The rise towards the mountain, from the commencement to the termination of the section, can be conveniently overcome by gradually ascending the eastern slope of the river ridge, till it strikes some convenient point for crossing, and then ascending in like manner to the point where the section terminates, on the summit of the dividing ridge between Little river and Keowee. The rise, it is believed, will not any where exceed 25 feet in the mile. The next section extends from the point where the last terminated to the top of the Alleghany. It terminates just at the point where the Chatuga mountain joins the Alleghany. At this point the White Water, one of the branches of the Keowee, which rises on the summit of the mountain, (a stream about the size of the Eighteen Mile), after cutting down and turning the Chatuga mountain, leaps from the top of the Alleghany in two perpendicular falls near to each other, about 45 or 50 feet, and then continues its rapid descent to the valley below. The length of the section is about 29 miles; and, from the best information we can obtain, the elevation to be overcome will not exceed 30 feet to the mile. The line of ascent may be conveniently lengthened or shortened to any considerable extent, to suit the grading, so as to diminish the rise probably below what I have estimated; or if it should be thought advisable to reduce it to the lowest rate, it may be effected with little expense or delay, and without a stationary engine, by using the power which the waters of the White Water afford, which is more than sufficient to elevate the heaviest train.

The next section is on the top of the Alleghany, and extends from the termination of the last, where the White Water leaps from the top of the mountain to the east, to the point where the Tuckasiege makes a similar leap to the west. The length of the line is about 16 or 17 miles. It passes through two valleys of nearly equal length and extent, divided by a low narrow ridge of about 150 feet high. The two valleys are nearly on the same level. The one on the east of the ridge is called Cashier's, and that on the west Yellow valley, from the brownish yellow which the decayed fern gives to it. The eastern extends from south east to north west, from the fall of the White Water where the valley opens, about 8 miles; and from north east to south west, from the Chimney Top to the White Side mountains, two elevated peaks, rising a thousand feet or more above the valley. The White Water collects its waters in the eastern, and the Tuckasiege in the western valley. The sources of both are on the top of the low ridge that separates them, and but a few feet apart. The two valleys form the gap, which we named the Carolina gap, to distinguish it from the Rabun or Georgia gap, which is 35 or 40 miles to the south west of it.

The low ridge, or the crest of the Alleghany, as it may be called, that separates the valleys, may be easily passed at a low angle, by gradually ascending on the slopes on the south west side of Cashier's to its summit, and descending in like manner on the opposite side, or the south western slope of the Yellow valley; but it would be both shorter and cheaper in the long run, to pierce the ridge with a tunnel, which would not exceed 200 yards, and which would give a beautiful run, nearly level, for 16 miles on the summit of the Alleghany, from fall to fall.

The next section extends from the termination of the last, at the head of the falls of the Tuckasiege, to some point down the river sufficiently distant to afford a gradual descent along the sides of the mountains through which it flows.

We examined this section carefully down the whole extent of the fall. The sight is beautiful. The volume of water is greater than that of the White Water. The falls consist of four perpendicular leaps in the space of about a mile. The first was estimated at 50 feet, and the last at 70 or 80.—The slope of the mountain on the west side of the stream was very favorable for grading, as far down as our examination extended, and we were informed that it continued equally favorable all the way down.

The elevation of the fall may be overcome by a rise from below, certainly not greater than that to the top of the Alleghany, which I stated at 30 feet to the mile; or it may be turned, as we are informed, by passing up Shoal creek, which enters the Tuckasiege on the east side, below the falls a stream of considerable size, and which, according to our information, rises in the Alleghany near the eastern sources of the Tuckasiege, at a point where there would be no difficulty to pass from the one to the other, and, passing around the ridge that limits the Yellow valley on the east, descends with a rapid current, but without a leap, to where it joins the Tuckasiege. But, if a grading of still more gradual rise than could be effected by either of the routes should be thought advisable, here, as well as on the eastern slope of the Alleghany, there is the same cheap power to raise or let down gently the heaviest train.

The next and last section extends from the termination of the last to the mouth of Tuckasiege.—It is difficult to imagine a pass through a mountain region finer than this section. The river is remarkably straight, and free from all sudden turns. The road would pass along its east side two-thirds or more of the way, on level ground, requiring but little expense in grading. A large portion of the residue, where the hills come in, would be on favorable slopes free from rocks. In the whole length, there were not two hundred yards of rocky cliff to encounter; and, through the whole length, no walling in the river. We did not extend our examination farther, as the survey of captain Bache, under the orders of the war department, gives ample information in relation to the Tuckasiege to the head of steamboat navigation on that river. It is sufficient to say that there is no serious difficulty below.

Having now communicated briefly the information I collected during the examination, it will be proper to conclude with a few general remarks on the entire route, in order to bring its advantages, such as they are, before the public. The value of the gap must depend not simply on the facility of passing it, but its position; and that again on the fact, whether it be such that a road through it would be calculated to effect the great object in view, to connect Charleston commercially with the great region of the west, and in particular, the points at which it is proposed to terminate the road; or, in other words, is the direction of the gap favorable to this great object? is the route to and from it of easy approach? and is it favorable for branching to important points? I propose a few hasty remarks on these points.

The direction of the gap from Charleston is nearly north west; and if a line be stretched from Charleston to the gap, and continued in the same direction, it would strike the Mississippi nearly at the mouth of the Missouri; cross the Ohio below the Wabash; pass on the ridge between Green and Cumberland rivers; cross the latter a little above Carthage; pass the Cumberland mountain at the Crab Orchard gap, which col. Long's survey shows to be practicable; pass the Great Tennessee near Kingston, and extend along Tuckasiege to the Carolina gap. On this side, the line from the gap to Charleston would take the old Indian trading path, which was used by the Cherokees west of the mountain before the revolution, with little deviation throughout its entire course; passing through the forks of the Edisto, and striking the Charleston and Hamburg rail road below Branchville. The line on this side of the gap would extend through the entire length of the state, 250 miles, from south east to north west, and on the other side from the gap west, if extended, would divide into nearly equal parts the great valley between the lakes and the Rocky mountain, through which the waters of the Mississippi and its tributaries flow.

As to its approach, it will be found, I am satisfied, very easy on both sides. The approach from Charleston on the east side will be found remarkably so. There are two routes; the direct one through the forks of the Edisto, and up the dividing ridge between the forks, and thence along the dividing ridge between Saluda and Savannah, to where the old Indian trail (to which I have referred) strikes that ridge, without crossing a drop of water after passing the north fork of the Edisto to that point; the other, bearing to the east, and keeping the main dividing ridge to the same point, without crossing a single stream, great or small, for 200 miles. This route, the longer by a few miles, possesses many advantages. What I have already said will supercede the necessity of any remark on the accessibility of the gap from the point where the road would leave the ridge to the gap, except that it will cross no other stream larger than a moderate sized creek but the Keowee, it being the only river on the route throughout the entire length of our state.

The gap is no less accessible on the western side. In the whole extent of the direct line leading to the heart of the continent, from the summit of the Alleghany to the Ohio, the Tuckasiege, or, perhaps, Little Tennessee, the Great Tennessee, and the Cumberland would be the only rivers to cross; and in the whole length, very few streams of any description, and no mountain or ridge, except the Cumberland.

The next point to be considered is, whether the line of route is favorable for branching, and easy of approach from important points? A statement of fact will best answer the question. I will begin with Charleston, and assume that the road will take the great dividing ridge to which I have frequently alluded: keeping the ridge it would approach within eight miles of Mulberry Castle, on Cooper river, within twelve miles of the mouth of the Santee canal, within nine miles of Vance's ferry, where there are bluffs on the Santee on both sides, and where a branch could be thrown out conveniently to Camden and Cheraw; within twelve miles of Orangeburg; within the same distance of Columbia, through which a branch could be thrown out, taking the ridge between Broad river and Catawba, and passing through Winnsborough, Chester, York, to the North Carolina line; within fourteen of Edgfield, twenty-five of Newbury, five of Cambridge, eleven of Abbeville, nineteen of Laurens, eight of Anderson, twenty of Greenville, eight or ten of Pickensville, seven of Pendleton and three of Pickens.

On the west of the mountain it would strike Little Tennessee at the head of steamboat navigation, about 80 miles from the gap, and 340 from Charleston. The river would of course be, in effect, one important branch, leading to all the important places on its navigable waters. At or about that point, the main trunk, or a branch, as may be determined, would turn off to Knoxville, and one or the other to Kingston, on the Great Tennessee. I need not trace the route from Knoxville, as that is familiar to all. Whichever would take Kingston would pass up Emory's river by the Crab Orchard gap over the Cumberland mountain, and, striking the Cumberland river near Carthage, it would continue its route through a fine country, well calculated for rail roads, and having the advantage of throwing out frequent branches to important points at a short distance through Middle Tennessee and the western parts of Kentucky. One of the most important points would be Nashville, about 60 miles below Carthage on the same river.

But would the route in any degree sacrifice the immediate object of the road, to connect Charleston with Louisville, Lexington and Cincinnati? That is a question which I do not feel authorized to decide; nor have I the means, if I did. It belongs to others, whose duty it is to decide it. My object is simply to state facts and views, connected with a particular route, of which I happened to have some knowledge, and not to condemn or disparage any other route; to enlarge the field of selection so that the best possible should be selected. As favorably as I think of this, I shall heartily rejoice if a better can be found; one shorter, capable of more graduation and cheaper construction, or better calculated to effect the great object in view, which must be so dear to every friend of his country. Without intending comparison, I will simply give what I believe to be about the distance by the route to three important points with which it is intended to connect Charleston by the road. Supposing the road takes a course across the Cumberland mountain by Emory's river, the distance to Cincinnati from Charleston would be about 635, to Lexington 565, and to Louisville 595; but what would be of great importance, there would be a common track to the three places of about 525 miles, and a common track from Lexington and Cincinnati of about 40 miles made, and what would be still more so, there would a common track to Nashville and all the intermediate places between it and Cincinnati of about 415 miles.

I have now stated the information I possess, and the views I entertain in relation to the route in question, in a very hasty and imperfect manner. My object is to draw public attention to it, and to have its advantages or disadvantages tested in a more satisfactory manner. I have not desired to under-estimate the difficulties, whatever they may be; but no one can be more conscious than I am how difficult it is to form a correct opinion of a route by the eye, particularly through a mountain region, or any other mode, without an actual survey, which I doubt not will be ordered if such should be the desire of this section of the state.

It may be asked how it can be explained that a route, which, on the examination I have given it, appears to possess so many advantages, has attracted, heretofore, so little attention.

The only reason that I can assign is, that the gap leads to a portion of North Carolina little known, and which has but lately been acquired from the Indians, and between the two established routes by Asheville and Rabun, through one or the other of which most persons going to the west pass. But it was not so obscure as not to be known by the neighborhood, and to attract the attention of those whose duty it was to explore the mountains, in order to find the best pass over it. General Hayne, whose devotion to the great undertaking is so well known, undertook to examine the gap, but unfortunately his guide was not sufficiently well acquainted with the section of the mountains, to which so many ridges converge, and which on that account is so intricate, as to conduct him through the proper route. I was not at all surprised, when I looked at the route through which, I was told, he was taken, that he should have condemned it as utterly impracticable. He could not do otherwise. Learning that he was probably misconducted, and having a strong previous impression of the existence of a gap in that quarter worthy of attention, induced me, as I have stated, to undertake the examination, of which I now communicate the result.

With great respect, I am, &c.

J. C. CALHOUN.

POLITICS OF THE DAY.

A great public entertainment was lately given in Orange county, North Carolina, complimentary to senator Mangum and general Dudley, (the governor elect of the state), which appears to have been "a feast of reason and a flow of soul." The papers contain a full account of it, which we have not room to copy entire. But we cannot resist the pleasure of copying from it into our columns the following correspondence, equally honorable to the givers and the receivers of the compliment intended by the invitation of senator Leigh, of Virginia, to the festival.

[Nat. Int.] Hillsborough, Aug. 30, 1836.

Hon. Benjamin W. Leigh:

SIR: The public papers will have informed you of the signal victory obtained by the whigs of this state in the election of general Dudley to the executive chair. This victory is the more important, as it insures the triumph of the White ticket in November next. To you, sir, together with the other master spirits who, at Washington, during the last winter, so nobly and fearlessly sustained the constitution of our common country, this state of things is mainly to be attributed. The people can but wish their own happiness, and when they err in the means to which they resort, it is for the want of correct information. Let truth be disseminated with the same persevering zeal that the propagators of error employ, and in process of time it must and will prevail. The old north state has struck a brave blow. It was sufficient for her citizens to know that the institutions of their country are endangered, to rally them to the rescue. Among those to whom they consider themselves most indebted, no name stands higher than that of Benjamin Watkins Leigh. It is one which has become familiar to us in our social and domestic circle; and must descend to our children, as belonging to the history of our country. This victory, so auspicious to the best hopes of the country, a portion of the whig citizens of Orange county have determined to celebrate by a barbecue to be given on the 17th day of September, in the neighborhood of this place. We have thought that it would not be unpleasant to you to mingle with this portion of your fellow citizens. To see you among us on so joyous an occasion, would give an additional interest to the scene. May we hope, sir, that you will gratify us by furnishing us with an opportunity of personally expressing to you, not only our admiration of your public life, but our esteem for the virtues of the private citizen.

CADWALLADER JONES,
WILLIAM HOLT,

And others, committee, &c.

Richmond, September 10, 1836.

GENTLEMEN: I have to acknowledge your letter of the 8th ultimo, inviting me to attend the proposed celebration on the 17th instant, near Hillsborough, of the signal victory of the whigs of North Carolina, in the election of general Dudley to the chief magistracy of the state. You need not be assured of my entire and hearty concurrence in the principles and sentiments you entertain. I rejoice in your success, and estimate most highly the advantages which that success has achieved, and the happy presage it affords of yet further advantages to the cause of the constitution. I trust in heaven that the people of the United States, at the approaching presidential election, will teach all aspirants to the presidency in time to come, that sycophancy to the president in office is not the true road to the succession; and convince the president, for an example and a warning to his successors, that his open and zealous exertions in behalf of his favorite candidate, though backed by all the influence of executive patronage, give no title to the confidence and suffrage of the people; and that his public denunciations of all other competitors as his enemies, merely because their fellow citizens think proper to put them in competition with his favorite, are impotent to take away from them the confidence and approbation of their country, which they have earned by public service and tried political and private virtue.

I religiously believe that the continuance of our free institutions in their purity depends on the result. If president Jackson's daring interference in the election of his successor shall not be rebuked by the general voice of the nation—if his open and (in my sense of things) indecent efforts in favor of Mr. Van Buren shall be crowned with success, we shall soon see the successor (Cæsar) installed during the reign of his imperial predecessor. The remark you make is just, that "let truth be disseminated with the same persevering zeal that the propagators of error employ, and in process of time it must and will prevail." This is a fundamental principle of republican government. I should be most happy to manifest my zeal for truth and for the constitution by attending your celebration: I should be happy, too, in making personal acquaintance with many of my fellow citizens of North Carolina, whom I know as yet only by name and reputation. But indispensable duties interfere, and compel me, most reluctantly, to decline the invitation you have given me.

I pray you to be assured, gentlemen, of my grateful sense of the personal kindness towards me manifested in your letter, and of the pride I feel in your good opinion. I am, with all respect, your obedient servant,
B. W. LEIGH.
Messrs. Cadwallader Jones, & others, Hillsborough.

THE ROTHSCHILDS.

From McGregor's new work "My Note Book."

At the commencement of the wars of the French revolution, their father Moses Rothschild (Anglice Redshield), was a small banker or money lender, living in an obscure part of Frankfort. He had established a character for strict probity, and would no doubt have amassed a large fortune, and have enriched his family, although events had never so eminently served him.

His eldest son, Nathan Meyer, whom he sent to England, commenced business in Manchester, partly as a small manufacturer, but chiefly as a broker or commission agent in the way of purchasing the fabrics of Lancashire and Yorkshire and shipping them for Frankfort to supply the German market. This was a thriving business enough, until the celebrated Berlin and Milan decrees crushed it and the trade of Frankfort at the same time. Another son, Solomon, was sent to Paris, where he commenced business as a money-lender and negotiator. The third son remained at home with his father.

When the French armies crossed the Rhine, most of the German princes were driven from their territories—among others the sovereign of Hesse-Cassel, who carried his jewels and money hastily with him to Frankfort, in order, if possible, to deposit them where they would be most likely to escape the French. The reputable character of the humble Jew, Moses Rothschild, induced the prince to call upon him for the purpose of depositing with him his treasure, in value some millions of thalers. Rothschild at first refused accepting so dangerous a responsibility, for the French troops were advancing fast on the city. The prince, who would not even take a receipt for them, at last urged Moses to take charge of the money and jewels; and the French army was actually entering Frankfort at the moment when Rothschild succeeded in burying the prince's treasure in a corner of his little garden.

His own property, which in goods and money was worth about 40,000 thalers, he did not hide, well knowing that if he did so, a strict search would be made, and that not only his own, but the prince's hoard, would be discovered and plundered.

The republicans, who, like the Philistines of old, fell upon Rothschild, left him not one thaler's value of his own money or property. In truth, he was like all the other Jews and citizens, reduced to utter poverty—but the prince's treasure was safe; and some time after the French army marched out from Frankfort, Rothschild commenced again in a small way as a banker, increasing his business cautiously, by means of the prince's money, until the year 1802, when the latter returned to Frankfort on his way to Cassel.

He had heard and read in the gazettes that the French had despoiled Rothschild of every thing he possessed, and, consequently, he considered that his own must have inevitably gone. He, however, called, without any hope, on the honest Jew, and when he asked Moses "if the robbers took all?"—great was his joy when the latter replied "not one kreutzer; I have all the jewels, which I secured, untouched, in a strong chest; and the money I have also, with five per cent. besides, for your highness, from the day that you put your confidence in the Jew, Moses Rothschild." He then related the whole story, and several anecdotes about the ingenuity of the sans culottes.

"As I was left without a kreutzer of mine own," continued he, "and so much good money of your highness's here, and doing no profit; and as I could get high interest for it from the merchants, I began to use it by little and little. I have been successful, and it is now only just that you should have it all back, with five per cent. interest."

"No," said the prince, "I will neither receive the interest which your honesty offers, nor yet take my money out of your hands. The interest is not sufficient to replace what you lost to save mine; and further my money shall be at your service for 20 years to come, and at no more than two per cent. interest."

At the congress of Vienna, the prince of Hesse-Cassel held up the high character of Moses Rothschild so earnestly to the potentates and ministers there assembled, as to obtain from them promises of giving a preference of negotiating loans to the family, and the loan of a hundred millions of francs contracted by France to pay to the allied powers was accordingly entrusted to the son at Paris, the present baron Solomon Rothschild. Thus began their loans and negotiations on a large scale, added to which their increasing connections and resources having enabled them to have more expeditious intelligence than all other capitalists, they have profited by their contracts to an almost unprecedented extent. M. Rothschild, of London, for instance, had information of Napoleon's escape from Elba, 25 hours before the British ministry. Their first loan of 100,000,000 of francs contracted at Paris was agreed for at 67 per cent. and a short time after sold at 93—making a difference of 52,000,000 francs on the whole amount between the contract and sale prices.

The manners of the Rothschilds are blunt, and by no means polished, nor have they much that is persuasive in speech. I allude to baron Rothschild in Paris, and baron Andrew Rothschild, who resides in much more than German princely style in Frankfort.

From the London Court Journal.

In 1807 and 1808, when gold was at a premium of seven to eight shillings on the guinea, Rothschild sent an immense quantity of gold coin out of the kingdom, which was punishable by law. One morning he received a letter from lord Liverpool, begging to see him immediately. Rothschild was exceedingly alarmed; "My God," he exclaimed, "they have found me out, and I am ruined." At length he summoned up courage to go, but first packed up all his securities and sent them off the premises, lest an extent or some "devilism" should come into the house. He was announced, and lord Liverpool came smiling into the room where he was waiting. "I saw den it was all right," said Rothschild, in relating the matter to sir W. Curtis. His lordship said, "Mr. Rothschild, I have sent for you to ask your opinion, as a commercial gentleman, about sending money to Spain, as to what coin is best." "Is the army advancing or retreating my lord?" "Advancing." "In that case Napoleons is the best coin." "We have none." "I will supply your lordship with any quantity at a short notice." "Can you indeed?" "Yes, my lord." Lord Liverpool immediately ordered a very large quantity, £200,000 to be furnished immediately. Rothschild, on leaving his house, instantly took a postchaise and four, and went to Birmingham, where he got the Napoleons coined in a few days, at the works of Messrs. Boulton and Watt. It is said they were rather short, both in weight and quality, but it was not a moment to be difficult, they passed current; a larger order was given, and Rothschild made a handsome profit on them; but that was nothing to his being then thought necessary to government. He was consulted on various subjects, and his advice usually followed, and in return he was always furnished with the earliest information, which he turned to account at the stock exchange, and thus by degrees rose to be the first capitalist in the kingdom, setting even the bank of England at defiance; and more than once threatening it with ruin.

THE CHEROKEES.

From the New York American.

LETTER FROM JOHN ROSS, principal chief of the Cherokee nation, in answer to inquiries from a friend, regarding Cherokee affairs with the United States, p. 31:

"In certain recent discussions," says Mr. Ross, "in the representative hall at Washington, our enemies made it an objection against me and against others, that we were not Indians, but had the principles of white men, and were consequently unworthy of a hearing in the Indian cause. I will own that it has been my pride, a principal chief of the Cherokees, to implant in the bosoms of the people, and to cherish in my own, the principles of white men! It is to this fact that our white neighbors must ascribe their safety under the smart of the wrongs we have suffered from them. It is in this they may confide for our continued patience. But when I speak of the principles of white men, I speak not of such principles as actuate those who talk thus to us, but of those mighty principles to which the United States owes her greatness and her liberty."

Wherever the principles alluded to with such caustic eloquence yet obtain, this pamphlet will be read with no common interest; although its searching appeal will, we fear, be only made in vain. The subject has already been so long before the country, that public sympathy, never a very enduring emotion, is nearly worried out, and, like a veteran who is reproached for telling an old story, when the infirmities of age are added to the wounds which broke his constitution in youth, the Cherokee must be content to forego his claims upon our feelings, because the story of his wrongs can no longer excite from its novelty.

With this impression, we are, perhaps, in duty bound to find lighter summer reading for our review than Mr. Ross's pamphlet may offer. But, besides the excuse of our having but one other work this week to notice, as a cause for delaying upon this, we have still another reason for dwelling upon it, and that is, that, so far as we can discover, Mr. Ross makes up an entirely new issue between the Cherokees and the American people,—an issue which, if it cannot be set aside, must damn our national character forever in the sight of the world. It is this, that the United States will neither allow the Cherokees to enjoy their present possessions as citizens of the republic, nor guarantee them the fee simple of the new lands to which it is proposed to remove them.

"One impression concerning us (says the Cherokee statement) is, that, though we object to removal, as we are equally averse to becoming citizens of the United States, we ought to be forced to remove, to be tied hand and foot and conveyed to the extreme western frontier, and then turned loose among the wild beasts of the wilderness. Now, the fact is, we never have objected to become citizens of the United States, and to conform to her laws; but, in the event of conforming to her laws, we have required the protection and the privileges of her laws to accompany that conformity on our part. We have asked this repeatedly, and repeatedly has it been denied."

Again: "Many have voted in favor of this pretended treaty under the impression that they were giving lands to us in fee simple. The United States do promise that they will 'cause a patent or grant to be made and executed' to us for the aforesaid tract of land, but it is always on the proviso 'that such land shall revert (that is, the Cherokees shall have the occupancy while the United States retain the right of property) to the United States, if the Indians become extinct or abandon the same.'"

Let us next see what legal title the Cherokees have to their lands, in which their natural rights have, it seems, given them no property:

THE NATURAL AND ACQUIRED RIGHTS OF THE CHEROKEES. If it be said that the Cherokees have lost their national character and political existence, as a nation or tribe, by state legislation, then the president and senate can make no treaty with them; but if they have not, then no treaty can be made for them, binding, without and against their will. Such is the fact, in reference to the instrument entered into at New Echota, in December last. If treaties are to be thus made and enforced, deceptive to the Indians and to the world, purporting to be a contract, when, in truth, wanting the assent of one of the pretended parties, what security would there be for any nation or tribe to retain confidence in the United States? If interest or policy require that the Cherokees be removed, without their consent, from their lands, surely the president and senate have no constitutional power to accomplish that object. They cannot do it under the power to make treaties, which are contracts, not rules prescribed by a superior, and therefore binding only by the assent of the parties. In the present instance, the assent of the Cherokee nation has not been given, but expressly denied. The president and senate cannot do it under the power to regulate commerce with the Indian tribes, or intercourse with them, because that belongs to congress, and so declared by the president in his message to the senate of February 22, 1831, relative to the execution of the act to regulate trade and intercourse with the Indian tribes, &c. passed 30th of March, 1802. They cannot do it under any subsisting treaty stipulation with the Cherokee nation. Nor does the peculiar situation of the Cherokees, in reference to the states, their necessities and distresses, confer any power upon the president and senate to alienate their legal rights, or to prescribe the manner and time of their removal.

Without a decision of what ought to be done, under existing circumstances, the question recurs, is the instrument under consideration a contract between the United States and the Cherokee nation? It so purports upon its face and that falsely. Is that statement so sacred and conclusive that the Cherokee people cannot be heard to deny the fact? They have denied it under their own signatures, as the document herein before referred to will show, and protested against the acts of the unauthorized few, who have arrogated to themselves the right to speak for the nation. The Cherokees have said they will not be bound thereby. The documents submitted to the senate show, that when the vote was taken upon considering the propositions of the commissioner, there were but seventy-nine for so doing.—Then it comes to this: could this small number of persons attending the New Echota meeting, acting in their individual capacity, dispose of the rights and interests of the Cherokee nation, or by any instrument they might sign, confer such power upon the president and senate.

If the United States are to act as the guardian of the Cherokees, and to treat them as incapable of managing their own affairs, and blind to their true interests, yet this would not furnish power or authority to the president and senate, as the treaty making power, to prescribe the rule for managing their affairs. It may afford a pretence for the legislation of congress, but none for the ratification of an instrument as a treaty made by a small faction against the protest of the Cherokee people.

That the Cherokees are a distinct people, sovereign to some extent, have a separate political existence as a society or body politic, and a capability of being contracted with in a national capacity, stands admitted by the uniform practice of the United States from 1785, down to the present day.—With them have treaties been made through their chiefs, and distinguished men in primary assemblies, as also with their constituted agents or representatives. That they have not the right to manage their own internal affairs, and to regulate, by treaty, their intercourse with other nations, is a doctrine of modern date. In 1793, Mr. Jefferson said, 'I consider our right of pre-emption of the Indian lands, not as amounting to any dominion or jurisdiction or paramountship whatever, but merely in the nature of a remainder, after the extinguishment of a present right, which gives us no present right whatever, but of preventing other nations from taking possession, and so defeating our expectancy.—That the Indians have the full, undivided and independent sovereignty as long as they choose to keep it, and this may be forever.'

Now, with this view of the case, who will say that the enforcing of this treaty will not bring a stain upon the national character which no time can remove. The alleged ill treatment of the native tribes in other instances of our history, are attributed chiefly to the colonial or state governments. The acts of injustice have been of partial or gradual operation. They have been committed, as it were, in a corner. But here is a measure by which thousands of Christian and civilized Indians are to be affected—a measure which has been for years before the councils of the nation, and which has passed in review before the first statesmen of the country—a measure, in short, which will stamp our character for good or ill upon the page of history. The claim of Georgia against the general government, it must be confessed, is difficult to get over; but the claim of the Cherokees is still more imperative, and better were it that every cent in the treasury were appropriated to purchase her title to these lands and vest them anew in their original owners, than that such disgrace should be entailed upon our name forever. National, like individual, honor, is one of this world's goods which, when once lost, is irretrievable. But we despise this special pleading in a case which ought to come home at once to the bosom of every native born citizen. Is there nothing in that sentence which has been passed upon these outraged people, depriving the original lords of the soil of all present and prospective right of citizenship, and driving out thousands of Christian farmers to the wilderness? Nothing which calls the blush of shame into the cheek of an American, when he remembers that the meanest serf of privileged Europe enjoys every political right, and legislates both for Anglo and Indian-Americans, almost as soon as he steps upon our shores? Is not the educated Indian as fit for a citizen of the republic, as the ignorant peasant of a foreign country? Is it not enough to go on forever inviting strange adventurers to our shores, and blending a foreign and base leaven with our political mass; but must we also cast from us the wholesome growth which is improving to our use, beneath our eyes, merely because it springs from our soil? National vanity has been urged, and perhaps proved, against us by foreigners, as our chief national foible. Would that they could make equally good the charge of national pride—an honest, a manly and pardonable pride in our country, and every thing that essentially and peculiarly belongs to it. Such a pride, however, can have no healthy basis in a country where every one seems to feel himself so much an interloper, that he stops at no injustice to root out its original possessors, and eagerly claims kindred with every last corner that can freshen the ties between himself and the land from which his ancestors were driven. What claim have the hundred thousand foreigners that each au-turn brings to our polls—what claim upon us as Americans which these thirty thousand Cherokees have not? It is idle, however, to appeal to a pride of country which does not exist, or which, if it ever show some sparks of life, is so feeble and sickly that it is annihilated by the first breath of party despotism, or swallowed up by the least consideration of time-serving expediency. "The times are out of joint," and we fear the men are not yet in being who are "born to set them right."

We annex some extracts from Mr. Ross's appeal, and the accompanying protest of the Cherokee delegation, which speak for themselves.

"The Cherokee territory, within the limits of N. Carolina, Georgia, Tennessee and Alabama, is estimated to contain ten millions of acres. It embraces a large portion of the finest lands to be found in any of the states; and a salubrity of climate unsurpassed by any, possessing superior advantages in reference to water power, owing to the numerous rills, brooks and rivers, which flow from and through it; some of these streams afford good navigation, others are susceptible of being easily improved and made navigable. On the routes where roads have been opened by the Cherokees, through this country, there must necessarily pass some of the most important public roads and other internal improvements, which at no distant day will be constructed.

"The entire country is covered with a dense forest of valuable timber, also abounding in inexhaustible quarries of marble and limestone. Above all, it possesses the most extensive regions of the precious metal known in the United States. The riches of the gold mines are incalculable, some of the lots of forty acres of land, embracing gold mines, which have been surveyed and disposed of by lottery, under authority of Georgia, (with the encumbrance of the Indian title), have been sold for upwards of thirty thousand dollars!

"There are also extensive banks of iron ore interspersed throughout the country. Mineralogists who have travelled over a portion of this territory, are fully persuaded, from what they have seen, that lead and silver mines will also be found in the mountain regions. Independent of all these natural advantages and invaluable resources, there are many extensive and valuable improvements made upon the lands by the native Cherokee inhabitants, and those adopted as Cherokee citizens, by intermarriages.

"The Cherokee population has recently been reported by the war department to be 18,000, according to a census taken by the agents appointed by the government. This people have become civilized, and adopted the Christian religion. Their pursuits are pastoral and agricultural, and in some degree, mechanical. Their stocks of cattle, however, have become greatly reduced in numbers within the few past years, owing to the unfortunate policy which has thrown upon this territory a class of white and irresponsible settlers, who, disregarding all laws and treaties, so far as the rights of the Cherokees are concerned, and who have been actuated more from the sordid impulses of avarice, than by any principle of moral obligation or of justice, have by fraud and force made Cherokee property their own.

"The possessions of the Cherokee inhabitants, consist of houses, which cost generally from fifty dollars, one hundred to one thousand dollars, and in many instances up to five thousand dollars; some few as high as six, eight and ten thousand dollars, with corresponding outbuildings, consisting of kitchens, meat houses, dairies, granaries, or corn cribs, barns, stables, &c. grist and saw mills: connected with these are gardens for culinary vegetables; also peach and apple orchards; lots of inclosed ground for horses, black cattle, &c. The farms of the Cherokees contain from ten, twenty, thirty, forty, fifty, sixty to one hundred and fifty, and two hundred acres of land under cultivation, and inclosed with good rail fences. Among the most wealthy, there are farms of three and four hundred acres, and in one instance perhaps about eight hundred acres in cultivation. Some of the most extensive and valuable farms and possessions have been forcibly wrested from the proprietors by the Georgia guard and agents, and citizens of Georgia put into possession of them, whilst the Cherokee owners have been thrust out to seek shelter in a camp, or under the roof of a log hut in the woods, within the limits of North Carolina, Tennessee and Alabama. There are many valuable public ferries also owned by the Cherokees, the income of some of them amount to from five hundred to one thousand, fifteen hundred and two thousand dollars per annum. Several public roads opened at private expense, were also kept up by companies under regulations of the national council, and toll gates were erected on them. These regulations have all been prostrated by state legislation, and the Cherokee proprietors thus deprived of their rights, privileges and property. Besides all this, there are various important interests and claims which are secured by the provisions of the former subsisting treaties, to the Cherokees, and for which the United States in justice are bound to allow indemnification. For the surrender then of a territory containing about ten millions of acres, together with the various interests and claims spoken of, and the amount that will be required to cover these claims, no man, without data, can form any estimate. The sum of five millions six hundred thousand dollars, only, is proposed to be paid: the price given for the lands at this rate would not exceed thirty cents per acre. Will Georgia accept the whole amount, for that portion within her limits.

"The tenure by which the new Cherokee lands are proposed to be held. Three times have the Cherokee people formally and openly rejected conditions substantially the same as these. We were commissioned by the people, under express injunctions, not to bind the nation to any such conditions. The delegation representing the Cherokees, have, therefore, officially rejected these conditions themselves, and have regularly protested before the senate and house of representatives, against their ratification. The Cherokee people, in two protests, the one signed by twelve thousand seven hundred and fourteen persons, and the other by three thousand two hundred and fifty persons, spoke for themselves against the treaty, even previous to its rejection by those whom they had selected to speak for them.—With your impressions, concerning the advantages secured by the subtle instrument in question, you will, no doubt, wonder at this opposition. But it possesses not the advantages you and others imagine, and that is the reason why it has encountered, and ever will encounter opposition. You suppose we are to be removed through it from a home, by circumstances rendered disagreeable and even untenable, to be secured in a better home, where nothing can disturb or dispossess us. Here is the great mystification. We are not secured in the new home promised to us. We are exposed to precisely the same miseries, from which if this measure is enforced, the United States' power professes to relieve us, but does so entirely, by the exercise of that power, against our will. If we really had the security you and others suppose we have, we would not thus complain. But mark the truth and judge for yourself.

"White men obtain their title to property, between one another, by what is called fee simple. I have discovered that many of those who have voted in favor of this pretended treaty, have done so under the impression that they were voting lands to us in fee simple—especially as we are to be compelled to pay for those lands the sum of five hundred thousand dollars—having already paid for a portion of them, by exchange, what is equivalent to the full amount of their intrinsic value. But the difference between the right by which the state of Georgia and other states hold lands, is a very, very material difference from that for which we Cherokees shall have paid according to this arrangement, at the smallest estimate, calculating the valuation of the exchange at government prices, and adding it to the sum to be paid in money—seven millions of dollars! Seven millions for lands without a real title! For this sum, I admit, the United States do promise that they will "cause a patent, or grant, to be made and executed" to us for the aforesaid tract of land, but it is always on the proviso, "that such land shall revert to the United States, if the Indians become extinct, or abandon the same." Now, the use of this very phrase, revert is an evidence that the United States do not consider that there is an absolute property given in the soil allotted to the Indians, in payment for their valuable country; the United States retains the absolute property in her own hands, only allowing to the Indians a far inferior right of occupancy to that which they have ever been admitted to possess where they now are, and where they were born.—The pretended treaty expressly avows that it is under the law containing the clause above quoted, and other similar laws, that the transfer is made; and the Indian title is to be subject, not only to these laws already existing, but to such laws as may be made hereafter; and to which laws, present and prospective, the Indian regulations for self-government must be equally subordinate. Now, in addition to the inconveniences and insecurity inevitable from the vagueness of the laws already in operation, those future ones, to which this pretended treaty makes the Indians blindly promise submission, may entirely extinguish, not only the right of occupancy, but of self-government. For example. Suppose it should suit the policy of the United States, hereafter, to pass a law organizing a territorial government upon the Cherokee lands, west?—That law necessarily destroys the character of the Cherokee nation as a distinct community; the nation becomes legally extinct; the lands revert to the United States, and the Cherokee people are bound, by assenting to the conditions of the pretended treaty, to acquiesce in this law providing a plausible pretext for their annihilation. And should they demur, what is the result? An article in the pretended treaty expressly stipulates, that military posts, and military roads may, anywhere, and at any time, be established by the United States, in the new country, set apart for the Indians. Hence, any one who might complain of any act of the U. States as unauthorized by the right construction of the pretended treaty, would be as liable to ejectment for the purpose of creating a military post at the malcontent's abode in the Cherokee country west—as now he actually is, and long has been under similar circumstances, in the Cherokee part of Georgia:—and were vexations to become universal, as they have been in Georgia, the region might, in the same manner, be filled with soldiers, and the existence of the Cherokee nation become at once extinguished by laws to which the people will be said themselves to have assented. That there is no disposition ever to interfere thus, is attempted to be proved by reference to an article of the pretended treaty, excluding intruders and white men; but this very article is clogged with a worse than neutralizing condition—a condition pregnant with sources of future disquiet—a condition that is not to prevent the introduction of useful farmers, mechanics and teachers, under which denomination some future executive of the United States may find it convenient, hereafter, to overwhelm the original population, and bring about the territorial government, by which the Cherokees will be regarded as legally extinguished, and the country of their exile as reverting to its real proprietor, the United States.—Thus will the favorite theory, which has been ascribed to the president, be fully realized. This policy will legislate the Indians off the land!

"That all these things are possible, is proved by the present posture of affairs in the region of our birth, our sacred inheritance from our fathers. It is but a few years, since the apprehension of scenes like those from which the United States acknowledges her incompetency to protect us, even under the pledge of treaties, would have been regarded as a morbid dream. But a state has already been created on the boundary of the retreat set apart for the exile of the Indians—the state of Arkansas; another state, and an independent one—a new republic, made up of many of the old foes of the Indians—Texas, is rising on another boundary; and who shall say how soon these and other new bordering states may become as uneasy from the Indian neighborhood, as the old ones are now. It was at one time thought that the United States never could declare she was unable to keep the treaties of former days. Is it less possible that she may hereafter experience the same difficulty in keeping those of the days in which we live? especially, as in the present instance, she may be called upon, not only to defend those treaties from violation by her own citizens, but by the people, though of the same origin, belonging to a new, a warlike and independent republic."

Scenes in the Cherokee country.

Mr. John Ross, the principal chief of the Cherokee nation, was at Washington city on the business of his nation. When he returned, he travelled till about ten o'clock at night, to reach his family; rode up to the gate, saw a servant, believed to be his own; dismounted, ordered his horse taken; went in, and to his utter astonishment, found himself a stranger in his own house, his family having been, some days before, driven out to seek a new home. A thought then flitted across his mind, that he could not, under all the circumstances of his situation, reconcile it to himself to tarry all night under the roof of his own house as a stranger. He ordered his horse, paid his bill, and departed in search of his family, and after travelling amid heavy rains, had the happiness of overtaking them on the road, bound for some place of refuge within the limits of Tennessee.

Mr. Joseph Vann, also a native Cherokee, was a man of great wealth, had about eight hundred acres of land in cultivation; had made extensive improvements, consisting, in part, of a brick house, costing about ten thousand dollars, mills, kitchens, negro houses, and other buildings. He had fine gardens, and extensive apple and peach orchards. His business was so extensive, he was compelled to employ an overseer and other agents. In the fall of 1833, he was called from home, but before leaving, made a conditional contract with a Mr. Howell, a white man, to oversee for him in the year 1834, to commence on the first of January of that year. He returned about the 28th or 29th of December, 1833, and learning Georgia had prohibited any Cherokee from hiring a white man, told Mr. Howell he did not want his services. Yet Mr. Bishop, the state's agent, represented to the authorities of Georgia, that Mr. Vann had violated the laws of that state, by hiring a white man, had forfeited his right of occupancy, and that a grant ought to issue for his lands. There were conflicting claims under Georgia for his possessions. A Mr. Riley pretended a claim, and took possession of the upper part of the dwelling house, armed for battle. Mr. Bishop, the state's agent, and his party, came to take possession, and between them and Riley, a fight commenced, and from twenty to fifty guns were fired in the house. While this was going on Mr. Vann gathered his trembling wife and children into a room for safety. Riley could not be dislodged from his position up stairs, even after being wounded, and Bishop's party finally set fire to the house. Riley surrendered, and the fire was extinguished. Mr. Vann and his family were then driven out, unprepared, in the dead of winter, and snow upon the ground, through which they were compelled to wade, and to take shelter within the limits of Tennessee, in an open log cabin, upon a dirt floor, and Bishop and his brother Absalom in possession of Mr. Vann's house. This Mr. Vann is the same, who, when a boy, volunteered as a private soldier in the Cherokee regiment in the service of the United States, in the Creek war, periled his life in crossing the river at the battle of the Horse Shoe. What has been his reward?

Wahka and his wife were natives of, and residents in, the Cherokee nation east of the Mississippi. The agents of the United States prevailed upon the wife to enroll for emigration, against the remonstrances of the husband, and they afterwards, by force, separated her from her husband, and took her and the children to Arkansas, leaving the husband and father behind, because he would not enroll. The improvements upon which he resided, were valued in the name of the wife, and he turned out of possession.

Atahla Anosta was prevailed upon to enroll when drunk, contrary to the wish and will of his wife and children; when the time arrived for him to leave for Arkansas, he absconded. A guard was sent after him by B. F. Currey, which arrested the woman and children, and brought them to the agency about dark, in a cold rain, shivering and hungry. They were detained under guard all night and a part of next day, and until the woman agreed to enroll her name as an emigrant. The husband then came in, and he and his wife and their children were put on board a boat, and taken to Arkansas. There they soon lost two or three of their children, and then returned on foot to the Cherokee nation east of the Mississippi.

Sconatachee, when drunk, was enrolled by Benjamin F. Burrey; when the emigrants were collecting, he did not appear, and Currey and John Miller, the interpreter, went after him. Currey drew a pistol, and attempted to drive the old man to the agency, who presented his gun and refused to go. Currey and Miller returned without him. He made the facts known to Hugh Montgomery, the Cherokee agent, who gave him a certificate that he should not be forced away against his will. So the matter rested till the emigrants were collected the next year, and then Currey sent a wagon and guard for him. He was arrested, tried, and hauled to the agency, leaving some of his children behind in the woods, where they had fled on the approach of the guard. Richard Cheek enrolled for emigration, but, before the time of departure, he hired to work on the Tusculum rail road, in Alabama. When the emigrants started, Currey had Cheek's wife taken, put on board a boat, and started to Arkansas. She was even denied the privilege of visiting her husband as she descended the river. He was left behind, and never saw her more. She died on the way.

Such outrages and violations of treaty stipulations have been the subject of complaint to the government of the United States, on the part of the Cherokees, for years past; and the delegation are not surprised that the American people are not now startled at those wrongs, so long continued, for by habit men are brought to look with indifference at death itself. If the government of the United States have determined to take the Cherokee lands without their consent, the power is with them, and the American people can "reap the field that is not their own, and gather the vintage of his vineyard whom by violence they have oppressed."

THE COTTON GROWTH AND TRADE.

The following statements taken from a recent publication, will convey some notion of the astonishing increase in the consumption of cotton, and of the wealth of which it is the source to the United States. When, in addition to the facts here stated, the daily augmentation of the manufactures of the United States is considered, the value of cotton lands becomes almost inappreciable. The clothing of half the universe is no mean staple, particularly when that portion of the nation which cannot grow the material finds occupation for a great mass of its population in manufacturing or conveying it.

[Nat. Gazette.

"No branch of manufacture has made such inconceivable progress in modern times as cotton weaving. This has not arisen from any protection of government, or from the uncertain and capricious acts of legislation, but from the nature of things, and the inventiveness and activity of manufacturers. Cotton is cheaper to produce and easier to manufacture than flax, and has always, therefore, been, for some purposes, preferred. In Great Britain in the year

1787	4,000,000 lbs. were spun.
1805	19,000,000 "
1812	61,000,000 "
1820	137,000,000 "
1826	162,000,000 "
1832	273,000,000 "

The value of cotton goods amounted, in the year 1769, to about £200,000. now (official value) to 40,000,000. In the year 1833, 237,000,000 lbs. were imported into England from North America:

	Pounds.
From Brazil	28,000,000
From Turkey and Egypt	987,000
From other countries	1,696,000
From the English colonies	35,000,000
North America exported in 1801	189,000
" " 1832	822,000,000

The price of a pound of cotton wool varies from 4d. to 1s. 8d.; but has fallen considerably (like many other things) since 1816.

There are now 1,154 cotton mills existing in England. Water power to the amount of 10,000 horses, and steam power to that of 30,000, are employed in them: 220,000 persons are directly, and one million and a half are indirectly, engaged in them. The seven counties in which the cotton manufactories are the most flourishing, in the year 1753, contained only 791,000 inhabitants; in 1831, 2,753,000. There were exported to Plain cotton goods.	Colored goods.

Russia	2,750,000	272,000
Germany	16,527,000	34,951,000
Italy	34,000,000	13,000,000
Brazil	36,000,000	23,000,000
Turkey	15,000,000	3,000,000
China and East Indies	35,000,000	16,000,000
North America	13,000,000	18,000,000

TO THE FARMERS OF THE U. STATES.

From the Philadelphia Inquirer.

The writer of the following letter is one of the most intelligent, useful and respectable citizens of Philadelphia:

That care and skill have improved fruit trees, vegetables and our domestic animals, are facts known to all classes of husbandmen; and the advantage of rearing cattle from the best breeds is now well understood all over America. The advantages that accompany procuring the best grain for seed is as yet but partially understood and very little attended to.

Repeatedly sowing some kinds of grain on the same land, is in many cases followed by an evident decline in the quality; still this, it must be observed, is not a uniform consequence; there are many and well authenticated instances where the change to a new soil and climate is accompanied with a deterioration, and in others as great an improvement has taken place.

As it is known that grains, &c. in some climates and soils degenerate to a minimum, sometimes in quality, in others in quantity, and frequently in both, a practice calculated to remedy these disadvantages is of great importance to the agriculture of the United States. On the present occasion it is our object to point out what may be done, hereby showing what is done in other countries, and under circumstances far less favorable to the husbandmen, or to the operations of husbandry, than in America. In Scotland, for example, the climate is cold, wet and stormy; yet by care and industry crops are produced, remarkable both for quantity and quality. There the greatest attention is paid to the changing of seed. The low countries procure their seed potatoes from the high districts at great expense of money and labor. The whole oat crop of some districts is bought for, and sowed for seed; this is the case with a portion of country called Blainsley, that lays south of Soutria Hills.

In no country has the culture of clover been more beneficial, or attended with better success than in Scotland, yet the climate is so unfavorable to the ripening of clover seed, that nearly the whole has to be procured from England or Holland. The farmers of that country frequently change the wheat seed, and procure the best that is to be had, paying very little respect to price, and the greatest attention to quality.

It would appear that the principle by which the Scotch farmers are guided to the results they obtain, is to select their seed from those districts where it is grown in the greatest perfection from the climate and soil being best adapted to the plant. Thus they choose seed oats and potatoes of their own growing, these being plants best adapted to mountainous, cool and moist regions; and clover and wheat seed from England and Holland, which are comparatively low, warm and dry, and better adapted to their production.

It is well known that in America, our oats are not good, they have little kernel or meal; and the quality of our barley is not what it ought to be.

It is to the following circumstance the present address owes its existence.

In the year 1833, a well informed practical farmer visited Pennsylvania with the object of seeing as much of our practice of farming, soil and climate, as a short stay here would permit. On his return to Scotland, he procured and sent to his friends in Philadelphia some Angus oats, Hopeton oats, barley, wheat and rye grass; the cask containing the seed miscarried and did not arrive here until the fall of 1835.

Some of each kind of these seeds have been sown here; the wheat came up very thin; it is presumed the seed suffered from the long voyage. On the 18th April, 1836, the oats and barley were sown on rather poor but fresh loam. It is true, the season has been cool, damp and favorable to these grains, still there success has surpassed anything that could have been calculated on. The barley and both kinds of oats are of superior growth in strength of stem, as well as thickness on the ground, they would lose nothing in a comparison with the crops of oats or barley of any country, and are likely to suffer loss from excessive growth, causing them to lodge. One kind of the oats commenced shooting into ear about the first of July, and the other about the tenth; the marks which were placed to distinguish the one from the other have got displaced, and this accident prevents knowing whether it is the Angus or Hopeton oats that first puts out the ear.

Now let us inquire into the economy of farmers adopting the practice of annually supplying themselves with new seed grain—and found our calculations on a farm where about 20 bushels of oats are sown each year; the farmer of such a piece of land could supply himself with an annual change of his oat seed in the following manner. It is presumed that each bushel of the imported oats he sows, will produce 10 bushels; then by annually buying two bushels, their produce would yield the 20 bushels required for sowing on his farm. Suppose the price of the imported oats to be $1 50 cents a bushel, the two would cost $3—and the price of country oats was 50 cents, the two would cost $1. The expense of changing the seed would be per annum $2. The estimate is not given as a matter of accuracy, but as a formula by which every one can make his own calculations.

In procuring a change of seed, there are other points necessary to be attended to besides the quality of the grain, and one of these is to guard against bringing with it the weeds incident to the country or fields where it has grown: for want of attention to this, there are farmers who have introduced into their fields, along with the clover they sowed, the narrow leaved plantain, which arrogates to itself a place which would otherwise be occupied by clover, to the detriment of his hay both in quality and quantity, and that more serious curse, Bensalem clover or white daisy; all this is the result of their not taking sufficient care in the selection of their clover seed.

In the British islands, their oat and barley fields at some seasons, are entirely yellow; nothing is to be seen save the bloom of the wild mustard, in some districts called Scheldrics; and this is not the only one of this class of yellow flowering spring weed—in wheat they have what is here called cockle, the seed of which is detrimental to superfine flour; all these should be guarded against by the European agent; and to prevent mischief, the seed after it arrives here should be rectified in a sieve that will separate the weeds from the pure grain, always collecting and burning the obnoxious seeds.

In proof of the sincerity, that the writer entertains a favorable opinion of this system, he will import for next season's sowing, one hundred bushels of selected barley, one hundred of each variety of oats, already spoken of, and, it being too late for receiving wheat for the ensuing sowing, measures will be taken for bringing to this country wheat for the following year.

Such persons as take an interest for renewing their seed grain, are invited to apply to the subscriber who will furnish them with any quantity, not less than a bushel. The cost will be governed by the price abroad, and the expense of bringing the articles here. The transaction will be attended with considerable trouble, and the limited extent of the operation will satisfy all who reflect, that there are other motives for undertaking the business than that of making money.

Letters, post paid, will be duly attended to, addressed to JAMES RONALDSON.
No. 200 South Ninth street, Philadelphia.

IMPORTANT INFORMATION.

From the N. Y. Journal of Commerce.

Price of bread stuffs. We would not needlessly interrupt the enjoyment of those, who look forward to the next winter as a season of general starvation. But lest their dreams should be too suddenly broken, we must call their attention to the facts contained in the last news from Europe respecting the prices of bread stuffs there. We happen to know of an operation at Liverpool, by which fifty thousand bushels of wheat are to be immediately forwarded to this country, and by the prices which are published, there is little doubt but that larger supplies will soon be forthcoming; for the long continuance of high prices, the successful issue of the recent importations, and the fact well ascertained, that our domestic supplies are inadequate to our wants, will give new confidence in future operations. Let us see at what prices we can be supplied.

In Paris the price of bread is about 2 cents, and in London 3 cents per lb. We found a shilling loaf in New York yesterday to weigh 2 lbs. 3 oz. which is near 6 cents per lb. The price of wheat at Paris is 112 cents per bushel, and the price of flour $5 per bbl. In London flour is $3 a bbl. In the ports of the Mediterranean and of the Baltic, bread stuffs are much cheaper than in either London or Paris. The price of good wheat at Naples is 2s. 10d. sterling a bushel, or 67 cents. From any one of these places freight might be obtained at 33 cents per barrel on flour and 12½ cents per bushel on wheat, or about half the rate charged from Rochester, and one-fourth of what is charged from Ohio. Fifty thousand bushels of corn has lately been received here from Ohio at a freight of 49 cents. The duty on flour is one dollar a barrel and on wheat 25 cents a bushel. Wheat therefore can be imported from Naples and laid down at New York at 125 to 135 cents a bushel, all charges paid, and from a hundred other places at the same or a less price. Corn and rye are not burdened with a duty and may be imported to great advantage.—The countries of Europe and Asia afford stores of bread stuffs almost inexhaustible, so that the supplies for this country, if they should run to the highest possible quantity, could only affect prices in a very slight degree. Free trade will supply all our wants, and the cost with a liberal mercantile profit, will not carry prices above 150 cents for wheat, 100 cents for rye and Indian corn, 50 cents for oats per bushel, and $7 50 for flour per barrel. So let the desponding cheer up, for no one who is industrious and frugal need starve in 1836 or '37.

OCEANIA, MALAYSIA, AUSTRALIA AND POLYNESIA.

Newspaper statistics. In Van Dieman's Land, with a population of now about 40,000, we have eight journals, viz: The Gazette, Courier, Tasmanian, Colonial Times, True Colonist, Morning Star, Launceston Advertiser and Cornwall Chronicle, or one in about 4,500 inhabitants; and if we take into account, that more than one-third of these belong to the prisoner class, and have no means of subscribing to, or reading newspapers, we reduce the proportion to one in about every 3,000. In New South Wales they have seven journals, viz: The Government Gazette, Sydney Gazette, The Herald, Australian Monitor, Commercial Journal and Colonist, distributed among a population of about 70,000, which gives about a journal to every 10,000 people. But then it is to be considered that most of the Sydney journals are, on the average, twice a week, which in fact makes, as far as number goes, but not as regards variety, the journals to be one in 5,000. There is this remarkable difference to be observed with regard to the readers in these colonies and in Europe, that the country residents, and not those in towns, are the greatest readers, (we speak from our own experience from the subscription list), the proportion in Van Dieman's Land being at least three readers in the country to two in the town.

[Hobarttown Gazette.]

The preceding extract is taken from a late number of the New York Evening Star, and we transfer it to our columns as one amongst the many existing evidences to prove that an immense revolution is in progress; a revolution which is almost commensurate with the earth. In this revolution perhaps the most remarkable event is the rise of an Anglo-Saxon empire in Australia. As this name, and also the others at the head of the above extract, have been but of comparative recent introduction into geography, therefore not familiar to every reader, we place before them the following notes:

OCEANIA.

Under this comprehensive head are included all those numerous islands, groups of islands, and all that great island continent, New Holland, which is spread over the Pacific ocean, between the two continents of Asia and America. As to mere extent on the sphere, these Oceania regions from Sumatra to Easter island inclusive, with the equator very nearly as a middle line of latitude, extends through above one hundred and fifty degrees of longitude. An area so vast demanded subdivision, and it has been divided into three great sections.

MALAYSIA.

Under this head are included those islands lying south eastward from and most nearly approaching the great continent of Asia, the principal of which are, Sumatra, Java, Borneo, Celebus, the great group of the Philippine, and the lesser isles of Sumbawa, Flores, Timor, Gilolo, and innumerable others of lesser note. The name is taken from the race of men by which these extensive islands are chiefly inhabited, the Malay.

AUSTRALIA.

Or southern continent relative to Asia. The term comprises a nucleus, New Holland, around which are engrouned Papua or New Guinea, Louisiade, New Britain, New Ireland, New Caledonia, Solomon's Islands, New Hebrides and Van Dieman's Land or Tasmania.

It is on the south eastern side of New Holland, and on the neighboring island of Van Dieman's Land. The N. English nation is rising. Already the aggregate population of the two colonies exceeds one hundred and twenty thousand, and is rapidly increasing in numbers, and still more wealth and intelligence.

The native inhabitants of New Holland and the adjacent Australian groups are a branch of the negro family, though with a marked distinction from the African branch.

POLYNESIA.

Or "Many Islands," stretch to the eastward of New Holland, and its connected groups, and to the south eastward of Malaysia. The number of islands comprised under this head, it is probable, exceeds one-half of all the land protuberances of the earth: the principal groups being those of Dadrone, Magallen, Pelew, Caroline Anson's, Mulgrave, Feejee, Friendly, Navigator's, New Zealand, Society, Cook's, George's, Mendana's or Marquesas, and Washington's and Sandwich islands. Besides those included in these groups, there are innumerable sporadic or scattered island and islets, many of which have no doubt never yet been seen by European or American navigators.

Of the inhabitants of Polynesia, those only of the Sandwich group have adopted the arts and religion of civilized life. They are of the Malay family, and in so complete a state of barbarism as to remain cannibals. Many will revolt at this, but evidence is in our hands to prove the lamentable truth of the horrid practice in Polynesia, as late as 1834.

[Pittsburgh Advocate.]

INTERESTING JURY TRIAL.

From the Glasgow Chronicle of Aug. 2.

Law of Insurance. Hercules insurance company of Scotland, and Robert Salmond, their agent in Glasgow, against John Hunter, merchant in Johnstone, and his trustees.

This case came on to be tried before the honorable lord Moncrieff and a jury, on Tuesday, 26th July, at ten o'clock. The case for the purpose was closed about half-past eight, when the court adjourned till next morning at nine o'clock. The case of the defender, the reply of the pursuer, and the summing up by the presiding judge, were concluded about 12 o'clock on Wednesday night, and the jury returned their verdict at half past two on Thursday morning. Our limits will not permit any thing more than a brief outline of the trial, which excited great interest.

Mr. Hunter, early in the year 1831, had acquired the machinery in the Winford spinning mill, near Glasgow, and right to a lease of the mill for about fifteen months, (the former tenant having become bankrupt), at a sum under £200. Immediately upon this, he obtained from a person of the name of William Montgomery, who was afterwards employed as his servant at the mill, at the rate of 20s. a week, an offer of the sum of £565 for the same machinery, to be held apparently by him by way of lease. In the month of April of the same year, Hunter effected an insurance with the Hercules insurance company against fire, on this machinery, as under lease to Montgomery to the extent of £600.

Some time after this, Hunter purchased a quantity of old machinery, which had been laid aside by the Ference spinning company, and also some small additional articles from other articles which he fitted up in the mill. The extent of these purchases was under £200, and the mill was not fully set a going until about the month of October, 1831.

On the 27th of September of that year, Montgomery made another offer for the machinery at the rate of 13s. a spindle, and amounting to £1,450 10s. payable in ten years. On the 31st of October, Mr. Hunter proposed to the company to insure the machinery to this amount, and, after some correspondence, Mr. Salmond, upon the 22d of that month, wrote that he might hold himself as so insured. On the same night, the mill was burned to the ground.

The amount of the loss afterwards became the subject of arbitration, and the arbitrators found in favor of Mr. Hunter to the amount insured. A criminal warrant was afterwards issued, at the instance of the crown, against both Hunter and Montgomery; but they were not brought to trial. The company brought an action of reduction of the award, and the issues in that action which now came on for trial were as follows:

1st. Whether the defender destroyed the said machinery, or caused the same to be destroyed by fire, for the purpose of defrauding the pursuers of the said sum insured as aforesaid.

2d. Whether the said insurance was effected by the defender upon a fraudulent over-valuation of the said machinery, with the intention of destroying the same by fire.

A variety of documents were put in, and a number of witnesses examined on the part of the pursuers, both with regard to the value and circumstances connected with the fire. It distinctly appeared that the whole cost of the original machinery, and of that subsequently acquired, with the expense of repairing and fitting up, could not, by any calculation, exceed between £400 and £500. It was therefore contended that the over insurance to so very large an amount, especially considering the fictitious leases and various other circumstances of suspicion disclosed in the evidence, could only have been effected with the view of realizing a profit by destroying the premises.

The defender denied that there was any fraud. He called a number of witnesses who had been present at the fire. He also adduced several persons of great respectability, who stated that, in their opinion, old machinery, when fitted up and put into working order, in a mill, might fairly be valued at 13s. per spindle, and was nearly as good as new, being capable of producing yarn equally good, though at additional cost, and the expense of occasional repairs. It also appeared from the evidence that a notion was pretty prevalent in the west of Scotland, that old machinery when thus fitted up might fairly be estimated for the purpose of insurance at the value of new machinery, and that the insured would be entitled, in the event of fire to recover either the amount of the sum in the policy, or to have the mill fitted up with new machinery in place of the old.

Lord Moncrieff, in charging the jury, explained at length the nature of the contract of insurance. His lordship stated that it was not a contract under which the party insured was entitled to make a wager or realize a profit in the event of fire, but that it was merely a contract of indemnity against loss. He further observed that the amount of the loss was to be ascertained by fixing the intrinsic value of the articles destroyed and that the insured was not entitled to have old machinery replaced by new, or to recover any sum at which he might estimate the machinery, on the notion entertained by the witnesses. His lordship then went over the whole facts and circumstances of the case at great length, stating to the jury that they were bound, while considering both issues, to take into view the combined effect of the whole circumstances established on both sides, and adding that the defender was entitled by law to the presumption of innocence, and also to the benefit of the previous good character which he had established.

The jury returned the following verdict:—"Find for the defenders on the first issue, and, on the second issue, find that the insurance was effected by the defender upon a fraudulent over valuation of the machinery, but not with the intention of destroying the same by fire.

Counsel for the insurance company—The dean of faculty, Patrick Robertson and Charles Neaves, esqs. advocates—Messrs. G. & W. Napier, W. S. agents in Edinburgh, and Mr. William Neilson, writer, agent in Glasgow.

Counsel for the defenders—Duncan McNeill, and Adam Anderson, esqs. advocates—Mr. Jas. Wright, W. S. agent in Edinburgh, and Mr. Robt. Sword, writer, agent in Glasgow.

ELECTIONEERING.

A very droll and clever work is now in course of publication in London, in monthly numbers, edited by the capital humorist who chooses to call himself "Boz," and whose burlesque descriptions of incidents and odd characters are among the best things of the kind we have ever read. The title of the work is "the Pickwick Club Papers." The fifth number, which is the latest we have seen, contains a "miraculous circumstance" that is worth copying, as well for its drollery, as for the sake of the excellent hint conveyed in it, for the benefit of politicians. It is related by Sam, the coachman, to Mr. Pickwick, the hero of the tale, being Sam's father.

[Commercial Advertiser.]

"He drove a coach down here once; 'lection time came on, and he was engaged by vum party to bring down woters from London. Night afore he was a going to drive up, committee on t' other side sends for him quietly, and away he goes with the messenger, who shows him in; large room—lots of gen'l'm'n—heaps of papers, pens and ink, and all that 'ere. 'Ah, Mr. Weller,' says the gen'l'm'n in the chair, 'glad to see you, sir; how are you?' 'Werry well, thank'ee, sir,' says my father; 'I hope you're pretty middlin',' says he, 'Pretty well, thank'ee, sir,' says the gen'l'm'n; 'sit down, Mr. Weller—pray sit down, sir.' So my father sits down, and he and the gen'l'm'n looks werry hard at each other. 'You don't remember me,' says the gen'l'm'n. 'Can't say I do,' says my father. 'Oh, I know you,' says the gen'l'm'n; 'know'd you ven you was a boy,' says he. 'Well, I don't remember you,' says my father. 'That's werry odd,' says the gen'l'm'n.—'Werry,' says my father. 'You must have a bad memory,' Mr. Weller, says the gen'l'm'n. 'Well, it is a werry bad 'un,' says my father. 'I thought so,' says the gen'l'm'n. So then they pours him out a glass o' wine, and gammons him about his driving, and gets him into a reg'lar good humor, and at last shoves a twenty pound note in his hand. 'It's a werry bad road between this and London,' says the gen'l'm'n. 'Here and there it is a werry heavy road,' says my father. 'Specially near the canal, I think,' says the gen'l'm'n. 'Nasty bit, that 'ere,' says my father. 'Well, Mr. Weller,' says the gen'l'm'n, 'you're a werry good whip, and can do what you like with your horses, we know. We're all werry fond o' you, Mr. Weller, so in case you should have an accident when you're bringing them 'ere woters down, and should tip 'em over into the canal without hurtin' 'em, this is for yourself,' says he. 'Gen'l'm'n, you're werry kind,' says my father, 'and I'll drink your health in another glass o' wine,' says he; vich he did, and then buttons up the money, and bows himself out. 'You wouldn't believe, sir,' continued Sam, with a look of inexpressible impudence at his master, 'that on the werry day as he came down with them woters, his coach was upset on that 'ere werry spot, and ev'ry man on 'em was turned into the canal.' 'And got out again?' inquired Mr. Pickwick, hastily. 'Why,' replied Sam, very slowly, 'I rather think one old gen'l'm'n was missin'; I know his hat was found, but I a'n't quite certain whether his head was in it or not.—But what I look at, is the hex-tra-ordinary and wonderful coincidence, that arter what that gen'l'm'n said, my father's coach should be upset in that werry place, and that werry day!' 'It is, no doubt, a werry extraordinary circumstance, indeed,' said Mr. Pickwick."

CIRCUIT COURT.

New York, Sept. 27.

Before judge EDWARDS.

Nathaniel Carpenter vs. Merrill Coburn. The plaintiff in this suit is collector to the Daily Advertiser of this city; the defendant, a postmaster, in Jefferson county, in this state. The action was for damages for a libel. The case was given to the jury on Tuesday evening, with instructions to bring in a sealed verdict in the morning. It appeared that the plaintiff, in his capacity of collector for the above paper, had a suit, some time since, with the defendant, for the recovery of the amount of a year or two's subscription to the Advertiser, which paper had been refused by a subscriber supplied through the defendant's office, but of which refusal defendant neglected to give the publishers the notice required by law, and retained the papers for his own use. On the trial of that suit, the plaintiff made a deposition which the defendant subsequently reported to be a perjury; and for which he obtained the indictment of the plaintiff by a grand jury of Jefferson county; but the district attorney, deeming the indictment not sustained by the evidence upon which it was found, entered a nolle prosequi in the case. The present suit was laid on that proceeding of the defendant, and the charge of perjury publicly made by him against the plaintiff. It was contended, on the defence, that the first suit against defendant was a malicious prosecution, as was evident from assertions made at the time by the plaintiff, to the effect that he "would make an example of this Jackson postmaster;" and that "it would have a good effect just before election"—an election being about to be held; moreover, that the defendant acted in good faith in procuring plaintiff's indictment for the alleged perjury, of which he honestly believed him to be guilty. The jury, however, deeming the defence set up inadequate to a justification, yesterday morning brought in a sealed verdict in favor of the plaintiff, 350 dollars damages and 6 cents cost. [Times.]

LETTER FROM GEN. HARRISON.

Richmond, September 15th, 1836.

DEAR SIR: Your political opponents in the state of Maryland have, for some time, been actively urging against you a new charge, that of selling white men, which probably had no inconsiderable effect in the recent elections in that state, and which is evidently much relied upon to influence the approaching elections throughout the United States. I enclose you a paper (the Baltimore Republican) containing the charge in full; and I beg of you, as an act of justice to yourself and your friends, to enable me to refute a charge against the uniform tenor of your life, which, I am well aware, has been replete with instances of distinguished private liberality and public sacrifice.

With the highest respect, I have the honor to be your fellow citizen, JOHN H. PLEASANTS.

Gen. Wm. H. Harrison.

Richmond, Sept. 15, 1836.

DEAR SIR: I acknowledge the receipt of your favor of this date. I have before heard the accusation to which it refers. On my way hither, I met yesterday with a young gentleman of Maryland, who informed me that a vote of mine in the senate of Ohio had been published, in favor of a law to sell persons imprisoned under a judgment for debt for a term of years, if unable otherwise to discharge the execution. I did not for a moment hesitate to declare that I had never given any such vote, and that if a vote of that description had been published and ascribed to me, it was an infamous forgery. Such an act would have been repugnant to my feelings, and in direct conflict with my opinions, public and private, through the whole course of my life. No such proposition was ever submitted to the legislature of Ohio—none such would for a moment have been entertained—nor would any son of hers have dared to propose it.

So far from being willing to sell men for debts which they are unable to discharge, I am, and ever have been opposed to all imprisonment for debt.—Fortunately, I have it in my power to show that such has been my established opinion, and that, in a public capacity, I avowed and acted upon it.—Will those who have preferred the unfounded and malicious accusation refer to the journals of the senate of the United States, 2d session, 19th congress, page 325—it will there be seen that I was one of the committee which reported a bill to abolish imprisonment for debt. When the bill was before the senate, I advocated its adoption, and on its passage voted in its favor. See senate journal, 1st session, 20th congress, pages 101 and 102.

It is not a little remarkable, that, if the effort I am accused of having made to subject men to sale for the non-payment of their debts had been successful, I might, from the state of my pecuniary circumstances at the time, have been the first victim. I repeat, the charge is a vile calumny.—At no period of my life would I have consented to subject the poor and unfortunate to such a degradation; nor have omitted to exert myself in their behalf, against such an attempt to oppress them.

It is sought to support the charge by means of garbled extracts from the journals of the senate of Ohio. The section of the bill which is employed for that purpose, had no manner of reference to the relation of creditor and debtor, and could not by possibility subject the debtor to the control of his creditor. None know better than the authors of the calumny, that the alleged section is utterly at variance with the charge which it is attempted to found upon it, and that so far from a proposition to invest a creditor with power over the liberty of his debtor, it had respect only to the mode of public offenders, who had been found guilty by a jury of their fellow citizens, of some crime against the laws of their state. That was exclusively the import and design of the section of the bill, upon the motion to strike out which, I voted in the negative. So you perceive, that in place of voting to enlarge the power of creditors, the vote which I gave concerned alone the treatment of malefactors, convicted of crimes against the public.

I would extend this letter to an inconvenient length to go fully into the reasons which led me at the time to an opinion in favor of the proposed treatment of that class of offenders, who would have fallen within its operation, nor is such an expose called for. The measure was by no means a novelty in other parts of the country. In the state of Delaware there is an act in force, in similar words with the section of the bill before the Ohio senate, which has been made of late the pretext of such insidious invective. Laws, with somewhat similar provisions, may probably be found in many of the states. In practice the measure would have meliorated the condition of those who were under condemnation. As the law stood, they were liable under the sentence to confinement in the common jail, where offenders of various degrees of profligacy—of different ages, sex and color—were crowded together. Under such circumstances, it is obvious that the bad must become worse, whilst reformation could hardly be expected in respect to any. The youthful offender, it might be hoped, would be reclaimed, under the operation of the proposed system; but there was great reason to fear his still greater corruption amid the contagion of a common receptacle of vice. Besides, the proposed amendment of the law presupposed that the delinquent was in confinement for the non-payment of a fine and costs of prosecution, (the payment of which was a part of the sentence)—it seemed, therefore, humane, in respect to the offender, to relieve him from confinement which deprived him of the means of discharging the penalty, and to place him in a situation in which he might work out his deliverance, even at the loss, for a time, of his personal liberty.

But I forbear to go farther into the reasons which led me sixteen years ago, as a member of the Ohio senate, to entertain a favorable opinion of an alteration, which was proposed in the criminal police of the state. It is certain that neither in respect to myself, nor those who concurred with me, was the opinion at the time considered as the result of unfriendly bias towards the poor or unfortunate. Nay, the least objection which I could have anticipated, even from the eager and reckless desires to assail me, was a charge of unfriendliness to the humble and poor of the community.

I am, my dear sir, with great respect, your humble servant,
WM. H. HARRISON.

J. H. Pleasants, esq.

"REFORM OR REVOLUTION" IN MARYLAND.

On Thursday evening the 29th ult. "the largest meeting of the mechanics and workmen ever convened in the city of Baltimore" was held in Monument square, "to take into consideration the present interesting aspect of the political affairs of the state of Maryland, as they regard the conduct of the nineteen electors and a reform of the constitution of the state."

The meeting was organized by John B. Seidenstricker, who after making a few prefatory remarks stating the cause of the call and the object of the meeting nominated the following gentlemen as suitable officers to preside over its deliberations, who were unanimously elected.

Richard Marley, president; John Hays, Joseph Latty, John Soran, Richard Lilly, A. I. W. Jackson, William Clagett, James Roach, John Potter, jr. J. J. Johnson, Philip Kehoe, George Johnson, John W. Niles, John Carroll, vice presidents; Andrew Martin, George Grape, Hamlett Duvall, secretaries.

After the meeting was thus organized, it was addressed by Messrs. Gallagher and Hayman in a manner which by the applause they received, seemed to meet the entire approbation of the people, after which the following preamble and resolutions were offered by John C. Legrand, accompanied by a very suitable address upon the great and important subject of reform, and unanimously adopted:

Whereas, The form of a republican government is intended to be for the equal distribution of all its burdens and benefits—and the protection of the equal rights and privileges of the people—And whereas, the existing constitution of Maryland does not answer such intention, inasmuch as the very first principles of such a government are violated by an arbitrary system of representation—by a want of just responsibility in the executive and legislative departments—by a life tenure in certain offices—and by the various abuses necessarily growing out of these anti-republican corruptions. The governor being a mere creature of the legislature, and removed entirely from any immediate responsibility to the people whose agent he is. The legislature itself in one branch being one of the most aristocratic bodies in the union, elected as it is by agents who in no way represent the view of the people and endowed with a self-creating power to fill its own vacancies for five years and judging at the same time of the qualifications of its own members. The other branch, the house of delegates being based upon no equal ratio—a white population of 80,000 in the city of Baltimore being represented by two delegates—while a like population of 8,000 in Calvert county are represented by four delegates. And further, the executive power being fashioned by an odious political machinery under the title of a council, which is totally irresponsible to the people, and shielding all its acts by a secrecy as impenetrable as that of the inquisition. And again, in direct violation of the principles of an equal government, certain offices being made lucrative monopolies by a life possession which is as gross an infringement upon the rights of the people as it is upon the republican doctrine of rotation—

And whereas, These and many more like grievances demand to be reformed; And whereas petition after petition—and attempt upon attempt have been made at various times to remedy these evils, but with no other effect than to be treated with scorn and contempt by a legislature holding its power, not from the majority of the people of Maryland, but through the infamous system of representation above adverted to; And whereas, the reliance of these minority representatives is placed in the security of a constitution which requires a concurrent act of two successive legislatures—which concurrent act is made at the same time a means of deluding the people by promises of reform, which, if fulfilled by one legislature, are only so fulfilled upon a safe repose that the act will be rejected at the succeeding session.

And whereas, The people of this state with proverbial patience have endured for years the grievances here recited, preferring, as good citizens, rather thus to suffer than at once to abolish the form of the existing constitution sanctioned by time and the authority of names entitled to the deepest veneration of every citizen of Maryland;—and whereas, the time has now arrived when the people are no longer to be cajoled by promises and professions, made only to deceive—nor are they any longer willing to sacrifice their self-respect, nor their own nor their children's rights, to the mere sentiment of veneration of a time-worn constitution, and a respect for the names of its ancient framers.

And whereas, The power to amend, change or abolish the constitution is inherent in the people, and any vested delegation of authority to a legislature is no relinquishment of the sovereignty of the people so to alter, amend or abolish the constitution in any manner and at any time, as may to them seem most fitting; and whereas, the cry of "constitutional reform" is a mere catch-word intended to delude, and meaning, even in honesty, nothing more than the concurrent acts of two legislatures above referred to, which past experience has proved carries with it not the least prospect that the demands of the people will ever be gratified, inasmuch as the act of one legislature gives no pledge, nor can it afford any security, that the next succeeding legislature will carry such act into effect: and whereas, under all these circumstances, there appears to be but one safe and certain mode of obtaining redress of these grievances: and whereas, in the words of our sacred charter of independence, it is the right of the people—"it is their duty, to throw off such government, and to provide new guards to their future security:" Therefore,

Resolved, That the existing constitution of Maryland is a blot upon the principles of republicanism, and unworthy the respect of any American citizen.

Resolved, That the constitution is the act of limitation of the people upon their agents; and that the inalienable right to annul or abolish this act has never been relinquished by the people.

Resolved, That the present is a propitious time for annulling or abolishing the existing constitution, and providing a new one more consistent with the principles of republicanism, and affording a better security of the rights and privileges of the whole people.

Resolved, That a reform of the constitution is a peaceable revolution to be deprecated only by a power-loving aristocracy and grasping monopolists; that such revolution is not anarchy—nor are the friends of such revolution either jacobins or destruc-tives; and we hurl back these epithets with indignation into the teeth of the panic makers who have so insolently applied them to the reform party of Maryland.

Resolved, That we highly approve of the course adopted by the nineteen electors, who, representing a white population of over two hundred thousand souls, refused to meet, under the circumstances detailed in their address to the people, the twenty-one electors who have an accidental majority in the college, while they only represent a lean minority of some eighty thousand souls.

Resolved, That we have that confidence in the people of Maryland as to believe that the said refusal will meet with their hearty approbation, and be unanimously supported, in spite of threats, alarms, solicitations, or any other means that may be adopted by the office-holding alarmists or the power-loving panic makers.

Resolved, That the address adopted at Monument square, on Monday, the 26th of September, and signed by Wm. McDonald as president, and others as vice presidents, and secretaries—is a gross libel upon the workmen of Baltimore. Inasmuch as it is a covert attack upon the good sense, the independence and interest of the workingman—charging upon the friends of reform, the making of "base appeals to envy, to excite discord in the relations of employer and employed, and to make these relations of mutual benefit and protection, sources of social strife." Thus attempting to impute to the workingman, a want of right reason, in being a friend of state reform, only by the operation of appeals to his feelings of "envy"—and thereby implying, with true aristocratic presumption, that he is not capable of coming to a conclusion in the matter by the sole aid of his own judgment! That base attempt, too, which is made to rouse a proscriptive spirit on the part of the employer, is deserving of the deepest execration. By a cunningly devised insinuation, it is said that the attempt is made to excite discord in the relations of the employer and the employed; thus inviting a retaliation by which the employed workingman, it is hoped, may be driven into opposition to all effectual reform measures. We solemnly disclaim having ever been moved to make the relation of the employer and the employed, a source of social strife. We know of no connection between the question of state reform and this relation—a relation at least of as much interest to us, our wives and children, as is that between the tenure of office and the refining consequences of reform: and worthy of as much watchfulness in keeping this relation unimpaired. This attempt, therefore, to produce alarm on the part of the employers, is as heartless as it is infamous.

Resolved, That we have too much confidence in the good sense and patriotism of the employers, to believe for one moment, that this diabolical endeavor to breed discord between the workingman and the employer, will meet with any other attention than the contempt which its baseness deserves.—Peace, order and general prosperity, are as desirable to us, as to any other class of citizens. Our demand for just political rights, is neither jacobinism nor Robespierism. The constitution of Maryland is no security for these rights;—as men, therefore—as freemen—as American citizens, we now make a claim of these right, and believing in the sovereignty of the people, and conceding nothing to a mere delegated power, when that power, as it has been unwisely exercised by faithless agents, we of right may, and do recall it into our own hands—choosing a convention, rather than a legislature, to give us a pure and republican constitution.

Resolved, That whereas the opponents of reform have, in town meeting assembled, recommended to their friends to discontinue all business on the day of the election, with the view of promoting their views—Therefore, be it recommended to the workmen of this city, favorable to reform, to refrain from all business on Monday next, and at the polls exert themselves to promote the success of the cause of human rights and reform of the constitution.

RICHARD MARLEY, president.

JOHN HAYS,
JOSEPH LATTY,
JOHN SORAN,
RICHARD LILLY,
A. I. W. JACKSON,
WM. CLAGETT,
JAMES ROACH,
JOHN POTTER, jr.
J. J. JOHNSON,
PHILIP KEHOE,
GEO. JOHNSON,
JOHN W. NILES,
JOHN CARROLL,

vice presidents.

Andrew Martin,
George Grape,
Hamlett Duvall,

secretaries.

FOREIGN CHRONICLE.

Jewish disabilities. A decree has just been promulgated at Warsaw, forbidding the Jews to use the baptismal names of Christians as their first names. The ground alleged is, that the police may have better means of surveillance over them.

Statistics of Naples. The Journal of the Two Sicilies published the following census of the population of Naples for 1835, drawn up in consequence of an order of the police ministers:—The population of Naples on the 1st of January, 1835, amounted to 355,386 inhabitants; on the 1st of January, 1836, it was 357,383, of whom 166,797 were males, and 190,556 females; the increase was accordingly 1,897 individuals. In 1835, there were in Naples 14 centenarians, 2 men and 12 women, three of whom were 105 years old. 31 individuals had committed suicide in the course of that year. The population was divided as follows—6,843 civil and 1,151 military officers, 2,206 belonging to public instruction, 3,096 lawyers, 1,420 physicians and surgeons, 1,022 merchants, 1,277 artists and 105,555 mechanics, laborers, &c.

Death of Sgricci. The famous improvisatore Sgricci, died lately at Florence. He was the most celebrated of that class of poets in Tuscany, perhaps in Italy, and had cultivated his peculiar talent with much assiduity and enthusiasm. He would declaim a regular extempore tragedy on any given subject whatever, dividing it into the proper number of acts, distributing the action among a due number of personages and giving to the piece a connected plot, with all the necessary gradual increase of interest until the catastrophe. This he did with as much apparent ease as an advocate in one of our courts after the testimony in a cause is heard, makes an address to the jury. Sgricci at one time visited Paris, where his talents were the subject of much admiration and astonishment.

A party of Englishmen lately undertook, in a wager, to make the tour of France by water. They took the Languedoc canal from Bourdeaux to the Mediterranean and continued their course up the Rhone, till at Mulbaux, they discovered that the canal was too shallow to admit the yacht. Under this embarrassment they adopted an expedient which even Yankee ingenuity could not have surpassed. The yacht was embarked in one of the canal boats, and the adventurers without ever quitting their quarters on board of her, were comfortably transported to the Rhine, where they will proceed on their voyage.

"What's in a name?" The clerks in the English post office are ingenious at detecting letters written with invisible ink on the covers of newspapers, and such like methods of avoiding the payment of postage; but there is a class of expedients which puts their ingenuity at fault—that of making the letter a part of the name of the person addressed. A person wanted to let a friend in Dublin know that a shawl and letter sent by him had been received, and for this purpose directed a newspaper to William Shawl-safe Got letter Humby, esq. which, as it might or might not be a name, could not be charged.

Prince Louis Napoleon, son of the ex-king of Holland, lately presented a magnificent standard to the society of Carbineers, of Ermatingen, in Switzerland, of which he is president.

We do not know what our stage contractors and steamboat owners would say if every loss of life from mismanagement and carelessness was accompanied by as heavy a penalty as that related in the following:

An administrator of the diligences has been condemned to pay 15,000 fr. damages to a traveller who was injured by the upsetting of a diligence between Provins and Paris.

The statue of Alexander placed in the Tuilleries, is represented as being uncommonly beautiful. Guards are compelled to be stationed over it in consequence of the immense multitude who are constantly thronging to see it. It is by M. Nanteuil, and rests on the pedestal where the Prometheus formerly stood. The hero has on a Macedonian helmet, is armed with a dagger and buckler, is wounded on the right side, and has fallen on his knees in a defensive attitude.

A cargo of ice and apples had arrived at Calcutta from Boston in excellent condition, and was sold at a very handsome profit.

Scavengers. A correspondent of the London Morning Chronicle gives the following singular fact, which beats all the changes this side the Atlantic. Scavengers at this pay would soon be as rich as the richest nabobs in the land. Says the correspondent, "the parish of St. Andrew, London, formerly paid a scavenger £300 a year for cleaning their streets, which after some time being thought too much, the person engaged to do it for £300, then for £200, for £100, and finally for nothing. The parish afterwards contracted with a person who gave them £200, then £400, and now they actually receive £700 a year for the soil of their streets. Some years ago the vestry of Mary-la-bonne parish paid a Mr. Harper the annual sum of £500 for that service: then £300 was given, and so on. At this moment, however, instead of paying anything, the vestry yearly receive from their scavenger £1,700.

Beet-root sugar. A manufacturer by the name of Cocherill, at Serasing, is now preparing twenty-seven steam engines for manufactories of beet-root sugar, and thirty steam carriages for rail roads, all for Russia.

The tea trade in London. The delivery in a single week amounted to the immense quantity of 8,654,200 lbs., being equal to one quarter's consumption. This great clearance is owing to the expiration of the time, for paying the 1s. 6d. per lb. duty on Bohea teas.

Great seizure of smuggled goods. The Journal of Verviers of the 4th of August says, "An important seizure has been made at Weert, in the province of Limburg, of 25 bales of English manufactured goods, (white calicoes), measuring 4,300 yards, and valued at 5,079 francs, which a band of 25 smugglers imported on the night of the 8th July from Holland into this country."

Sheep in Hungary and Transylvania. Great efforts are now making to improve the breed of sheep in Hungary and Transylvania, and large flocks have this year been purchased in Saxony, and conveyed to those two countries, which will soon contribute a large and additional supply of wool for the manufacturers of Europe.

A reward not enviable. By a singular oversight, the English law imposing penalties upon persons found guilty of making false entries in parish register books, provides that such persons shall be adjudged guilty of felony, and transported for 14 years. One half of the penalty, levied in pursuance of this act shall go to the person who shall inform or sue for the same. Consequently the informer would be entitled to seven years' transportation.

Amusing. The emperor of Russia has been pleased to allow the inhabitants of Bessarabia to use the Moldavian language, as well as the Russian, in all legal documents for seven years, and after that time, the Russian language only is to be adopted.

The late ancient tax called personal servitude, imposed on the people in the island of Sardinia, for working their salt mines, has been abolished.

Captain Coffin, at Boston, from Sumatra, reports that on the 7th of May, a severe gale was experienced along the whole pepper coast destroying many plantations and much pepper that had been gathered. The water was six feet deep on the plantations, by which many houses were floated away and many buffaloes drowned.

An English gentleman, at Paris, lately received a domiciliary visit from a commissaire of police, who had observed a telescope on the table of the former, and in the exaggerated apprehensions of his imagination, had mistaken it for an infernal machine. His awkward plight on discovering his error, may be conceived better than described.

DOMESTIC CHRONICLE.

Icebergs. A vessel which arrived at Warren (R. I.) from the Pacific ocean, reported having fallen in, on the 11th of June, with large ice islands, surrounding the ship and extending as far as the eye could reach. The numerous icebergs looked like a city upon the ocean, some of them rising just above the surface of the water, while many others rose to a great height in large masses—here and there was to be seen one towering far above the rest, presenting the appearance of a church spire rising amid the houses of a city. During most of the time, there was a dense fog which rendered the situation of the ship very perilous.—These icebergs were seen in latitude 54 S. longitude 95 30 W.

Oswego and Utica rail road. $1,087,200 have been subscribed for this road in Oswego, Utica, Albany and New York. The capital is 750,000 dollars.—This important improvement will, we understand, be prosecuted with vigor to an early completion.

Lead trade. A late number of the Detroit Advertiser states that the annual transportations from the Mississippi lead mines to New York, have of late years, amounted to about 14,000,000 lbs. of lead.—This year the amount will not be less than 20,000,000 lbs. owing to opening of the new mines at Du Buque and Mineral Point in Wisconsin territory. The freighting is now done in the Mississippi, by the way of New Orleans to New York. The lead sells at 6 cents per pound in this city.

A petition is to be presented to the territorial legislature of Wisconsin, says the Advertiser, next month, for authorising a company to build a rail road from Milwaukee to some eligible point on the Mississippi, and to terminate at Cassville. The length will be about 150 miles. On this rail road, it is calculated the immense freighting from the mining district will be done and taken through our lakes and the Erie canal to New York, which can be done in less than one quarter of the time it now takes by the New Orleans route.

Distressing accident. We learn from a passenger in the Home, lately arrived, that as that boat was touching at Portsmouth, Ohio, having on board president Jackson, the inhabitants endeavored to salute his arrival. By some unforeseen cause, the cannon was discharged prematurely, and the most shocking consequences followed. Four persons were instantaneously killed, and two severely wounded—so much so, that there is little hope of their recovery.

Maine. Ether Shepley, now U. States senator, has been nominated by the governor of Maine as associate justice of the supreme court of that state, vice Albion K. Parris, now a comptroller of the U. States treasury.

A disease termed chorbon is causing great mortality among the stock of Louisiana—some planters have had all their horses carried off by it, and in many instances it has proved fatal to man. Sulphur, flour of sulphur and brimstone, it is said, will effect a speedy cure.

In reference to the large estate left in England by a Mr. James Wood, the National Intelligencer says—

We are informed that Mr. Aes, of this city, is one of the nearest of kin of Mr. Wood, and that he has already placed his claim for his portion of the property in the hands of an eminent solicitor in England.—The amount of property proved is £1,800,000 sterling, nearly ten millions of dollars.

A canal is about to be constructed in Ohio, connecting the river Muskingum with lake Erie. The length of the work will be 119 miles, and it will pass over a country requiring much lockage. The cost is estimated at $1,250,000. In connection with this work, there will be a slack water navigation from the mouth of the Muskingum river on the Ohio to the point at which the canal will commence.

Lake Superior. We learn from the Albany Daily Advertiser, that three ship locks of seven feet lift only, would overcome the falls of St. Mary, and open the navigation of Lake Superior to the shippers of Buffalo. The canal would not be a mile in length, and the ground is favorable for the work. Sixteen hundred miles of coast navigation would be added to the present amount. Vast tracts of valuable land will be opened to the public, and the boundless treasures taken from the woods, the waters and the land, would repay the trouble and expense necessary to carry out the project. One hundred thousand dollars would cover the cost of the work.

It is said that the country which would be opened to commercial enterprise by such a canal, contains millions of acres of good land, singularly connected by natural channels of water communication in the interior.

American silk. Twenty skeins of beautiful sewing silk have been made by Mrs. Lewis, of Berkley county, Virginia, the product of worms raised on her own farm. It is equal in quality to the best imported silk, and the Free Press says, that the thread is twisted and put into skeins in a style which reflects much credit upon the ingenuity of the lady who has thus commenced the manufacture of this beautiful and useful article.

Rochester and Auburn rail road. The expense of the Auburn and Rochester rail road is estimated at $1,200,000 including the purchase of cars, locomotive power and the payment of damages, and in such case no more will be called for from the stockholders. It is said that the profits will yield 16 per cent.

That great undertaking, the Charleston and Cincinnati rail road, which is to be commenced in the ensuing spring, will cost nineteen millions of dollars—it will be a great work, and productive of immense advantages to the south and west.

Wheat. The ship Benjamin Morgan, at Philadelphia, from Liverpool, has on board 15,000 bushels of wheat.

The dog war. Six thousand five hundred dogs have been killed, and paid for, since the ordinance on the subject went into operation. [N. Y. Jour. Com.]

Southern boundary. The Sabine is the boundary between the United States and the gallant province of Texas. The boundary when positively determined, (as yet it is wanting in precision) is to run to Red river; up the same to longitude 100 west of Greenwich, thence north to Arkansas river, which is distant 275 miles; up the same to the at present unascertained head of that river, which is, like the source of the Nile, undiscovered; thence due north to latitude 42 degrees, thence due west to the Pacific. This makes our boundary to the south about 3,000 miles in extent. Upon it dwell a hundred thousand Indians. Every tree conceals a warrior. Fort Jesup is within the United States' Natchitoches is in Louisiana, but Nacogdoches is in Texas.

A just punishment. At the last session of theoyer and terminator, in Bergen county, N. J. a man named Mathias Lynch was convicted of wickedly and maliciously removing the switches, or turn-outs, of the Paterson rail road whereby he endangered the lives of forty passengers, and sentenced to hard labor in the states prison for eighteen months. He was instigated to the act by enmity towards the company, for a supposed injury suffered at the hands of one of its agents

NILES' WEEKLY REGISTER.

FIFTH SERIES. No. 7.—Vol. I.]

BALTIMORE, OCTOBER 15, 1836.

[Vol. LI.—Whole No 1,307.

THE PAST—THE PRESENT—FOR THE FUTURE.

EDITED, PRINTED AND PUBLISHED, BY WILLIAM OGDEN NILES, AT $5 PER ANNUM, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

CHOLERA IN CHARLESTON: The cholera was almost extinct, a sudden change of weather having nearly banished it from the city. A heavy white frost covered the ground on the morning of Wednesday the 5th inst. and fires and great coats were very comfortable.

MARYLAND SENATE. We publish this week communications from Dr. Duval, of Montgomery, and Mr. Linthicum, of Anne Arundel county, two of the recusant electors, in reply to certain rumors that they intended to enter the college and qualify as electors. The grounds assumed are of grave import, and have caused much discussion—but, as we cannot express our own views upon them without rendering ourselves liable to the imputation of being biased by party, we will not, at present, do more than recommend them to the consideration of our readers, as forming one of the most curious chapters that has yet appeared in the history of the "Revolution." Resolved as those gentlemen are not to enter the college, it is now pretty certain that a senate will not be elected. To meet this emergency, the "reformers or revolutionists" have held meetings in Frederick county and in Baltimore city, and appointed delegates to meet in convention in Annapolis on the 3d Monday of the next month, to devise a temporary government, (by continuing in power the officers of the state), on the presumption that the failure to elect a senate dissolves the present government. The example of Baltimore and Frederick will, doubtless, be imitated by other sections of the state, and a convention will assemble at the time and place designated. On the other hand, it is insisted that the present constitution contains the principles of its own preservation, and that the failure to elect a senate at the time specified does not dissolve it; inasmuch as the result produced by the refusal of the minority of electors to discharge the duty for which they were elected, might have been produced by fortuitous circumstances, and that no government was ever based on such contingencies—consequently, the present senators must remain in office until their successors are chosen according to the forms prescribed by the constitution. The two parties entertaining these views, it is pretty certain that they will come into open collision, and, if a proper spirit is not maintained, will greatly add to the excitement which already exists on the subject.

At the last advices from Annapolis, the majority, increased to twenty-two by the accession of Mr. Sellman, remained in session, adjourning from day to day.

THE FRENCH MINISTRY. Since our abstract of foreign news was in type, later European advices have been received at New York, in which it is said that, in consequence of the refusal of Marshal Soult to accept the war department, gen. Decaux has received the appointment. It is also said that M. Martin du Nord has accepted the department of commerce, thus completing the ministry, and, somewhat, restoring public confidence.

The money market is still the subject of discussion in London—but nothing of importance had transpired since the date of our extracts.

The London Times relates the following instance of retaliation on the bank for the manner in which it threw out the bills of unquestioned character.—A banker in the north, of undoubted character for great resources, was placed in the predicament above described. On hearing from his clerks what had occurred, he proceeded to the branch of the bank of England established in the same town, and, placing on the counter its notes to the amount of £140,000, demanded sovereigns for them. The manager demurred, and after some parley confessed that he was not prepared to furnish so large a sum in gold. "Be so good, then," said the indignant banker, "when you write to your masters, as to ask them how they dare to throw out my acceptances when they cannot pay their own? If there is to be an exchange of paper against paper, mine is as good or better than theirs." Content, however, with bringing on this scene of humiliation, the banker withdrew his notes, and had the forbearance not to press his just and undoubted claim. This proves how vulnerable the parent establishment has made itself by too great an extension of its branches.

VOL. LI.—SIO. 7.

BANK OF THE UNITED STATES. The "Globe," in reply to a statement of the New York "Courier & Enquirer," that the bank of the United States had "offered to pay the government for all the shares it holds of their capital at the rate of $111 47 per cent," says—"On inquiry, we learn that no offer has been made to pay that or any other specific sum; nor to pay any sum at any particular time, or before the deposit of the surplus next January with the states, as intimated by Mr. Clay in his Woodford speech, and by the National Gazette. On the contrary, the treasury department has expressed its desire to receive any sum at the earliest day, and to credit it towards what may in the end be found due on the shares of the United States."

BALTIMORE AND OHIO RAIL ROAD. The present sheet contains the highly interesting and important report, made by skillful engineers, to the convention which assembled at Knoxville, Tennessee, on the 4th of July last, and the tenth annual report of the directors of the Baltimore and Ohio rail road company. The following gentlemen were, on Monday last, chosen directors of the latter company.—They were all members of the last board: Joseph W. Patterson, Philip E. Thomas, William Steuart, John McKim, jr. James Swan, H. W. Evans, Jacob Albert, Samuel Jones, jr. J. I. Cohen, jr. Fielding Lucas, jr. John I. Donaldson, William H. Marriott.

At a meeting of the directors, on Tuesday last, JOSEPH W. PATTERSON, esq. was unanimously elected president of the company.

TENNESSEE. The legislature of the state of Tennessee assembled at Nashville on Monday, the 3d inst. at an extra session, called by the governor, to consider the expediency of passing a law to authorize the functionaries of the state to receive their dividend of the surplus revenue, (over five millions of dollars), which will be in the treasury on the 15th January next.

MICHIGAN. We publish the proceedings of the convention rejecting the terms proposed by congress for the admission of Michigan into the union. After having thus decided, the convention appointed three delegates (Austin E. Wing, Andrew Mack and Robert Clark) to repair to Washington during the session of congress, to enforce the claims of Michigan upon that body, as she understands them.

ARKANSAS. From this new state we learn that on the 19th ult. AMBROSE H. SEVIER and WILLIAM S. FULTON were elected senators of the United States. The former, the well known delegate to congress from the late territory, received the vote of every member of the legislature present, and the latter, the late governor of the territory, received every vote but four.

ROBERT A. WATKINS had been elected secretary of state for four years; and a law had passed the legislature directing the mode of electing electors of president and vice president in that state to be by general ticket. [Nat. Int.]

WISCONSIN. Governor DODGE, of Wisconsin, by virtue of the law of congress passed at the last session organizing that territory, has issued a proclamation apportioning the members of the council and house of representatives of the first legislative assembly, ordering the election to be held for that purpose on the 2d Monday of October, and convening the members on the 25th of the same month at Bellemont, Iowa county. The following is the apportionment made by the governor:

	Councillors.	Representatives.
Brown,	2	3
Crawford,	0	2
Des Moines,	3	7
Du Buque,	3	6
Iowa,	3	5
Milwaukee,	2	3
	13	26

MEXICO AND TEXAS. The New York Courier of Thursday says: We have good reason to believe that general Gaines has been recalled from his command in Texas, and that col. Arbuckle will succeed him as long as our troops remain there. It is probable, however, they will be ordered into winter quarters somewhere in our own undisputed territory.

BALTIMORE INSPECTIONS. The register of Baltimore has returned the following statement of the inspections of that city for the quarter ending on the 30th ult. exclusive of returns made to the state:

50,283 barrels wheat flour.
1,741 half do.
8,269 barrels rye do.
334 hds. corn meal.
1,989 barrels do.
98 barrels beef, foreign packed.
29 half do. Baltimore do.
405 barrels pork, foreign do.
1,481 kegs butter.
479 do do.

RICHMOND FLOUR INSPECTION. A comparison of the quarterly returns of the Richmond flour inspector, for this year and last, shows a great falling off in the present season. During the quarter ending October 1, 1835, there were inspected in that city 43,063 bbls. During the corresponding period this year, the inspection of flour amount only to 16,123 bbls.—thus exhibiting a falling off in three months of 26,944 bbls. It should be remarked, that the harvest this year was ten days or a fortnight later than last; and that circumstance, together with other causes, tends to account for the disparity, on other grounds than that of short crops.

REVENUE OF BOSTON. The revenue that was secured at the port of Boston during the financial year 1835, was—

Fourth quarter, 1834,	$490,415 95
First do 1835,	552,731 29
Second do do	1,086,432 73
Third do do	1,311,666 59

$3,871,246 56
Amount of revenue that accrued during the financial year 1836.

Fourth quarter 1835,	$643,941 33
First do 1836,	1,032,825 84
Second do do	1,090,202 81
Third do do estimated at	1,514,160 00

$4,272,129 98
Increase of revenue over the financial year 1835, $800,883 42.

TOBACCO. From a circular issued by the commission house of Riley & Van Amringe, of Philadelphia, it appears that the quantity of tobacco exported

From 1772 to 1775 inclusive, was 397,497,139 lbs.
From 1776 to 1782 " 86,649,533 lbs.
From 1787 to 1789 " 167,311,000 lbs.

The amount annually for the last 21 years is 99,331,000. In 1820, the quantity of tobacco raised in France was 27,406 hogsheads of 1,200 lbs. each. The export of manufactured tobacco increases with reference to quantity, but not to price.

The war of the revolution checked the tobacco business, probably by causing the Europeans to turn their attention to its cultivation.

It is remarked that 100,000,000 lbs. supply the foreign demand, and if the export in any year exceeds that amount, that of the next year is correspondently below. [U. S. Gaz.]

COTTON. Comparative view of the imports and exports of cotton into and from the whole United Kingdom, from the 1st January to the 20th instant, and of the imports and exports for the same period last year.

Into the kingdom this year.	Bags.
American	628,659
South American	94,104
West Indies, Demerara, &c.	3,723
East Indies	115,611
Egypt, &c.	18,478
Total of all descriptions	855,575
Same period last year.	Bags.
American	618,388
South American	95,890
West Indies, Demerara, &c.	4,615
East Indies	60,289
Egypt, &c.	11,632
	791,814

Increase of import, as compared with the same period last year bags 64,261

Exports in 1836—American, 12,926; Brazil 4,412; East India, 41,995; West India, 30; other kinds 20. Total in 1827, 59,394 bags. Same period in 1835, 67,050 do.

GOLD COINAGE. Statement of the deposits and coinage of gold at the mint of the United States, in the month of September, 1836.

Balance remaining uncoined, Aug. 31, $1,228,415

Deposites for coinage.

Bullion of the United States	$30,980
Foreign bullion	1,105
U. States coins of former standard	225
Foreign coins	238,865
	270,677

Amount of gold coinage with the month of September, of which $285,985 was in quarter eagles 432,905

Balance remaining uncoined, Sept. 30 $1,016,185
[Globe.]

NAVY DEPARTMENT—OFFICIAL. A board of examination composed of naval surgeons, is directed to convene in the city of Washington on the 1st of November next.

The board will consist of doctors Thomas Harris, Wm. Turk, Samuel Jackson, Thomas Williamson and M. Morgan, and is convened for the purpose of examining assistant surgeons for promotion.

Assistant surgeons whose commissions bear date anterior to the 1st January, 1833, who have served two years at sea, have permission to present themselves to the board, and are required to report at the time and place above mentioned, to Dr. Harris, president of the board.

BANK OF ENGLAND. London, Aug. 29. The quarterly return of the weekly liabilities and assets of the bank of England, from the 31st of May to the 23d of August, presents the following results on comparison with the like return made up to the 26th of July: The circulation of the bank of England has increased in the sum of £121,000, and the deposits have increased in the sum of £301,000. The securities in the possession of the bank have increased in the amount of £1,030,000; whilst during the same period, or rather since the last monthly return, the stock of the bank to meet liabilities in paper and deposits the same in effect, to the amount of £32,857,000, has been reduced to £6,325,000, which is £601,001,000 less than on the last return. The amount of the rest has increased in the small sum of £7,000. On the half year, that is, from the 9th of February, the stock of bullion has decreased in the sum of £146,000, but the circulation has increased in the sum of £634,000. On the year, the stock of bullion has decreased in the sum of £1,000; but the circulation has increased in the sum of £279,000; and notwithstanding the large investments in hand, the deposits on the year have increased in the sum of £45,000.

From the N. Y. Express.

The advices by the arrivals from England will have a most important bearing upon the money market in this country, and upon our internal improvements. The bank of England, it seems, is making war upon American merchants. See the letter below.

Correspondence of the New York Express.

Liverpool, Sept. 1st.

"We delayed writing for the purpose of getting the most correct information respecting the existing discord between the American merchants and the bank of England, the latter having taken a bold stand and refused to discount any and all paper where the name of the following houses appeared, viz: Barings, Browns, Wiggins, Wildes, Morrisons, Crydens & Co. Wilson & Ligard. The president and directors of the bank do not doubt the solidity of all these houses, but they say that their object for adopting this course was to check the exportation of gold, which has been immense this last quarter; and also to stop the lodgements of American securities, which increase the paper currency without increasing the circulating medium.

We know that there have been large exports of gold to the states on stock security; it increased the discounts and reduced the means of the bank, although the loan was not directly effected with the bank, yet its deposits were reduced by those who did take it. Barings assisted Mr. Jaudon to this loan, and wholly by keeping it quiet, getting a few thousand dollars at a place.

We are exceedingly glad to inform you that the affair has come to an amicable adjustment, the particulars of which have not been made known here, but no doubt will in a day or two. Mr. Wm. Brown and two of the directors of the Liverpool Joint Stock bank, left here by post and four on Monday for London, and returned but last evening; and, as the "Times" does not allude to the affair, we feel confidence in our communication. The directors of the bank were convinced, by pursuing the course they had adopted, it would lead to the complete prostration of the object they wished to attain. In our next we shall be able to give you more minute particulars. Money is scarce and discounts high. Yours, &c.

"AWFUL DISCLOSURES OF MARIA MONK." A book with this title, published in New York, purporting to contain the disclosures of a woman named Maria Monk, of the doings of the priests and nuns in the nunnery of the "Hotel Dieu," at Montreal, Canada, of which she said she was an inmate for several years, has created much excitement in some sections of the country. It represents the priests and nuns as living in a state of the most abandoned prostitution, and murder as the common resort to destroy the infants produced by their crimes. The particulars are of the most horrible and disgusting character, yet so managed as to impose upon those whose minds were already blinded by prejudice. As might have been expected, a very earnest discussion ensued between the friends of Maria Monk and the friends of the nunnery—and various propositions to test the truth of the charges by an inspection of the premises were discussed without coming to any positive arrangement. In this state of the case, the nunnery was recently carefully and critically examined (Maria's book in hand) by Wm. L. Stone, esq. the editor of the New York Commercial Advertiser, who was on a visit to Montreal, and he has, in a detailed statement of his examination, proven, beyond the shadow of a doubt, every charge of Maria Monk to be false, and that she never was within the walls of the nunnery! Col. Stone thus closes the narrative of his visit.

"I will therefore now close this protracted narrative, by expressing my deliberate and solemn opinion, founded not only upon my own careful examination, but upon the firmest convictions of nearly the entire population of Montreal—embracing the great body of the most intelligent evangelical Christians, that Maria Monk is an errant imposter, and her book in all its essential features, a tissue of calumnies. However guilty the Catholics may be in other respects, or in other countries, as a man of honor and professor of the Protestant faith, I most solemnly believe that the priests and nuns are innocent in this matter. WILLIAM L. STONE.

New York, October 8, 1836."

APPOINTMENT BY THE PRESIDENT. Samuel L. Lightfoot to be surveyor of the port of Norfolk and Portsmouth, in the place of Arthur Taylor, jr. deceased.

HEIGHT OF MOUNTAINS. The height of the different mountains and hills above tide water between Baltimore and Wheeling, Virginia, as taken by the survey of the national turnpike, furnished us by a correspondent from authentic information.

[Georgetown Metrop.

	Feet.		Feet.
Cumberland,	537	Woodcock hill,	2,500
Wills mountain,	1,000	Laurel hill,	2,412
Frostburgh,	1,792	Monroe,	1,065
Big Savage mountain,	2,534	Union town,	952
Little Savage do.	2,480	Canly's hill,	1,274
Coranby hill,	2,437	Brownsville,	833
Red hill,	2,437	Krepps hill,	1,041
Meadow mountain,	2,550	Belville,	1,110
Little crossings,	1,979	Hillsborough,	1,750
Negro mountain,	2,825	Eggnory hill,	1,532
Key's ridge,	2,845	Washington,	1,406
Winding ridge,	2,534	Claysville,	1,552
Smithfield,	1,405	Alexandria, Va.	1,795
Barren hill,	2,450	Wheeling hill,	850
		Wheeling city,	748

SCALE.

One mile,	5,280 feet.
Half a mile,	2,640 do.
Quarter of a mile,	1,320 do.
Eighth of a mile,	660 do.

B. RATHBUN—AGAIN! We learn from the Buffalo Journal of the 1st instant, that B. Rathbun was arrested on the morning of that day, on a warrant granted by a justice of the peace in Batavia, Genesee county, on a charge of forgery. His bail immediately applied for a writ of habeas corpus, and he was brought before judge Stryker. After hearing he was remanded to the custody of his bail by whom he was forthwith handed over to the custody of the sheriff, and recommitted to prison.

Mr. Rathbun's property at Buffalo has sold altogether better than was expected. His creditors, it is thought, will get all their demands, principal and interest.

POPULATION OF THE UNITED STATES IN 1836.

The population of the United States, at the present time, may be approximately estimated as follows:

Maine, the north eastern most	555,000
N. Hampshire, south of Maine	300,000
Vermont, bordering on Canada	330,000
Massachusetts, most densely peopled	700,000
Rhode Island, with the least territory	110,000
Connecticut, the most agrarian	320,000

Aggregate of the north eastern states 2,315,000

New York, the most populous	2,400,000
New Jersey, the thoroughfare state	360,000
Pennsylvania, the banking state	1,600,000
Delaware, the narrowest state	90,000
Maryland, the water state	500,000

Aggregate of the middle states 4,950,000

Virginia, the largest state	1,360,000
North Carolina, the modest state	800,000
South Carolina, the palmetto state	650,000
Georgia, the southern most state	620,000

Aggregate of the southern states 3,430,000

Ohio, the thrifty state	1,300,000
Kentucky, the bagging state	800,000
Indiana, the improving state	550,000
Illinois, the prairie state	320,000
Michigan, the lake state	120,000
Missouri, the north western most state	250,000

Aggregate of the western states 3,340,000

Tennessee, the central state	900,000
Louisiana, the south western most state	350,000
Alabama, the cotton state	500,000
Mississippi, the river state	500,000
Arkansas, the least populous	70,000

Aggregate of the south western states 2,220,000

District of Columbia	50,000
Florida, with the most extensive coast	50,000
Wisconsin territory	20,000
Oregon, or the far west	5,000

Aggregate of the territories 125,000

Indians 400,000

The entire population within the limits of the United States, Indians included, amounts therefore to 16,800,000

CANAL TOLLS. The tolls collected on the New York state canals from the 15th to the 30th of September, amount to the sum of $136,156 16. The collections for the whole month of September, amount to $243,261 74. This sum exceeds the receipts for tolls in September, 1835, by the sum of $12,674 30.

The Erie canal tolls for the month of September, compared with 1835, have been diminished at the offices named below as follows, viz:

Rochester, about	$4,000
Lyons,	2,500
Albion,	2,500
Brockport,	2,300
Syracuse,	4,750
Schenectady and Fultonville,	1,500
Little falls,	1,000
Montezuma,	1,500
Rome,	500

$20,550

At Lockport and Palmyra the tolls are about the same as in September, 1835. The failure of the wheat crop in many of the western counties has materially affected the tolls at most of the places above enumerated.

There has been an increase of Erie canal tolls in September over the same month in 1835, at several offices, as follows, viz:

Albany	$11,642 99
Troy	1,925 50
Utica	1,000 00
Salina	600 00
Oswego	1,132 52
Geneva	1,132 00
Buffalo	9,746 61

Total $27,079 62

The increased toll at Buffalo is principally paid upon products coming from the far west, and the increased toll at Albany and Troy is principally paid upon merchandise for the same region.

If the tolls from the first of October to the close of navigation, are the same this year as in 1835, the total receipts on all the canals for the navigation season of 1836, will amount to the sum of 1,620,000 dollars. [Argus.]

SUB-MARINE FORESTS. The singular discovery by professor Hitchcock, in the Vineyard sound, of which he took note in his geological survey of the commonwealth, pretending that forests of trees had, probably at some period anterior to this, flourished in the bottom of the sound, was made on the fact that many stumps of trees firmly rooted in the sand are found in the bed of the harbor of Holmes's Hole. The singularity of this discovery led us to inquire of a very old gentleman, who resides on the shore near the spot, in relation to its probable correctness. He says he clearly recollects when the spot where the stumps now are was a meadow, protected from the wash of the sea by banks of sand on either side; that he cultivated corn on the spot; but that, in process of time, the sand banks gave way, the meadow was overflowed, and has at length become a navigable portion of the harbor. The stumps, therefore, which are now found upon the bottom, but are annually becoming fewer in number, were, in all probability, those of trees which grew upon dry land, and have no relation to professor Hitchcock's new cognomen of "sub-marine forests." [New Bedford Gazette.]

ANOTHER SLAVE CASE. We are informed that a colored man was discovered on board a vessel in the harbor on Saturday, by some colored men who were passing the vessel, and he making signs to them, they approached him, desirous of ascertaining his wants, but were not allowed to come along side. Supposing all was not right, they made known the circumstances to S. E. Sewell, who immediately furnished a writ of habeas corpus, but no sheriff being at home the writ was not served. Meanwhile the captain of the vessel becoming alarmed, obtained a writ and had him committed to prison for debt, twenty-five dollars, being the charge for his passage. The place and cause of his confinement was, however, soon discovered, and the necessary bail being furnished, he was of course liberated, and by this time is probably well on his way to Canada. He is said to be a fine looking youth of about eighteen, possessed of a good degree of intelligence. It seems that he escaped from Norfolk by secreting himself under a deck load of lumber, with a supply of provision, but the deck load being washed over-board on the passage, left him exposed, and the captain continued his voyage with the intention of returning him to his owners at an early opportunity. [Boston Journal.]

OUR WANTS. The following paragraphs, published editorially in the last number of the Red River (Natchitoches) Gazette that has reached us, are copied by us for the benefit of whom they may concern:

A Protestant preacher wanted. From the late ordinance of the trustees of the town of Natchitoches, by ordering the stores, &c. to be shut up during that part of every Sunday when Divine service should be attended, indicates a due respect for religion and morality, most praiseworthy; but that inestimable ordinance loses the good effect as intended, in consequence of our having no place of Protestant public worship where our pious inhabitants can meet together in thanksgiving and prayer.

A Protestant preacher well to look upon, and of good report, would be kindly received at Natchitoches.

A dancing master wanted. Some eight or ten years ago we had in Natchitoches an excellent dancing master and fiddler; unfortunately he lost his life by an improper use of that quack composition of Le Roy. Since which no gentleman of that profession has visited this town; during the administration of the much lamented Durant, the inhabitants were much benefitted by his instruction.

"Dignity and grace were in every motion."—Since, a manifest difference is observable.

A dancing master, well recommended for his morality and professional qualifications, would meet encouragement at Natchitoches.

BLANNERHASSETT'S ISLAND. A correspondent of the Boston Atlas gives the following description of this island, which is situated on the Ohio river:

"Just below the town of Parkersburgh, lies Blannerhassett's island, which Wirt's highly wrought description has made celebrated. We approached this spot about twilight, and lay moored near to it all night. Without any romance, the island did appear to much advantage. We first saw it at its northern extremity, which, as the river sweeps by on both sides, forms a shore in the form of a crescent, fringed with trees. The new moon was in the east, and her reflection was on the water, while the crimson and purple tints on the western clouds were also thrown upon the unbroken surface of the Ohio, just in advance of the black shadows of the trees. This island is, I believe, nearly a mile and a half in length, while its average width must be less than an eighth of a mile. It is well wooded, and the shores on each side are very picturesque. But alas! for the shrubbery that Shennstone might have envied.' The garden walks of Blannerhassett are overgrown with weeds and with tangled wild grass, where the copperhead and the rattlesnake glide unmolested. And alas! for the music that might have charmed Calypso and her nymphs,' which once resounded among these sylvan shades! We heard nothing of it, unless 'Old Hundred,' chaunted forth by some of our passengers as we lay moored by the island, may come under that description. You can see no vestige of the mansion of Blannerhassett, except a few moss-covered stones and shattered bricks. A wilderness waves above the ashes of his home."

PROSPERITY IN ENGLAND. It would seem new towns are springing up in England almost as rapidly as in our own country. We find the following in the last London paper:

"Heywood. The cotton spinning and power loom weaving is very brisk. Joiners, bricklayers, &c. are scarce. Nearly 400 houses have been built, or are now in a state of erection."

What a contrast this to the days of England's military glory! Then every branch of industry was paralyzed, the cries of poor, starving laborers came up in groans, and riots, and shouts of revolution.—Now peace has spread quiet and prosperity on every side. [Journal of Commerce.]

TEA DRINKING IN ENGLAND: It would seem by the following extract from Mr. Rush's late work on England, that tea is in a fair way to supersede gin:

"We proceeded on towards Greenwich. Going through the streets and stopping a moment, an incident arrested my attention. A woman stood at the door of a house where cheap refreshments were sold. Some laboring people passing along, she called out to ask if they would take tea. It was about one o'clock. Houses of this kind, I understood, were not uncommon in London. I had myself observed tea sold in the streets near Charing Cross, by huckster women, who obtained the boiling water by means of coals in a pan, or a lamp. In a country where the wines are not produced, the first step to temperance is small beer, the next tea. The national schools in England have done much towards ameliorating the condition of the people. The use of tea has co-operated, by doing more of late years, probably, than any other physical cause, towards lessening the appetite for ardent spirits. It acts not so much by reclaiming old drunkards, as diminishing the stock of new. What a sight to see this woman beckoning men to tea, instead of drams! The use of tea in England is universal. It is the breakfast of the wealthy as of the poorer classes. On passing to the drawing rooms from the sumptuous dinner table, the cordial cup of Mocha is first brought in: but after an interval, tea is also served. A general in the duke of Wellington's army told me that, when worn down with fatigue, there was nothing for which the officers in the peninsula war used to call so eagerly as tea. Servants in London take it twice a day, sometimes oftener, and the occurrences at Greenwich show the taste for it to be spreading among laboring classes at all hours. What strong motives are those in countries where tea is used, for the law-makers to reduce the duty on its importation to the lowest possible point, or for abolishing it altogether."

GALVANISM. M. Magendie has reported to the French academy of sciences some successful results arising from the application of galvanism to a young patient, a Polish officer, who for five years had been perfectly deaf, dumb and deprived of all taste. Several modes of treatment had been adopted at Vienna and Trieste, without success, but M. Magendie, by directing the galvanic current to the nerves affected, has reproduced sensibility in those of hearing and taste, and is now trying to restore the power of speech.

THE VINE AND OLIVE. M. Lakanal has addressed a report to the French academy of sciences, containing his experiments concerning the naturalization of the vine and olive in the United States.—

It appears they have been unsuccessful, and that he is now obliged to abandon the attempt; concluding that, as all his endeavors have failed, it is matter of responsibility. At Kentucky, after rearing various sorts, in various soils and aspects, he procured grapes which dried up before maturity, and the wine of which immediately turned to vinegar. The fruit of the olive would not ripen in any instance.

A MACHINE, ON A NEW PRINCIPLE, FOR RAISING COALS, WATER, &c. "The construction of this power is very simple, and its steady operation is quite assured. Its chief agent is a pair of wheels, or, if necessary, a series, moving with their diameters in the direction of the weight to the used—say the shaft of a mine. Taking the one pair of wheels, moving on the same fixed axis, we find that from the end of a radius or arm in each a chain descends, so as to hang on opposite sides of a square passage. To each chain are suspended, at different but regular distances, quadrangular frames, to the upper sides of which strong projecting iron rims, moving on the principle of the hinge, are attached. The boxes, or receptacles for the weight to be raised, have corresponding edges on each side. When the wheel above is turned, and a single box below is placed in connexion with the lowest frame, it is caught by its rim, and with one revolution of the wheel is sent up as high as the frame on the opposite side to that on which it is borne; here it is again caught and sent up to the apparatus on the opposite side again; and so on, by alternate transmission, it is brought to the top of the shaft. The machine being kept constantly laden below, and its wheel constantly turned above, it follows that at each revolution of the wheel a box is delivered; and thus, in an exceedingly short space of time, a vast body of matter can be carried up through any depth of shaft. [The raising of water is performed by means of the same machinery, only buckets with valves in the bottom are used instead of boxes.] The machine could be most humanely employed, in great mines, in quickly sending the workmen up or down, to save them from their present tedious and tiresome expedients for that purpose." [Mining Journal.]

UPPER CANADA.—BURNING SPRING NEAR HAMILTON. It is a matter of some regret to us that we have never before directed public attention to one of the greatest natural curiosities to be met with in, perhaps, the whole world, and that, too, within a few miles from our thriving town. We are alluding to the burning spring, which, as some of our readers know, is situated in the township of Barton, near the wealthy and pleasant settlement bearing the auspicious name of Albion. It is more with a view of directing the attention of scientific persons to the phenomenon, than of attempting to describe its appearance, that we now make any observations respecting it; and it is not without surprise that we think of the length of time it has passed disregarded, except by a few.

More than twelve years have elapsed since the properties of the burning spring were first discovered by some of the early settlers in its neighborhood, since which its medical virtues have been frequently proved by the invalid of the woods, whilst its inflammable qualities have caused many a bit of fun to the boys around. But it is comparatively unknown; and were it not for the occasional visits paid by some very adventurous visitor from the old world, who prefers using his own eyesight to taking on trust the opinions of others, it is likely that scarcely an emigrant would think it worth his while to go to see it. It is to be hoped that a subject so interesting as the development of the qualities of the water will not much longer be neglected.

LOWER CANADA.—THE CRISIS. We are in possession of the Quebec papers of Saturday, and Montreal of Monday. The house of assembly, after an extended and exciting debate, has adopted an answer to the king's reply to the address of last session, which brings the difficulties between the popular and conservative branches of the government to a crisis. The address does not allow the minister's assumption that their proceedings, in the last session, arose from misapprehension, but persists in all former demands, and in the resolution to withhold all supplies, and to cease the exercise of all legislative functions, until those demands are granted. Among these demands are some to which the parent government can never assent, at least not until the constitution of that government shall have undergone a radical change. Of course, Lord Gosford has no other alternative but to dissolve the parliament. The Quebec Mercury adds of the answer of the house:

It clearly shows that no good can result from the authorities in Downing street continuing to bandy words with these agitators; they must act vigorously and promptly, for greater evils will arise from following a system of "insinuation, parley, and base truce," than from a manly resistance to the revolutionary spirit which is now arrayed against the government and constitution as it at present exists. The address concludes with some favorable expressions toward the governor, personally, which his excellency can hardly receive as a compliment, coming, as they do, at the tail of a tirade against the measures which his lordship's friends have adopted in regard to this colony.

The Montreal Courier of Monday says:

THE CRISIS MAY NOW, THEREFORE, BE SAID TO HAVE ARRIVED. We are glad of it, and would call upon all who dissent from the party proceedings of the house of assembly, and those who scorn to be the slaves of a national faction, to consider well what energetic measures they must now adopt for their own and their country's interest. Something must be done.

ELECTIONS.

PENNSYLVANIA.

The general election in this state was held on Tuesday last, and a variety of returns are before us, from which we gather the following particulars.—The city and county of Philadelphia comprise three congressional districts. In the first, col. Paynter, (V. B.) is elected by a majority of about 500 votes over Joel B. Sutherland (opposition). In the second district, composed of the city of Philadelphia, the whig candidates, Sergeant and Toland, are elected—

For John Sergeant, (whig)	5,330
Geo. W. Toland "	5,315
John M. Read, (Van Buren)	2,945
Morris Longstreth "	3,078

In 1834 the average whig majority for congressmen was 1,884. The vote in 1834 was a good deal larger than at present—the highest whig candidate having received 5,589, and the highest administration candidate 3,710.

In the third district the contest was between Mr. Harper (V. B.) and Naylor (whig), and it is stated that the former has been elected by a small majority.

The whigs carried their entire city ticket; also the county commissioner, auditor and coroner; while the Van Burenites have elected their members of the legislature in the county by a small majority.

The votes in each congressional district and county will be given in our next; and from the returns before us, it is certain the result will show a considerable Van Buren gain both in the legislature and in congress.

NEW JERSEY

From New Jersey as from Pennsylvania the returns are incomplete and cannot be relied on with much certainty. The results are, as far as heard from, council 6 whigs and 1 Van Buren—assembly 22 whigs and 3 Van Buren. There are fourteen counties in the state: those to be heard from elect 7 councilmen and 22 assemblymen. Particulars next week.

From Ohio we have no returns.

GEORGIA ELECTION.

The state of Georgia is divided into ninety counties, returns from twenty-nine of which give the following results of the congressional election:

Union ticket.	States' rights ticket.
Glascok, 18,823	Alford, 12,184
Cleveland, 10,881	Black, 12,109
Coffee, 10,657	Colquett, 12,181
Grantland, 10,854	Dawson, 12,283
Haynes, 10,900	Habersham, 12,152
Holsey, 10,830	Jackson, 12,135
Jackson, 10,827	King, 12,118
Owens, 10,866	Nesbit, 13,172
Towns, 10,928

MISSOURI ELECTION RETURNS—COMPLETE.

Governor.

Briggs (adm.) 14,315 | Ashley, (oppo.) 13,075

Lieutenant governor.

Carmon " 13,942 | Jones " 10,210

Congress.

Harrison " 16,470 | Owens " 7,533
Miller " 15,129 | Strother, unknown 1,477
Birch (opposition) 10,007 | Wetmore " 259

[Globe.]

MARYLAND ELECTIONS.

The following complete our returns of the delegate election in this state.

Allegany county.

Whig.	Van Buren.
Bruce 903	Buchanan 888
Smith 904	Perry 887
Mitchell 842	Berry 870
Raymond 776	Hamm 797

Kent county.

Whig.	Van Buren.
Usilton 601	Greenwood 447
Primrose 589	Spencer 447
McDaniel 594	Miller 442
Price 592	Hurt 430

Calvert county.

Whig.	Van Buren.
Duke 376	Parran 379
Billingsley 375	Kent 364
Laveille 373	Allnut 342
Smith 361	Barber 327

WAR IN FLORIDA.

A letter received by the editor of the Fredericksburgh (Va.) Arena, dated Fort Heilman, Sept. 27, states that there are, at that post, only about 150 men out of eleven companies fit for duty, of 90 men of the company to which the writer is attached, he says that there are not ten able to do duty, and that, "instead of being able to make a summer campaign, the men are unable to stand the climate when stationary; instead of being able to advance into the enemy's country, we have had to retrograde. Micanopy was abandoned in consequence of its breaking down the men escorting wagon trains laden with provisions. We have had to fall back upon Black creek to which place provisions can be brought in steamboats. General Scott has been censured for not carrying on the campaign during summer—it would have been absurd to attempt it. He did all that any general could under the same circumstances. The nature of the country was the great cause of his failure. He had to contend against the obstacles which nature threw in his way, and not against the Indians, who hover about, deliver their fire, and fly off, without the possibility of getting at them. They have trails through their immense hammocks, with which they are familiar, and in this way they harass us with impunity.—General Jackson never advanced into these hammocks; he never penetrated farther than the Suwannee river, and he had friendly Indians who could ferret out the hostiles, so that he could get at them. A new campaign is about to open, but no one can anticipate the result. There are about 3,000 men now in the territory. Gen. Call has advanced as far as the Suwannee with the brigade of Tennesseans, and the militia of West Florida, making 1,900 men. General Jesup is advancing from Tampa Bay with about 800 regulars and 600 Indians, while major Pierce, the commanding officer at this fort, will advance, soon, with about 200 regulars, and form a junction with gen. C. at Camp King."

The Indians lately attacked a house near Orange Pond occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Updegraff, and killed them both.

Gov. Call has made a requisition on the states of Georgia and South Carolina for volunteers or militia to be sent immediately to Florida. He expects to have upwards of 6,000 men in the field in twenty days.

The Apalachicola Gazette of the 24th ult. says: Between nine hundred and a thousand friendly Creek Indians, under those brave and intelligent chiefs, Paddy Carr and Jim Boy, and about 200 United States marines, have arrived here during the past week, in the steamers La Flora, Rein Deer, Hyperion, Minerva and Ann Calhoun, destined for the seat of war in the peninsula, to operate against the Seminoles. These friendly Indians have been in the service of the United States in the late campaign against the hostile Creeks, and have ever acted in the best faith towards their white allies, and have evinced the utmost bravery and good conduct in the field.

It is stated, says the Federal Union, of the last of September, that general Jesup has ordered major Dearborn, with about two hundred United States regulars into Lowndes county, for the protection of that and the surrounding country against the depredations of Indians. It is anticipated, that when operations shall be renewed in Florida, parties of Creek Indians, perhaps accompanied by their Seminole allies, will return through our south western counties to their ancient homes; and this force is designed, we learn, as a preparation for such a state of things.

Creek Indians. The Huntsville (Ala.) Times of the 27th ult. mentions that a body of about 2,500 Creeks, under charge of the removing agent, colonel W. A. Campbell, passed through that place on the previous Thursday, for their new residence beyond the Mississippi. They are stated to be the Upper Creeks, and chiefly from the counties of Benton and Talladega. They were to proceed by land to cantonment Gibson. The Times says—The whole nation, about 18,000 in number, are said to have commenced their journey to the wilder regions of the far west, where, if they do not find more congenial homes, they will at least be free for a while, from the avarice and cupidity of the white man.

FOREIGN NEWS.

From London and Liverpool papers to the 10th of September, received at New York.

GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.

The condition of the money market, caused by the refusal of the bank of England to discount the bills of certain American houses (see page 96) is still the subject of discussion in the British prints. The latest intelligence is contained in the following extract of a letter from the London correspondent of the New York Commercial, dated September 10. "Opinions are as much divided as last week among those not practically acquainted with the system which has been adopted for some time past, connected with the speculations to which we have just referred. Although the effect has been to increase the difficulties of obtaining money among the merchants and manufacturers generally, still it is believed, as we mentioned in our last week's report, that the bank has adopted the most politic course to avert the contemplated evils.

"A very high rate of interest has been given to negotiate American paper, since the bank notices were issued; and although our merchants and manufactures will be subjected to temporary inconvenience by the rise in the rate of discounts, speculation has been checked, which, not the least doubt exists, would, sooner or later, bring about a reaction to the injury of this country. The foreign exchanges have not, however, yet taken a decided turn in favor of this country, there having been, yesterday afternoon, rather an abundance of money, and a scarcity of bills. The state of the crops in many parts of America, and the necessity which will exist for considerable importations of grain into the United States, will, however, give a turn to commercial operations, which, with other circumstances, leaves little doubt but that specie will soon begin to flow back to England. Shipments of bonded grain have already been commenced across the Atlantic, to some extent; and it is estimated that but for the check imposed upon the facilities hitherto afforded in obtaining discounts, at least 50,000 quarters of grain would have been in the course of exportation to American ports.

The Americans, according to the latest commercial advices, were making preparations for entering into contracts for the importation of wheat and other descriptions of corn, to make good the deficiency in the produce of this year's crops. The circumstances just noticed, it is therefore confidently expected, will prevent any farther extensive drain of the precious metals, and will turn the balance of trade in favor of this country, and this too without the recurrence of any panic in the commercial world, which the alarmists in the city are so confident must be the result of the advance in the rate of interest by the directors of the bank of England."

Liverpool, Sept. 6, 1836. Immediately on the return of the deputation, the bank of Liverpool made known they were ready to disclose all the acceptance offered to them of the house in question.—We have now in this town and in Manchester 14 joint banks, whose money capital amounts to about £5,200,000. This is not a small sum. The responsibility which they conjointly offer in other respects, cannot, in the lowest view of it, be taken at less than £20,000,000 more. Prices of manufactures at Manchester are rather looking down; the purchases for export are diminishing.

The notion of a trial of strength between the joint stock banks and the bank of England has frequently been hinted at, and the growing strength and importance of those in Lancashire should prepare the public for some demonstration on their part at no great distance of time. If the state of opinion here, however, on this subject is to be truly stated, we should say, that objectionable as the management of the bank of England has been in many respects, the great majority of men of property would think it a far greater evil that the currency should tell under the direction and control of joint stock banks. They would wish the bank of England to be reformed on many points; to have its management confided generally to men of a superior character; and to see it perhaps a bank of issue, and nothing else, but to be placed in any degree at the discretion of its country rivals, with less responsibility, less experience and with infinitely more temptation as well as opportunity to commit errors fatal to the whole community.

The proper effect of the mere threat of such a contest should be to draw the attention of the government the sooner to the reform which is desired is the administration of the bank of England, without which the contest will, at all appearance, shortly come on. Ministers have probably been told, or entertain the persuasion, that the bank is out of their reach during the continuance of the charter, but the directors have brought themselves into a state to require advice and assistance, to maintain their character and the dignity of the corporation with the trading interest, and would, therefore, probably be as docile and tractable as if they were now on the eve of a negotiation for another charter.

FRANCE.

The French papers announce the formation of the new cabinet, which is thus stated:

Count Mole, minister for foreign affairs and president of the council.

M. Guizot, minister for public instruction.

M. Gasparin, minister of the interior.

M. Perail, minister of justice.

M. Duchatel, minister of commerce.

Admiral Rosamel, minister of marine.

Marshal Soult, or Molitor, minister of war.

Count d'Argout resumes his former post as governor of the bank.

This arrangement brings the doctrinaires into power, and will incline the government to the Russian policy, to the extinction of the quasi alliance with England. It is also said to be the precursor of the reinstatement of the duke de Broglie as president of the council and foreign minister, which posts will be speedily vacated by count Mole.

Count Mole, the prime minister, was born in 1780. His father perished on the revolutionary scaffold. He is a member of the institute. Napoleon noticed him by making him pass through the different grades of conseil d'état. In 1814 he coquetted with the government of Napoleon, at first accepted office, but shrunk from going on with it, and refused to sign the declaration that Napoleon drew up. Nevertheless, after the second restoration, Messrs. Talleyrand and Pasquier put his name on the list of peers. Count Mole is said to be a timid and circumspect man, and so fearful of committing himself, that his tenure of office will probably have elapsed ere he has arrived at taking one decision. Count Mole is thus by nature an anti-interventionist. These qualities should have secured for count Mole the confidence of the Parisian monied class. But his supposed leaning to Russia, rather than to England, produced a fall in the French funds. It was said that M. Thiers was preparing to pass some time in Switzerland and Italy, but the Journal des Débats pretends that he is going to Belgium and Holland. Another journal says that he is going with marshal Maison to an estate which the marshal possesses near Dusseldorf.

There have been some arrests at Paris, under the apprehension of an intended insurrection of the garrison; but it is more than probable that this is a mere ruse of the police under the new ministry, as an apology for a more rigid system which they intend to pursue.

Reports of these plots and counterplots have gone so far as to allege that another attempt has been made to take the life of the king, and to make him and the royal family prisoners. That such disposition constantly exists among a large portion of a people so remarkable for their restless temperament and desire to change, no one can doubt; but that any immediate plans to dethrone the present dynasty exists, is questionable. The guards, however, at the chateau de Neuilly, where the king was residing, seem to have been augmented. The Droit alludes to the subject thus:

"A plot was laid for surrounding the prefecture of police, setting the building on fire, and at the same time making an attack upon the palace of Neuilly. A republican council was, during the whole of the time, to remain sitting at the house of a wine dealer in the Rue Valois-Batave, and thence direct the proceedings.

"Of all this the prefect of police had timely information from his secret agents, and reinforced the municipal guards whom he stationed with several brigades of sergens de ville in the court yard of his hotel. The troops were closely confined to their barracks, cartridges were distributed to them, and they remained with their muskets loaded ready to march at a moment's notice."

The Messenger says—The garrison of Paris consists of 24,000 men; 12 or 15 regiments of cavalry and infantry, amounting to 25,000, were in barracks within 25 leagues of the capital; and there are at the camp of Compiègne 30,000 men. Thus an army of 70,000 men, that is a third of the whole army, now guard the capital.

SPAIN.

Madrid papers to the 31st of August, had been received in London. No more disturbances had taken place up to that date. The queen regent had issued a proclamation, addressed to the Spanish people, promising a faithful and sincere adherence to the constitution of 1812, but announcing that the said constitution will be revised and amended by the cortes, to be assembled for that purpose on the 24th of October.

In addition to this document, the queen regent has published an exposition of the present state of affairs throughout the kingdom, signed by the ministers. They recommend the immediate enrollment of all unmarried men and widowers without children, between the ages of eighteen and forty, in the national militia, to be employed in garrisoning the fortresses, thus leaving the regular troops free to march and fight against the Carlists. The queen has issued a decree, in fulfilment of this recommendation.

A forced loan of 200 millions of reals has been ordered. Also, in compliance with the ministerial recommendation, a decree has been prepared and published, directing the sale of church property, and appropriation of the proceeds to state purposes. This decree is to be submitted to the cortes.

There is little news from the seat of war. One of the Carlist generals named Castor is said to have been defeated in Biscay, and on the other hand there is a report of Gomez (Carlist) having surprised Palencia, in Leon, and levied a contribution of sixty thousand dollars. Don Carlos is said to have left his army, and gone, of all places in the world, to Paris. Conjectures are rife as to the object of this movement. A letter from Bayonne says that Don Carlos goes to Paris to obtain surgical assistance, being much afflicted with the stone.

The provincial junta of Cadiz had been dissolved on the proclamation of the constitution, and the example was expected to be followed by the other juntas.

Senor Isturitz, the late minister, had arrived in London.

The new ministry had despatched a large reinforcement to the army of the north; the accounts say fifty thousand men, but this, we think, must be a mistake. Five thousand is probably nearer the mark. The Portuguese auxiliaries had set out on their return to Portugal.

M. Mendizabal had been appointed by the queen to a sort of supplemental office in the financial department, being commissioned to provide funds for the speedy termination of the war.

Gen. Mina was so very ill that his life was considered in extreme danger.

On the whole, the aspect of affairs is rather favorable to the queen. Don Carlos was very much in want of money, and unless the ultra liberal spirit which is now triumphant in Spain is carried to the excess of revolution, it is probable that the civil war will soon be brought to a termination. The constitution of 1812 is more formidable than an army to Don Carlos.

GREECE, TURKEY AND MALTA.

The Boston Post of Saturday, has a letter from Malta, dated August 13th, from which we extract the following items of intelligence:

Information has been received within these few days, of the death of Mr. Marino Lazzaro, the first American vice consul at the Dardanelles; all American travellers who have stopped at this town, while a pass through the straits was being obtained from the Turkish authorities for the vessel in which they were passengers—or, as was the case with the writer, arriving at night, fatigued from an overland journey from Stamboul, will regret the loss of so hospitable and intelligent a person.

Commodore Porter still remains at this place—he is quite feeble, but during his three months visit, his health has been gradually improving. S. D. Heap, esq. United States consul at Tunis, is also here with his family—the only Americans, Messrs. Catlin, of New York, Dr. Ferris, of do. and F. C. Oliver, of Boston, were at Constantinople the last month, on their way to Russia. Messrs. Door and Curtis, of Boston, were a short time since, travelling in Greece, and making their way to Alcona.

The same letter mentions the mysterious disappearance of Mr. Cowper, purser of the British frigate Portland, who went on shore at Corinth, in company with some of the frigate's officers, parted from them to rejoin the ship, and had not been heard of after. The frigate remained six days at Corinth, which were vainly employed searching for him. It was feared that he had been robbed and murdered, or had fallen into one of the deep pits among the ruins in the neighborhood of the town.

BRAZIL.

Rio Janeiro papers of the 14th August have been received by the New York "Courier & Enquirer," brought by the barque Eunomus, captain Endicott, from that place. They contain intelligence of the restoration of tranquillity in the city and province of Para, and of the re-establishment of the authority of the imperial government of Brazil.

On the 11th April, the new president assumed the reins of government at Tatuca, an island in the river Amazon. On the 19th he caused some vessels under the command of captain Maryatt, to reconnoitre the island of Carnapijo, where the rebels had constructed a small fortress which was destroyed. From thence he proceeded with all his squadron to the island of Uaraperanga, carrying with him his prisoners and establishing there a military station. Expeditions were then sent to different points in possession of the rebels, from all of which they were consecutively driven, and afterwards, notwithstanding considerable resistance, the Brazilian squadron succeeded in completely blockading the town of Para. On the 12th May indications were perceived from the vessels of an intention on the part of the rebels to abandon the place, and at 3 o'clock on the afternoon of the following day they left the port in thirteen small armed vessels were pursued by the light ships belonging to the squadron and some destroyed. On the same day the president landed at Para with four hundred men, and on the day following he disembarked all his forces, and established himself in full possession of the capital. Many of the rebels dispersed, and the rest fled to the upper Amazons pursued by the Brazilians.

On the 14th August the princess Donna Januaria having attained her fifteenth year, took, before the legislative chambers, the oath required by the constitution, that she would maintain the Roman Catholic religion and the laws of the state.

The treasury at Rio Janeiro was robbed between the 23d and 25th July of 5,000 millions Reis in paper money.

MICHIGAN—OFFICIAL.

STATE OF MICHIGAN—IN CONVENTION,

Ann Arbor, Sept. 27, 1836.

Whereas, the congress of the United States, by an act entitled "an act to establish the northern boundary of the state of Ohio, and to provide for the admission of the state of Michigan into the union, upon the conditions therein expressed," approved June 15th, 1836, did enact and declare, "that the constitution and state government which the people of Michigan have formed for themselves be and the same is hereby accepted, ratified and confirmed; and that the said state of Michigan shall be and is hereby declared to be one of the United States of America, and is hereby admitted into the union, upon an equal footing with the original states in all respects whatsoever," thereby acknowledging our constitution as republican, and in accordance with the constitution of the United States, and the ordinance of 1787.

And whereas, congress have also in the said act inserted a proviso proposing a radical alteration of our southern and south eastern boundary, secured by the articles of compact contained in the aforesaid ordinance of 1787, and which, if acceded to by the people of Michigan, would deprive us of all jurisdiction over the waters of Lake Erie, and gratuitously bestow on Ohio the exclusive jurisdiction on the waters of the said lake, from the Pennsylvania line to the mouth of the Detroit river; a gift, the extent of which (we believe) neither congress nor the state of Ohio fully comprehend; and have required the people of this state to give their assent to the aforesaid change of boundaries, by a convention of delegates to be by them elected.

And whereas, the legislature of this state, without any authority derived from our constitution, by an act entitled "an act to provide for the election of delegates to a convention," refer particularly to said act of congress, and seem to adopt it as the basis of their action, and to acknowledge the power therein assumed by congress.

And whereas, this convention taking into consideration the just rights of Michigan, as respects her southern and south eastern boundary, and also her constitution, embracing that part of our territory claimed by Ohio, and believing that the assent required by the said proviso cannot be given by us, without a palpable violation of our constitution, (which provides the only way in which it can be amended, and over which this convention have no control), without a sacrifice of our rights and interests, and without committing an act of self-degradation, therefore,

Resolved, That this convention cannot give their assent to the proposition contained in said proviso—but the same is hereby rejected.

AFFAIRS OF TEXAS.

We published the other day a statement of Messrs. Wilson and Postlethwaite, whose characters for integrity and veracity were amply vouched for, concerning the state of affairs in Texas. To that publication a reply of considerable length has been made in the Louisville Journal, by gen. Chambers, (an agent of the Texans), which reply contradicts the statements of the first named gentlemen in very plain terms. There seems to us to be a propriety, having copied the first statement, to copy also so much of the reply as is in the nature of testimony conflicting with that of the returned emigrants. In that view of the matter we make the following extracts from the publication of gen. T. J. Chambers, to which the editor of the Louisville Journal gives entire confidence and credit: [Nat. Int.]

[EXTRACTS.]

Disappointed in his ambitious pretensions to rank, and finding that no lands were to be had in Texas without first fighting for them, Mr. Wilson, it seems, determined to abandon the country, and march back the "Ladies' Legion" to old Kentucky. But his influence was not sufficient to bring back more than 30 or 40 of the brave 300 that left Kentucky with him; the balance nobly determined to join the army, and seek the enemy; and they were received, as Kentuckians ever will be received by the lovers of chivalry, with an enthusiastic and hearty welcome.

The facts as set forth in this statement of Mr. Wilson's "march to Texas and back again" are established by a variety of testimony in my possession; but the following letters upon the subject will be sufficient to satisfy the public. The two first are from lieuts. Combs and Brashear, very respectable young officers attached to col. Harrison's battalion from this city, now with the main army; the third is from the commandant of the post of Galveston; and the other is from Dr. Read, of the Texian army, a gentleman of high respectability, well known in Cincinnati:

Extract from the letter of 1st lieut. James Combs, of capt. J. P. Price's company, dated "Near Matagorda bay, Texas, Aug. 12, 1836.

"DEAR SIR: We reached this place on Sunday last. The army is about twenty-five miles from us, and it is thought the next move will be for Matamoras. Colonel Harrison started up Red river. It is thought he is in Velasco, where the cabinet is now sitting. We saw colonel Wilson at Galveston. He has gone back with forty or fifty men; the balance, a part of two companies, are now encamped on the same ground with us. There are also two other companies within seven or eight miles of us. I suppose, when all of us join the army, it will consist of nearly twenty-two hundred men. Provisions are not so scarce as they expected they would be. There are three vessels now in the bay that have just been unloaded of provisions and clothing. Wild deer and cattle are innumerable on the prairie.

"J. COMBS.

"Dr. A. W. Hynes, Bardstown, Ky."

Extract of a letter from W. P. Brashear, 2d lieut. of capt. J. P. Price's company, dated

"Matagorda bay, on board brig Hope, Aug. 6, 1836.

"Head quarters are ten miles above Victoria, as we hear. They will be moved to Copano in a few weeks. An expedition is had in contemplation against Matamoras, as we have heard. Colonel Wilson, Burch, and about forty of the volunteers who came with them, returned on board the Flash to the United States. Burch told me their intention was to make a publication of facts, which would prevent another volunteer from coming to Texas. The fact is, they are disappointed in getting the offices they wanted, or those they came for. They then persuaded some men to return with them, that it might appear better; but were I there, (i. e. United States), and know what I now know, I should come, (i. e. to Texas).

"W. P. BRASHEAR."

Commandancy of Galveston, July 31, 1836.

SIR: The strange, and to me unaccountable circumstance of colonel Wilson's returning immediately back to the United States with some eighty of the men he brought out here with him from Kentucky, will no doubt cause some surprise in New Orleans, and be the matter of much speculation and conversation. Colonel Wilson sent, and brought with him, near 200 men: a majority of whom have determined to remain, notwithstanding a respectable minority have determined to return. Colonel Wilson speaks of being uncivilly treated by the cabinet, and is evidently disappointed in not receiving as high a commission as promised him by major Ira R. Lewis; and which, according to the regulation of the present government, he was not entitled to. Be that as it may, that any circumstance should have turned up to cause colonel Wilson and so many men to return without reporting for service at all, is a matter of serious regret.—Some of those returning are under an impression that no bounty land will be allowed to those "coming in after the 1st July;" which is not the case, as all those who come and serve Texas will be rewarded with land, notwithstanding they may have come in at the eleventh hour. Col. Wilson is represented as a very worthy and influential man; therefore, one of his influence and popularity returning so unexpectedly and under such circumstances, may injure the cause of Texas materially. Colonel Wilson will have been at considerable expense in this business, independent of having to defray the expense of those men returning to New Orleans; I presume he does not expect the government to pay their passage, &c. out here. Captain Bridges has colonel Wilson's receipt for 90 odd men landed at Galveston; but there will be 80 odd returned in the Flash—more or less.

Respectfully, your servant.

P. S. At the time of writing the above there is some uncertainty how many men will go back.

Cincinnati, Ohio, Sept. 17, 1836.

DEAR SIR: I left Velasco on the 12th August, several days subsequent to the departure of col. Wilson, at which time volunteers were continually coming into Texas in great numbers, and were received in the most favorable and welcome manner. The universal opinion of all, civil, military and citizens, was, that those who came in after the 1st July would receive lands proportionate to their services. In a conversation held with president Burnet, I understood that col. Wilson's dissatisfaction arose from the fact that government could not grant him the commission of colonel, because he had not the complement of men to entitle him to that rank. With the exception of a small number who returned, the remainder of col. Wilson's battalion joined the main army, and I hope will never dishonor the flag, presented by the generous, patriotic and chivalrous ladies of Kentucky.

I have the honor to be, with sentiments of respect, your friend and obedient servant,

EZRA READ, M. D.

Gen. T. J. Chambers, Texian army.

But, to show at once their total recklessness of what they assert in this matter, and to make it evident that they have formed a picture drawn wholly from imagination. I will subjoin the following note from captain G. F. Lawrence, who is well known in Cincinnati as a gentleman of respectability and scrupulous veracity. Captain Lawrence went out to Texas as first lieutenant of captain Allen's company from Cincinnati, a short time before the "Ladies' Legion" marched from Lexington, and returned with a captain's commission. He is now in this city with a fine company of emigrants, and will shortly leave for Texas.

Cincinnati, Sept. 17, 1836.

DEAR SIR: As regards your inquiries of me respecting the discipline of the army of Texas, I take pleasure in stating that, as far as I am acquainted, (having done duty for several weeks at Galveston island), the army is under the same discipline as that of the United States, there being a regular roll-call of each company, and a regular guard mounted for camp duty daily, as in all camps of the United States, and reports of the same made to the commandant of the post. I was still at Galveston island when captain Postlethwaite arrived there with the Kentucky volunteers, and neither he nor colonel Wilson went to the west, where the main army was, during their stay in Texas. Respectfully, your obedient servant,

G. F. LAWRENCE, capt. Texian army.

To gen. T. Jeff. Chambers.

REPUBLIC OF VENEZUELA.

U. S. consul, La Guayra, Aug. 31, 1836.

To the editor of the United States Gazette:

SIR: I hasten to transmit to you a translated copy of an order or decree just published, on the subject of banished individuals, and interesting to our merchants. And remain your ob't serv't,

BENJAMIN RENSCHAW, U. S. consul.

TRANSLATION.

Department of state, office of the interior on Domestic affairs, Caracas, 24th, Aug. 1836.

To the hon. secretary of state for foreign affairs:

SIR: The government having taken into consideration the several communications addressed to it by the charge des affairs of his Britannic majesty and the United States, as likewise of the consul of France, relative to the resolution of the 19th July last, and perceiving that they have not been able to avail themselves of the whole term therein specified, in order to give the necessary information to the commercial community of their respective nations, in consequence of the secretary for foreign affairs not having been able to communicate said resolution at an earlier period: and further, being anxious to give every facility to the mercantile interests of friendly powers, consistent with good order and the security of the republic, has resolved,

Firstly, That the above mentioned resolution of the 10th July last, shall be no longer in force in all cases, where the captain of any vessel bringing into a port of the republic one or more of those who fled the country, or were expelled (fugados o repulsados), shall deliver them over to the local authorities, in order that they may be dealt with according to the laws of the country.

Secondly, That if any captain of vessel bringing into a port of the republic one or more of the said description of persons, (fugados o expulsados) under their own proper name, or it shall be proved that he has brought them under any other name, being privy to the fact of their identity, and the authorities should think proper to order them out of the country, the captain will be compelled to maintain them at his own expense during their stay in port, in any place designated by the said authorities; and will be required to re-embark and take them whence they came. On the prosecution of their voyage, or to any port without the country, under a penalty by bond of 500 dollars, which shall remain in force until a certificate he produced from the authorities of the port of his or their disembarkation, proving that he or they have in fact been so disembarked.

And 3dly, That the term of 40 days allowed in the former resolution of 19th July, shall be extended to 60 days, commencing from the date hereof.

I have the honor to communicate the above in answer to your note of 19th instant, and to state that under this same date I have apprized the governors of the different provinces of this new order.

I remain your ob'd serv't,

(Signed)

J. S. RODRIGUES.

(True copy.)

(Signed)

GALLEGO.

A PEEP AT CHINA.

From the Whitehaven Herald, (England).

We have great pleasure in publishing the following letter, not merely as coming from the pen of our respected townsman, captain PINDER, but as furnishing the most graphic and interesting description of Chinese manners which we have met with since the voyage of M. Gutzlaff. Captain PINDER is so well known in the mercantile world, that it is, perhaps, unnecessary to state that, after extensive experience in almost every part of the globe, he has for some years been engaged in the trade to Canton, to which port he has conducted more vessels from England than any other man living, and, from the important mercantile operations which he has conducted, has enjoyed more opportunities of close observation than falls generally to the lot of occasional visitors. At the date of the letter he was employed in loading a large vessel for Mr. Brocklebank, of Liverpool.

Canton, Feb. 22, 1836.

MY DEAR SIR: The joyous days of mirth and glee, the new year, are now in the meridian of their sunshine in China, a memorable anniversary in the Celestial Empire, and proving so very interesting to me that I write you a brief description of what has crossed my observation. The new year's day of China is mutable, and regulated by the moon; this year it falls on the 17th February. It is the Chinese custom to settle all accounts, pay all debts, and receive all balances before the close of the old year; for, agreeably to their law, no claim can be made after the new year commences. Commerce has, in consequence, for several days, been totally suspended, paying and receiving money being now the staple occupation; and it is interesting to witness the general bustle that prevails—merchants and tradesmen enveloped in books and accounts; coolies (laborers) hurrying along with baskets of dollars in whatever direction you turn; the servants even exact from you the last cash (a small copper coin). Every house, shop and hong undergoes the same process of ablution, being the only time during the year that this is performed. The eager anxiety to be traced on the countenance of each at the near approach of this momentous epoch is discernible to all, and particularly about 11 o'clock at night of the last day, when despatch in the truest form now assumes its mastery to those whose business remains uncompleted, and with a throbbing pulse many dread the expected peals of the signal gong that proclaims the old year over. The myriads of gongs that follow, and the incessant explosion of crackers, would lead you to believe that the heat of the battle of Waterloo could be but faintly compared to it; and this is continued without intermission for several days. Next are seen merchants, shopkeepers, tradesmen, &c. &c. with hurried steps, winding their way to Joss houses, (temples), with their thin-chin (a sort of prayer on paper) which they commit to the flames of a burning caldron, on an altar, in front of the Joss (Chinese god). There, after sundry superstitious gestures, they prostrate themselves, with their foreheads knocking the ground three times. This is a prayer for luck, thanks for that which they have received, and a supplication that all devils may be driven from their dwellings. The continued noise of the gongs is to assist in frightening them away; their religious rites being performed chiefly by fire, the crackers are to carry them (the devils) from them.

On the morning of the new year commences the scene of rejoicing and a week of festivity and enjoyment: all thought of sleep is banished from their minds, and they seem determined to deprive every one else of that pleasure, for nothing but the noise of crackers, each with a report equal to that of a pistol, is to be heard; and each house is supplied in great abundance for this occasion. Instruments of discord, not of music, are sending their any thing but tuneful notes out of almost every hoing and shop on the astounded ear; above all, the changing gongs, sweet music to Chinamen, are in constant use. I was also astonished at the universal cleanliness in the dress and person of all, but particularly the lower class; each Chinaman with a head clean shaved, except the crown, from which is pendant to the heels a neatly plaited tail. A new suit of clothes could be discerned on all, not certainly of a Bond street cut, but of one admirably adapted to the climate, and enveloping men often with bodies and limbs that even an Englishman might envy. In these holiday clothes it was difficult to recognise your own servants. Maternal pride at this interesting moment seemed to divest itself from its former sluggishness, and to triumph for a few days over poverty and labor. The lower class of females in China have to rear and support themselves and children, and often the husband also. Many of those matrons have frequently ferried me over the river in their garbs of labor, when those little urchins dangling by their side, dressed in clothes of red, green, yellow and blue, were crawling about the boat in the clothes that nature had given them, with one only necessary appendage, a kind of life-buoy, slung round between their shoulders, to save them from drowning when they tumble overboard—a bath which, perhaps involuntarily, they often take. I frequently thought I could trace a smile of self-gratification on the countenance of those dames when passing a rival sister of the skull or oar, and a significant toss of the head, enough to say, "my children look better than yours."

Old times have been recalled to my memory in witnessing the sports and games going on here: although different in a small degree from those practised at our fairs at home, many bear a near resemblance. Those pastimes in England pursued only in the years of boyhood are practised here with anxious solicitude from the youth of seven years to the gray beard of three score and ten. Gambling, which at all time, I think, is more prevalent in China than any other part, is now carried to great excess: you can scarcely walk five yards without meeting a group squatted on the ground at this seemingly interesting occupation: even the beggars, more numerous than I ever witnessed in any other part, relax from their former labors, throwing off the look of melancholy, disease and death, and enjoying the otium cum dignitate of those around them, staking their "cash" at the dice. While those amusements are passing among the lower classes, the rich are not idle. We find them engaged in visiting and being visited. The hong merchants and others have their apartments decorated in gay splendor, with tables groaning under the loads of pyramids of cakes, sweetmeats and fruits; the most fragrant scents in abundance; and flowers of every description meet the eye in every direction.

We have also sing-songs; alias theatres, but they do not eclipse Drury Lane or Covent Garden; tragedians, but not equal to a Kean; comedians, so truly ridiculous that they would make a Liston laugh. We have singers, but their notes are not a "concord of sweet sounds." We have dancers, not on "the light fantastic toe," but clogged in 11-8 inch of pine. We have pirouettes that would astonish Taglioni or Celeste; but perhaps the English admirers of this dance would be disappointed in the too modest performances of the Chinese ladies.—The massy profusion of silk and satin with which the opera ladies here are adorned is such that all the rotary motion their agility can give to the anatomical forms is scarcely sufficient to raise the dreamy folds of their robes more than to convince the spectator that long full trowsers may show an ankle that a Vestris might envy. Not being acquainted with the Chinese language, I can say nothing relative to their drama; judging from view, I should suppose it to be no mean performance, with the exception of the scenes of nature frequently personified in a manner repulsive to the ideas of civilization. We have the Gatee Gardens—no bad resemblance to Vauxhall; and the blazon of China beauty in richest splendor there displayed. To those gardens the most respectable of the Chinese ladies with their children, resort in the evenings of these holydays, and thread the avenues with the crippled step of the little foot, painful to the feelings of a European. Beauty, although of a peculiar description, they can boast; but, not content with cheeks and lips of nature's coloring, by artificial means they attempt to outvie the lily in the former, and "the red, red rose" in the latter. I find myself quite unequal to the task of describing their dress, bespangled and bedecked with jewels and silks of costly price. All the above mentioned sights, and many more, the "outside barbarians" are freely admitted to as spectators. I must add, that the last week is the most interesting of any experienced in China, and regret that in the limits of one sheet I cannot enter into details as I wished.

Since my arrival, through the occurrence of a most destructive fire, and at the moment of their greatest confusion, I got within the walls of the city, so strictly prohibited to all foreigners. I perceived little of any interest to cause seclusion, or to note herein. On another occasion, I was one of the many foreigners, consisting of English merchants and shipmasters, to take a petition inside the city gate, to be presented to the viceroy, for the release of the Faerie Queen's letters, from Liverpool, and the second officers in charge of them, unlawfully detained by a Mandarin. We were detained four hours, pent up between the inner and outer gates, before a decisive promise could be obtained for the grant of our petition. The foyeun, or next in authority to the viceroy, held several audiences with us through the linguists, and seeing our determination to remain there till the object we had come on was concluded, he consented to lay it before the viceroy. Previous to this, tiffin (lunch) had been sent for; and when, in the midst of a serious debate, two coolies heavily laden with sandwiches, wines, &c. made their appearance, the debate was cut short, and the foyeun's ears deafened with three of the most hearty cheers he ever heard. At this insult, he ordered the soldiers to charge. Busy at a different occupation than fighting, the charge was at first successful in causing a small retreat; but, immediately forming a complete body, and rallying with no other arms than sticks, the lost ground was regained, and the soldiers driven outside the wicket—proving the magnanimity of Chinese soldiers, when 40 or 50 Englishmen could keep at bay at least 1,000 Chinese. The foyeun was not a little surprised to observe the cool indifference with which the English, after recovering their ground, enjoyed a hearty meal, each with a stick in hand at his post. Many were the imprecations he uttered on us, and "Fanquai!" or, white devils, was often heard. He left us, and soon returned with all we required. Again three cheers announced that our business was done. Three of our party received light wounds, and from the active motion of many of our sticks some sore heads would be felt next day by the Chinese. They fought with pikes of hard wood, sharp at one end.

Before concluding, I have to add that we have had here lately a fall of snow, said to be never witnessed before in Canton by the oldest inhabitant; and as it was the occasion of many anecdotes among the astonished natives, I add a few: A respectable Chinese, when asked what he considered snow like, replied "cotton and goose-tails." One person bottling snow, when asked for what purpose, replied "to make his stomach cold when he had the fever in hot weather"—thermometer at the same time 90 to 96. Groups were seen working it into all kinds of grotesque shapes, and afterwards taking it to the fire to harden. Others, where the sun was powerful, watching with the greatest anxiety its gradual decay. Some remarked that the Fanquai, not content with coming themselves to China, had brought Fanquai with them. Such, then, is the wisdom of those sage men of China who are pleased to designate us barbarians, and more frequently by a less respectful name! I remain, yours truly,

J. PINDER.

THE HINDOO EXHIBITION.

We export ice to the East Indies, and import the natives. Certainly there are no bounds to American enterprise. Although Hindostan has been so long part and parcel of the British empire, such an exhibition has never been carried to England. Indeed the collector at Calcutta expressed his surprise as these figures passed the custom house, and insisted that they were not the work of Hindoos.—One can hardly realize, as he enters the hall, that a voyage of four months will place him in the midst of a population of nearly a million of human beings such as he sees before him. Whatever may be the errors of the Hindoo faith, their conduct, in many instances, affords examples that may be beneficially imitated by the most enlightened nations. During the past year the celebration of the Doorga Poojah was continued nearly three weeks; and the streets of Calcutta were thronged day and night; yet not an instance was observed either of quarrelling or of intoxication.

The Hindoo character has been drawn in the brightest and darkest colors. Missionaries generally represent them as worse than other heathens; while sir Wm. Jones speaks favorably, and the marquis of Hastings and bishop Heber, unite in describing them as amiable and virtuous.

Their mode of trade seems peculiar; many amusing accounts are given, among which may be found

THE FAIR OF MAKERIEFF.

On the confines of Europe and Asia, and near the Wolga, is situated the miserable village of Make-reiff, celebrated for the great fair which is held there in July every year.

There we find assembled people of all nations, and merchandise of every description. Among the most remarkable articles for sale, and perhaps the most interesting to the ladies of Europe, must be mentioned the shawls of Cashmere. One of my friends having had an opportunity of attending as a witness at the purchase of a parcel of these manufactures, has given me an account of the transaction, which appears so curious that I think the detail will be amusing. The conclusion of a bargain for shawls always takes place before witnesses. Having been asked to attend in that capacity, I went to the fair with the purchaser, the other witness and a broker, who was an Armenian. We stopped at a miserable house, which was however the abode of a rich Hindoo, and being ushered into the cellar, beheld eighty large packages piled against the wall—parcels of the most valuable shawls are sold without the purchaser seeing any more than the outside of them; yet he buys by a descriptive catalogue procured by the broker from Cashmere. He and his witnesses and brokers, (for he sometimes has two), all sit down. He does not however say a word; every thing being managed by the brokers, who go continually from him to the seller, whispering in his ear, and taking him to the farthest corner of the cellar. This negotiation is continued till the price first asked is so far reduced, that the difference between that and the price offered is not too great; so that hopes may be entertained of coming to an agreement. The shawls are now brought and the two principals begin to negotiate. The seller displays his merchandise and extols it highly; the buyer looks upon it with contempt and rapidly compares the marks and numbers.

This being done, the scene becomes animated; the purchaser makes a direct offer, the seller rises as if to go away. The brokers follow him crying aloud and bringing him back by force; they contend and struggle; one pulls one way, and one the other; it is a noise and confusion of which it is difficult to form an idea. The poor Hindoo acts the most passive part; he is sometimes even ill treated. When this has continued some time, and they think they have persuaded him, they proceed to the third act, which consists of giving the hand, and is performed in the most grotesque manner. The brokers seize upon the seller and endeavor by force to make him put his hand into that of the purchaser, who holds it open for the purpose, and repeats his offer with a loud voice. The Hindoo defends himself; he makes resistance; disengages himself, and wraps up his hand in the wide sleeves of his robe, and repeats his first price in a lamentable voice.

This comedy continues a considerable time; they separate; they make a pause, as if to recover strength for a new contest;—the noise and struggling recommence;—at last the two brokers seize the hand of the seller, and notwithstanding all his efforts and cries, oblige him to lay it in the hand of the buyer. All at once the greatest tranquillity prevails; the Hindoo is ready to weep, and laments in a low voice that he has been too hasty. The brokers congratulate the purchaser; they sit down and proceed to the final ceremony—the delivery of the goods. All that has passed is mere comedy; it is, however, indispensable, because the Hindoo will by all means have the appearance of having been deceived and duped. If he has not been sufficiently pushed about and shaken, if he has not had his collar torn, if he has not received the full compliment of punches in the ribs and knocks on the head, if his arm is not black and blue from being held fast to make him give his hand to the buyer, he repents of his bargain till the next fair, when it is very difficult to make him give his hand on any terms. In the above affair the Hindoo demanded 230,000 roubles, and came down to 180,000. A new dispute arose about the time of payment, which, however, being finally settled, the whole party knelt down to pray.

My prayer was fervent and sincere. I prayed Heaven to be pleased to cure the women of Europe, as soon as possible, of their extravagant fondness for this article of luxury. We then separated, and each went his way.

OFFICIAL ROGUERY.

From the Boston Morning Post.

The following article contains an authentic and detailed statement of the dishonesty practised by John Reed, late constable of this city, on a young convict, Archer, from whose effects he abstracted a diamond breastpin. It is interesting, as exhibiting the great opportunity possessed by police officers to prey on the friendless and unprotected prisoners who may fall into their power, and demonstrates the necessity of selecting for such officers men of sterling integrity and respectability, that they may not, while enforcing the law upon offenders, at the same time bring disgrace upon it, and render it a mere instrument of rapine and cruel oppression. The public have not only to guard against "judge law," but also against constable law:

STATEMENT. In the month of July, Samuel Archer was arrested in the city hall, in the very act of picking a gentleman's pocket, by constable John Reed. The public papers of the day praised Reed very warmly for his skill and perseverance in following up and securing the adroit young rogue. Geo. W. Phillips and Geo. T. Bigelow, esqs. were counsel for Archer, and he described the property that Reed had taken from him after the arrest, viz: clothes, a diamond pin, and a diamond ring, and upwards of $70 in money. He no doubt had that sum of money, as but a short time before he picked a gentleman's pocket of more than that sum. This property remained, according to law, in Reed's possession, until the case was disposed of in the municipal court.

Reed told the counsel that he would keep the articles all safe, but said that the pin was of no value, and that the money amounted to only about fifty dollars. Archer was convicted on the 12th of August, and he gave his counsel an order on Reed for his property, to be placed in the custody of the warden of the state prison till the expiration of his sentence. Reed delivered the clothing and fifty dollars, keeping back six, as he said, for compensation for taking care of the rest; the ring and pin he was to return at another time.

A day or two after, Reed handed to the counsel the diamond ring, but, instead of a diamond pin, he only returned a common pin of no value. He insisted upon it that he took both the pin and ring from Archer. The pin differed so entirely from the diamond described by Archer, that the counsel at once suspected Reed of an attempt to rob the very pickpocket he had received so much credit for capturing. They communicated their suspicions to the warden of the state prison, who, without hinting the object of his inquiry, induced Archer to describe his pin minutely; differing in every particular from the one returned by Reed, which was then shown to Archer, who promptly said it was not his. There was now but little room to doubt that Reed had played the cheat. Upon inquiry at J. Bigelow's jewelry store, it was ascertained that Josiah Gooding had spoken of buying such a pin of a constable. Mr. Gooding was then called upon, and he stated that he had bought such a pin of Reed for $25; it was produced, and corresponded in every particular with the description given by Archer; and when it was carried over to him, he instantly claimed it as his.

Possessed of these facts, the counsel sent for Mr. Reed, and first stated to him their suspicions, without giving him their reasons for them; he showed some agitation, but affirmed that the pin he gave them was the very one he took from Archer; they then presented the diamond pin, and told him he was deceiving them, that this was Archer's pin, and what he had done with it. He still denied the fact; said that he did sell that diamond pin to Mr. Gooding, but that he had it a year ago of a man in Providence for debt, and had worn it sometimes. There was still no legal evidence against Reed, as Archer was a convict, and consequently incompetent. Presuming on this as his protection, Reed had probably first conceived the design of embezzling the property, and now persisted in his denial. He told the gentlemen his character would bear investigation, that he was always very particular in these matters, and that it was their duty to proceed against him if they believed him guilty. Satisfied beyond all question of his guilt, though it was doubtful whether it could be legally proved, as Archer, being a convict, could not testify in court, the counsel still determined to ascertain if legal testimony could not be procured. Archer described the store in New York where he purchased it, the salesman, the price, the time, conversation, and the kind of bills he paid for it with, &c. &c.

With this statement in writing, taken from his lips, Mr. John Wilson, constable, went to New York, taking the pin with him. He found the store with all ease, by Archer's directions; the pin was identified at the store, and it still had the private shop mark un erased, and the books showed it had been sold for the sum named by the convict, and at the time specified by him. The other particulars of Archer's statement were found to be equally true.

On Mr. Wilson's return from New York, the facts stated above were laid before Mr. Justice Simmons, who was decidedly of opinion that Mr. Reed should be immediately arrested, and subjected to a rigid examination: Reed was arrested and held to bail. After the case came before the grand jury, the salesman, who was described by Archer as the person who delivered him the pin in the store at New York, came to Boston, identified the pin, and remembered the circumstances attending the sale. He went over to the state prison, where he and Archer mutually recognized each other.

Reed was indicted by the grand jury, and, not appearing was defaulted. To show how far back he probably meditated his theft, it is only necessary to say that, in the advertisement in the Transcript, a day or two after Archer's arrest, of the property which had been found upon him, the diamond pin was omitted; no breastpin was mentioned; the ring had been seen by persons present at the arrest, and had been worn by Reed; but the pin, being in the folds of his shirt bosom, was not seen, as Reed supposed, by any body but himself. As to the money, it could not be proved there were $70, and Archer was content to let it be $56, the amount given by Reed. In this case, there was no doubt that Archer was guilty, and that Reed told substantially the truth; but it cannot fail to suggest itself to every one that a dishonest police officer has a very strong motive to procure the conviction of a prisoner, and it would not be unreasonable to suppose that this powerful stimulus may have operated in other cases, on such a man as John Reed, to the serious prejudice of other persons charged with "criminal offences."

POLITICS OF THE DAY.

From the Knoxville Register.

The following letters were received from the hon. Henry A. Wise and Balie Peyton, responsive to invitations to attend the dinner given to judge White, at this place, on the 31st ultimo:

Station Camp, near Gallatin, Aug. 18, 1836.

GENTLEMEN: I have had the honor to receive your communication of the 11th instant, inviting me, on behalf of the citizens of Knox county, to a public dinner to be given to the hon. Hugh L. White on the 31st, and much regret that business of importance, which calls me to the south, will prevent my participation in a festival proposed in honor of one whose uncommon worth and elevation of character I have had so good an opportunity to know, and so much reason to admire.

Public entertainments, considered merely as collections of individuals to enjoy themselves at the festive board, are comparatively of small importance; but they are all-important when looked to as indications of public sentiment with regard to the vital contest now going on between party despotism and government patronage on the one hand, and the right to the free enjoyment of the elective franchise on the other! Your distinguished fellow citizen (judge White) has, for the last twelve months, been placed in a situation of peculiar difficulty: assailed by a majority of the party with which he had hitherto acted, to whom he was too proud to crouch, and too honest to join the opponents of his principles, he stood alone in the senate, without a single political friend with whom to counsel during the storms of executive wrath which raged both around him and the constitution of his country. The polar star of principle, and the shield of a character acquired by a well spent life, have hitherto saved him from the destruction to which he has been doomed by the worse than inquisitorial caucuses of the most despotic and unprincipled party which this nation has ever known—I mean the party of Mr. Van Buren, from which all the real and true friends of Andrew Jackson have long since been driven. And why? Not that they have not served him with a truer devotion than ever political chief was served before, but because they refuse to surrender the right to think for themselves with regard to the individual who ought to succeed him. The president of the United States—the last man and the only man in the United States who should be silent on the occasion—not only nominates a candidate, but denounces and drives from him his best friends if they refuse to support the nomination. Why is judge White denounced by him and his minions, from Maine to Louisiana?—Because he is opposed to Mr. Van Buren. "This is the head and front of his offending." No more.—If he would have gone into this leading and absorbing measure of the administration, he would now still be the fearless patriot he was when twice invited by the president to a seat in his cabinet, and when he was offered the vice presidency of the United States by "the party." This, too, is the mortal offence which Mr. Bell has committed, and which has drawn down even upon my humble head the presidential denunciation. Is it not, gentlemen, an awful thing to see a president of the United States—and one so popular as Andrew Jackson—not only wielding the whole power and patronage of this mighty government to secure the election of a particular favorite, but, in person, with a drawn sword, at the head of an army of a hundred thousand officeholders, actually mingling in the contest for the succession! But if the president should succeed in dictating the succession—and if so, there is an end of civil liberty for the time being—we have still one consolation left us, that we shall have discharged our duty; and that our own state (Tennessee), though most exposed to the storm, stands erect, preserves her political integrity and independence, unawed by the frowns of power, unseduced by the charms of patronage; and whether she succeed or fail in the present contest, reserving her strength for future efforts to convince unprincipled demagogues who may in future tamper with her political virtue, that however tenderly she may act towards the old man whom she has loved, if "not wisely, but too well," that she is the Sparta, at least, if not the Tarpeian rock of the republic.

For the very flattering terms, gentlemen, in which you have alluded to my humble efforts in this great contest, please accept my sincere thanks, and present my acknowledgments to those whom you represent, for their kind invitation, and allow me again to express my regret that I cannot be with you.

I am, gentlemen, with great respect, your obedient servant,

BALIE PEYTON.

Gen. S. D. Jacobs and others, committee.

Accomack, C. H. E. S. Va. August 29, 1836.

GENTLEMEN: I received your invitation to a public dinner to be given to judge White, in Knoxville, on the 31st instant, dated the 11th, on the 23d inst. It did not reach me in time, possibly, for an answer by mail, much less for my personal attendance on the occasion. It should have been answered, however, immediately, but for illness which has confined me for several days.

If my state of health, and time and distance had permitted, the disposition was not wanting on my part to go any length in doing honor to an honest patriot, who is an honor to his state and his country, to both of which he has done more than some service. His services, it is true, have not been of that glaring and dazzling kind which have caught the popular gaze, and have been trumpeted on the blasts of war, but they have, nevertheless, been equally valuable and useful, and perhaps more important to a republic. If they have not been dazzling, they have not been to destroy; if not warlike, they have been peaceful and laborious; if not famous, they have been useful; if not of the captain, of the judge; if not of the general, of the senator; if not of a Cæsar, of a Cato. His light has shone, not to deceive or mislead, but steadily from the bench of justice and judgment, from the council chamber and the committee room. Silent and unobtrusive in the path of duty, a nice sense of which is his greatest characteristic, he has kept the "even tenor of his way" in a long life of virtuous example, whilst others have looked behind or turned aside after "a name." No sublime passions or grand achievements have ever extolled him a hero, but knowledge and experience, soberness and truth and reason, a private and public character, unsullied by a single vice, unrent by a single act of violence, imprudence, or indiscretion, have sanctified him with all the respect and veneration of "sage." History teaches us plainly which class of public servants it is safest for a republic to reward and cherish. The present times admonish us how inestimably valuable a character like that of judge White is to his country. You know him better than I do. I know him well enough to testify of his merits; if the nation never knows him as we do, never rewards him as we would, "he knows himself," and will live and die contented in his own consciousness of having done his duty, of being "a good and faithful public servant."

My own course has not been worthy of the praise you bestow; but my ambition has been different from that of most public men in power, I must confess—not to obtain public office for the "spoils." I am proud of my relation to Tennessee in more senses than one; that is the state of my adoption; and I am prouder of the associations I have formed with a majority of her talented, virtuous and patriotic representatives. She is illustrious in men and statesmen—in patriotism, public spirit and popular independence. Please present—mine pro tunc, it must be now—my hearty salutations to your guest and company; give them for me the toast subjoined, and accept for yourselves the humble respect, &c. of HENRY A. WISE.

Tennessee—She can give to the nation another "jewel" as bright—a sage as well as a hero.
S. D. Jacobs and others, committee.

The following letter was addressed by Robert Lucas, esq. governor of Ohio, to a friend and relative in Sciota county, Ohio, in reply to some interrogatories relative to an imputed change in his political sentiments.

Executive office, Ohio, Columbus, Sept. 9, 1836.

DEAR SIR: I received your letter of the 4th inst. making some inquiries in relation to my political opinions, and I will promptly answer your interrogatories with candor. As to a change of opinion, that is out of the question; my political opinions have been too long established to undergo any change. They have been declared to the world, in all my public communications; my motto has always been, democratic republican principles, democratic republican measures, and men to carry those measures into full operation. The foundation of these principles are—that all power resides with the people—that they are the only legitimate source of power; that public offices were created for the people; that officers are only the agents of the people, and are bound to discharge the trust reposed in them to the promotion of the happiness and prosperity of their principals and according to their wishes; in short, all our officers being servants of the people, (not masters, as the aristocracy suppose), are bound to obey their will. Ours is truly a government of public opinion, and the only supreme tribunal in our government is the tribunal of the people. This being briefly a sketch of democratic principles, corresponding measures are necessary to extend their benefits to the community, and men professing similar principles must be selected as public officers or agents to carry them into effect, for no confidence ought to be placed in a public agent who did not make the good of his principal (or in other words his employer) his greatest concern. We now come to the point of selecting our principal agents (say president and vice president of the United States), that will carry these measures into effect, and that will discharge the important trust reposed in them, with a single eye to the public good, the prosperity of the nation and the happiness of the people. The question naturally arises, where shall we find men best qualified to perform these important trusts? I will answer without hesitation—in MARTIN VAN BUREN for president, and RICHARD M. JOHNSON for vice president. This is my settled opinion after much reflection, and I have no doubt that this opinion will be responded to by the voice of the American people. If the signs of the times can be depended upon, Martin Van Buren will be our next president, and R. M. Johnson our vice president. As to the report of my being in favor of Harrison and Granger, it is barely worth a notice, for I am sure that the thought of supporting either of them never entered my mind; Harrison I consider to be a weak, imbecile old man, and Granger's federal anti-masonic and abolition principles, as well as his vote against Ohio in the last congress, in the settlement of our northern boundary, would forever prevent my voting for him.

Our prospects throughout the state are flattering. Present my respects to our old democratic friends. With sentiments of respect, I AM your obedient servant,
ROBERT LUCAS.

"REFORM OR REVOLUTION" IN MARYLAND.

The following address from Dr. Washington Duval, the recusant elector of senate from Montgomery county, appeared in the "Baltimore Republican" of Tuesday last.

TO THE PUBLIC.

I had hoped that nothing would occur to make it necessary for me to appear again before the public. In the address of the nineteen electors which I signed, it is announced to the people of Maryland, that no one of them would participate in the formation of a senate. The reasons for that determination are succinctly given in that paper. They were understood by me when I signed it—they were sanctioned by me then—they are adhered to now, and at no time since that publication was first made, have I by act or word justified a belief that I would change the position then assumed; on the contrary, I have uniformly declared before and since the last election, that I had deliberately formed the opinion expressed in the address, and had solemnly determined to act in accordance with it. Notwithstanding this unequivocal and undisguised course on my part, some busy bodies who appear to think they know better than I do myself what I propose to do, have continued to circulate the report that I intend to go to Annapolis, and afford an opportunity to the gentlemen there assembled, to form a senate. It appears to me to be a duty that I owe to the people of the whole state, to put to rest at once, and I hope, forever, this idle, mischievous and unfounded rumor. For that purpose, I now publicly declare that I do not intend to change the ground assumed by me, as one of the nineteen electors. It was not taken without full reflection, and subsequent observation, has served to satisfy me that by the course we have pursued, and by it alone, can the people of Maryland be speedily and peaceably restored to their inalienable rights and privileges. The issue of the last election, alone, ought to satisfy every reasonable and unprejudiced man that a convention ought to assemble to revise and amend the constitution of this state. The election was in some degree a trial of strength between two great political parties. By one of them twenty, and by the other sixty members of the house of delegates have been chosen and by an examination of the returns of the election, appears that the twenty delegates elected by one party, represent about 176,000 of the free white inhabitants of the state, and the sixty delegates have been chosen by about 113,000 free white inhabitants.

If there was then, no other defect in the constitution but that which produces such a gross inequality as this, in the power possessed by the people to vote for those who are to levy and disburse taxes—to participate in the passage of all laws, and in the formation of the executive and judicial departments of the government, the constitution of Maryland would be utterly unworthy of the age. But the unjust apportionment of representatives to the house of delegates is not the only objection felt by me, and entertained by those who are my constituents, to the present state constitution. I desire to see all life estates abolished, and a less tyrannical, and more economical judiciary establishment created. I desire to see power given to the people to elect their own governor, senators and county officers, and hope the day is not far distant when Marylanders will enjoy like privileges, in the choice of all those who make and administer the laws, to those that are now enjoyed by the people of nearly every state in the union. I know that great pains are taken by many men to inflame the public mind and intimidate the friends of a convention. These artificers for that purpose have had, and shall have, no influence on my determination. I know the present constitution was formed by a convention of delegates chosen by the people. If the people of Maryland, in the midst of a revolution, could calmly assemble, by their representatives, and form a constitution, in the name of common sense, why cannot we do so now. We are at peace with the whole world, and have no cause to apprehend that we shall not continue at peace with one another. And if so, with the advantages of experience under our own constitution, and with opportunities to observe the action of governments all around us, such as the people of Maryland appear to desire, why may we not peaceably, speedily and harmoniously proceed to do justice to all parts of the state, by forming a constitution well calculated to protect and foster all its various interests.

The population of the state appears to be willing to make an honorable compromise with the counties, by giving to each of them, without regard to the numbers of their inhabitants, the right to elect a senator, and there can be no good reason why the representatives of the counties should not in return give to the population a small increase of the number of its representatives in the house of delegates. All good and permanent governments are formed in compromise, and I have no reason to fear that the people of Montgomery, in the midst of whom I was born and have ever lived, will disapprove the course which I have adopted, since it is calculated to afford an opportunity to the whole people of the state to meet in convention, and there by a spirit of magnanimity worthy of freemen, lay the foundations of a government, republican in its character and impartial in its dispensations of benefits and burdens to the whole people, for whose good and happiness it is to be created. The political panic makers may, for a time, stagger and alarm the timid. But there will be such a reaction as will carry dismay to the hearts of those desperate men, who, for mere party purposes, are now jeopardizing the peace and good order of society, by circulating the most disgraceful and unfounded falsehoods.

To the people of Montgomery, by whom I was elected, I beg leave to tender now publicly my heartfelt gratitude for their generous and prompt approbation of my course, and to invite them to unite with the republicans of other portions of Maryland, in that spirit which did honor to, and immortalized the patriots of seventy-six, in the good and just work of establishing peaceably and soberly a form of government worthy of the descendants of Chase, Carroll and Paca. I am, very respectfully, your fellow citizen,

WASHINGTON DUVAL.

From the Baltimore Republican of Wednesday last.
TO THE PUBLIC.

I perceive, that some of the newspapers continue to insist that I am about to go to Annapolis, and unite with the twenty-one electors in the election of a state senate. Nothing that I have said justifies such statements. After I returned from Annapolis, having signed the address to the people of Maryland, with eighteen other electors, I said publicly that I would not go again to Annapolis to elect a senate, unless instructed to do so, by a majority of those who had elected me; and that I would not, even if such instructions were given, assist to make a senate, until I was first fully satisfied that the other eighteen gentlemen, who have signed the address with me, could justly say that I had fulfilled all the engagements into which I have entered with them. Several weeks have passed since I made these public declarations, and no such instructions have been given to me; neither do I believe that any considerable portion of my political friends wish me to go again to Annapolis as an elector of senate. This being the case, I desire to say distinctly, that I have neither heard nor seen any thing to make me change the opinions expressed in the address to the people of Maryland; nor have I any intention whatever, to change the position taken by me in that address. This statement is given in the hope that it will assist to quiet the excitement, which unfortunately, and without good cause, prevails. The people of Maryland, when once well satisfied that they have the power to amend the old constitution of the state, or form a new one, by choosing delegates to a convention, will proceed, I have no doubt, to elect their delegates to a convention for that purpose. And I am equally confident that my friends and neighbors of Anne Arundel county, of all political parties, have too much good sense and love of country, to refuse to meet the people of other counties of the state, to arrange all our public affairs, so as to produce general content and prosperity. It is proposed that each county shall send an equal number of delegates to the convention; and in such a body, no man ought to doubt, that all parts of the state, will find complete protection for all kinds of property, and all possible public and private interests. I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WESLEY LINTHICUM.

Baltimore, Oct. 11th, 1836.

MASSACHUSETTS MECHANICS.

From the Boston Courier.

The Massachusetts Charitable Mechanic association celebrated, on Thursday, the 16th inst. its tenth triennial festival. The association walked in procession from Concert Hall to the Odeon, where prayers were offered by the Rev. Mr. ROGERS, select passages of scripture were read by the Rev. Mr. PIERPONT, and an address was delivered by JAMES L. HOMER, esq. The address was plain, practical, sensible and judicious, without affectation of style or delivery. The orator took a rapid view of some of the improvements of late years, and urged the propriety of vigorous measures to promote their progress.

After the services at the Odeon, the procession was again formed, and proceeded to Faneuil Hall, where a dinner was provided. STEPHEN FAIRBANKS, esq. president of the association, presided at the table. Among the guests were the mayor and aldermen, the president of the common council, judge Thacher, hon. Abbot Lawrence, the president of the senate, Rev. Messrs. Homer, of Newton, Rogers, Pierpont and Sharp, of Boston; Messrs. W. Sturgis, J. Phillips, G. Bond, and T. B. Wales, merchants; several distinguished members of the bar, the president and past presidents of the Salem Mechanic association, &c. &c. The Rev. Dr. HOMER made a prayer at the table.

After thanks had been returned by the Rev. Dr. SHARP, the president gave the following sentiment: "Agriculture, commerce and the mechanic arts—The base, the shaft and the capital of the column which supports the colossal figure of our republic. May each branch be like the tree of life, whose leaves are for the healing of the nations."

Among other toasts were the following: "Practical mechanics—May their workshops be schools of science, where industry can produce wealth from the cheapest material—may their houses be the abode of peace, the home of content, the sanctuary of virtue."

A toast having been given, paying a just tribute to the worthy mayor of the city—

Mr. ARMSTRONG (the mayor) rose and said—

I rise, Mr. President, to acknowledge the obligation conferred by the reference to me in the sentiment which has just been delivered. By the favor of my fellow citizens, I am in this place to-day; and gratitude for such an honor will best be shown by readily complying with your invitation.

During the hour which has just passed, while surveying this great company of my brother mechanics, my thoughts have roved to Russia, Poland, and other distant countries, and I have compared our lot here with the lot of mechanics there. The condition of our fathers, too, just before and preceding the revolutionary struggle, has occupied my mind. Let us but contrast our full supply with their hard fare, our liberal pay with their scanty rewards, our unceasing calls for labor with their inconstant employment. How greatly are our present enjoyments enhanced in value by the contrast. How much should our gratitude be excited by the contemplation of the goodness of God; how firmly should we pursue those measures which will tend to perpetuate and transmit those blessings, rewarding the sacrifices of those who have preceded us, by laboring for those who shall come after us. The well-spread board, like that of to-day, was not their possession, probably was never within the scope of their hopes. If we would fulfil the just expectations which posterity will form of us, we must, like our fathers, be men of deeds—for, sir, words alone will not suffice.

It was said somewhere that mechanics are a degraded class. If we are a degraded class in the estimation of others, the fault is our own. Employment is not degrading. Industry, economy, frugality, temperance, are not degrading qualities. Labor is not degrading. My reverend friend alluded to the example of labor in the garden of Eden. Throughout the Bible, industry and frugality are inculcated by precept and by example. You, Mr. President, know who said, "My father worketh hitherto, and I work." The industrious classes are not certainly without illustrious examples.

This day, sir, is a great occasion. Probably the sun in his course does not shine on an assembly more interesting than this, which is now before me—possessed of all that makes life desirable, free, independent, intelligent; enjoying temperately the fruits of honest labor in useful vocations. Who, beholding this company, but will allow that man can govern himself; that labor is consistent with intellectual improvement, and with a preparation for a future state of enjoyment and improvement? The day has passed when the active must say to the idle, ye are honorable, but we are despised. The world is no longer upside down.

But I will not weary you with further remark, except to introduce the sentiment with which I shall conclude what I have to say at this time. It is manifestly unjust, Mr. President, to confine the term industrious to those alone who labor at mechanical employments; the farm, the factory, the study, the ship, the shop, contribute alike to the public welfare. Allow me, then, Mr. President, to propose this sentiment:

"The legitimate rewards of industry—Health in time of youth—competence in time of age—and honor at all times."

ANOTHER TOAST.

*"Our colleges and schools—*The enginery, whose mighty power gives security to freedom, energy to patriotism, impulse to genius, ardor to virtue, and constancy to truth."

[The president here read a letter from Mr. Quincy, the president of Harvard university, stating that he had relied upon joining the association in the festivities of the day, but was prevented by official duties, of a nature not to be omitted. He offered the following sentiment: "The mechanic interest—success and support to it; as being at once the fulcrum which sustains, and the lever which elevates national prosperity."]

*"Our representative in congress—*An enlightened statesman, a munificent merchant, a trusty friend, an honest man. The value of his services is manifested by the regret of his constituents at the prospect of losing them."

Hon. Abbot Lawrence rose amid loud and repeated cheers. He alluded to the kind and flattering reception of the toast which had reference to him, and stated very briefly some of the reasons which induced him to accede to his nomination as a representative to congress; and of those which he thought forbade him to be a candidate for re-election. He spoke of the responsibilities of the man who undertakes to represent in congress the various interests of this district—one of the most numerous in its population of any in the union. He then adverted to the important influence exerted by the mechanics in all that concerns the public welfare, and spoke with great feeling in regard to his having been recently admitted an honorary member of the association. He concluded with this sentiment:

"The memory of col. Paul Revere—one of the patriot mechanics of the revolution, and the first president of this association."

*"Our merchants—*Their honor is a capital that can never fail; their credit a currency always above par; they never barter principle for interest, nor permit drafts upon their public spirit to be protested."

Mr. Sturgis rose and said he could not suffer that draft to be protested. He said that, in the early part of his life, his home was on the deep. He had sailed thousands, tens of thousands, and he believed he might say hundreds of thousands of miles, with a perfect feeling of safety, relying on the skill and fidelity of the Boston mechanics. And this confidence had never been disappointed. Since he had been in extensive business as a merchant, a period of more than thirty years, it was in his power to say, and he thought it but a matter of duty to say, now that he was about retiring from active business, that, in all that period, extensive as his connexions with the mechanics had been, he had never had a law suit with one of them—he could say, with truth, that he had hardly had even a misunderstanding. After referring to the respectability and influence of this class of the people, and expressing his sense of the honor he felt in his associations and intercourse with them, he concluded with the following sentiment:

*"The young mechanics of Massachusetts—*In this age of innovation, may they not innovate upon the industry and integrity of their fathers."

The rev. Dr. Homer, of Newton, having signified his wish to offer a sentiment, rose and said—

Mr. President of the respected charitable and moral society before me: Permit me, as a son of pure mechanic blood, to offer the following sentiment, drawn from the correspondence of an early and beloved classmate, Isaac Coffin, now an English admiral of the first rank, baronet of Great Britain, and grand cross of Hanover. I wish it to be associated with Trimountain water, which, during his several visits to this his dear birth-place, he always drank to the table toasts, whenever I had the pleasure of dining in his company. The sentiment is: *"Our ancient fathers of every grade—*No speculation, arising from an intense desire of becoming suddenly rich, consigning families to poverty, formed a part of their character. Perseverance in their respective callings, connected with inflexible honesty and perfect temperance, were their safe guides to competence or occasional affluence." Citizens of Boston, and others present, point your children and your children's children to their fair and happy example. "However the moderns may excel us in science, (so sir Isaac), in probity the ancients are equal." You will permit me, most respected sir, to add an illustrating sentence, the fruit of his personal acquaintance with the cited individual master mechanics of old Boston. "Homer, (including the very respected grand sire of the orator of the day, and my honored father), Daws, Tileston, Clements, cum multis aliis, LIVED WELL AND DIED REGRETTED."

To this let me add a curious article, which had such an important bearing on his future promotion, and his pre-eminently active character, especially as port-admiral, fitting out at the shortest notice fleets for the ocean. "Salt the cooper, Brewer and his son, block makers and Cotton" the blacksmith, were my masters in my school-boy days. Thursdays and Saturdays, (in part holidays), I have WORKED HARD WITH THEM. The knowledge I then acquired has been of infinite service to me, during the time I was actually employed in the naval line. These reminiscences, (as closely connected with our mutually dear Boston), comfort me much in my declining years."

The following toast was next drank:

*"The clergy—mechanics of the highest order—*operatives in various handy-work. As tailors they fit us with good habits; as printers they correct our errors; as bakers they raise our heavy hearts till the whole lump is leavened; as gaugers and survey-

*The father of a very distinguished member and founder of the mechanic association.

†Sundry exposures of his person by ship disasters, and his once jumping, (in 1794), with hat, coat and boots from a frigate's deck into the beating waves of the North, at the cry, "a man is overboard," and snatching him from a watery grave, at the imminent hazard of his own life, have brought infirmities on his person, which disable him, at seventy-seven years of age, from revisiting his native shores.

ors they rectify our spirits; the cordwainers admit their skill in mending souls; and all of us, who are married, are indebted to their faculty as joiners. Verily, the laborer is worthy of his hire."

The rev. Mr. Pierpont said that the toast which had just been announced by the chairman had sufficiently explained why the mechanics and the clergy should be bound together. And as it represented the clergy as men of all work, it would be a pity if none of them could be found able to make a speech. And though, perhaps, it would be unnecessary to say any thing more on that point, he might be excused for adding that the clergy and the Massachusetts Charitable Mechanic association ought to be associated together, as being alike engaged in the good work of succoring the widow and the fatherless. He remembered that some years ago, when the association appeared in procession, each member or officer wore upon his breast the badge of the association, with the motto, "Be just and fear not." He observed, that on this occasion they were without these badges. He knew of no other reason why that honorable motto was now absent from that place, unless it might be that the members had determined to wear it for the future in their hearts instead of on the outside. He alluded to some remarks that had been made by the orator of the day, in which a proper and just tribute had been paid to English skill and ingenuity. He was the more rejoiced at this, because he had lately had an opportunity of observing that such a spirit of true justice was not wanting on the other side of the water. He overheard a conversation, while in England, between two gentlemen, respecting the immense improvements of late years in the cotton manufacture. One of them, not knowing that Mr. P. was an American, said, "It is a fact that every important machine now used in England in the cotton manufacture originated in America." When in the east, the captain of the steamboat which run between Smyrna and Constantinople said to Mr. P. "The world is indebted to your country for the two greatest and most beneficial inventions ever made—steamboats and temperance societies." Mr. Pierpont then descanted upon the benefits to the world of these two inventions, and gave as a sentiment, (which was drunk, at least by the giver, in cold water):

*"Hot water and cold water—*The first, the greatest source on earth of mechanical power; the last, the safest thing on earth to direct and control that power."

ANOTHER TOAST. "The law; our city of refuge—our lawyers, the watchmen on its walls. We expect them to be the defenders of our liberty, the protectors of innocence, the champions of right, the avengers of wrong."

Mr. Austin (attorney general) replied to this toast, which he said was the first he had ever known to be given at a similar entertainment, complimentary to the profession to which he belonged, and gave an account of the dissolution of the associations of the bar, which had recently taken place in this city and in other counties of the Commonwealth. After some remarks complimentary to the mechanics as the invariable friends of law and order, he proposed the following sentiment: "The intellectual, moral and physical powers, as exhibited in the general character of the mechanics of our country; their united strength will keep the ship of state safe at its moorings, in the wildest storms of the political elements."

The president, addressing himself to the company, said: About forty years since, a few enterprising and philanthropic mechanics assembled together and formed themselves into a society for the promotion of the arts, and for charitable purposes.—Of the benefits resulting from this association, it is not now my purpose to speak. We may, however, be permitted to congratulate ourselves, that, by the blessing of Providence, several of this patriotic band are now with us. Here they are, gentlemen, living monuments of the value of their own motto—"Be just and fear not." I propose the following sentiment: "The founders of our institution: their children have risen up and called them blessed." May their children's children say amen.

Benjamin Russell, esq. one of the founders alluded to, then addressed to the company, by way of response, a few reminiscences, and offered a sentiment, which is not at hand. Henry Purkitt, esq. another of the original members, also addressed the association, and concluded with a sentiment. Mr. J. T. Buckingham said he would avail himself of the occasion to remind his brethren of the association of another of the original members—only nine or ten of whom were now living—a gentleman who had, in former years, been an active and successful mechanic, and one whose public services ought not to be forgotten; one who had for many years served his fellow citizens as one of their selectmen, as a representative and a senator, but who, for some years past, had lived in retirement, and withdrawn himself almost entirely from any intercourse with the world. He would not enter into a detail of the causes of this retirement; they would be painful for him to relate, and equally so to his friends to hear, and they were also too well known to require a detail. He asked leave to offer as a sentiment, "Jonathan Hunnewell: May his last days be as peaceful and happy as his early years were prosperous and useful."

BALTIMORE AND OHIO RAIL ROAD.

TENTH ANNUAL REPORT

Of the president and directors to the stockholders of the Baltimore and Ohio rail road company.

In obedience to the requisitions of the charter, the president and directors propose to lay before the stockholders a statement of the affairs of the Baltimore and Ohio rail road company, for the official year, ending on the 1st of October, 1836.

In the ninth annual report, the board announced the completion of the main stem to Harper's Ferry, and of the branch road to Washington. Since then, the Winchester and Potomac rail road, which is virtually a prolongation of the Baltimore and Ohio rail road up the valley of the Shenandoah, has been opened for general use. At present, some delay and difficulty take place in transporting goods and passengers from one road to the other. This, however, will be obviated, when the viaduct across the Potomac is finished. The stone piers of this structure have been completed for some time, and the wood work will be ready for the passage of cars during the present year. The passenger and burden trains of the two companies will then stop, side by side, in the same depot, and the transit from one to the other will be effected promptly and with great convenience.

Surveys are now in progress for the extension of a rail road from Winchester to Staunton, and there is reason to believe that this work will be undertaken. It is of great importance to Baltimore, and, when completed, will furnish a continuous rail road of two hundred and fifteen miles in length, from this city into the heart of Virginia.

In the last annual report, the results of the reconnaissance of the chief engineer of the route for a rail road from Cumberland westward were laid before the stockholders; and the general satisfaction that they afforded, and the sentiment universally expressed, that the time had arrived for the adoption of vigorous measures in the prosecution of the road to the points of its original destination, caused the board, early in the spring, to organize an engineer force, for the purpose of making detailed surveys and examinations between Harper's Ferry and the summit of the Alleghany, with a view of continuing them, afterwards, to Pittsburgh and Wheeling. Four brigades, under the charge of competent officers, were accordingly employed, and have since, without interruption, been diligently at work. A continuous line has been surveyed from Harper's Ferry to the top of the dividing ridge between the eastern and western waters, and the engineers are now engaged in making the surveys on either side of the first line necessary to determine the best route for the location of the road. The rough and mountainous country over which the surveys have to be carried, and the importance of leaving no practicable route, of the many that present themselves, unexamined, render the labors of the engineers, necessarily, very tedious; and it will be some time yet before the exact route to be adopted can be ascertained. The board have considered these surveys as one of the most important subjects claiming their attention, and have urged them forward with all diligence; in doing which they have been fully seconded by the officers in charge of them. So far as they have gone, they have been very satisfactory, and fully corroborate the fact stated in the last annual report upon the reconnaissance of the chief engineer, "that the mountains between Cumberland and the western waters can be passed, without the use of stationary power, by locomotive engines and their trains." For a full account of surveys, up to the end of the current official year, reference is made to the reports of the chief engineer, and the engineer of location in the appendix A.

In the month of August last, the brigade employed on the Potomac above Harper's Ferry was broken up by the severe illness of nearly every one of its members, owing to the unhealthiness of the region in which they were at work. Protracted indisposition ensued; and it is only recently that the brigade has been reorganized. The country upon the Potomac will not be sufficiently healthy for the brigade to resume its labors there before the first of November. In the mean time, it has been directed to institute surveys at Parr's Spring ridge, with a view to the relocation of the road there, so as to dispense with the inclined planes, that have so long been a source of heavy expense and injurious delay. When originally located, the then state of knowledge, on the subject of rail roads, and their machinery, and the character of the country for a long distance on either side of the point of crossing the ridge, left no alternative but to adopt them. Since then, however, the astonishing development that has taken place of the capacities of locomotive engines makes it certain that the ridge where the planes occur can be surmounted by a uniform grade, adapted to the economical and efficient use of locomotive power. When this is accomplished, the interest of the stockholders and the public will be mutually and most materially advanced.

At the December session of the legislature of Maryland, eighteen hundred and thirty-five, the board of directors memorialized that body, praying for aid to complete the road to Pittsburgh and Wheeling;—and, at the same time, a similar application was made to the mayor and city council of Baltimore. The latter, at once, and with great liberality, and responding to the universal sentiment pervading this community, resolved to subscribe three millions of dollars to the capital stock of the company, whenever the existing legal difficulties were removed, which prevented, at that time, the extension of the work in an unbroken line, westward, from Harper's Ferry. The bill before the legislature, however, for subscribing to the stock of this company, and also in aid of other works of internal improvement in which the state was interested, met with determined and strong opposition; and, at the end of a protracted session, the subject was postponed to an adjourned meeting of the legislature in May ensuing. In the interval, a numerous and highly respectable convention, the interest of which attracted delegates from Pittsburgh and Wheeling, was held in Baltimore; and the various subjects connected with the internal improvements of the state were fully discussed. When the legislature reassembled in May, the subject was again brought before it; and a law was finally passed by a large majority, containing, among other subscriptions, one of three millions of dollars to the capital stock of the Baltimore and Ohio rail road company. This law released the company from the restrictions that prevented the extension of the rail road westward from Harper's Ferry, and, in so doing, enabled it to comply with the condition annexed to the subscription by the mayor and city council. Before the law could take effect, however, it was necessary that it should receive the assent of both the Baltimore and Ohio rail road and the Chesapeake and Ohio canal company. The assent of the first was, as the stockholders are already aware, given at the general meeting held on the 18th July last. The assent of the latter was delayed, in consequence of apprehensions entertained by some of its stockholders that the provisions of the law, in regard to the joint construction of the rail road and canal, along the Potomac, would, if carried into operation, materially impair the permanency and usefulness of the canal. To obviate this difficulty, the stockholders of the rail road company, at their meeting of the 26th July last, authorised the board of directors to enter into stipulations with the canal company, touching the matters in question; and the apprehensions of the canal company being thereby removed, its assent was given to the law, which, in consequence, went into immediate operation. A copy of the stipulation with the canal company, entered into by the board, in conformity with the directions of the stockholders, will be found in the appendix.

The subscription to the stock of this company authorised by the law of the extra session, was made to depend upon a guarantee being given to pay six per cent. per annum, to the state on the amount subscribed by it, at the end of three years from the payment of each of the state's instalments; with the proviso, that should the profits of the road exceed six per cent. the state was to receive no greater dividend in consequence, but the excess to be divided among the other stockholders. In consideration of the interest, so to be secured to the state, the company was authorised to charge one cent per mile, in addition to its present charge for each person transported upon the road. At their general meeting on the 13th of July, the stockholders directed the preparation of the guarantee in question, which was accordingly prepared and transmitted, as required by the law, to the treasurer of the western shore. A copy of it will be found in the appendix. The right of the company to make the additional charge is now perfected. Had it been made during the last official year, the net revenue of the main stem would have been doubtless much greater than it has been.

Another important provision, contained in the law of the extra session, is that which releases the company from the obligation to erect "a close fence of boards" between the rail road and canal, at the narrow passes from the Point of Rocks to Harper's Ferry, as a condition precedent to the use of steam between the two places; provided the rail road company shall first tender to the canal company the price of a post and rail fence, for the corresponding portions of the river edge of the towing path. The objections to building the board fence were such that they prevented (and but for the law of the extra session would have continued to prevent) the use of steam above the Point of Rocks, and obliged the rail road company to maintain an expensive horse power to do the transportation thence to the ferry, a distance of twelve miles, which the engines, that crossed the valley of the Monocacy, could have done with but little additional cost. As soon as the commissioners appointed under the act shall have ascertained the cost of the post and rail fence, it will be tendered to the canal company, and the locomotives, that are now obliged to stop at the Point of Rocks, will supersede the horse power beyond that place, and continue their route to Harper's Ferry.

With regard to the other provisions of the law of the extra session, it is not the intention of the board to enter into detail. The act itself was before the stockholders for their acceptance, and they must be sufficiently familiar with its provisions. Those parts of it only, requiring the present action of the stockholders or the board, have been particularly referred to. The board are gratified in being able to announce to the stockholders, that the various conditions precedent to subscription, which it contains having been complied with, the subscription of the treasurer of the western shore for thirty thousand shares of the capital stock of the company, ($3,000,000) was made on the 23d of September last; and also, that on the 27th of the same month, the same amount of stock was subscribed, under the ordinance to that effect, by the mayor of Baltimore.

Six millions of dollars have thus been added to the effective means of the company for the prosecution of the rail road to the western waters.—What the amount that will be necessary, to finish the work to Pittsburgh and Wheeling, may be, it is impossible, at this time to say, with any approximation to accuracy. Every effort is being made to complete the surveys to ascertain it. Cost what the road may, however, it will be a cheap road to Baltimore; as, restoring to her the trade of which the great works of rival cities have deprived her, it will place her in possession once more, and forever, of all the advantages to be derived from her geographical proximity to the west.

The time limited in the charter for the completion of the main stem within the state of Maryland, extending only to the 4th July, 1838, an act, prolonging the period for five years from that date, was applied for and obtained at the last session of the legislature.

In the year 1835, the legislature of Pennsylvania incorporated a company to construct a canal from the great Pennsylvania canal, at Columbia, to the Maryland line, along the eastern shore of the Susquehannah. At the following session, this company applied for permission to change the location of the proposed canal, with a view of constructing it on the western side of the river, and prolonging it, under authority from Maryland to a terminus in the neighborhood of Havre de Grace. The legislature of Pennsylvania gave the desired permission; but upon condition that the Baltimore and Ohio rail road company should first assent to the junction, with the main stem of their work, of a rail road from Pennsylvania, entering Maryland on the dividing line between the former state and Washington county, and striking the Baltimore and Ohio rail road at or near Hagerstown or Williamsport.—To have assented to this, unconditionally, would have put it in the power of the connecting rail road companies of Pennsylvania, by lowering their rates of toll, to abstract the travel and transportation from the Baltimore and Ohio rail road, east of the point of junction, diverting it along their respective roads to the rival city of Philadelphia—and so enabling the latter, notwithstanding its greater distance from the western waters, to receive or forward goods as cheaply as could be done at or from Baltimore; thus making a work, constructed with the means of Maryland, enure to the benefit of the commercial emporium of a rival state, that had contributed nothing to the undertaking. Pledged as the Baltimore and Ohio rail road company now is, to pay to the state six per cent. on its late subscription, it would have been impossible, with any regard to the interests of the stockholders, to reduce the toll, in competition with works, many of which were the property of the state of Pennsylvania, and the policy of all of which would have been to attract the business from the Baltimore and Ohio rail road, east of the point of junction, to themselves. With a view of obviating this difficulty, a condition was inserted in the act, that in case of a reduction of the tolls on the Pennsylvania works in connection, mediately or immediately, with the Baltimore and Ohio rail road, the tolls on that road, west of the point of junction, might be increased in proportion; so as to keep the charges on persons, goods or produce, going to or coming from Pennsylvania, uniform throughout the distance they were to be transported; thus putting it in the power of the Baltimore and Ohio rail road company to countervail, at all times, the effects of a reduction of tolls on the Pennsylvania roads in connection of their own work. The law of Pennsylvania, with this provision, has been assented to by the board of directors, and has gone into operation. To have refused the assent, would have been illiberal towards Pennsylvania, which had already permitted a connection by Maryland with her works, in the cases of the rail road to York and the canal along the Susquehannah, as well as inconsistent with the spirit of the age, which is to multiply all means of intercommunication, and increase the number of markets accessible to the producer; and it would, besides, have deprived the citizens of Baltimore, deeply interested in the Susquehannah improvement, of what was deemed of great value to them and to the community. The road from Pennsylvania, whose junction with the main stem, is to comply with the provisions of the above law, has not yet been designated.

In several of their preceding reports, the board of directors have adverted to the efforts made by them to perfect a locomotive engine, adapted to the curved character of their road, and capable of using anthracite coal as fuel; and the very satisfactory results obtained have been, from time to time, detailed. The further experience of the board fully justifies the steps heretofore taken by them in this particular. There are now eleven first rate locomotive engines in use upon the main stem and Washington branch, all of which have been manufactured at the company's shops; and six more are being built, which, it is expected, will, when the road over Parr's ridge is relocated, and reconstructed without inclined planes, enable the company to dispense entirely with the use of horse power, except in the city of Baltimore. A very considerable diminution in the cost of working the road will thus be effected.

Since the death of Phineas Davis, mentioned in the last annual report, Messrs. Gillingham and Winans have taken the company's shops, at the Mount Clare depot, and continue there the manufacture of locomotive engines and rail road machinery, commenced by Mr. Davis. Within the last year, the force employed by them has been considerably increased; a circumstance much to the interest of the company, as it furnishes the means of a prompt compliance with the wants of the road, and, when this is extended westward, will insure a supply of locomotive power and the various necessary machinery, as fast as it is wanted. It may be observed here, that the work shops at the Mount Clare depot are carried on by Messrs. Gillingham and Winans, independent of the company. They are bound by contract to supply the company with locomotive engines, and all other rail road machinery, at a stipulated price, and, at all times, to give precedence to the company's demands for work. They have the use of the ground and buildings occupied by them, with the fixed machinery left by Mr. Davis, without rent, being bound to keep the same in repair, and return them as they received them. In consideration of this, they manufacture the company's engines, so much below the market price for them elsewhere, that the interest on the cost of buildings and fixed machinery, above mentioned, is fully paid; and, indeed, it would take but a little while, when the extension of the road westward required a larger number of engines, to reimburse to the company the entire outlay for the shops at the Mount Clare depot.

Recent experiments, made with the two last engines built by Messrs. Gillingham and Winans, shew a power of traction exerted by them when the weight of the engine was but eight tons—much exceeding the greatest power that has yet been exerted on the Liverpool and Manchester rail road by a twelve ton engine. When the necessity of having powerful engines to overcome the heavy grades and sharp curves, that must be encountered in the mountain region, is considered, the results here mentioned cannot be too highly appreciated. They make that easy, which, but a few years since, would have been deemed impossible; and the practicability of passing the Alleghanies with locomotive engines and their trains is owing, not more to the topographical advantages of the particular route, than to the powerful machines that have been invented and perfected in the work shops of the company. For particulars of the experiments with the locomotive engines, reference is made to the report of the chief engineer on the subject. Appendix B.

The gross receipts from the main stem during the year ending on the 1st instant, have been $281,966 87, exceeding the gross receipts of the preceding year by $18,598 77. The expenses of transportation during the same period have been $128,177 41, exceeding those of the preceding year by $14,210 23. The repairs of the road for the year just ended have been $53,401 32, while the repairs of the year ending October 1st, 1835, amounted to but $25,103 63, making a difference of $27,997 69. The repairs of machinery and cars have also exceeded the repairs of the preceding year by $9,380.

It will be at once observed, that the expenses of transportation have increased in a much greater proportion than the gross revenue. This is to be accounted for by the extraordinary inclemency of the winter of 1835-'36. The frequent falls of snow, lying for a long time upon the ground, alternating with rain and cold freezing weather, so coated the rails, as to prevent, very frequently, the use of steam for transportation, and made it necessary to employ a number of horses to prevent the business of the road from being interrupted. The snow was often so deep, and the ice on the rails so thick, as to defy the ordinary modes of removing them, and the employment of gangs of laborers became necessary for the purpose.

It is gratifying to the board to be able to state that while many of the rail roads to the north of the Potomac were either obliged to suspend operations altogether, or were interrupted for days together, by the inclemency of the season, not a single trip was lost either on the main stem of the Baltimore and Ohio rail road, or on the lateral road to Washington.

It will also be observed that the repairs of the road, which in the year ending October 1st, 1835, amounted to but $25,103 63, have this year been increased to $53,101 32, which is to be attributed to the decay of the wooden string piece, upon which the iron rail has been laid on a considerable part of the line of the road. This it was expected, when it was adopted, would last, from eight to ten years: on the contrary, during the last year, after it had been in use but six years, and some of it not so long, the wooden string piece very generally requires replacing. The graduation and masonry of the road continue in good order along the entire line; the repairs, which form so large an item among the charges against the income, occur in the superstructure—thus corroborating the opinion, which is now generally entertained, that where the means can be obtained with which to procure it, a heavy iron rail is the best and most economical in the end.

The repairs of machinery, engines and cars have also, as is seen above, considerably exceeded those of the year ending October 1st, 1835. This is owing chiefly to the increased number of locomotive engines now in use upon the road.

On the Washington road, the gross receipts, since it was opened, including a part of the year ending October 1st, 1835, have been $178,333 95, of which the state tax, amounting to $40,564 26, is a part. The expenses of transportation upon this road have been but $26,540 47, or nearly fifteen per cent. of the gross receipts, while the expenses of transportation upon the main stem are 45 1-2 per cent. of the gross receipts. The difference is to be chiefly attributed to the more ample charge allowed for the transportation of passengers on the branch road, and to the fact of steam being employed exclusively as the moving power throughout. When the planes at Parr's ridge are done away with, and horse power on the main stem superseded entirely by steam, the result, with the increased toll authorized by the act of May session, will be in proportion favorable on this road also. The expenses of repairs of the Washington road have been $15,423 17, of which the sum of $10,000 is properly chargeable to construction—having been spent in the removal of slides and the adjustment of embankments, and forming a part of the cost of construction as justly as the original excavation and graduation of the road bed. The net earnings of this road since it was opened, and which constitutes a fund for dividends, amount to $38,772 03. Besides the dividend that the main stem is entitled to receive as a stockholder in the Washington branch, it must be borne in mind, that a considerable sum is annually received by the former for the use of that part of the road which is common to both works. The board have little doubt, therefore, that the receipts from the Washington branch will be more than sufficient to meet the interest on the money borrowed by the main stem to construct it; and indeed the increase of travel and transportation between Baltimore and Washington has been such, since this means of intercommunication has been opened, that there is every reason to believe, that the net profits of the branch, exceeding six per cent. per annum, will become a source of income to the main stem, fully justifying the company in undertaking to construct it.

In the last annual report, the board expressed the belief that they would, thereafter, be enabled to make regular semi-annual dividends among the stockholders. In making this assertion the board believed that they would be borne out by the increasing business of the road. Not only did they anticipate the increase, which past experience had led them to expect, but they were under the impression, that, upon the opening of a continuous rail road communication with Winchester, the additional trade and travel would so add to the income of the company, as insure the payment of regular dividends to the stockholders. They were under the impression too, that the receipts from the Washington branch would be sufficient to meet the interest due on the money borrowed by the company to pay for its stock in that work. In these anticipations the board of directors found themselves, when the time for declaring the expected dividend arrived, disappointed. And they have found it necessary to call for an instalment of five dollars per share on the stock.

On the first of October, 1835, at the date of the last annual report, the receipts of the company for the preceding six months had amounted to $148,541 63. Instead of this amount being received for the ensuing six months, ending on the first of April, 1836, when the dividend should have been made, the receipts were but $124,614 23, making a difference of $23,927 40. Again, the board had no reason to believe, that the general expenses of the company for the six months, ending on the first of April, 1836, would exceed the expenses of the six months immediately preceding. The expenses of the latter exceeded, however, the expenses of the former period, by $26,320 70, making, in the two items alone, a deficiency, not anticipated on the 1st of October, 1835, of $50,248 10. The causes of this diminution of receipts and increase of expenses have been already stated in a previous part of this report. The board had expected too, that the 30,000, interest due on the money borrowed to make the Washington branch, on the 1st of April, 1836, would have been met by the dividends received from that work. Instead of this, however, it became a charge upon the main stem, making, with the items already enumerated, the sum of $80,248 10, by which the disposable revenue of the company was reduced below what had been anticipated, when the belief that regular dividends could be declared, was expressed in the report of October, 1835. These matters are stated at length, to explain why it was that, with the confident belief entertained by them at the date of their annual report, the board of directors still found themselves unable to continue the payment of semi-annual dividends.

During the current year, the construction of the Potomac viaduct—additional sidings and turnouts—right of way and damages—surveys—real estate, and construction of depots and water stations—locomotive steam power and machinery have caused expenditures properly chargeable to the capital stock, but which have had to be met, in anticipation of instalments, by the revenue as it accrued. The amount of the capital in the main stem is $3,311,250, while the money actually expended is $3,474,600 08. On the Washington branch, the capital paid in is $1,500,000, and the capital expended, is $1,588,899 61; making on the main stem, an over expenditure of capital of $163,350 08, and on the Washington branch an over expenditure of $88,899 61; in all an over expenditure of capital of $252,249 69. To meet this, the company has borrowed money, and has appropriated the net revenue on the main stem and also the net revenue from the Washington branch. To discharge the debt for borrowed money due, as aforesaid, the instalment above mentioned has been called for.—The amount that has been appropriated out of the revenue of the main stem and applied to purposes connected with the construction thereof, and not to general expenses, other than construction, it is proposed, shall be divided by the number of shares of stock in the main stem, and each share credited with its proportion, as so much paid on it. In the Washington branch, where the stock has been paid in full, this means of giving to the stockholders the benefit of the revenue, which has been appropriated to construction, cannot be adopted. A new stock, to the desired amount, may therefore be created, sold, and the proceeds divided among the stockholders. For an amount of the receipts, expenditures and condition of the company, on the 1st instant, reference is made to the accompanying statement C.

Of the ultimate profit of the Baltimore and Ohio rail road to the stockholders, the board of directors can only here reiterate the favorable opinion that they have so often heretofore expressed. To doubt its making a return on the outlay, when it shall be completed to the western waters, is impossible, when the probable travel and transportation upon it then, is considered. There is hardly a rail road in the country, that has been completed, that is not now realizing a handsome return on the cost of its construction; and the chief reason why this is not done by the Baltimore and Ohio road, is, that it is not completed. If it were, at this day, proposed to make a rail road to Fredericktown or Harper's Ferry—(supposing the Baltimore and Ohio rail road to the west not to be projected even), no one would be willing to undertake such a work through so difficult a region—for every one would, at once, doubt its affording an interest on its cost. To expect, therefore, that the Baltimore and Ohio rail road, which now, is not a road to the west but a road to Fredericktown and Harper's Ferry only, should make the dividends declared by the finished rail roads of the country, were vain indeed. The full extent of its profit can only be realized on its completion.

It is to be remarked here also, that when the charter of the Baltimore and Ohio rail road was granted in 1826, by the legislature of Maryland, it was the first rail road for general purposes that had been projected in the country—and so sanguine of profit were its friends, that the charge for passengers was deemed ample at three cents per mile, and for merchandise and produce, four cents eastward and six cents westward, making an average as experience shows, of about four and an half cents. Experience has since shown, that, upon a costly road, through a difficult country, these rates are too low, upon the limited amount of business that has heretofore been done by this company: and there are but few rail roads in the union on which the charges are not higher.* Combined with the low rate of charge, to which this company is limited, may be mentioned those causes of expense—the working of inclined planes, and the maintenance of an expensive horse power to be used in the city—from which other rail road companies, whose stocks give large dividends, are exempt. These matters are mentioned here, by way of showing the difference between the companies that are often cited as examples of productive institutions, and the Baltimore and Ohio rail road company, and to show that the cases are by no means parallel. The Portsmouth and Roanoke rail road for instance, is allowed to charge six cents per mile for passengers, and 8 cents per ton for freight. The Washington branch makes the same charge for passengers—but only four per cent. for freight—and has to pay a bonus of one-fifth of its receipts from passengers to the state—Were this bonus not paid, and the Portsmouth and Roanoke rates charged, it would be able to declare out of the earnings of last year alone, a dividend of eight and three-fourths per cent. to its stockholders—and at the same rates, for the same time, the main stem could have declared a dividend of eight and a half per cent. When this road is finished to the west, there can be no doubt of its productiveness; and even in the mean time, what, with the increase of toll already authorised, the avoidance of the planes at Parr's ridge, it is believed that a return may be made to the stockholders. It is the desire of the board to see the great work finished, that is to unite Baltimore indissolubly with the west. They believe that the prosperity of Baltimore depends upon it. The liberality of Maryland—the munificence of the city most interested, have contributed nobly to the enterprise; and the board cannot doubt, that when the surveys shall have ascertained beyond cavil, the expense of construction, any deficit which may exist, will forthwith be furnished.

By order of the board,

J. W. PATTERSON, president.

LOUISVILLE, CINCINNATI & CHARLESTON RAIL ROAD.

The following very interesting and important report was made by skilful engineers, at the great

*On the Petersburg rail road, for persons per mile	for goods per ton per mile
Winchester & Potomac 5 cts.	10 cts.
Portsmouth & Roanoke 6 cts.	7 cts.
Boston and Providence 6 cts.	8 cts.
Boston and Lowell 5 cts.	10 cts.
Mohawk and Hudson 3½ cts.	7 cts.
	8 cts.

meeting held at Knoxville (in Tennessee) on the 4th of July last, consisting of representatives from the states of Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama and Tennessee, in relation to the above proposed rail road—a scheme of greater magnitude than any of the kind that has been before attempted either in this country or in any other, and which, vast and extensive as it is, will, it is hoped, be effected without loss of time. [Books are to be opened to receive subscriptions for the stock in October next.]

The convention was organized by the unanimous appointment of general ROBERT Y. HAYNE, of South Carolina, to be president, and the honorable PRYOR LEA, of Tennessee, to be secretary. After sitting from day to day until the 8th, and transacting much other business, the following PREAMBLE and RESOLUTIONS, being the report of a committee of forty-five, composed of delegates from all the states interested, were UNANIMOUSLY AGREED TO by the whole convention, and ordered to be published to the world in their name and behalf.

REPORT.

The committee to whom was referred the report of the South Carolina commissioners, and the four resolutions directing them to consider the charters, and report thereon, and also to inquire and report on the practicability, probable cost, and commercial and other advantages of the proposed Louisville, Cincinnati and Charleston rail road, and also on the measures necessary to be adopted in relation thereto, have had these important subjects under consideration, and find that charters have been passed by the legislatures of South Carolina, North Carolina, Tennessee and Kentucky, for the purpose of extending a rail road from Louisville and Cincinnati to Charleston, through the states above mentioned. Having examined the provisions of these charters, the committee are of opinion that they should be accepted, and accordingly report a resolution to that effect.

With respect to the second branch of their inquiries, they report that the charters enacted by the several states require that the road shall pass through the states of Kentucky, Tennessee, North Carolina and South Carolina; and the committee are directed to respond to the inquiry, whether there has been found a practicable route through these states between Charleston, in South Carolina, and some point in Kentucky between the Cumberland mountains and the Kentucky river, from which point two roads may be made, one leading to Louisville, and the other to Cincinnati, by way of Lexington, and thence by a branch to Maysville. This cannot be answered better than by referring to the report of captain Williams, of the United States topographical engineers, and chief engineer of the South Carolina commissioners, which has been referred to this committee, and which, after due examination, is found to be entitled to entire confidence, as well on account of the able manner in which it has been drawn up, as the skill and accuracy of the engineers who have assisted in making the surveys. From this report, corroborated by the personal observations of many members of this committee, it will appear that within the chartered limits of the company, there is no practicable pass through the Alleghany mountains but the valley of the French Broad river; and most fortunately for the undertaking, the general direction of this river, within the mountain region, coincides with a straight line drawn from Charleston to the branching point in Kentucky; and what recommends it more strongly for adoption is the fact that its head waters rise on a level plain, which begins at the summit of the Blue ridge, and stretches to the north west in an open valley, without any descent perceptible to the eye for 30 miles, to a short distance below Asheville, in North Carolina; and for the next sixty miles it has a very regular descent to the point where it issues from the mountains, which descent, in the whole distance, averages only 13 feet to the mile; and in only one mile is there a descent of 45 feet. And while the river runs over this regular descending bed, its curvatures are such, that with no very extraordinary labor a road can be made in it to admit locomotives with their trains to pass without difficulty. This committee have no hesitation, therefore, in declaring that this must be adopted as a part of the line of our road, and that it is perfectly practicable.

The attention of the committee has next been called to the approaches to this great opening in the mountains, and particularly to those through the Blue ridge, which lead to the comparatively level country of North and South Carolina.

The Blue ridge presents two openings, which have been examined, and minutely surveyed. The first is down the Reedy Patch creek, called the Reedy Patch gap, which leads directly into Broad river. The descent here is 777 feet in the distance of 5 miles and 1,371 feet; and in the Broad river below there is a descent of 567 feet in 6 miles and 3,155 feet, to a point where the difficulties of this line terminate, and the country becomes so level as to present no serious obstructions to the use of locomotive power. By the Butt mountain and Green river the Blue ridge may be passed by an opening which leads into the valley of Broad river. From the depression of the Blue ridge at this mountain there is a descent of 198 feet in 4 miles and 2,003 feet, to the bridge on Green river, and from that bridge down the valley of that stream there is a descent of 1,102 feet in 18 miles and 3,377 feet, to a point where the level country begins, and all serious obstructions cease. A third route is found by passing the Blue ridge at the depression of the Butt mountain, and crossing the Saluda mountain into Greenville district, down Gap creek. On this line, which has been accurately surveyed, the road will have a descent of 198 feet in 4 miles and 2,003 feet, to the Green river bridge, and then down Gap creek, where the descent is 1,096 feet in 6 miles and 3,989 feet, to a point on the head waters of the middle fork of Saluda, where the obstructions to the use of steam power terminate.

One of these three passes, it is supposed, may be adopted; but which of them, it would be premature to decide. This decision can be made by the company alone, after full surveys and a careful consideration of all the attendant circumstances.

This committee, however, have no hesitation in declaring their opinion that a rail road may be made through either of these passes with much less difficulty than has been overcome on lines of road possessing in other respects no superiority to ours. Three, or, at most, four inclined planes may be here required to be worked by steam or water power, which latter element can be commanded to any extent at all of them. And when it is recollected that our road exceeds one hundred miles in length in the highest mountain region of the U. States, it is only a matter of surprise that so few of these auxiliaries to locomotive power are required. On the Alleghany and Portage rail road in Pennsylvania, the same ridge of mountains is passed by ten inclined planes.

Below the Blue ridge, (whichever pass above indicated may be adopted), the line of road will find no surface which may not be graded with great ease to locomotive power, as tested by present experience. In fact, this region to the seaboard is remarkably favorable to the use of steam power, as will at once appear when the estimates of this part of the line are presented.

Issuing from the valley of the French Broad on the north west of the Alleghany, our road may pass round the south west end of the Clinch mountain, and reach the Cumberland mountains at Cumberland gap, at Wheeler's gap, or at the Cross mountain gap; either of which may be adopted, as may be best recommended by their own facilities and the approaches to and from them. In the present state of our information, it would be presuming too much to express a preference for either. The first has been accurately surveyed by the engineers ordered by the war department on this service, and the second has been explored by captain Williams. It is supposed that one inclined plane may be required here. And from the summit of the Blue ridge to the Ohio river, a distance of 370 miles, it is probable that this will be the only inclined plane which may be required.

The committee have not had time to go into details, and must therefore refer to the report of the commissioners of S. Carolina, the report of Messrs. Gadsden, Brisbane and Holmes, and the report of capt. Williams, which, on examination, will be found fully to sustain this statement, and it is further corroborated by the personal knowledge of the committee, to some of whom every part of the line is known.

The cost of this work constitutes another branch of this inquiry. And here the committee have again to refer to the report of captain Williams, and they recommend a careful consideration of this part of it by every friend of this great work, from which the accuracy of his estimates may be duly appreciated. If any error has entered into them, it is the opinion of this committee that it will be found in placing the cost too high, rather than too low. It should be here observed that the estimates have been made on the supposition that the line of road is to be located by passing by Columbia, South Carolina, then up Broad river and the ridge between it and Thicketty creek, and by the Reedy Patch gap to the table lands of Buncombe county, North Carolina; and from the mouth of the Nolachucky, by Knoxville and Wheeler's gap, to the branching point south of the Kentucky river. This has been adopted without intending in any manner to recommend it in preference to any other. The decision on this point belongs exclusively to the company, who will be in possession of all the requisite information, (which is not the case with this committee), and this decision will be controlled by no influence but the best interests of the stockholders, which may be always assumed as coinciding with the best interests of the community. The route on which the estimates are made is assumed as the basis on which to predicate the cost of the work; and, should a shorter, better and cheaper one be obtained, this will be so much gained to the company. The following are the results of the estimates of captain Williams:

From Charleston to Branchville, 62 miles, where there is now a single track, the cost for a second will be $4,500 per mile	$279,000
From Branchville to Columbia, at 11,433 dollars per mile 62 miles	711,946
From thence to the junction of Thicketty with Broad river, 65 miles, at $12,000 per mile	780,000
Thence to the junction of Green and Broad rivers, at $14,300 per mile, 52 miles	743,600
Thence to Asheville, 40 miles, for the first ten miles through the Blue ridge $40,000 per mile, and the next 30 miles at $12,000 per mile	760,000
Thence down the French Broad to the mouth of the Nolachucky, 60 miles, at $30,000 per mile	1,800,000
Thence to the junction of Elk with the clear fork of Cumberland, crossing the streams in East Tennessee, 90 miles, at $30,000 per mile	2,700,000
Thence to Cincinnati, 190 miles, at $12,162 per mile	2,310,780
The branch to Louisville, assuming its cost to be equal to the road from Columbia to Charleston	990,000
The branch to Maysville, 60 miles, at $12,162 per mile	729,720
	$11,804,046

As the South Carolina canal and rail road company will, in all probability, seek a union with this road on terms of perfect reciprocity, and make a double track to the point of junction, wherever that may be, the estimated costs of this part of the road may be deducted

990,000

Leaving this sum $10,814,046 to be provided, to construct, (in connexion with the present South Carolina rail road), the entire rail roads between Charleston and Louisville, Cincinnati and Maysville.

This estimate is based on the supposition that there will be a double track the whole way.

A view of the extent and population of the states granting the charter, (through which it must pass), and also of those states which, lying contiguous on the east, the north, and the west, may unite themselves with it by lateral and other connecting rail roads, canals and navigable rivers, may aid in demonstrating the value and extent of the commercial and social intercourse it may be made to establish. But the limited time allowed the committee has prevented them from descending to particulars, or exhibiting more than a general survey of this extensive region. It will be seen that the most direct influence of our road will embrace the eastern but largest portion of Kentucky, the whole of East Tennessee, the western section of North Carolina, and the entire state of South Carolina. In this region, taking the census of 1830 as the basis, and adding the supposed increase to this day, the present population will not vary much from two millions, or a little less than the entire population of the United States at the declaration of independence. And before the time limited for the completion of our work by the charter, allowing our population to double in thirty years, which this road will probably help to accomplish, it will, no doubt, exceed that number, and nearly equal the entire population of the states at the adoption of the federal constitution.

But a more enlarged view of this matter must be taken. The connexions with our road, as exhibited hereafter, will show that the whole region, to be intimately united with our work, will embrace the entire state of Georgia and a part of Florida, the eastern part of Alabama, the southern part of North Carolina extending eastward to the ocean, a large portion of Ohio on the south and west, almost the entire state of Indiana, and a part of Eastern Illinois. Adding these extensive regions, and it will be seen at least one-third of the United States, which is now settled, forms the immense country from which this road will draw its support, and to which it will dispense its blessings. And it cannot be doubted that, by the time it is completed, the circle of its influence will embrace more than 5,000,000 people, inhabiting a country which stretches over at least 12 degrees of latitude and 10 degrees of longitude, and is blessed by every variety of soil, production and climate found in any part of this union.

This view of the subject alone would seem to render almost unnecessary any further development of the extensive usefulness and vast importance of the undertaking; except merely to point out the connexions of our road with the rail roads, rivers and canals, which have been completed, are in progress or contemplated, and soon may be accomplished, should our happy union be preserved, and its unexampled prosperity sustained and continued. To show these various connexions, it has been found necessary to go somewhat into detail, but with as much brevity as possible.

GEORGIA.

This state requires but a single main trunk of rail road to unite all her contemplated improvements with ours. This trunk, opening on our road in the valley of East Tennessee, may stretch to the south through the Alleghany mountains and Blue ridge by Tennessee river and Rabun gap, where a practicable route has been found to exist; or by a line further west, flanking these mountains, on ground favorable to its construction; and may reach some common point in this state, from which the following branches may diverge:

The most eastern branch will be extended to Athens, where it will meet the road now being made to Augusta, the largest inland town in the southern Atlantic states, where it will meet the rail road to Charleston, already in successful operation, and at present the longest finished rail road in the world, and the steamboat navigation to Savannah. From the same common point a branch will run to Forsyth; from which place to Macon a rail road is now being constructed. Here it will meet the central rail road of Georgia, which has been incorporated to run to Savannah, and also the steamboat navigation of the Ockmulgee, which reaches the ocean at Darien. The most western branch from this common point will proceed to Columbus, and meet there the steamboat navigation of the Chattahoochee, which is the most eastwardly navigable stream which discharges into the Gulf of Mexico. All these roads have received the enlightened consideration of the people and legislature of Georgia, and are regarded as entirely within her means; and there seems no doubt of their early accomplishment. It has been ascertained by a survey made made by lieutenant Colcock, that, in case Georgia should run their main road through the Rabun gap, a road passing into Pickens district, in South Carolina, may branch from it over ground deemed by no means impracticable.

ALABAMA.

The western branch of the Georgia rail road, before mentioned, in its way to Columbus will run so near to West Point, on the Chattahoochee river, that a short road may connect it with that place; from which there is now constructing a rail road to Montgomery, which there meets the steamboat navigation of the Alabama river that terminates at Mobile, the most commercial and rapidly increasing town on the Gulf of Mexico, and destined to have no superior in the south west, except New Orleans. The legislature of Alabama has incorporated a company, that is now organized, to carry a road from Wetumka, at the head of steamboat navigation on the Alabama river, about seventy miles, to the upper part of the rapids of the Coosa river. This company propose to extend their work to meet the western branch, or main trunk of the Georgia rail road, and thus to connect with ours. The connexion of our road with North Alabama and the southern part of West Tennessee will probably be by steamboat down the Tennessee river from Knoxville, or the point where the Georgia trunk will leave that river, to the Tusculumbia rail road, which passes round the Muscle shoals, and is now in full operation; and should our road pass the Cumberland river below the falls, it will cross the head of small steamboat navigation on it, and thus be connected with Nashville, and the northern part of Middle Tennessee, and the western part of Kentucky. Should it cross above the falls, it may have this connexion by a lateral rail road of no considerable extent.

NORTH CAROLINA.

The connexion of our road with the works of this state will probably be made at Beatty's ford, on the Catawba river. From that point a rail road has been chartered to Fayetteville, and thence to Wilmington, on the Atlantic. From Salisbury, on the last mentioned road, to Clinton, and thence to Raleigh, the capital of the state, a rail road is contemplated, which is to be extended to Weldon, on the Roanoke, to meet the rail roads to Petersburg, now in full operation, and to Norfolk. This continuation will end on the Chesapeake bay.

VIRGINIA.

A company is chartered to meet a branch of our road, which it is contemplated to pass down the valley from the western extremity of Tennessee.

OHIO.

When our road shall reach Cincinnati, its continuation will be effected by a rail road from that city to Springfield, and thence by the Mad river rail road to Sandusky bay and Lake Erie. This continuation is now in progress to completion. At that city we shall also meet the canal from the Ohio river to Dayton. It is also contemplated to construct a canal from Cincinnati to the White Water canal, which will enter the Ohio river at Lawrenceburgh, in Indiana, and will extend above the national road in that state. At Maysville, our road will reach the Ohio river 47 miles below the entrance into that stream of the Ohio and Erie canal, which now extends entirely through the state of Ohio to Cleaveland, on Lake Erie.

INDIANA.

The connexion of our work with the White Water canal in this state has already been mentioned. When we reach Lexington, we shall meet the Lexington and Ohio rail road already finished to Frankfort and progressing to Louisville. On its way it passes within 20 miles of Madison, in this state; and from that town a rail road is already provided for, and a part of it about to be put under contract, passing through Columbus and Indianapolis, the capital of the state, to Lafayette, on the Wabash, where it will strike the canal to Lake Erie, already in part completed. This road will be continued to Lake Michigan, thus opening a direct and almost straight communication between that lake and the Atlantic ocean at Charleston. At Madison, another rail road has been chartered to connect that city with Rushville. At Louisville our road will end opposite to a rail road which has been chartered to run from Jeffersonville to Columbus, to unite there with the Madison and Lafayette rail road.— And at Louisville we shall end opposite to another road, which is intended to pass through Salem, Bedford, Bloomington and Crawfordsville, and end at Lafayette. But whether this road is to be a Macadamized turnpike or a rail road, depends on the result of further surveys ordered to be made. The state is pledged to the construction of one or the other. This road, as well as the one from Madison, will cross the central canal of Indiana, which will begin north of Indianapolis, and, traversing the entire valley of White river, enter the Ohio river at Evansville. The state has made provision for carrying the canal from Lake Erie, through Lafayette, and down the valley of the Wabash to Evansville, passing in its whole length within a short distance of Illinois. To the completion of these works, with several others, this state stands committed by the pledge of $10,000,000; a sum within a trifle of the whole amount required from four states to complete our great work.

But your committee have yet to mention one of the most important features of our great undertaking. It will reach the Ohio river at three points, embracing a space on that stream of 209 miles. By this connexion we shall open on a steamboat navigation, that without interruption extends to ten states and two territories, and has at this moment as many steamboats floating on the waters as exist in all Europe.

The committee would gladly have availed themselves of this occasion to present a full view of the vast resources of the states particularly interested in the proposed road, and of its probable effects upon its future prosperity. A development of this subject in all its bearing, we are confident would present a most imposing view of the surpassing importance of the work which this convention is assembled to promote. The necessity, however, of presenting a report for the immediate action of the convention forbids us to attempt more at this time than a mere summary of the advantages which must result from the construction of such a road; and we are the more reconciled to this course from a thorough conviction that these need only to be stated to open at once to every reflecting mind a prospect so extensive and so striking, that their own reflections will bring our readers at once to the conclusions at which we have ourselves arrived. We would, therefore, merely call public attention to the following points, viz:

1st. The impulse which this road must give to the industry of the vast and fertile regions through which it will pass, by improving their agriculture, adding to the value of lands, developing their mineral resources, introducing new manufactures, augmenting their population, increasing the demand for labor of every description, and building up villages in all directions.

2d. The great facilities it will afford for the easy, cheap and certain transportation of the various productions of the country through which it may pass, or with which it may be in any way connected; the wide door it will open to reciprocal exchanges; and the consequent extension of the production as well as the consumption of the people along the whole line and on its borders.

3d. The superior facilities which such a route would afford for supplying the whole Atlantic coast, the West Indies, and foreign countries, with the productions carried down the Mississippi river to New Orleans. When we look at the map of the United States, and trace the present course of the trade between the country bordering on the Ohio, and the cities on the south Atlantic coast, involving, after a tedious voyage down the Mississippi, a transshipment at that place, a dangerous and difficult voyage down the Gulf of Mexico, and around the capes of Florida, and estimate the loss of time, of property and the loss of life by which it is attended, the freight, insurance, the shipwrecks, &c. we cannot fail to perceive how vastly important it must be to substitute a direct communication with the Atlantic by a rail road, whereby all these inconveniences and losses would be avoided, and the markets of the whole world thrown open to the western country. It is believed that the saving in freight and insurance alone would pay the interest on the entire cost of such work.

4th. The vast amount of domestic manufactures of every description which would spring up in the west, where labor and provisions are so cheap and abundant, and where water power is so boundless—manufactures which need only good markets to become the source of unbounded wealth and prosperity to the people of that region, and which will be received by the south in exchange for their cotton, or for the foreign goods of every description of which they will be the importers, for the supply of the west, as well as of the south.

5th. The vast amount of foreign merchandise which, under such a system of mutual exchanges, would be required for western consumption—the consequent increase of the shipping interest in our Atlantic ports, and the enlargement of our south Atlantic cities by the extension of their commercial connexions—the consequent amelioration of the condition of the whole population of the western and southern states—by adding to their comforts, as well as to their intellectual, moral and social improvement.

6th. The facilities which such a road and its branches would afford for the certain and speedy transportation of the mail, and the circulation of literary productions and information of every description; thereby establishing an intellectual intercourse whereby the public mind will be enlarged, improved and liberalized—knowledge, the parent of virtue, be promoted, and the arts and sciences greatly extended.

7th. The facilities it would afford to emigration and personal intercourse among the inhabitants of different portions of our country, now separated from each other by almost impassable barriers—an intercourse which, embracing the millions of inhabitants extending from the upper lakes to the Atlantic, would soon become so extensive as of itself to insure a large income to the company, and which would be in all other respects eminently conducive to the harmony, improvement and prosperity of our common country. If, as we are informed, 30,000 persons were, in a short time after its completion, transported on the Liverpool and Manchester rail road, adding so much to its income as to increase the value of its stock one hundred and eighty per cent. who can count the multitude which would pass along our road, or estimate the profits to be derived from this source?

8th. The advantage in time of war, as affording the means of transmitting the products of the south and east across the continent when they could not be safely shipped, whereby some of the worst consequences of war would be averted to the people of both regions, while the prosperity of the company would be greatly promoted. Nor is it of less importance that the means should be thus afforded for the speedy transportation of provisions, arms, munitions of war and troops, from the interior to the seacoast, or repel invasion and suppress insurrection, while the military power of the country would be thus greatly increased, and a feeling of security (founded on a community of interest and sympathy of feeling) would pervade the land; there could be no jealousy or apprehension of danger from this source, since a communication by rail roads can be easily interrupted, such communication being available only for the intercourse of friends, and capable of being instantly closed against the approaches of an enemy.

And lastly. Its controlling and permanent influence on the peace and perpetuity of the union, by practically increasing the reciprocal dependence of the north and the south, from Michigan to Florida—by establishing connexions in business, promoting friendships, abolishing prejudice, creating great uniformity in political opinions, and blending the feelings of distant portions of the country into a UNION OF HEART.

Such are the leading advantages of the proposed road, which we are here permitted merely to suggest, but the importance of which will be felt and appreciated by all. To follow out these suggestions in all their relations, is a duty which must be reserved for another occasion.

It now becomes necessary to determine what measures should be adopted to carry these views into effect. The charter provides that books shall be opened for a subscription to the capital stock of the company on the 1st October next, to continue open for six days. This capital is estimated at $6,000,000, with liberty to the company to increase it if found necessary. Should this sum not be subscribed within the period mentioned, the books are to continue open until the 1st January next, in order to enable incorporated companies and states, as well as individuals, to make up the amount, and if, in the whole, the subscriptions shall on that day amount to the sum of $4,000,000, the company is then to be considered as formed. The first important step, therefore, is to secure the charter. For this purpose a strong appeal should be made by this convention to the people of all the states feeling an interest in the proposed road, to induce them to become subscribers to the stock. That appeal should set forth its practicability and immense advantages in a social, commercial and political point of view; urging such facts and arguments as may be best calculated to rouse the people to a great and general effort for the accomplishment of the work. This appeal cannot be without its influence with an enlightened and patriotic people, capable of estimating the almost boundless resources of the states between which this road will form a connexion. Nor can a doubt be entertained by any one who will take an enlarged view of the connecting links of the great chain of communication between the south and the west which this road will establish, that it may be made as profitable to the stockholders as it must be important to the country in all respects—but especially in promoting friendship and harmony, and establishing a bond of union among the states.

It is, indeed, in this latter view of the question that it presents itself with irresistible force to the mind of every citizen who loves his country, and cherishes her institutions. Without enlarging on this topic at this time, we consider it as making an appeal to the several states through which the proposed road or its branches may pass, of so interesting a character that it will become a high, we should think a sacred, duty on their part to interpose, in their sovereign capacity, to prevent the failure of the great work. Let the considerations which enjoin this duty on the several states interested be set forth and urged, in the name and behalf of this convention, in such a manner as may leave no doubt of their obligations on this subject. Let the delegates here assembled pledge themselves to each other to exert all their influence to effect this object; and, in behalf of those they represent, let them have a mutual understanding that the states from which they come will (so far as it may be in their power to speak for them) do their part of the proposed work. A reasonable assurance that the road would, in no event, be suffered to fail, but that the states through which it may pass would be prepared to make up any deficiency in the subscription of their citizens, would have the effect of giving public confidence to the work, and secure the support of individuals and corporations. The late large and unexpected addition to the resources of the states, by the division among them of the surplus revenue of the United States, affords the easy and certain means of effecting this most desirable object. Let this be pressed home upon the states, and let them be urged by every consideration of patriotism and duty not to neglect the means which Providence seems at this time to have thrown in their way for the purpose of effecting the greatest object which it may ever be in their power to accomplish—THAT OF FORMING A LASTING UNION BETWEEN THE WEST AND THE SOUTH, by binding them in the golden chain of mutual sympathies and common interests; by breaking down all the barriers which now divide them, and causing the stream of commerce to spread its benign and fertilizing influence through regions which want only this to become the fairest portions of the globe. Animated by these views, which time does not permit them fully to develop, the committee recommend to the convention the adoption of the following resolutions, viz:

1. Resolved, That, in the opinion of this convention, the charters of the Louisville, Cincinnati and Charleston rail road should be accepted, and, should alterations or amendments hereafter be found necessary, that application be made therefor to the legislatures of the states granting the same; and this convention hereby urges upon the said states the expediency of granting such application, should the same be made, and can entertain no doubt of the disposition which will be felt by the legislatures of said states to comply with all reasonable requests which may be made by the company when the same shall be formed.

2. Resolved, That it is important for Georgia and Alabama and Virginia to unite with the Louisville, Cincinnati and Charleston rail road company by branches connecting with the main trunk of the road, at points convenient for said connexion in Tennessee, on terms of mutual reciprocity and perfect equality as to the rate, accommodation and despatch in the transportation of freight and passengers.

3. Resolved, That, in the opinion of this convention, a practicable route for a rail road has been found for connecting the city of Charleston with the cities of Louisville, Cincinnati and Maysville, and that the same may be constructed at a reasonable cost, and entirely within the means of the several states interested therein.

4. Resolved, That, in the opinion of this convention, the amount of transportation and travelling on said road will increase for an indefinite period of time, and that it will, from the completion of the road, be such as to render its estimated cost a profitable investment.

5. Resolved, That, viewing the proposed road as one of vast importance to the people of the southern and western states, we hold them bound by every consideration of interest and duty to come forward to its support, by subscribing freely for stock when the books shall be opened in October next; nor can we entertain a doubt that, should the road be completed at an early day by the vigorous and united efforts of the people and the states interested therein, it will amply remunerate them for the capital invested.

6. Resolved, That we consider the Louisville, Cincinnati and Charleston rail road as a work eminently entitled to the patronage and support of the states through which it will pass, or which may be interested therein; and as, from the national character, great cost, and magnitude of the work, it could hardly be expected that it should be carried through by private enterprise alone, we would respectfully, and do hereby most earnestly appeal to the said states for liberal appropriations towards carrying on the great work, which, when completed, will be an enduring monument of their wisdom and patriotism.

7. Resolved, That we consider the fund which will be placed at the disposal of said states, by the division among them of the surplus revenue of the union, as peculiarly applicable to this great work, which, passing through several states, will open a channel to the most extensive social and commercial intercourse between the western states bordering upon the Ohio and the great lakes, and the states on the south Atlantic and the Gulf of Mexico, thereby strengthening the bonds of our union, and promoting the prosperity and happiness of a large and most interesting portion of our common country.

8. Resolved, That this convention does therefore earnestly appeal to the said states to appropriate and set apart said fund, or so much thereof as may be necessary for that purpose, and to cause the same to be faithfully applied to the execution of the proposed road. It is presumed that the states of Tennessee, Kentucky, Ohio, North Carolina and South Carolina cannot receive, under the distribution bill, the first year, much less than nine millions of dollars—a sum nearly sufficient to make the road; and, should Georgia, Alabama, Virginia and Indiana become interested in it by lateral roads, the whole amount required could be raised by the appropriation of the surplus of only a single year. We call upon these states, therefore, for the promotion of their own best interests, and for the sake of posterity, not to suffer the work to fail.

9. Resolved, That an address be prepared and published in the name and behalf of this assembly, embodying and enforcing these views, and urging in the strongest manner upon the states and people the duty of carrying the great work into effect.

On motion of Mr. WICKLIFFE, resolutions were entered into admitting the state of Georgia and its citizens to become participants in the construction and benefits of said road, and other adjoining states were also invited to partake in the work.

FOREIGN CHRONICLE.

Curious calculations. It has been estimated by some London statistician, that there are in that city, full five thousand men who would murder a man for the prospect of obtaining a shilling and escaping punishment.

The old diplomat Talleyrand still preserves the tenacity of life which belongs to him. He is so far recovered as to amuse himself daily in wheeling in an armed chair among the lawns and avenues of his splendid forest at Valençay—14,000 acres in extent.

Protestant Irish. In 1776, the Protestants in Ireland were nearly one-third of the whole population. In 1822, they were only one-seventh. In 1834, (the last census) they were found to be reduced to as small a fraction as one-tenth.

Unlicensed confessor. A young man in Paris, lately arrayed himself in the garments of a priest and placed himself in a confessional in one of the churches. A female penitent approached and had nearly finished her confession, when by some accident the cheat was discovered. The affair was brought before the tribunals; but the crime is said to be new, and the judges were puzzled what to do with it. All Paris was speculating about it for several hours, and finally the cause was taken up to the court of Cassation.

Albino elephant. The king of Siam is about to present to the Jardin des Plantes, at Paris, a white elephant, as return for the extreme kindness which the Siamese twins met with from the people of the French capital during their late exhibitions. The white elephant is said not to be a separate species of the class, but what is called an albino. It has, however, the peculiarity of having natural colored eyes, and can bear the alterations of light and darkness without inconvenience. It is an animal beyond all price in India. In the time of the ancient Persians it was treated with divine honors.

Logic class—Chip of the old block. As a specimen of the past utility of the logic class in the university of Edinburgh, an anecdote is current, in which the son of a facetious baronet, whose residence is not five miles from town, acted a part worthy of his descent. He was called up by the worthy professor of the time, and asked the notable question, "Can a man see without eyes?" "Yes sir," was the prompt answer. "How sir?" cried the amazed professor, "can a man see without eyes?" "Pray, sir, how do you make that out?" "He can see with one, sir," replied the ready-witted youth; and the whole class shouted with delight at the triumph over metaphysics.

[London paper.]

The dead alive. An old officer on the retired list, living at Santes, in the Charente inferieure, a few days ago fell into a lethargy, and was buried with military honors, under the conviction that life was extinct; but awakened by the firing of the platoon over his grave, which took place before the coffin was covered with earth, he made himself heard by his cries, was taken out, and walked home arm in arm with those who had believed they had taken their last farewell of him.

Old oak. A large oak in the forest of Cerisy, known under the name of the Puenesse, at a little distance to the right of the great road to St. Lo, is supposed, by comparing various data, to be eight or nine hundred years old. In 1824 it measured thirty-six feet in circumference, just above the soil, and was about fifty-five feet high. The trunk is now hollow, and will hold from fourteen to fifteen persons.

Fire in London. A fire broke out on the morning of August 30, in the warehouse of Mr. Wilson, tea merchant, on the Southwark side of London bridge, which, with several adjoining buildings and their valuable contents, was entirely destroyed. One of the warehouses destroyed was five stories high, 150 feet in length, and 80 feet wide. The loss of property was valued at £400,000. Mr. Wilson was severely injured in leaping from his bedroom window, on the second floor, upon the pavement, to escape the flames. It is stated that there has been no fire in London, which caused so great a destruction of property, since 1794.

Church of England schools. The donations by the friends of scriptural education at Liverpool, amount to £10,392 10s. 2½d. and the annual subscriptions in operation exceed £1,100. In the south schools, there are 276 boys, 97 girls, and 80 infants—in all 553. In the north school there are 400 boys, 230 girls—in all 630, making a total of both schools of 1,183.

Cattle steamboats. Such are the profits obtained by the Scotch farmers of Inverness, Aberdeen, &c. since the exportation of their sheep and black cattle to London by steam, that it is proposed to have a line of coast steamboats entirely appropriated to that object.

The three sons of the late Mr. Rothschild have taken their stand on the London Exchange, in the place so long and honorably occupied by their father. The firm was announced as N. M. Rothschild & Sons.

All medical practitioners, by the new medical bill, must attend inquests at the summons of the coroner, under a penalty of £5. The fee is one guinea, and two guineas for a post mortem examination. The summons must be issued at the request of a majority of the jury.

Splendid Egyptian hieroglyphic. At the sale of Mr. Burton's collection of Egyptian antiquities, the splendid roll in memory of Nebesai, a scribe of the temple of Pthah Soker, at Memphis, on one sheet of paper, made of the papyrus plant, near one hundred feet in length, without a single join, (nothing new under the sun!) was bought for the British museum for £120.

A valuable portion of the manuscripts of Voltaire, stolen from Ferney in 1819, are reported to have been discovered in Hanover.

The highest chimney in the British kingdom is that at the chemical manufactory at Wigan, being 106 yards, or over 308 feet high.

The hereditary grand chamberlains of England, the marquis Cholmondeley and lord Willoughby d'Eresby, by their descent from the duke of Ancester, are to exercise their functions in alternate reigns.

Don Miguel has hired a magnificent mansion at Albaro, in the suburbs of Genoa. A marriage is talked of between him and a princess of Modena.

Silk and wine in Russia. Besides rail roads and beet sugar manufacture, the autocrat seems zealously bent on advancing his empire in all the arts:—

Last year about 95,000 mulberry trees were planted in Russia alone. Two hundred and sixty-four pools of silk were produced, (the pool at 36 lbs. English). The produce of the vintage in the Russian empire last year, was 1,664,209 barrels (vedros). In the Crimea, alone, above 600 kinds of vines are cultivated; among them are those which produce the Rhenish, French and Greek wines.

Easy method of detecting arsenic in food. M. Schweiger Seidel has invented a very simple method of ascertaining the presence of arsenic in food, &c. however small the quantity may be. He puts a portion of the matter to be tried, and doubles its weight of soda, into a little glass tube, he closes the open extremity of the tube with blotting paper, and heats the other end with a taper; the arsenic is sublimated in a few moments, and adheres to the sides of the tube in the part which is not heated.

DOMESTIC CHRONICLE.

New weapon. We have been recently shown one of the most awfully destructive weapons, made by gen. Houston's orders, and stated to be furnished after a device of his. It consists of a cutting and stabbing knife, to the back of which is fixed a pistol, the same handle serving for both weapons. The knife is nearly the size of that famous short sword, with which the Roman legionaries did such memorable service, and when backed and furthered by the great improvements of modern warfare, we entertain very little doubt of a fearful return of killed and wounded in the Mexican ranks in the next encounter, that is, if they should ever come to close quarters. The next accounts are looked for with impatience certainly, but with no apprehension.

[N. Y. Trans.]

The Massachusetts Silk company have at present 78,000 mulberry trees in flourishing condition. The company was incorporated a year ago with a capital of $150,000.

The work goes on. In passing along Pearl street, and its crowded lots of merchandize, we noticed yesterday a row of boxes in front of Disoway & Brothers, marked Liberia, Western Africa. We are informed that this trade is becoming so important, as to make it necessary for the merchants in the colony to visit this country regularly for their supplies. The gentlemen just referred to received not long since, a lot of camwood from a firm at Monrovia, which sold in this market for seven thousand five hundred dollars. With the proceeds, the parties purchased a vessel, which was filled with a return cargo.

[N. Y. Com. Ad.]

A new bell, weighing upwards of six thousand pounds, has been hung over the rear entrance of the City Hall, New York, to be rung whenever there may be an alarm of fire. It was made in that city, and is said to contain less brass than the old, in consequence of which it will, as is supposed, be less liable to crack, although doubts are entertained whether its tones will be as clear and shrill as those of its predecessor. It was carried to its place of destination on a cart drawn by four oxen.

A revolving light has been placed on Cape Spear, at the entrance of the harbor of St. Johns, N. P. which went into operation on the 1st of September. It will burn at an elevation of 275 feet above the level of the sea, shows a brilliant flash at intervals of a minute, and may be seen at the distance of twenty miles. The stationary light at Fort Amherst is to be continued.

Remarkable snow storm. A letter from a friend in Skeneateles written on Thursday last, gives an account of one of the most extraordinary snow storms that ever occurred in any autumn in this state. On Wednesday morning it commenced snowing, and it continued to fall profusely during the whole of that day and the next. It was computed that the fall of snow, but for the rapid melting, would have equalled three feet. As it was, the snow lay sixteen inches deep at the time the letter was written. Great destruction took place among the fruit and forest trees, which were broken by the burden of snow resting upon them. Such a storm at a period of the year, is altogether without precedent in this climate, and adds a prominent item to the eccentricities of this remarkable season. [N. Y. Com. Ad.]

Coal. The Providence Journal states that the exploration for anthracite coal which has been for some time in progress in Cumberland, (R. I.) has at length been crowned with complete success. A shaft has been sunk at that place to the depth of 78 feet, and excavations have been made on each side at that depth, one of 25 and the other to 80 feet. The stratum of coal is 13 feet thick, and dips to the north at an angle of about 65 degrees. There is every appearance of an abundant quantity of coal, which is softer than that obtained from the mine on Rhode Island. A steam engine is soon to be put in operation, and the price fixed for the coal is $6 per ton, at the mine.

The shoe business was never more profitable than at present—and the New England manufacturers are reaping a rich harvest. One house in Salem, Mass. advertises for one hundred journeymen.

Major general Macomb, as we learn from the Army and Navy Chronicle, has appointed lieutenant John N. Macomb, of the 4th regiment of artillery, one of his aides-de-camp.

The grand jury of Oneida county, N. Y. have found true bills of indictment against three of the commissioners to distribute the stock of the Oneida bank, for misdeemeanor in fraudulently distributing it to themselves. The three indicted are Mr. Dauby, the postmaster in Utica, and editor of the Utica Observer, who is the elected president of the bank; William Osborne, junior, and John Ruger.

Saw mills in Maine. The editor of the Portland Advertiser computes the number of saw mills in Maine at from 1,500 to 2,000. The town of Rons alone has 200.

Dreadful leap. A gentleman from the south, on Friday, jumped out of a 4th story window in the Astor House upon the stone pavement. He was most severely injured, but not killed. He was insane as we understand. A few moments before he took this leap, he drove his servant from his bed chamber by drawing a large knife upon him. [N. Y. Express.]

Population of Salem. The population of Salem, Mass. as ascertained by a census just taken, is about 15,000. In 1830 it was 13,876.

A slave case. A mulatto was arrested a few weeks ago, at Reading, Pa. charged with being a runaway slave, belonging to an estate in Maryland. There was some informality in the papers under which the claimant acted, and no evidence was gone into to prove whether the mulatto was a slave or not. He was discharged, but immediately arrested on a charge of larceny. He was shortly after brought before a judge, on a habeas corpus, but again dismissed on the ground that the evidence against him was not sufficient to sustain the charge.

A Turk. A negro slave at Darien, named Tom Scudder, who had bought himself a wife, having paid $700 to a neighboring tavern keeper for her, lately had her sold again under the hammer for $750—he had a quarrel with her. He himself is the property of col. Deming; and though he is fully able to purchase his own freedom, and have a handsome sum besides, refuses to do so. He is a shoemaker, and pays his master $2 per day for his time.

A letter received by a gentleman of this city, conveys the unpleasant intelligence of the death of gen. John Coffee, of Georgia; he died at his residence, in Telfair county, on Sunday, the 25th ult. at half past 2 o'clock, after an illness of six days. [Globe.]

The hon. William C. Jarvis, late speaker of the Massachusetts house of representatives, committed suicide in Wethersfield, Vt. on the 2d inst. by shooting himself through the heart with a pistol. He was deranged it is supposed.

Doctors. The Philadelphia Sentinel says that N. York has a greater variety of physicians than any other city in the world. The Sentinel enumerates them thus:—

Regulars, irregulars, Broussaianes, Sangradoarians, Morissonians, Brandvethians, Beechitarians, botanics, regular botanics, Thomsonians, reformed Thomsonians, theoretical, practical, experimental, dogmatical, emblematical, magnetical, electrical, diplomatical, homeopathians, rootists, herbists, florists and quacks.

The uninterrupted health of New Orleans has caused an earlier revival of the fall trade than usual. Twenty-five steamboats, either loading or discharging, were counted at the levee, September 22d a much larger number than usual at this season.

NILES' WEEKLY REGISTER.

FIFTH SERIES. No. 8.—VOL. I.]

BALTIMORE, OCTOBER 22, 1836.

[VOL. LI.—WHOLE No 1,308.

THE PAST—THE PRESENT—FOR THE FUTURE.

EDITED, PRINTED AND PUBLISHED, BY WILLIAM OGDEN NILES, AT $5 PER ANNUM, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

95—The proceedings of the Van Buren party in Harford and Frederick and of the people in Washington and Allegany, exhibit a striking dissimilarity of sentiment in relation to the conduct of the recusant electors and the proper remedy for the present unfortunate condition of affairs. For, while the two first warmly applaud the conduct of the "nineteen," and look to the convention, which the recusants recommended to be holden in November next, as the only remedy, the meeting of Washington county, comprising leading men of both parties, recommend the electors from that county to go into the college and assist in forming a whig senate, provided assurances are given that a majority of senators will be favorable to the passage of a law calling a convention to remodel the present constitution.* The meeting in Allegany county, also composed of leading men of both parties, does not, however, make this stipulation, but openly denounces the conduct of the nineteen and the recommendation of the meeting in Frederick as leading "to anarchy and confusion."

Whether the stand taken by Washington and Allegany, the first named as deeply interested in the question of reform as any other county in the state, will arrest the convention, time only can determine—but there are those who are sanguine that a door will be speedily opened for the adjustment of the difficulty.

From Annapolis we learn that the electoral college was still in session, with at least three members always present, and that arrangements have been made for the speedy attendance of the other whig members as soon as a disposition is evinced by any of the recusants to enter upon the duty for which they were elected.

A disease termed "congestive fever" has been prevailing in Annapolis and its vicinity for some weeks past. But, by the last accounts, its virulence had abated, and all those afflicted with it were considered out of danger.

UNITED STATES AND MEXICO. The Philadelphia Daily Advertiser of Tuesday last contains the following paragraph. Mr. Gorostiza, it is said, was in Washington for nearly a month endeavoring to induce this government to withdraw its troops from the Mexican territory; and the public will look with anxiety for the correspondence which has taken place on the subject during his protracted visit to Washington—especially as it was induced to believe from the tenor of gen. Jackson's letter to the governor of Tennessee, countermanning gen. Gaines' requisition on that state, that the government of the United States was not only resolved to preserve the most strict neutrality in the Texian war, but disposed to vindicate itself from the slightest suspicion of a design to invade the Mexican territory—and hence that there was not the most remote prospect of a rupture between this country and Mexico.

"We understand that Mr. GOROSTIZA, the Mexican minister, arrived at the Mansion House yesterday from Washington. We are extremely sorry to hear, from a respectable source, that his negotiations with our government have terminated unsatisfactorily, and that he is preparing to return home with his diplomatic family. This will be unwelcome news to the friends of peace, and to the commercial interests of this country."

The New York American says—
"We heard yesterday from a pretty good source the same piece of intelligence, but in a shape somewhat more decisive, namely, that the Mexican envoy had made a peremptory demand for the recal of gen. Gaines from Nacogdoches, and a compliance with this being refused on the part of this government, he demanded his passports."

In reference to the above report, the "Globe" of yesterday contains the following:

Mr. Gorostiza. As in the case of the withdrawal of the French charge from this country, the editor of the Intelligencer, (who then called upon us for the grounds "upon which that intercourse was broken off," having them in his own pocket at the time), now calls upon us for Mr. Gorostiza's manifesto.

*Messrs. Wason and Magill, the electors, were present at the meeting, and, it is said, sanctioned the recommendation of the meeting.

VOL. LI.—SIG. 8.

We would inform the editor of the Intelligencer, that Mr. Gorostiza has not been as civil to us as Mr. Pageot was to him; and as he is notoriously the Gorostiza organ, we cannot doubt but that he is as well provided with materials for exhibiting the conduct of the Mexican minister in the best light, as he was to make the most of the French minister's case. The editor of the Intelligencer may, therefore, produce his budget, without taking the trouble of assuming diplomatic airs, and dissembling all knowledge of Mr. Gorostiza's motives and movements. He has doubtless had his fee, and sooner or later he must endeavor to make a Mexican party of his Nova Scotia whigs. Santa Ana, Bravo, Cos & Co. are true blooded whigs of the Intelligencer school, and are quite as much in love with our democracy as the fat little English editor, and those who rally under the tory banner. San Jacinto was not more fatal to his foreign allies, than are the victories which general Jackson has gained over his immediate friends at the polls. The Santa Anas of the United States have just as much reason to hate the people by whom their ambition is crushed, as the Mexicans have to hate the Texans.

Although we have no knowledge of the reasons given by Mr. Gorostiza for taking his leave, we think the following extract from a letter, just received, sheds some light on the subject:

Extract of a letter received in this city from a gentleman who left Tampico on the 12th of September last.

"The Mexican ports are now open to the Spanish flag, and the government of Mexico has despatched commissioners to Cuba for the purpose of raising a naval armament to cruise against the Texans.—Is it probable that men embarked in this warfare, would, or will return to port without prize money? The Texans have no commerce to gratify their enemies with, and all their armed vessels would not equal one decent prize. Therefore it behooves the commerce of these seas to be well protected against piratical movements. Several private letters from the interior of Mexico were shown to me at Tampico, from which the sentiment appears to be universal among the Mexicans, that war will be declared against the United States, in the event of their recognition of Texian independence."

From this it will be seen that Mexico, despairing of success single handed in the contest with Texas, is desirous of involving foreign powers in the war. This can only be done by exciting jealousy of the growing power of the United States. If Spanish vessels from Cuba, or pirates under the Spanish flag, can be induced to take part in the war, to prey upon our commerce in the Gulf of Mexico, and if in the collision thus produced, alarm for the safety of Cuba could be excited, the Mexican government doubtless supposes that the European powers might be brought to make common cause with it in the war against Texas; a war which will be represented by those willing to engage in it beyond the Atlantic, as intended to bridle the spirit of conquest in the United States. The pretext for it, is to be "the recognition of Texian independence!" After the quietus given to this attempt in the British parliament, we should have supposed further experiment would have been relinquished.

LATE FROM EUROPE. By the packet ship Normandie, captain Pell, at New York from Havre, the editors of the Commercial Advertiser have received Paris journals to the 15th of September. They add very little to our previous accounts of European affairs.

Marshall Soult's refusal of the war port folio is reiterated, and a rumor is given that general Bernard, so well known in this country, has been called on by the king to assume this post. It is not improbable, as the king is known to have great confidence in the general.

Letters from Spain say that the health of the queen regent is seriously affected by the troubles and anxieties she endures. The demands of the ultra liberals are said to be on the increase, they require now the abolition of hereditary peerages and of entails, as well as the suppression of all religious establishments. Nothing farther had been heard of the Carlist general, Gomez. The condition of Madrid is said to be frightful, and the armies are represented to be much infected with the spirit of insubordination.

A letter from Marseilles of the 10th of September mentions that the cholera has nearly subsided in the papal states.

BANK OF THE UNITED STATES. Bicknell's Reporter has the following paragraph. No other Philadelphia paper makes mention of the report:

"We understand from good authority, that the directors of the bank of the United States have it in contemplation to propose to our state legislature, at their next session, to abandon their charter, providing the bonus which has been paid to the state, be returned to the bank."

FROM FLORIDA. A gentleman arrived at Savannah on the 10th inst. from Jacksonville, informs the editor of the Georgian that the forces under gov. Call had met with some Indians near Fort Drane, and after a short skirmish with them on the third instant, drove them into the hammock, the Indians leaving four of their dead on the field. Next day another skirmish took place, with similar results, the Indians leaving five dead on the field—none of our men were injured. Major Pierce was on his way to join gen. Call, at Volusia.

The regulars moved off on the 3d instant from Black creek for Newnansville (with baggage train). They were, it is said, 800 strong.

DR. JOSEPH LOVELL, surgeon general of the United States army, died in Washington city on Monday last. Dr. Lovell entered the army in 1812 as a surgeon of the 9th regiment U. S. infantry, and served in the memorable campaigns on the Niagara frontier in 1813 and 1814. In 1818 he was appointed surgeon general of the army, which station he filled with honor and great advantage to the public service. His remains were interred on Tuesday evening last with every mark of respect, the president's family, the heads of departments and the principal officers of the government being in attendance.

"WASHINGTON!" The Du Bugue Visitor, relates the following instance in which the profanation of the name of "Washington" received a merited rebuke.

A gentleman, who had just risen, we presume, from the perusal of the details of the splendid victory of general Houston, at San Jacinto, and was exulting at the prospective triumph of liberty in Texas, proposed as a toast:

"Samuel Houston—The Washington of Texas." The table, which had been tolerably boisterous before, was hushed in an instant, and for a moment a solemn silence prevailed; and every breast appeared to vent its deep feeling in cries of "No, no!" "No, no!" "That will not do!" "That will not do!" We were never more gratified, and never felt so certain that the memory of the great and good man who bore our country safely through the storm of the revolution, was still cherished in the hearts of the American people, as at witnessing that spontaneous burst of feeling from a large company of citizens, collected from every quarter of our wide-spread country.

GREAT SNOW STORM. The Albany Journal of Wednesday the 12th inst. says—On Tuesday night of last week, snow commenced falling in this vicinity. It continued throughout Wednesday and the following night, with very little abatement; and up to Thursday morning is supposed to have fallen to the depth of at least 24 or 26 inches. Although thawing very fast, during the whole time, yet on Thursday morning a friend of ours took the pains to ascertain its depth in an open level field, which proved to be from 13 to 14 inches. From the extreme dampness and weight of the snow, much damage has been done to fruit and forest trees. It fell in solid sheets upon the branches still covered with foliage, and literally crushed them to the earth. Whole orchards (more particularly south of us) are in this way greatly injured—many trees entirely ruined—and even in the woods, many a noble tree has been trimmed of its fair promotions. The orchards and ornamental trees in and about the village have suffered materially, and will long bear marks of the ruin worked by the October snow storm of 1836.

P. 8. This morning, we have another snow storm; having had snow for three Wednesdays in succession. It began briskly—and as to the ending we wot not of it.

REGARD FOR HUMAN LIFE IN ENGLAND. No man or woman is suffered, in England, to be put to death, either by ignorance, negligence, accident or design, without strict scrutiny into the facts. A coroner's inquest there is a real and searching inquiry, conducted by a competent and well qualified magistrate. One of the good results of such inquiry is stated in the annexed report. [N. Y. Am.]

Morrison's pills. Another life has been sacrificed at Hull, as alleged, from the taking of Morrison's pills. An inquest was held, on the 26th, on the body of Rebecca Russell, who had been taking from four to six pills a day, and got worse. Her husband then went to Mr. La Mott, an agent for the sale of the pills, and he recommended six to be taken at night of No. 1, and the same quantity the following morning of No. 2. Next morning, La Mott visited the patient, and ordered eight to be taken night and morning. He daily increased the dose to ten pills, and then to fifteen every three hours; but, as she got worse, he ordered them to be discontinued, as "hers was a very obstinate case." On her decease, a post mortem examination took place, and it was found that death was caused by inflammation of the intestines, brought on by excessive purging. The jury, after half an hour's deliberation, returned a verdict, "That the death of the deceased was occasioned by disease, in conjunction with medicine improperly administered, and by gross ignorance of the person prescribing." The coroner told the jury that, under these circumstances, it would be for them to return a verdict of manslaughter against the person by whose orders the medicine was administered, Mr. La Mott. The foreman replied, "Yes," and a verdict was accordingly entered of "manslaughter against Thomas La Mott."

MILTON'S WATCH. A poor family in this county lately received a box from America, as part of the effects of an aged relative, whose ancestors had emigrated to that continent soon after the time of the commonwealth. The box contained several coins of the reigns of Elizabeth, James and Charles I. and a few of the protectorate, but none of a later date. With the coins there was an old watch, and the family to whom the bequest came, being indigent, sold the whole to a silversmith, who was also a watchmaker. The purchaser gave the full price for the coins, but refused to give more for the watch than the value of the silver case, 2s. 9d. The works, with the face on, which looked like iron, were left in a drawer frequently opened. After a while the friction on the face showed it to be silver, with an inscription on it. This being deciphered by clearing the metal, was found to be "Johani Milniti, 1621," and contained also the name of the maker, a person in Pope's Head alley, London, whose name appears in the tables of the watchmaker's company for that period. The watch is well made for the time, and would seem an appropriate present for a young gentleman on entering life.—The present possessor had it as a token of gratitude for some former favor from the silversmith, and the relic has become an object of inquiry for purchase at a considerable price for the British museum. [Yorkshire (Eng.) paper.]

AUDITOR OF THE TREASURY. It is announced in the Pennsylvania papers, that Jesse Miller, esq. a member of congress from that state, has been appointed first auditor of the treasury department in place of Richard Harrison. Mr. H. is said to have been the last remaining officer appointed by president Washington.

GEN. SAMUEL SMITH was, on Monday last, re-elected mayor of the city of Baltimore by a majority of 610 votes over col. Jacob Small.

Wards.	Smith.	Small.
1	318	307
2	313	326
3	483	336
4	543	296
5	390	487
6	562	357
7	273	483
8	538	349
9	295	503
10	515	307
11	478	514
12	558	392
	5,261	4,651

Gen. Smith's majority, 610.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, October 16, 1836. The consul of the United States at Turks Island has transmitted to this department the Bahama Argus of the 3d September, wherein it appears that, by an order in council, the port of Grand Key, Turks Island, Bahamas, has been declared to be a free warehousing port.

GEOLOGICAL WONDER. At the United States quarry in the village of Kennebunkport, Maine, where they are now quarrying large quantities of a strong, rich and beautiful granite—take it altogether, perhaps the very best building material on earth, inasmuch as, with all its other good qualities, it rings like cast iron, works admirably and easily, it has been subjected to a heat of seven hundred by professor Cleaveland, without finching—the workmen have just discovered a rift, or dyke, which, had it been planned by the most skillful engineer, and executed at a cost of fifty thousand dollars, for the sole purpose of draining the quarry, and enabling the proprietors to work it to advantage, could not have been more judiciously contrived or executed. It has been cleared to the depth of twelve or thirteen feet in one place, and thoroughly sounded thro' its whole extent; is about six feet in width, of unknown depth, full of loose earth, which may be shovelled out, leaving a straight, smooth, perpendicular wall on each side, the whole extent of the quarry! It is now under contract, and will be finished to the depth of twenty or twenty-five feet in some places, by the first of January, 1837. A covered drain will be left as they proceed. Thus it is that NATURE—perhaps it were not irreverent to say the God of nature—provides, ages and ages beforehand, for the wants of man! This dyke or fissure, which must have been caused by an earthquake, or some other tremendous convulsion of our earth, centuries ago, for the walls are too smooth, and the soil too loose and uniform to admit of almost any other supposition, will be of immense advantage to the quarry, and could not have been imitated even by blasting, which would have ruined thousands and thousands of tons of this beautiful stone, at an outlay of less than fifty or a hundred thousand dollars.

[N. Y. Express.]

AMERICAN CEMENT. This name has been given to a geological compound, so arranged that it crystallizes into perfect stone. The important fact is now well settled, that we can so prepare the constituent parts of various rocks as to render them subject to the known laws of affinity, which soon unites them again into their former solidity. It is well known that all rocks have once been in a liquid or semi-fluid state, so as to admit of some freedom of motion among their particles. Now, as the laws of nature are immutable, it is obvious that, if the elements of various rocks are brought into the same state which chance has often thrown them on the surface of the globe, their crystallization is certain. Indeed, we often find fragments of different rocks and various pebbles united by an intervening formation that has crystallized around them. Hence the production of artificial stone is as much the work of nature as the fruit of an apple tree which grows in our garden. When their natural products are being developed, we may alike vary the soil which gives nourishment to the one, and the elements which enter into the composition of the other. "As the twig is bent the tree is inclined;" so, as the young crystalizing rock is moulded, it will stand an eternal monument. The growing of rocks will surely be a novel branch of industry. What then shall we say to the growing of houses and temples out of a few simple elements, by merely bringing them within the active influence of nature's law in the formation of granite?

[Buffalo Advertiser.]

THE SURPLUS REVENUE. As the date for the distribution of the surplus revenue is near at hand, it may not be amiss to republish the sections of the law bearing upon the subject. They are as follows: [N. Y. Am.]

Sec. 13. And be it further enacted, That the money which shall be in the treasury of the United States on the first day of January, eighteen hundred and thirty-seven, reserving the sum of five millions of dollars, shall be deposited with the several states, in proportion to their respective representation in the senate and house of representatives of the United States, as shall, by law, authorize their treasurers, or the competent authorities to receive the same on the terms hereinafter specified; and the secretary of the treasury shall deliver the same to such treasurers, or other competent authorities, on receiving certificates of deposit therefor, signed by such competent authorities, in such form as may be prescribed by the secretary aforesaid, which certificates shall express the usual and legal obligations, and pledge the faith of the state for the safe keeping and repayment thereof, and shall pledge the faith of the states receiving the same to pay the said moneys, and every part thereof, from time to time, whenever the same shall be required by the secretary of the treasury, for the purpose of defraying any wants of the public treasury, beyond the amount of the five millions aforesaid: Provided, That if any state declines to receive its proportion of the surplus aforesaid on the terms before named, the same shall be deposited with the other states agreeing to accept the same deposit, in the proportion aforesaid: And provided further, That when said money, or any part thereof, shall be wanted by the said secretary, to meet the appropriations made by law, the same shall be called for, in rateable proportions, within one year, as nearly as conveniently may be, from the different states with which the same is deposited, and shall not be called for in sums exceeding ten thousand dollars, from any one state, in any one month, without previous notice of thirty days for every additional sum of $20,000 which at any time may be required.

Sec. 14. And be it further enacted, That the said deposits shall be made with the said states, in the following proportions, and at the following times, viz: one quarter part on the first day of January, 1837, or as soon thereafter as may be; one quarter part on the first day of April; one quarter part on the first day of July; and one quarter part on the first day of October, all in the same year.

THANKSGIVING. Governor Everett has appointed Thursday the first of December next, as a day of thanksgiving and praise in the state of Massachusetts. The following is the principal part of the proclamation.

"The experience of every person of reflection will suggest unnumbered causes of thankfulness, for which—if his mind is not wholly insensible to religious impressions—he will, in looking back upon another year, feel it at once his duty and his privilege, to pour out his heart in gratitude to that Being, who, in the midst of our unworthiness and transgressions, continues to crown us with his mercies.

"Besides what concerns us as individuals, the season of the year calls upon us to express our heartfelt thanks to the Author of all Good, for the extraordinary prosperity of the past year, and especially for the in-gathering of another harvest, which, notwithstanding the partial failure of a portion of the fruits of the earth, has still left us in the enjoyment of an amount of blessings, which demands our warmest gratitude. The great political and social privileges which distinguish our condition as a people—the blessings of a free government—of mild and equitable laws impartially administered—and of a general state of progress—require of us, on every suitable occasion, an earnest and public acknowledgment;—and we ought especially at this time, to render our thanks to the Ruler of Nations, that he has been pleased to continue to us the blessings of peace. The general prevalence of health throughout our land should direct our thoughts to that Good Being, who has cast our lot in a salubrious climate and has spared us the visitations of infectious disease;—and above all other grounds of thankfulness, we should approach the Throne of Grace with our heartiest ascriptions of praise, for the gift of the gospel and the hope of pardon and eternal life, through our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

"With our humble tribute of thanks to the Great Source of Good let us unite an affectionate remembrance of the poor. Acts of thanksgiving for our own mercies seem to lead appropriately to those deeds of beneficence, to which the friendless and destitute look for a portion of the supplies which are to carry them through the inclement season of the year. There is no way in which we can return any thing to the Great Giver of our own comforts, but by ministering to the wants of those whom He has been pleased to leave in a state of dependence on their fellow beings.

"And the good people of the commonwealth are respectfully invited to keep the customary festivities of the occasion within the bounds prescribed by temperance, moderation and the professed character of the day;—and to abstain from and discountenance every species of amusement which tends to excess—which interrupts the devotion of others—or in any way violates the peace that ought to reign on a day set apart by a Christian people for public acts of religious duty."

PRIZES FOR VIRTUOUS ACTIONS. Among the list of persons to whom was decreed by the French academy at their last session, the Monthyon prizes for virtuous actions, the following cases are mentioned. Claudine Treille received a medal of one thousand francs value. This woman had devoted her whole life, all her time, all her property to primary instruction, without any other recompense than the pleasure of teaching little shepherds to read. These children she fed and taught, and now, though grown decrepid, leaning on two crutches, spinning at her distaff, she still continues her noble and modest business. Jeanne Pasello also received a medal of a thousand francs value.

This woman, during twenty years, was the nurse of her father, and was compelled, every time he took nourishment, to force open with her feeble hands his mouth, which was convulsively pressed together, from whence a torrent of blood flowed, and in the effort her own fingers were sadly lacerated, and finally became entirely mutilated. Another prize of a similar value was decreed to the widow Anconin, the daughter of a sea captain, and whose husband had been master of a coasting vessel.—She, without any fortune, by her own labor alone, had supported, nursed and assisted for fifteen years six children of a sister, and the husband of that sister, who had fallen into decrepitude.

The two first prizes of four thousand francs each, belonged of right to Lawrence Queter, a fisherman of Douai, who at fifteen years of age had already saved the lives of twenty-nine persons, and to Louisa Renee Menard, a young lady born rich, and destined to a life of ease and pleasure, who had chosen charity as her only pleasure—this was her vocation, her hope and her reward. At the age of nineteen, when one is so happy in living for happiness or for the hope of gaining it, she thought only of others, and fed at that time two hundred families. Nicolas Plege received a prize of two thousand francs.—This man was by trade a rope dancer, and used the agility he had learned in his profession in striding over burning joists and shaking rafters, and running from danger to danger to save men, wherever there were men to be saved. The imprudence of a servant at Alencon had set fire to a house in that city. The unfortunate man perished in the flames, notwithstanding the efforts of Plege to save him. He, as usual, went twice through the burning house, and burnt his own feet, his only instruments for gaining a living, in his efforts. The children of this servant were left without support—and Plege, with his burnt feet, gave a representation the evening before his departure, and devoted the entire proceeds of it to the orphans. "This rope dancer, (as Mr. Nodier, the prize distributor, well remarked), this rope dancer was an excellent citizen."

A NEW MANUFACTURE. A late Paris journal contains the following account of a new manufacture, which has already acquired a considerable success, and promises to be of great importance:

On the borders of the streams and in the valleys of New Zealand, there grows a plant which resembles at the same time the corn-flag and the aloe. This plant to which naturalists have given the name of Phormium Tenax, is the hemp of the natives. They break it with large muscle shells, and then separate with their nails the hemp from the flax. They weave it afterwards into a sort of net, like lace, which they bleach in the dew. The beauty of this fabric has astonished navigators. Cook, Forster and Dumont d'Urville have spoken of it. Messrs. Lissou and Richard described it in their botanical work on Australia. Since 1827, several English merchants have attempted to make use of this plant; capital, mechanical power, nothing was spared. But they did not succeed in ridding it of the resinous gum which it distils, and softening it enough for weaving. An ingenious countryman of our own, M. Lienard, has just regulated and brought to perfection the attempts which so far had remained stationary among the English. He has established at Pont Remy a manufactory of the Phormium Tenax. The cloths that were shown at the public exposition appeared to us as beautiful, but more substantial, more pliable, and lighter than linen cloth. They seemed to be appropriate for sails and for the covering of carriages. Amateurs have made renewed demands for it. One of the great properties of the Phormium is, that it can remain under water five, six or seven months without being injured. Numerous experiments on ropes and cables leave no doubt in this respect. The factory of M. Lienard, situated at Pont Remy, employs more than a thousand workmen. Before many months, we are assured that the great increase of this fabric will cause the number to amount to three thousand. Before being brought to the weaving state, this plant goes through seven operations, which are so little costly that all included, even to the combing, does not amount to six francs the quintal. We repeat, that this fact is very important. At the moment when the cloth manufacture has fallen in France, when we cannot in any market obtain a rivalship with England, Holland and Belgium, here is a fabric which can and ought to take the place of cotton. This is perhaps a great source of wealth to come into France. Marshal Clausel has introduced the culture of the Phormium into Algiers. The government will understand the economy of its use in the navy. In England, where as yet they only make cables of the Phormium, it is preferred to any other kind of cable. But shall this manufacture be left to a caprice of rivalry? Cannot England shut up New Zealand from us? Will not the state protect a French establishment in this island?

THE FACTORY GIRLS AT LOWELL, MASS.—New Bedford, Oct. 12. We have already noticed the strike of the female operatives in the Lowell factories, and their refusal to work unless their wages were advanced. It is said that thirteen years ago, when the mills were put in operation at that place, the price of board was fixed at $1 25 per week. At that time wood was not more than $3 50 a cord; butter 15 cents a lb.; rye and Indian meal 90 cents a bushel, and all other necessities of life in proportion.

Within a few years all such necessities have risen 50 per cent.; and still the female operatives have paid only $1 25 a week for board. The boarding house keepers have suffered, and too many of them having been ruined by the continuance of a restriction as to price of board, which was equitable when established, but by change of circumstances had become oppressive and intolerable.—For a year past, complaints on this subject have been heard on all sides. These complaints were just.

To afford partial relief to the housekeepers, for many months past, the corporations have diminished the rent to a mere nominal sum; and, it is said, in many cases no rent has been taken, and a sum equal to the rent paid into the hands of the tenants. Even this was not full relief, and something further was required. In this state of things, the corporations removed the restrictions so far as to allow the housekeepers to charge each female $1 37 1-2 a week for board; and authorise the housekeepers to deduct out of rents, which would be due to the corporations, 12 1-2 cts. more thus making the pay for board $1 50 a week.

This is much less than is given for board to housekeepers who are not tenants of the corporations, and we think it full 25 cents a week less than ought to be paid. But it is understood that the housekeepers will be satisfied with it.

Against this rise in the price of board, the female operatives are now remonstrating, and have turned out and left off work for the purpose of coercing their employers into an abandonment of it.

Their course is not without justification. They have formed themselves into a society, called "the Lowell Factory Girls' association," and are assisted in their deliberations by many of the best men in the neighborhood.

A meeting of this association was holden at the City Hall on the 6th of October. Wm. B. May, moderator, E. A. Blanchard, secretary. Prayer was offered—various addresses were made—and several resolutions adopted, of which we will endeavor to give the substance. 1. Knowing that we are liable, as our predecessors have been, to be oppressed in various ways by avaricious capitalists, and knowing that "union is power," we claim the right of association, that we may repel aggressions. 2. We are resolved not to receive any proposition from either of the manufacturing companies in Lowell, except by and through our officers. 3. When two-thirds of our officers approve a proposition, the president will call a meeting of the society and lay it before them for their consideration. 4. We advise all our members, who cannot consistently stay in this city, to leave it as soon as it is convenient. 5. Board of officers are authorised to fill all vacancies in their board. 6. We will receive no communication from either of the manufacturing companies, containing a proscription of any officer or member of this society. The above is the substance though not the exact wording, of their resolutions. Thanks were then voted for the reverend gentlemen who honored the meeting with their attendance and remarks. Several speeches were made, sustaining the resolutions, and commending the object of the society, two of which are reported in the Lowell Advertiser.

We are not a little surprised at the reluctance of the manufacturers to comply with the reasonable demands of the poor girls, and trust that this united effort to obtain justice will not be without its good effects.

LOCUSTS IN SYRIA. We have received Smyrna papers to July 30, from which we copy the following account of the remarkable destruction of locusts, by order of Ibrahim pacha, in Syria. In the beginning of the summer there appeared such a prodigious flight of locusts that they threatened all the crops with certain destruction. Ibrahim pacha immediately adopted a measure for the preservation of the country from the disaster which threatened it. All the population of Aleppo was put in requisition, and divided into sections, forced to go out of the city to hunt the locusts. The same thing was done in some other districts invaded by the insects. Ibrahim pacha, at the head of his troops, scouring the country, compelled every body to go to work, great and small, officers and soldiers. After 40 days of an uninterrupted hunt, he succeeded in delivering the country from this devastating scourge, and saving the crops. It is curious to see the immense result of this expedition. There is a statement which was drawn up by Ibrahim pacha, who caused the quantities of insects destroyed to be measured before his eyes. The following is the statement:

Locusts destroyed by the Egyptian troops in the space of 40 days,	418,269 ardebs.
Do. Marrah,	2,815 "
Do. by the population,	9,076 "

427,160 ardebs.

This enormous quantity is only the amount of what were destroyed by the troops and population of Aleppo; but there were besides in the villages of the Arabs, and in the district of Killis, Aintab, Hammah, Marrah and Damascus, immense quantities destroyed which were not measured.

That the reader may have a more accurate idea of the quantity above stated, we are informed in the article that an ardeb is equal to two schumbouls and a half of Aleppo—to eight kilos of Constantinople—to one salme of Malta—to two charges and a half of Marseilles—and finally to three hectolitres of Paris.

For the information of the mere English reader, it may be proper to state that a hectolitre is equal to a hundred litres, and that a litre is the cube of a decimetre. A decimetre is of course a tenth part of a metre, and a metre the ten millionth part of the arc of the meridian from the north pole to the equator; from which it may be calculated that the ardeb is equal to a fraction over eight bushels.

[Boston Daily Adv.]

DUTY ON NEWSPAPERS REDUCED. Among our London papers received yesterday, was "The Constitutional," of September 15th, being the first number issued by an association entitled "The Metropolitan Newspaper company," who have a capital of sixty thousand pounds sterling, which is divided into 6,000 shares, of ten pounds each. The above journal is issued under the new act of parliament, which reduces the stamp duty from four pence to one penny on each paper. This reduction of the duty has changed the price of the London daily papers from seven pence to four pence half-penny.—In the address of "The Constitutional," the editors say that they cannot offer a clearer exposition of their political creed than is contained in their desire for the removal of every impediment to the political education of the people. Their first object is to advocate the rights and advance the interests of the millions who, by a stamp duty of even the smallest amount, are as effectually excluded from the privileges which the press opens to others, as, by the ten pound franchise, they are excluded from direct representation in parliament; and that to qualify them for the exercise of the right of voting, it is necessary to confer upon them the right of reading.

[Merc. Adv.]

IMPORTANT TO MERCHANTS. The American chamber of commerce of Liverpool held a special meeting on the 8th of August, at which an application was made to state the custom of the port as to the right of consignees of property to dispose of it for reimbursement of their advances. After due consideration it was "resolved, that in the absence of any express agreement to the contrary, consignees of property on which they have made advances, have the right to dispose of the same, or so much as may be necessary to reimburse themselves, the drafts, freights, duties and other charges upon the same, notwithstanding that limits for sale may have been given by the consignors—merchants there not being bound by limits to which neither they nor their agents are parties."

FORT GIBSON. Lieut. J. P. Davis, U. S. A. arrived in this place on Sunday evening last, from Fort Gibson, on his way to the south, to join the army under gen. Gaines, on the Sabine. It gives us pleasure to learn from him that the troops at Fort Gibson have been unusually healthy this season. Not a death has occurred thus far from sickness, during the last five months. The Indians on our western frontier were perfectly quiet and peaceable, and likely to remain so. [Arkansas Gaz.]

GROWTH OF RUSSIA. At the accession of Peter the first, in 1689, the population of the Russian empire was 15 millions; at the accession of Catharine the second, in 1762, 25 millions; at her death, in 1796, 36 millions; and, at the death of the emperor Alexander, now 11 years since, 68 millions.—The acquisitions of Russia from Sweden are greater than what remains of that kingdom. Her acquisitions in Poland are nearly equal to the Austrian empire. Her acquisitions from Turkey, in Europe, are of greater extent than the Prussian dominions, inclusive of the Rhenish provinces. Her acquisitions from Turkey, in Asia, are nearly equal in dimensions to the whole of the smaller states of Germany. Her acquisitions from Persia are equal in extent to England. Her acquisitions in Tartary have an area not inferior to Turkey in Europe, Greece, Italy and Spain! The acquisitions she has made within the last 64 years are equal in extent and importance to the whole empire she had in Europe before that time. The Russian frontier has been advanced towards Berlin, Dresden, Munich, Vienna and Paris, about 100 miles; towards Constantinople, 600 miles; towards Stockholm, about 630 miles; towards Teheran, 1,000 miles. [Progress of Russia.]

PUNCTUALITY OF WASHINGTON. The following anecdote of Washington is related in the Baltimore "Chronicle."

"I have heard it stated as an anecdote of general Washington, when he resided on his estate near Alexandria, that his hour for voting was 12 o'clock—this PUNCTUALITY was proverbial. On one election day it rained tremendously, and several persons about the inn remarked, 'We fear that the general will not come in to-day.' However, as the clock struck 12, the general's carriage appeared in sight, covered with mud, and the horses like drowned rats. He immediately alighted, handed in his vote, and then went into the inn, where he took a snack and a glass of wine with his friends, one of whom remarked, 'we were afraid this boisterous day would have prevented you from coming to town as usual.' The general's facetious reply was, 'Did you ever know George Washington to neglect his duty?'"

A GOOD PROFIT. It appears by the report of the Vermont Mutual Insurance company, which has been in operation six years and a half, that they have insured nearly $11,000,000 of property. Their losses during this time have been $39,000, and the cost of insuring the same amount of property in the ordinary companies at the usual rates would have amounted to $435,772 17! From this deduct the actual losses, $39,000, and it shows that a mutual insurance company, in six years and a half, has saved to the insured, upwards of $896,000!!

TRIAL OF THE SUN. The trial of Messrs. Day & Beach, editors of the Sun, for abducting a package containing the president's message, terminated on the 7th inst. The jury, after an absence of two hours, returned into court with a verdict of GUILTY, on the 2d, 3d, 4th and 5th counts of the indictment, viz: of reading, causing to be read, opening, reading or causing to be read, and of publishing—but "not guilty" on the first count, which charges the actual opening or breaking of the seal.

[N. Y. Eve. Star.]

ARISTOCRACY!—IN NEW YORK. The N. York American, speaking of the condition of society in New York, says—

"A most unfounded jealousy also seems to prevail in society between merchants and owners of property in the lower wards. The feelings of envy, and even of hatred, seem to be in some persons as strong as those of the serfs of Europe against the privileged classes. Such feelings are unworthy of a country with institutions such as ours. We cannot yet point to the family in which wealth has remained to the third generation.

"Our richest owners of real estate can be traced at a single step to occupants of a corner grocery, or the petty chandler's shop, and the most successful merchants are they who have swept the streets, and carried parcels for their predecessors, nay, wheeled the barrow or pushed the hand cart. Those who have acquired wealth by such laborious duties have a right to enjoy the comforts it will procure, and indulge in the luxuries it affords. If the European aristocrat may smile at their sumptuous houses, their costly and often tasteless furniture, their carriages and pampered horses, and particularly at the barbarian profusion of their tables, the American republican ought rather to rejoice, and applaud these forms of profusion, as the means by which individual vanity is made to circulate throughout the whole community wealth which would otherwise be locked up."

ELECTIONS.

MAINE.

The following is given as an authentic statement of the result of the late congressional election in Maine:

In Cumberland district, F. O. J. Smith fails of an election by 28 votes.

In Lincoln district, Bailey (whig) wants only 13 votes of an election.

In Somerset and Penobscot, no choice.

In Hancock and Washington, no choice.

In Waldo, no choice.

A second election will take place on the first Wednesday in November next.

VERMONT.

The legislature of Vermont assembled at Montpelier on the 13th instant, and was organized by the election of Charles Coolidge, speaker of the house, and A. S. Miner, clerk. The vote for speaker was 125 whig to 88 Van Buren. The official canvass for governor, lieutenant governor and treasurer, was made and declared on the same day. The following is the result:

S. H. Jenison, for gov. 20,471; W. C. Bradley, 16,147—majority, 4,297.

David M. Camp, for lieut gov. 20,023; J. S. Pettibone, 15,926—majority, 4,097.

A. Clarke, for treasurer, 20,188; C. R. Cleaves, 15,946—majority, 4,242.

NEW JERSEY.

It is now stated that the legislature will stand thus:

Council, 7 whigs, 7 Van Buren;—assembly, 19 whigs, 31 Van Buren. Whig gain from last year in the council, 2; in the assembly, 3.

PENNSYLVANIA.

We have not, as we expected, received correct returns of the election in this state. One account says that 72 Van Buren men and 28 whigs have been elected to the house of representatives, and that seven of the eight new senators chosen this year are friends of Van Buren. The result of the congressional election is said to be 18 for Van Buren and 10 whigs—being a gain of two friends of Van Buren since the last election. Particulars hereafter.

FROM SOUTH CAROLINA.

We learn that Hugh L. Legare has been elected to congress by a small majority over Henry L. Pinckney, the present representative from the district which includes the city of Charleston.

GEORGIA.

The following is the state of the vote for the congressional tickets in 71 counties:

State rights ticket.		Union ticket.
Alford,	26,068	Cleveland,	25,459
Black,	25,608	*Coffee,	24,473
Colquett,	26,002	Grantland,	25,267
Dawson,	26,324	Haynes,	25,385
Habersham,	25,941	Holsey,	35,158
Jackson,	25,827	Jackson,	25,182
King,	25,834	Owens,	25,244
Nesbit,	25,789	Towns,	25,458

Glascok, 42,238
The legislature, at the latest accounts, stood thus:
For White, 102
For Van Buren, 102

OHIO.

Returns from 57 out of the 74 counties in this state give gen. Vance, the whig candidate for governor, a majority of about nine thousand votes over Baldwin, the Van Buren candidate. The returns of the senatorial and delegate election are very vague, and cannot be relied on. It is stated, however, that, as far as heard from, 6 whigs and 6 friends of Van Buren have been elected to the senate, and 14 Van Buren men and 21 whigs to the house of delegates.

The following is said to be a correct return of the congressional election from the specified districts. Those in italic are friends of Mr. Van Buren:

Dis.	Present congress.	Elected this year.
1st.	Bellamy Storer,	A. Duncan,
4th.	Thomas Corwin,	Thomas Corwin,
7th.	W. K. Bond,	W. K. Bond,
8th.	Jeremiah McLene,	J. Ridgaway, sr.
9th.	John Chaney,	John Chaney,
10th.	Samson Mason,	Samson Mason,
11th.	W. Kennon,	J. Alexander, jr.
12th.	Elias Howell,	Alexander Harper
15th.	Jonathan Sloan,	John W. Allen,
17th.	John Thompson,	A. W. Loomis,
18th.	Benjamin Jones,	Mathias Shepler.

THE ARMY—OFFICIAL.

War Department,

GENERAL ORDER, }
No. 65, } Adjutant general's office,
Washington, Oct. 8, 1836.

The following order is published for the information of all concerned:

*Gen Coffee died previous to the election.

"By direction of the president of the United States, a court of inquiry, to consist of major gen. Macomb, president, and brevet brigadier generals Atkinson and Brady, members, is hereby ordered to assemble at the city of Frederick, in Maryland, as soon as the state of the military operations against the Indians will permit the witnesses to attend, (of which the president of the court is to judge and determine, and to give notice to all concerned), to inquire and examine into the causes of the failure of the campaigns in Florida against the Seminole Indians, under the command of major general Gaines and of major general Scott, in 1836; and the causes of the delay in opening and prosecuting the campaign in Georgia and Alabama, against the hostile Creek Indians, in the year 1836; and into every subject connected with the military operations in the campaigns aforesaid, and after fully investigating the same, the court will report the facts, together with its opinions on the whole subject, for the information of the president of the United States.

"Captain Samuel Cooper, of the 4th regiment of artillery, is hereby appointed to act as judge advocate and recorder of the court. LEW. CASS.

War department, Oct. 8, 1836.

R. JONES, adjutant general."

GENERAL ORDER, }
No. 68, } Adjutant general's office,
Washington, Oct. 14, 1836.

The following order has been received from the war department, and is published for the information of all concerned.

War department, October 13, 1836.

1. It appearing by the public prints, that the official report of brevet major general Gaines, dated "head quarters, western department, Camp Sabine, 4th July, 1836," made to the adjutant general of the army, has been published, and the said publication being without the sanction of the war department, or other proper authority, the court of inquiry, of which major general Alexander Macomb is president, will, in addition to the duties already assigned to it, inquire into the facts as to the manner, and by whose authority, the said official report was made public.

2. The court will also report its opinion as to the violation of the rules of the service by such publication, and as to the character of said report in reference to all its bearings and consequences, as it concerns general military propriety and the discipline of the army.

3. And further, the court will examine and inquire into any other reports and publications, made by brevet major general Gaines, or by any other officer of the army, having reference to military affairs, and published without the sanction of the war department, or other proper authority, and give its opinion on the tendency of such reports and publications in the same manner as it is herein required to do in the case referred to in the foregoing paragraph of this order.

[Signed] C. A. HARRIS,
acting secretary of war.

By order of major general Macomb.
R. JONES, adjutant general.

GENERAL ORDER, }
No. 69, } Adjutant general's office,
Washington, Oct. 10, 1836.

1. At the request of major, now lieutenant col. R. B. Mason, 1st regiment of dragoons, a court of inquiry will assemble at Fort Gibson, Arkansas, on the 20th December next, or as soon thereafter as practicable, to examine into the nature of the accusations against the said major, now lieutenant colonel R. B. Mason, as presented in the charges preferred by lieut. L. B. Northrop, 1st regiment of dragoons. The court will report the facts in the case, together with its opinion on the whole subject:

2. The court of inquiry will consist of lieutenant colonel S. Burbank, 5th infantry; major C. Wharton, 1st dragoons; the third officer will be detailed by brevet brig. general Arbuckle, who will also appoint the recorder of the court. By order of maj. gen. Macomb, R. JONES, adj. gen.

GENERAL ORDER, }
No. 69, } Head quarters of the army,
Adjutant general's office,
Washington, Oct. 15, 1836.

War department, Oct. 15, 1836.

I. The following order has been received from the president of the United States:

"Official reports, received from Florida, show that several companies are without officers to command them. Other reports from the commanders of the troops in the field equally show the destitute condition of the service, owing to the absence of so many platoon officers. The adjutant general reports that returns required by the articles of war are delayed, or forwarded incomplete, from the want of company commanders to make and transmit the returns requisite for the colonel; and that there are instances of discharged soldiers from the army in Florida, who, for the like reasons, could not obtain the necessary certificates, nor receive their arrearages of pay.

"This condition of the army must no longer be permitted to exist. Duty with troops in the field should be regarded as paramount to any employment which separates the officer from his men.—The public interest and a due regard to the wants of the private soldier alike demand the presence, at all times, of the proper complement of commissioned officers.

"The several captains and subalterns who are not on duty with their companies—excepting only those employed in military service proper, or upon some duty of the public service, strictly speaking, will immediately be ordered to join their regiments.

"Under no circumstances, hereafter, must more than two officers of a company of artillery, or one from a company of the infantry, be detailed for detached duty at the same time; nor shall any such detail be made, except for military service proper, without the special sanction of the president in each case.

"The topographical engineers will be employed with the army in the field, and hereafter be assigned to duty under the orders of the proper commanders.

ANDREW JACKSON, president of the U. S.

Washington, Oct. 14, 1836."

The maj. gen. commanding the army will carry these directions into effect. C. A. HARRIS,

Acting secretary of war.

II. In conformity with the foregoing instructions of the president, the several captains and subalterns now absent from their companies, and not on duty with the army, nor employed in military service proper, will join their respective regiments without delay. Accordingly, the following named officers are relieved from detached service, and will forthwith proceed to their proper stations for duty with the troops.

ENGINEER DUTY.—(15.)

Lt. J. Allen	1 drag.	Lt. J. K. Greenough	1 inf.
Lt. J. Winder	1 art.	Lt. T. Stockton	5 "
Lt. E. Sibley	1 "	Capt. H. Smith	6 "
Lt. D. P. Woodbury	3 "	Lt. N. J. Eaton	6 "
Lt. R. C. Smead	4 "	Lt. A. Cady	6 "
Lt. L. A. B. Walbach	1 "	Lt. J. Freeman	6 "
Lt. F. A. Lewis	1 "	Lt. G. W. Cass	7 "
Lt. R. Allen	2 "

TOPOGRAPHICAL DUTY.—(19.)

Lt. Warner	1 art.	Lt. Stockton	1 inf.
Lt. Hagner	1 "	Lt. R. S. Smith	2 "
Lt. Mackay	2 "	Lt. Cooper	3 "
Lt. Bransford	2 "	Lt. Berrien	5 "
Lt. Conckling	2 "	Lt. Center	5 "
Lt. Rose	3 "	Lt. Williams	6 "
Lt. Allen	3 "	Lt. Dix	7 "
Lt. Donaldson	3 "	Lt. Simmons	7 "
Lt. Greene	3 "	Lt. Reed	7 "
Lt. Johnston	4 "

ORDNANCE DUTY.—(13.)

Lt. Williamson	1 art.	Bvt. capt. Newton	3 art.
Lt. Maynadier	1 "	Lt. Meade	3 "
Lt. Chalmers	1 "	Lt. Scott	4 "
Bvt. capt. Lowd	2 "	Lt. Jones	4 "
Bvt. capt. Mallory	2 "	Lt. Thornton	4 "
Lt. McKenzie	2 "	Lt. Tufts	4 "
Lt. Talcott	3 "

SPECIAL DUTY.—(9.)

Lt. A. Mackay	1 art.	Lt. Deas	4 art.
Lt. Magruder	1 "	Lt. Beckley	4 "
Lt. Lee	1 "	Capt. G. Allen	4 inf.
Bvt. maj. Legate	2 "	Capt. Morrison	4 "
Lt. Keyes	3 "

III. The following topographical engineers and assistant topographical engineers, are assigned to duty under the orders of the commanding officers, to whom they will report in person, and under whose orders they will serve as follows:

Bvt. lt. col. J. Kearney, } are assigned to the south
Bvt. capt. Turnbull, } western frontiers of Louisiana, (Fort Jesup,) and will report to brigadier general Arbuckle, or commanding officer.

Bvt. major Bache, } are assigned to the western
Bvt. capt. Williams, } frontiers of Arkansas, (Fort Gibson,) and will report to brigadier general Arbuckle, or commanding officer.

Bvt. lieutenant col. Long, } are assigned to duty under
Bvt. maj. McNeil, } the order of brigadier general Atkinson, or commanding officer at Jefferson barracks.

Bvt. major Graham, } are assigned to duty in Florida.
Bvt. capt. Canfield, } do, and will report to governor Call, or the commanding officer.

IV. Colonels and other field officers now absent from their regiments, will proceed to join forthwith. Officers and men who are, at this time, unable to join the army for duty, will repair to their stations to which they have been assigned in "general order" No. 53.

Bvt. major F. Whiting, 1 art. will, under direction of the ordnance department, for the present, take charge of the Champlain arsenal at Vergennes, and bvt. major Saunders, 1 art. of that at Pikesville, Md.

V. The president of the United States has been pleased to confer on the following named officers, serving in Florida, for gallant and meritorious actions in the face of the enemy, the brevet rank set opposite to their names respectively:

Major B. K. Pierce, of the 1st regiment of artillery, to be lieutenant colonel by brevet, for distinguished services in the affair of Fort Drane, to date from the 21st August, 1836.

Captain T. Childs, of the 3d regiment of artillery, to be major by brevet, for planning the attack on the Indians at Fort Drane, and good conduct in that affair, to date from the 21st August, 1836.

Captain William M. Graham, of the 4th regiment of infantry, to be major by brevet, for gallantry and good conduct in the affair of the Wythlacoochee, to date from the 31st December, 1835.

Captain R. B. Lee, of the 3d regiment of artillery to be major by brevet, for gallantry and good conduct in the affair of Micanopy, to date from 9th June, 1836.

Captain J. A. Ashby, of the 2d regiment of dragoons, to be major by brevet, for gallantry and good conduct in the affair of Welika, to date from 19th July, 1836.

First lieutenant Campbell Graham, of the 3d regiment of artillery, to be captain by brevet, for gallantry and good conduct in the affair on the Wythlacoochee, to date from the 31st December, 1835.

First lieutenant W. S. Maitland, of the 3d regiment of artillery, to be captain by brevet, for gallantry and good conduct in the affairs of the Wythlacoochee and Welika, to date from the 31st December, 1835.

Second lieutenant A. Herbert, of the 1st regiment of artillery, to be 1st lieutenant by brevet, for gallantry and good conduct on several occasions in Florida, to take rank from the 27th July, 1836.

By order of Alexander Macomb, major general commanding-in-chief: R. JONES, adj't gen.

GENERAL ORDER, } Head quarters of the army,
No. 70. } Adjutant general's office,
Washington, Oct. 18, 1836.

The major general commanding-in-chief, with great regret, announces to the army the death of Dr. Joseph Lovell, M. D. surgeon general.

The services of the deceased, in peace and war, have been eminent. His loss to the service will be severely felt. As an evidence of the esteem in which his character is held, the officers of the army are requested to wear the usual mourning for thirty days from this date.

By order of major general Macomb,
R. JONES, adjutant general.

APPOINTMENTS.

Second regiment of dragoons.

William M. Fulton, of Va. to be captain.
Croghan Ker, to be 1st lieutenant.

A. S. Macomb, do.

N. W. Hunter, of Geo. to be 2d lieutenant.

Assistant commissaries of subsistence.

Lieut. S. P. Heintzelman, 2d infantry, 1st April, 1836.

Lieut. W. Hoffman, 6th infantry, 3d Sept. 1836.

Lieut. J. Allen Smith, 3d artillery, 5th September, 1836.

Lieut. M. R. Patrick, 2d infantry, 12th September, 1836.

Lieut. J. H. Stokes, 4th artillery, 13th September, 1836.

Lieut. John Pickell, adjutant of the 4th regiment of artillery, vice capt. H. A. Thompson, promoted.

Lieut. George Pegram, adjutant of the 1st regiment of infantry, vice, L. J. Beall, transferred to the 2d regiment of dragoons.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

Regulations in reference to failures of the mail.

Inasmuch as failures to arrive at the ends of their routes and other points within contract time cannot but be known in all cases to contractors or their agents, it cannot be necessary to give them information thereof when reported by postmasters, and it is considered their duty to send to the department, forthwith, their excuse for such failures, if any they have, therefore,

Ordered, That no notice be hereafter given to contractors of failures to arrive at any post office in contract-time, as reported by postmasters to the department, and if no excuse be received from them within a reasonable time, the third assistant is directed to present the cases, thus reported, to the postmaster general for fine.

Ordered, That a specific excuse be required for each specific delinquency of any contractor and that general allegations be not admitted. If bad roads be alleged, a specific report must be made of what portion of the road was so bad as to obstruct the mails, and what was its peculiar condition; if high waters, it must be shown what water courses were impassable; and so of all other excuses.

Regulations for a system of letter carriers in the cities of the United States, under the 41st section of the "act to change the organization of the post office department," &c. approved 2d July, 1836.

1. When it shall be deemed proper for the accommodation of the public in any city, that a system of letter carriers shall be introduced, application to authorise it must be made to the postmaster general.

2. Postmasters of cities where letter carriers have been, or may be authorised, will divide their several cities into as many districts as they may think proper, and nominate to the postmaster general a carrier for each district.

3. The postmasters will see that the carriers appointed by the postmaster general execute bonds, with ample security, according to law, and will forward them, when executed, to the department.

4. No letter carrier will be permitted to enter upon duty until he shall have executed a bond satisfactory to the postmaster.

5. All letters received in the post office for persons residing in any district, shall be handed to the carrier of that district for delivery, "except such as the persons to whom they are addressed may have requested, in writing addressed to the postmaster, to be retained in the office."

6. The carriers will be permitted to receive letters for deposit in the post office, at all places within their respective districts.

7. Whenever it may be deemed necessary to establish depots for the receipt of letters, by the letter carriers, to be put into the post office, the postmasters shall recommend proper places to the postmaster general for his decision thereon.

8. The letter carriers shall receive two cents for every letter, and one cent for every newspaper delivered, and two cents for every letter received to be deposited in the post office—all of which shall be allowed them for their compensation, unless otherwise directed by the postmaster general.

9. The postmasters shall report to the postmaster general quarterly, the amount of each letter carrier's compensation.

10. The letter carriers shall be under the orders and control of the postmasters, or such clerks in their respective offices as they may designate.—They will settle and pay over to the postmaster or clerk, daily, the postages of all unpaid letters and papers handed them for delivery, and of all paid letters received to be deposited in the post office.

11. The letter carriers shall perform such duties in relation to mailing letters received by them to be deposited in the post office as the postmasters shall direct; but they shall not be employed in making up or opening and examining the letter mails in the post offices.

12. The postmasters will promptly report to the postmaster general any contumacy of letter carriers in refusing to obey their lawful directions, or in disregarding the regulations of the department, as well as all official delinquencies or private misconduct which render them undeserving of confidence and trust.

13. The several postmasters are authorised to make and enforce such additional rules for the government of letter carriers in their respective cities, not incompatible with law, as may be necessary to carry these regulations into full effect.

FUNERAL OF AN INDIAN PRINCESS.

Begum Sumroo, the celebrated princess of Jug-hire, one of the oldest and most sincere allies of the English, died at Sirdhannah, on the 27th of January, in the 87th year of her age. For the last half century, she had held the most conspicuous position in the political proceedings of India. By her death, all her territory becomes the property of the British government, and, immediately after her funeral, the annexation of it to Zillah Meerutt was proclaimed in all the towns of the Jughire. The introduction of the police and fiscal arrangements had been intrusted to Mr. Hamilton, the magistrate at Meerutt, by orders from the government as far back as August, 1834. The personal property of Begum Sumroo, amounting to about half a crore, (about £50,000), devolves by will to Mr. Dyce Sombre. She appears to have been much esteemed by her adherents and friends, and to have been of an amiable and charitable disposition. The following account of her funeral is curious. From the time of her death until after her interment, all her dependents observed a strict fast, and none retired to rest, according to the custom of the place:—About nine o'clock, the body of her late highness was removed from the inner apartment into the large hall of audience, at the top of the flight of steps at the grand entrance, which had been prepared for the lying in state. The body was deposited on a handsome bed covered with shawls, over which was a superb canopy of black velvet, supported on pillars covered with the same rich material; all the chandeliers were filled with lighted wax tapers, rows of which were placed on the floor on either side of the bed, at the head of which was a beautiful cross surrounded by valuable jewels. Around the room, in a kneeling posture, was arranged a company of native Christian artillery, on which had devolved the last watch over the precious remains of their beloved mistress; in the large room adjoining the hall, behind purdahs, the whole of the females of the establishment were assembled; the moaning and weeping we have heard described as truly heart-breaking, and to have been heard far beyond the precincts of the palace. The body remained in this chamber until the morning, when it was deposited in a solid coffin, covered with black velvet, and silver mountings, having on a plate the name of her highness and the date of her demise inscribed. After the body had been placed in the coffin, the face was uncovered, and the whole of the household admitted to view for the last time those features on which they had so long and so dearly doted. After some time, the lid was screwed on, in the presence of the magistrate, Mr. Dyce Sombre, and other members of the family, and at nine, the whole of the arrangements being completed, the body was carried out, borne by the native Christians of the artillery battalion, under a canopy supported by the principal officers of her late highness' troops, and the pall by Messrs. Dyce Sombre, Solaroli, Drever and Troup, preceded by the whole of her highness' body guard, followed by the bishop, chanting portions of the service, aided by the choristers of the cathedral; after them the magistrate, Mr. Hamilton, and then the chief officers of the household; the whole brought up by a battalion of her late highness' infantry and a troop of horse. The procession, preceded by four elephants, from which alms and cakes were distributed amongst the crowd, passed through a street formed of the troops, to the door of the cathedral, the entrance to which was kept by a guard of honor from the 30th native infantry, under the command of captain Campbell.—The procession passed into the body of the cathedral, in the centre of which the coffin was deposited on tressels. High mass was then performed in excellent style and with great feeling by the bishop, the organ sounded solemnly, and, with the firing of the minute guns, (87 in number), added greatly to the imposing scene. At the proper time the body was lowered into the vault, situate on the left hand side, in a recess; immediately the troops stationed within it fired three volleys, making the cathedral tremble almost by the explosion, and the service was concluded. [Calcutta paper.

POPULAR STATISTICS.
THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.
	Population in 1836.	Square Popula- miles. tion to sq. miles.	Slaves in 1830.
New York,	2,400,000	46,200	46
Pennsylvania,	1,600,000	43,960	32	388
Virginia,	1,260,000	64,000	20	363,638
Ohio,	1,300,000	30,850	34
North Carolina,	800,000	43,802	18	246,462
South Carolina,	650,000	33,080	19	315,665
Kentucky,	800,000	39,015	21	165,350
Tennessee,	900,000	44,720	19	142,383
Massachusetts,	700,000	7,800	87
Georgia,	620,000	58,200	9	217,470
Maryland,	500,000	10,829	45	102,878
Maine,	555,000	31,960	14
Indiana,	550,000	34,600	13
New Jersey,	860,000	6,900	42	2,460
Alabama,	500,000	50,875	9	117,294
Connecticut,	298,000	4,770	62	23
Vermont,	830,000	10,205	33
New Hampshire,	300,000	9,280	31
Louisiana,	350,000	48,000	7	109,630
Illinois,	320,000	59,130	6	746
Missouri,	350,000	60,384	5	24,990
Mississippi,	150,000	45,375	3	56,000
Rhode Island,	110,000	1,363	81	14
Delaware,	89,000	2,063	37	3,395
Dist. Columbia,	50,000	1,000	—	6,050
Florida territory,	50,006	57,750	—	15,510
Michigan,	120,000	38,750	—	27
Arkansas,	70,000	120,000	—	4,578
Wisconsin ter.	20,000	58,000	—
Oregon ter.	5,000	144,000	—
Missouri ter.	5,000	200,000	—

The number of Indians is supposed to be 400,000. The entire population within the limits of the U. States, Indians included, amounts (as nearly as could be ascertained in 1836) to 16,680,000.

RELIGIONS OF THE UNITED STATES.
From the New Yorker.
Baptists,	4,300,000
Methodists,	3,000,000
Presbyterians,	2,175,000
Congregationalists,	1,400,000
Roman Catholics,	800,000
Episcopalians,	600,000
Universalists,	600,000
Lutherans,	540,000
Dutch Reformed,	450,000
Christians,	300,000
Friends,	220,000
Unitarians,	180,000
Mormonites,	12,000
Dunkers,	30,000
Shakers,	6,000
Moravians,	5,000
Swedenborgians,	4,000

IMPORTS AND EXPORTS.
Value of imports for the year ending 30th Sept. 1835,	$149,895,742
Of which there were imported in
American vessels,	185,288,865
In foreign vessels,	14,606,877
American shipping entered,	1,352,653 tons.
Do. cleared in same time,	1,400,517 tons.
Foreign shipping entered,	641,310 tons.
Do. cleared in same time,	630,824 tons.
Value of exports for the year ending 30th Sept. 1835,	$121,693,577
Of which there were exported of domestic articles,	101,189,082
Foreign do.	20,504,495
Domestic articles exported in American ships	79,022,746
Do. in foreign ships,	22,166,336
Foreign articles exported in American ships,	15,112,475
Do. in foreign ships,	5,392,050
The public lands sold in 1835, amounted to	$15,810,795.
The standing army of the United States, on the peace establishment, is 8,221.
The navy of the United States consists of—when all the ships now on the stocks are completed—12 ships of the line,
14 frigate, (first class),
8 do. (second class),
15 sloops of war,
8 schooners do.

FINANCES OF THE UNITED STATES.
Receipts during the year ending, closing Jan. 1, 1834	$33,948,426 25
Out of the above $29,082,508 81 were received from the customs.
Expenditure for the same period,	$24,257,298 49
Expenditure in the year ending Jan. 1, 1835,	25,591,390 91
Amount of currency in specie and silver.
Circulation of private bank notes in 1834,	$68,000,000
Do. United States bank notes do.	16,000,000
Do. gold,	4,000,000
Do. silver,	16,000,000
	$104,000,000
Capital invested in selected or deposit banks, in 1834-5,	34,847,203
Capital invested in state banks in 1834-5,	219,250,549
Capital of the bank of the U. States, chartered by the state of Pennsylvania,	28,000,000
Post office revenue: for 1834,	1,969,913
Number of post offices in that year	10,387
Amount coined in the mint in 1834, in gold,	$3,954,270
In silver,	3,415,002
In copper,	19,151
Total,	$7,388,423
Total amount of the gold produced in the mines of the United States in 1834, was valued at	$895,000
The value of the cotton exported in 1834, was	$49,484,402.
Great Britain and her colonies take nearly one-half of the exports, and send nearly one-half of the imports of the United States.
Length of canals in the United States, Jan. 1, 1835	2,687 miles.
Length of rail roads do. same date	1,600

There are 79 colleges for public education in the United States; 36 theological seminaries; 23 medical schools; 8 law schools.

The public schools are very numerous, particularly in New England, New York, Ohio and Pennsylvania; while the benevolent institutions of America, are not surpassed by those of any other country.

Dr. Watts in his treaty on logic says, there is no better method by which to judge of the size of anything, than "comparison." Therefore, by way of enabling our readers the better to judge of the extent of our vast territories, we subjoin the size of the British Islands, in square miles.

	Square miles.
England and Wales contain	58,385
Scotland	89,500
Ireland	30,000

By this it will be seen that Virginia, Alabama, Illinois, Missouri, Arkansas and the "territories," are each of them larger than England and Wales.

New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, both of the Carolinas, Kentucky, Tennessee, Georgia, Maine, Indiana, Louisiana, Mississippi, Florida and Michigan, are each of them larger than Scotland and Ireland.

THE AMERICAN FARMER.
BY NICHOLAS BIDDLE.
From an address before the Philadelphia society for promoting Agriculture.

If I have failed to prove that the pursuits of agriculture may be as lucrative as other employments, it will be an easier task to vindicate their pleasure and their importance. I need not dwell on that retirement, one of the purest enjoyments of this life, and the best preparation for the future, on those healthy occupations, on that calmness of mind, on that high spirit of manliness and independence, which naturally belong to that condition. These are attractions which must have deep roots in the human heart, since they have in all times fascinated at once the imagination, and won the judgment of men. But I may be allowed to say, that in this nation, agriculture is probably destined to attain its highest honors, and that the country life in America ought to possess peculiar attractions—the pure and splendid institutions of this people have embodied the highest dreams of those high spirits, who in other times and in other lands, have lamented or struggled against oppression; they have realized the fine conceptions which speculative men have imagined, which wise men have planned, or brave men vainly perished in attempting to establish. Influence in reclaiming the lost dignity of man, and inspiring the loftiest feelings of personal independence, may be traced in every condition of our citizens; but as all objects are most distinct by insulation, their effects are peculiarly obvious in the country.

The American farmer is the exclusive, absolute, uncontrolled proprietor of the soil. His tenure is not from government. The government derives its power from him. There is above him nothing but God and the laws; no hereditary authority usurping the distinctions of personal genius; no established church spreading its dark shadow between him and heaven. His frugal government neither desires nor dares to oppress the soil, and the altars are only supported by the voluntary offerings of sincere piety. His pursuits, which no perversion can render injurious to any, are directed to the common benefit of all. In multiplying the bounties of Providence in the improvement and embellishment of the soil, in the care of the inferior animals committed to his charge, he will find an ever varying and interesting employment, dignified by the union of simple and generous hospitality. His character assumes a loftier interest by its influence over the public liberty.

It may not be foretold to what dangers this country is destined, when its swelling population, its expanded territory, its daily complicating interests shall awake the latent passions of men and reveal the vulnerable points of our institutions. But whenever these perils shall come, its most steadfast security, its most firm reliance will be on that column of land proprietors—the men of the soil and of the country. These men, powerful like their own forests may yet interpose between the factions of the country, to heal, to defend and to save.

FLORIDA WAR—OFFICIAL.
Head quarters, Charles' ferry, Suwanee river, September 23, 1836.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose, herewith, a copy of the official report of col. John Warren, commanding the East Florida troops, of a very spirited and gallant attack made by him on a large party of the enemy on the 18th instant.

The conduct of col. Warren, and the officers and men under his command, entitle them to the attention and highest confidence of the government.

I have the honor to be, respectfully, sir, your most obedient servant,

R. K. CALL,

Commanding the army in Florida.

Hon. Lewis Cass, secretary of war.

Head quarters, 2d military district, E. F. Fort Gilleland, Sept. 18, 1836.

SIX: Yesterday morning, the 17th instant, a party, from one to two hundred Indians, came within a mile of this fort on the Picolata road, and captured a cart belonging to John Standley.

Three white men and two negroes were fired on by a party of this body, fortunately without effect: the cart was set on fire. I immediately sallied out with thirty men to reconnoitre, while the troops were preparing to make a general sortie. A very heavy rain, which came up at this time, answered the double purpose of extinguishing the fire, and rendering our arms useless. The cart, with a load of corn, was saved and brought in. I pursued on the trail some distance, and found that they had gone towards colonel Sanchez's plantation; but it being now near dark, and the rain still continuing, it was concluded to return and make an attack on them in the morning. At one o'clock this morning, four men of tried valor were sent out to reconnoitre around the San Velasco hammock, and the plantation of colonel Sanchez; they returned at 4 o'clock, having made no discovery. Being satisfied that they were there, I resolved to go out; accordingly at 6 o'clock I marched out with one hundred mounted men, being detachments from captains Watkin, Ward and Garrison's companies, with 25 gentlemen, under captain Beekman, having formerly belonged to his company, and volunteered their services for this special service; capt. D. D. Tompkins, of company B, 1st regiment U. S. artillery, with a 24 pounder howitzer, and 25 of his men. This command was arranged in three lines, as follows: captain Walker, with his company, and lieutenant Bruten in command of the detachment from capt. Garrison's company, formed the right wing under my personal command. capt. Tompkins, with his command, formed the centre; and the volunteers under captain Beekman, with captain Ward's company, formed the left wing under lieutenant colonel Mills. On arriving within three quarters of a mile of the hammock, the spies reported the Indians in front; they immediately opened a sharp fire on the right and centre.

The Indians on the left, in considerable force, made an attempt to turn that flank, but were charged on with spirit and success by lieutenant colonel Mill's command, and driven into a thick wooded oak scrub; then dismounting and charging on them, drove through this into the border of the hammock, when the artillery played upon them with considerable effect; after this they retired to the right, and attempted to turn that wing, but were charged with success by captain Walker and lieutenant Bruten's command, and again driven within range of the artillery, which opened on them with great effect.

They made several desperate attempts to maintain their position, and charged twice on the artillery, but were driven off at all points, and pursued for a mile and a half into a dense hammock, where they could not be pursued to advantage.

The command advanced and took a position, and remained on it two hours and a half, then returned in the same order of the advance, without seeing or hearing any thing more of them. The action lasted one hour and a half; one hour of which the firing was heavy on the whole line. From the ground which they occupied, their force is estimated at least three hundred men. Several Indians were distinctly seen to fall before the fire of the artillery, particularly on the left. Several persons report that they saw a mounted Indian, (a chief from his appearing to give orders), fall before the fire of the artillery. Adjutant Gilleland reports that he saw a large fellow mounted in front of the right, and from a recollection of his person, thinks it was Jumper; he ordered a platoon to fire at him, and several persons assert that he fell. From the many traces of blood discovered in passing over the ground after the enemy were routed, a great number must have been killed and wounded. We also discovered where they had killed five beeves and seven hogs, some of which were left by them in their hurry, in the situation in which they were shot down.

Lieutenant col. Mills sustained in this action the reputation he had previously acquired for bravery, coolness and judgment.

Captain D. D. Tompkins, of the artillery, by the judicious arrangement of the artillery under his command rendered important service, and throughout the action behaved with great bravery, coolness and judgment, I beg leave to recommend him to your excellency's notice, for his good conduct in this action, as well as for the important service rendered by him since stationed at this post.

Captains Beekham, Walker and Ward, lieuts. Bruten and Hindley, behaved with great bravery. Lieutenant Bruten had his horse killed under him. Adjutant Gilleland particularly distinguished himself by his bravery and exertions on the right wing. Private Weyman, B company, first artillery, stationed at the howitzer, was severely wounded at the first fire, but refused to retire from his post until four rounds were fired, when he was compelled to retire from the loss of blood. In fact, the whole command behaved well. I regret to state that private Jerry Burnett is pronounced mortally wounded: the others appear to be in a fair way to recover. I should do injustice, were I to close this report without mentioning, in terms of approbation, the prompt attention of doctors Pelot and Turtelot to the wounded men. They promptly attended during the action to all. I have the honor to be, respectfully, &c.

JOHN WARREN,

Commanding 2d M. D. E. F.

His excel. R. K. Call, gov. commander-in-chief.

Return of wounded in the action at San Velasco on the 18th September, 1836.

B company, 1 artillery, private Weyman; Florida militia, sergeant Rowell.

Private Powals, Jerry Burnett, (twice), James Gregor, Samuel Russell, Jesse Long.

One horse killed, and five wounded.

L. GILLELAND, adjutant.

AFFAIRS OF TEXAS.

In the last "Register" we published certain extracts from a communication of general T. Chambers (an agent of the Texians) in reply to the communication of Messrs. Wilson and Postlethwaite, in relation to the manner in which the volunteers under their command were treated in Texas. The reply of gen. Chambers elicited the following card, which we find in the Lexington Intelligencer.

TO THE PUBLIC.

An article appeared in the Louisville Journal of Monday last, purporting to be a reply to the exposure in relation to the affairs of Texas, which we considered it our duty to make, on our return from that country. It is signed by T. J. Chambers, a man who professes to be a general in the Texian army of reserve. We admit that general Chambers has wholly reserved himself from Texas during her difficulties, and although a general, we rather suspect he is fonder of the "pomp and circumstance" of war than the fighting part of it.

This general Chambers attempts to produce the impression that what we have said in relation to Texas is untrue; now, without going into a newspaper controversy with this reserve general, we would merely say that his piece is a tissue of falsehoods from beginning to end—that is, all except the balderdash contained in it—and we pronounce its author a liar, a poltroon and a coward; and although we entertain this opinion of him, should he feel aggrieved at this notice, we will waive the opinion expressed of his total want of every honorable principle, and give him whatever satisfaction his wounded sense of honor may stimulate him to demand.

EDWD J. WILSON,

G. L. POSTLETHWAITE.

Lexington, October 7, 1836.

P. S. We are at Lexington, where gen. Chambers can find us. If, however, his convenience will be at all incommoded by coming up to this place, and he will indicate that fact to us, we will not put him to the trouble of coming here to find us.

E. J. W. & G. L. P.

From the Louisville Journal.

A CARD.

The Lexington Observer & Reporter of yesterday contains a publication by Edward J. Wilson and G. L. Postlethwaite filled with personal abuse against myself. I cannot descend to bandy epithets with them before the public. The duty I owed a suffering and much abused people, required that I should expose and refute the calumnies with which Messrs. Wilson & Co. have sought to gratify the malignity of their disappointed avarice and vanity by blasting a whole people struggling for existence. I have vindicated that people, and, so far as I have heard, satisfactorily, to the public; and I have done this, not by naked assertions or abusive epithets, but by impregnable facts and irresistible deductions. This is established by the attempt of Messrs. Wilson and Postlethwaite to obviate its effects by bullying me in the public papers. I do not remember ever to have been deterred from the performance of a duty by personal fear; and surely I never have been frightened from it by the blusterings of braggarts; and Messrs. Wilson and Postlethwaite will profit as little by bullying or fighting Texians, as they have by slandering them. I wear my country's sword, and it matters but little with me, whether I employ it against the hired exterminators of a despot, or the more execrable calumniators of a suffering people. In either case, the spirits of the Alamo and San Jacinto will direct its point.

My duties will permit me to remain in Louisville one week longer, and I hold myself responsible in every way for all I have written or said in vindication of my country in my former publication, and in this card.

T. JEFFERSON CHAMBERS.

Louisville, Oct. 9th, 1836.

P. S. Those papers that have published the calumnies of Messrs. Wilson and Postlethwaite against Texas, and are situated at so great a distance as not to be in danger from the wrath of those pugnacious gentlemen, will do an injured and oppressed people justice, by publishing my answer, notwithstanding its length.

ARKANSAS.

The following address was delivered on the 12th ult. by James S. Conway, esq. governor of Arkansas, previous to taking the oath of office.

FELLOW CITIZENS: The date of our existence, as a free and independent state, has commenced.

Being about to enter upon the discharge of the high, responsible and solemn duties of the executive, I avail myself of this customary and appropriate occasion, to express my gratitude, to the people of Arkansas for the flattering manner in which I have been called to the exalted station I am now about to occupy, and to acknowledge the great responsibility which it imposes.

Deeply impressed with the conviction that no acknowledgments on my part can equal the honor conferred, I shall deem it the best return I can make to devote my humble abilities, with honesty, fidelity and assiduity, to your service, in such manner as may be best calculated to promote the prosperity and happiness of our common country.

The constitutions of most of our sister states, impose more duties on, and give greater powers to, the executive than is granted by ours; in proportion, however, to the curtailment of those duties and powers, my labors and responsibilities are diminished.

That covenant which is to guard our liberties, and which the solemnities of an oath must bind us to support and defend, generally and clearly defines the duties and powers of your executive; and, in strict accordance with its provisions, will I be found exerting myself to fulfil the public expectations in organizing, establishing and administering the government.

Those who speculate on the prospect before us, and govern their hopes of the future by meditating on the past, will find nothing in our condition which is not well calculated to inspire us with ardor in prosecuting the great purposes for which we have been chosen by the people. The task will not be completed by the mere passage of organic laws to put the government in motion. The fabric of the state, when once constructed must stand for ages. It must be fixed in the understanding and reverence of the people. Let us, therefore, examine for and collect all our materials, calculated to enlighten the public mind and diffuse general and useful knowledge.

We have ample means for the early establishment of such institutions of learning as will be calculated to insure universal education to the youth of our country. Knowledge is power. It is the lever which sways every thing in a popular government.

It is not only important, in a political point of view, but is also the basis of morality and religion. Therefore, whatever plans the legislature, in its wisdom, may adopt, calculated to secure these blessings to the people, will meet with my cordial co-operation.

A fund for the internal improvement of our state is at your disposal. Its application, in the improvement of our roads, the construction of new ones, or its judicious expenditure in any other description of improvement for the benefit of the state, will receive my sanction.

Viewing our locality, as the immediate frontier, adjoining and contiguous to numerous tribes of Indians, many of whom are dissatisfied and soured with our government, and in whose bosoms we have reason to believe are lurkings of hostility and revenge, we may readily calculate that our wives and children are not safe unless the savage monsters are deterred by an armed force, or a knowledge that we have men, disciplined and trained to arms, who are ready, at the first flourish of the scalping knife, or at a moment's warning, to march in defence of their country. It is not probable that the general government will continue a sufficient garrison or army on our borders to shield us effectually from the possibility of Indian depredations. I shall, therefore, feel much solicitude in the speedy organization of the militia of the state. When the hardy yeomanry are disciplined and properly trained to arms, they are the "bulwark of our country." They are the "chief defence of nations." Any legislative action calculated to forward this desirable object will accord with my views, and receive my devoted and unremitting attention.

A just diffidence in regard to my qualifications teaches me, fellow citizens, to solicit and hope for your indulgence, instruction and aid. May the goodness of that unerring Providence which has ever mercifully shielded us in our infancy continue to guard, aid and uphold our liberties. His goodness teaches and encourages me to offer up my supplications that he will continue to make our happy country the object of his divine care.

"REFORM OR REVOLUTION" IN MARYLAND.

Reform meeting at Hagerstown.

In accordance with a resolution adopted at a meeting on the 1st instant, the friends of reform assembled at the court house on Wednesday the 11th instant, and having organized by calling colonel W. H. Fitzhugh to the chair, and appointing G. W. Post secretary, adopted the following preamble and resolutions:

Whereas, by the 4th section of the declaration of rights of the state of Maryland it is declared—"That all persons invested with the legislative or executive powers of government, are the trustees of the public, and as such accountable for their conduct, wherefore, whenever the ends of government are perverted, and the public liberty manifestly endangered, and all other means of redress are ineffectual, the people may, and of right, ought to reform the old and establish a new government; the doctrine of non-resistance against arbitrary power and oppression, is absurd, slavish and destructive of the good and happiness of mankind." The principles contained in this section are the ground upon which we stand, affording us complete justification for our past acts, and every encouragement to future operations, in the cause of reform. By the operation of our present constitution, the "ends of government are perverted," inasmuch as that a meagre minority of the people governs the whole state. The consequence is, that the executive and other public officers together with all the patronage of the state are at the disposal of the few, while the expenses of the government are almost wholly borne by the many. The manifest injustice of this state of things has been the subject of complaint for years. Petition after petition has been sent to the legislature for redress, but in vain. That body the creature of the tyrant few, has refused, and, we have every reason to believe, will ever refuse to grant our reasonable and just rights. Arraying themselves behind the strict letter of the constitution, they disregard the great principles upon which it was originally based, and its utter inadequacy to the existing wants of the people of Maryland. They seem to forget the great change the state has undergone, in point of population, commerce and trade, in the space of sixty years; and that a constitution which was republican in an earlier date of our history, in consequence of that change may be anti-republican now. Whatever may be the views or motives by which our opponents are actuated, whether an actual "base love of power," which is said to be always stealing from the many to the few, or the more ignoble object of making our state a mere bargain and sale affair in the presidential election—our course is plain. We have done every thing in our power, to procure reform, in the ordinary way. The usual means of redress have proven ineffectual. We must therefore recur to first principles, adopting as our motto the language of the bill of rights, that "the doctrine of non-resistance against arbitrary power and oppression, is absurd, slavish and destructive of the good and happiness of mankind." The present crisis, in the affairs of the state, is all important. We have reached a point from which we cannot recede without deserting our principles, and which if we maintain with firmness, we must eventually triumph.

And whereas, we view the subject of reform as paramount to every other, and are prepared to sink every other question in its advancement, and where-as many profess to be in favor of reform provided it be not connected with the politics of the general government, therefore as a means of uniting the friends of reform of all parties, be it

Resolved, That as soon as satisfactory assurances are given that a majority of state senators will be chosen favorable to the passage of a law calling a convention for the purpose of remodelling the present constitution of the state of Maryland, we recommend Robert Wason and Charles Magill, the senatorial electors for Washington county, to enter the electoral college and aid in forming a reform senate even if the members thereof be elected from the whig party.

Resolved, That until said assurance be given, we recommend Messrs. Wason and Magill to maintain the stand they have taken, and not to participate in selecting a senate not known to be in favor of a state convention.

Resolved, For the purpose of meeting the emergency, if a senate should not be elected, we recommend to the friends of reform to hold district meetings on Saturday the 29th of October, for the purpose of sending twenty delegates to a county convention to be held in Hagerstown, on Tuesday, the 1st of November, to select six members to represent Washington county in the state convention to be assembled in Annapolis on the third Monday of November next in accordance with the suggestion of the reform electors.

Resolved, That these proceedings be published in the papers of this county and state.

WM. FITZHUGH, chairman.

GEO. W. POST, secretary.

Frederick county reform convention.

At a meeting of the friends of reform, convened at the court house, in Frederick, on Monday, the 10th October, the meeting was organized by appointing colonel John H. Simmons and Dr. John W. Dorsey, chairmen, and Wm. B. Gwynn and George Titlow, secretaries.

On motion of P. H. Brown, esq. a committee of three from each district, was appointed to draft resolutions and report to this convention at 8 o'clock.

On motion of P. H. Brown, that all votes taken in this convention, be taken by districts.

On motion of col. Dunlap, that a majority of the districts, be necessary to a choice in the selection of candidates.

Convention adjourned to meet at three o'clock, P. M.

Three o'clock, P. M.—Convention met pursuant to adjournment.

The committee of three from each district reported—That in pursuance of the duties assigned to them by the convention, the following six gentlemen had been selected by a majority of the committee as proper persons to be recommended for the convention to nominate as a delegation to represent this county in the convention to be held in Annapolis on the third Monday in November next, viz:—Messrs. Francis Thomas, col. John H. McElfresh, colonel Thomas Johnson, John Fisher, Benedict Boon, Dr. Jas. Liggett—And reported the following preamble and resolutions—

Whereas, The true intent and purpose of government is to promote the happiness and prosperity of those for whose benefit it is instituted, and in a republic a majority of the people are declared to have the power of framing such form of government as they may deem best calculated to promote their interests, to increase their prosperity and increase their happiness—and when as, for years, a majority of the people of this state have pronounced the present form of government to be defective in principle, and unequal and oppressive in its operations; And whereas, in the recent attempt to form a senate, the representatives of a small minority of the voters of the state have arrogated to themselves, the exclusive power of selecting all the members, constituting one entire branch of the legislature, contrary to all justice, all right, and all sound principles of a republican government. Therefore,

Resolved, That we do not recognize, as a just and proper principle of government, the degrading doctrine, that a people are bound, slavishly to submit, to any public institutions whatever, but contend for, the enjoyment of that for which our forefathers fought, the right to resist a tyrannical government, and the power to abolish an old, or establish a new form of government.

Resolved, That the present constitution of the state is unjust, iniquitous and subversive of the rights of freemen, and therefore should be revised and reformed, so as to conform to the principles on which it was originally based, by giving to every citizen living under its provisions, equal, political and civil rights.

Resolved, That we approve of the plan of holding a convention in the city of Annapolis, on the third Monday of November next, as recommended in the address of the nineteen electors: it being in the opinion of this convention, the most efficient mode, not only of securing the execution of the laws, and the administration of justice, but, also, the most effectual means of facilitating the consummation of the long cherished wishes of a majority of the people of this state, peaceably and quietly, thoroughly and radically to reform their organic law.

Resolved, That this convention nominate six suitable persons to recommend to the suffrage of the people, as a delegation to represent this county in the state convention before named.

Resolved, That these six persons, when elected, be invested with the power representing this county, in said convention, and that they be, and are hereby authorized to join with the delegates from other counties and cities, in continuing the appointment of all officers, military and civil, whose terms of service expire annually, and to exercise such powers as may be necessary for the welfare of the state; and, that they be recommended, also, to endeavor to settle the basis of representation of a convention for the purpose of altering and amending the present form of government, or framing a new one.

Resolved, That we recommend to the friends of reform in the several election districts to appoint three judges and two clerks of election for each district, to receive the ballots of the voters of each district cast for the six delegates to represent this county in the convention to be held in Annapolis, and that the judges so appointed be qualified to receive the votes of the people in the same manner as if they had been regularly qualified under the laws of the state. And that all persons offering to vote for the aforesaid six delegates shall be subject to the same restrictions and required to possess the same qualifications as the election laws of the state now require, and that the judges so appointed shall make their election returns on the Wednesday succeeding the election in the same manner and form as the judges appointed under the law, to a committee to be chosen by the convention.

Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed by this convention to receive the returns made by the judges of election chosen by the people, whose duty it shall be to certify that the six persons whom the judges declare to have received the greatest number of votes of the county are duly elected to represent this county in the convention to be held in Annapolis on the 3d Monday of November next for the purpose already mentioned; and that their certificate shall be a full warrant for their exercising the authority for which they have been chosen.

Resolved, That we pledge ourselves to sustain the convention to be held in Annapolis in the execution of the duties entrusted to them.

The vote being taken on the nomination of the persons recommended by the committee, they were unanimously nominated by the convention.

The vote was then taken upon the passage of the preamble and resolutions, and they were unanimously adopted.

On motion of John Sifford, esq.

Resolved, That all vacancies that may occur in the ticket selected by this convention be filled by the gentlemen composing said ticket.

On motion of Dr. Wm. B. Gwynn,

Resolved, That the proceedings of this convention be signed by its officers and published in all the papers in the state in favor of reform.

JOHN H. SIMMONS, } chairmen.

JOHN W. DORSEY, }

WM. B. GWYNN, } secretaries.

GEORGE TITLOW }

Harford county reform meeting.

At a large meeting of the democratic republican reformers of Harford county, convened in pursuance of public notice, at the court house, in Bel Air, on Tuesday, the 11th of October, 1836—the meeting was organized, and col. Andrew Turner, col. I. D. Maulsby and Dr. W. L. Horton, appointed presidents; and Henry W. Archer and James W. Bartol, esqrs. secretaries.

Upon motion, the following named gentlemen were appointed a committee to adopt a preamble and resolutions expressive of the views of the meeting, to wit:—Otho Scott, James W. Williams, Thomas Hope, Henry H. Johns, James Williams, Robert W. Holland, Dr. Wm. T. Munnikhuyzen, Dr. St. Clair Street, Dr. Parker Forwood, Abraham L. Jarrett and Preston McComas.

The committee, after having retired for some time, reported the following preamble and resolutions, which were unanimously adopted. After the resolutions were read, the meeting was addressed by James W. Williams, esq. col. I. D. Maulsby, Otho Scott, esq. and Dr. Horton, in animated and eloquent speeches.

Whereas, The flagrant injustice and gross inequality of political rights under the constitution of Maryland has demonstrated, that a thorough and radical reform is necessary—This is now so obvious, that it is conceded by all having any regard for the rights of the people. The present constitution was the work of men, who had till it was framed lived under a monarchy, and without detracting from the merits of its venerable founder it may safely be asserted, that as originally established, it was aristocratic in its form and spirit, according to its provisions, property was more regarded than the dearest rights of freemen. None but property holders could obtain a seat in the legislature, hold the office of governor, or be elected as sheriff, and even the right of suffrage, the most sacred that free institutions have conferred on man, was so restricted as to confine its exercise exclusively to those possessing property and those destitute of property, no matter how meritorious in other respects, were entirely deprived of all participation in government.

The democratic spirit of after times extended the right of suffrage and abolished all property qualifications for office. This produced an enlargement of popular rights, and expunged some of the aristocratic principles, which formed a part of the elements of our political institutions; still it left the original frame work, constructed, on an aristocratic basis. In the formation of the constitution, from mistaken views of the intelligence of the people, it was deemed unsafe to intrust to them the appointment of the most important officers, and upon this principle they at present have no control in the election of the governor or senate, or the appointment of the clerks and registers. Whatever may have been the opinions of former times it is a doctrine, not now denied, that the people are fully competent, to self government, and that, the appointment of their officers could not, as safely be confided any where as in the great mass of the freemen of the state. Notwithstanding, the universal recognition of these principles, the people of Maryland, live under a constitution founded upon a palpable violation of these, and every other republican maxim.

The governor, in whose office all have an equal interest, is appointed by a select few, instead of being elected by the people. The senate, which has the co-ordinate power of legislating on the property, lives and liberties of all the people, is appointed by an irresponsible body of electors.

The clerks and registers, important county officers, having the custody of the public records of the people, are appointed by the legislature and the courts, and it frequently happens that these officers are appointed by persons not residing in the county for which the appointment is made, and not having any interest in the manner in which the duties are performed.

The judiciary system of the state also requires reform. There should be no offices for life in a republic. The independence of judges should be preserved, but, at the same time, no public functionary should be placed in a situation where he would be insensible to the influence of public sentiment, nor is it believed that the exemption of the judiciary from improper influences depends on the duration of their office. That inflexible integrity and purity of purpose which are essential to the character of judge would render the possessor independent under any tenure of office. It is, moreover, too plain to admit of doubt, that the judge whose motives would be corrupted if he held his office for a term of years is wholly unfit to be trusted for life. It would doubtless be inexpedient to elect the judiciary immediately by the people; still the term of service should be so reduced, and the appointing power should be so directly answerable to the people as to produce a salutary responsibility on the part of the judges.

Other portions of our institutions equally require modification. The great multiplication of banks and other corporations, and the wasteful expenditure of public money shews that the powers of the legislature in relation to these subjects should be restricted. There should be some limitations, that would operate as safe guards to the public money, and protect the people from the mischiefs arising from an extension of banking.

The unequal representation is another subject which loudly calls for reform; an inequality of political rights exist that ought not to be tolerated. The small counties with a few hundred voters have equal power in every branch of government, to that possessed by the large counties with as many thousand voters.

And whereas it is manifest from the palpable and radical defects of our present constitution, that it cannot be placed upon a popular and republican basis, and made to suit the spirit of the age, but by an entire renovation—Repeated alterations and amendments have been made. The old has been changed, modified and patched up till neither lawyers nor legislators can tell what its provisions are. Amendments have been engrafted till the whole is a confused mass of jarring principles, some aristocratic, and some partly republican, wholly unworthy to be regarded by a free people as their fundamental law.

It is therefore resolved, That to secure to the people their just influence in the appointment of public officers, and to subject the various departments of the government, to a salutary popular control, there should be a thorough and radical reform of our state constitution.

Resolved, That the only practicable means by which the necessary reforms can be accomplished, is a convention elected by the people; that all other means would be dilatory in their action, and partial and half-way in their operation.

Resolved, That this meeting most cordially approve of the course pursued by the nineteen electors of the senate, and regard their refusal to concur in the election of a senate as the most peaceful, speedy and efficacious means of accomplishing the great political reformation which is desired.

Resolved, That should any of the seceding electors, hereafter join the anti-reform electors in making a senate, he should be regarded, as having violated a solemn pledge to the people, and proved himself recreant to republican principle, and a traitor to the cause of reform.

Resolved, That the recent election cannot be regarded as a fair test of public sentiment on the subject of reform,—that it is known, the enemies of reform succeeded by misrepresentation and deceptive statements in exciting a panic, and, a belief, that we were to have a fearful and bloody revolution instead of a peaceful reform.

Resolved, That the recent attempts to produce a belief that we were in a state of anarchy and revolution, and by such means to create alarm and apprehension should be denounced by every friend to reform, and the authors and actors in such attempts regarded as hostile to the extension of popular rights, and enemies to republican principles.

Resolved, That if the anti-reform electors should attempt to force upon the people of Maryland, a senate, it should be regarded as gross usurpation of power, an outrage on the rights of the people, and one which every advocate of free institutions would be bound to resist.

Resolved, That this meeting have a firm reliance on the intelligence and patriotism of the people, and are fully confident that no tumults or disorder can arise out of the present crisis. That even if there were no other restraints, the moral sense of the community is a sufficient guaranty against lawless violence and outrage.

Resolved, That this meeting adopt the recommendation of the nineteen electors, to elect six persons to represent this county in a convention to be held at Annapolis.

Resolved, That the representation in our legislature should be placed on the popular basis, giving to the small counties a sufficient delegation, to protect their interests, and restricting by some liberal maximum number, the power of the populous districts.

Resolved, That six persons be elected on the first Monday of November next, to represent this county in convention, and that such representatives be authorised to do all necessary acts in concert with the representatives from the other counties, calculated to promote the cause of reform.

Upon motion, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That Charles S. Sewell, James W. Williams, John W. Rutledge, Otho Scott, Henry W. Archer and Wm. L. Horton be and they are recommended to the people as suitable persons to represent this county in the convention aforesaid.

Resolved, That James Steele, Archibald Dorsey, Jas. L. Bartol, John H. Price, A. L. Jarret and Dr. Wm. I. McElhiney be appointed a committee of correspondence, to communicate with the reformers in the different counties of the state.

Resolved, That the proceedings of this meeting be signed by chairmen and secretaries, and published in the newspapers of the state friendly to reform.

ANDREW TURNER, }
I. D. MAULSBY, } pres'ts.
WM. L. HORTON, }
H. W. ARCHER, }
J. L. BARTOL, } secretaries.

The following card from I. D. Maulsby, esq. of Harford county, one of the delegates to the legislature chosen at the late election, recently appeared in the Van Buren paper published at Bel Air:

A CARD.

I should be insensible of the just value of public opinion, did I not feel highly gratified with my unusually large vote, at the late election. And I lose no time in tendering to the citizens of Harford county, without distinction of party, my thanks for the generous and confiding support extended to me on that occasion. And now that the excitement of the election has subsided, I would again respectfully invite the public attention to the great subject of reforming our constitution. It is one that deeply concerns every man, whatever may be his general political predilections; and to effect it requires some action on the part of the people.

Let it ever be remembered, it is our just pride and boast that we live in a government of laws—that the law is supreme, and it is the duty of every man to submit to it until peacefully and legally changed: That the constituted authorities for their administration and execution must be obeyed, there cannot be a doubt; but that, notwithstanding no senate has been chosen at the regular constitutional period, the laws are still in full force, and all the civil magistrates and ministerial officers possess ample and undiminished authority to discharge their several functions. The man, therefore, who would dare practically to question their authority should instantly be denounced as an anarchist and enemy to reform. The bill of rights points to a convention, as a peaceful mode of changing the constitution, and to that means let us, the people, resort. It has also been recommended by the gallant and devoted nineteen senatorial electors, representing nearly three-fourths of the white population of Maryland, who have fearlessly staked their political existence for the liberties of the people and the cause of reform and are therefore entitled to the highest respect of the freemen of Maryland.

Let a constitution be formed by a convention to be elected by the freemen of Maryland, founded on the basis of popular rights, and free from the unjust and aristocratic provisions which, in the present, stifles and overrules the influence of the people in many of the most important departments of the government. Let such a constitution be submitted to the people, to be approved or rejected by them, in their sovereign character, at primary meetings to be fixed for that purpose.

And if a constitution so formed be so ratified, by a majority of all the freemen of Maryland, what reason, I would ask, is there that it should not be carried into effect? And it will be carried into effect PEACEFULLY. The intelligence and patriotism of the people are a sufficient guarantee against violence. There may be, and probably are, some reckless men in both parties; but moderation and firmness are the suggestions of good sense and love of country, and they must so prevail as to keep down all turbulence and disorder.

I have to crave the indulgence of my fellow citizens for this lengthened address. I took my pen simply to express my gratitude for their kind treatment of my pretension at the past election, and have insensibly run into a subject on which my heart is much engaged. I have only in conclusion to acknowledge the fairness and high mindedness which has on every occasion distinguished my competitor candidates, during the late canvass, to tender to such of them as have been elected my congratulations, and those less successful the scriptural consolation, "that the race is not always to the swift, nor the battle to the strong." I. D. MAULSBY.
6th October, 1836.

From the Cumberland (Md.) Civilian—extra.

GREAT PUBLIC MEETING
Of the citizens of Allegany county, at the court house in Cumberland, Oct. 17, 1836.

In pursuance of public notice, an unusually large assemblage of the people of Allegany county, without distinction of party, convened at the court house in the town of Cumberland, on Monday the 17th inst. The meeting was organized by calling Wm. McMahon to the chair, assisted by Meshack Frost and Joseph Dilley, and appointing John M. Buchanan secretary, and Singleton Townshend assistant secretary.

The object of the meeting, which was to take into consideration the present important crisis in our state affairs, was stated by B. S. Pigman.

James Dixon, (V. B.) of Frederick, having been called upon, addressed the meeting in an eloquent and forcible manner, repudiating, in the strongest terms, the conduct of the 18 recusant senatorial electors—denouncing the course recommended by them as leading directly to collision and ultimate bloodshed. On concluding his remarks, he was heartily and unanimously cheered by the meeting.

William Price, of Hagerstown, being next called upon, arose and addressed the meeting in his usual happy and eloquent manner, depicting the deplorable condition in which the state will be thrown by a perseverance in the course adopted by the recreant electors. He sat down amidst the applause of the meeting.

The venerable chairman of the meeting—Wm. McMahon, honest and true to the last, next arose and implored the meeting in the name of God to pause and reflect before they took any step which could, by possibility, lead to a revolution—that he hoped they would remain firm, and stand by and sustain the laws and constitution of the state. He seemed very much affected, and appeared like a father addressing his children, and in taking his seat was enthusiastically cheered.

Michael C. Sprigg then offered a preamble and resolutions, which were unanimously adopted by the meeting—(save the single dissenting voice of Mr. Daniel Blocher, the editor of the Advocate.)

Whereas, it is provided by the constitution of this state that "the electors of the senate meet at the city of Annapolis, or such other place as shall be appointed for convening the legislature, on the 3d Monday of September, 1781, and on the same day in every fifth year thereafter, and they, or any twenty-four of them, having so met, shall proceed to elect by ballot, either out of their own body or the people at large, fifteen senators, (nine of whom to be residents on the western and six to be residents on the eastern shore), men of the most wisdom, experience and virtue, above twenty-five years of age, and residents of the state above three whole years next preceding the election." And whereas the people of the several counties in this state, under and in virtue of the above mentioned constitutional injunction, and to carry the same into full effect, did, on the first Monday of September last, appoint electors to meet on the third Monday of September, at the city of Annapolis, to elect a senate for the state. And whereas nineteen of the said electors, when assembled at the city of Annapolis, on the third Monday in September, to elect a senate, refused to qualify, unless the majority of the electors would give them (the minority) the choice or appointment of eight senators, a majority of the senate, and, under a corrupt and fraudulent conspiracy to dissolve the government, have withdrawn from the electoral college, whereby the state may be involved in all the horrors of a revolution, an event which ought, above all things, to be deprecated by all good citizens. And whereas we confidently believe that any useful reform or alteration in the constitution may be effected in the way appointed out by that instrument, or by a convention legally authorized, and that the end cannot be obtained by revolution, which the course adopted by a minority of the electors clearly indicates as the measure they and their adherents are resolved to pursue; and whereas we are utterly opposed to a revolution, which may involve us in all the frightful horrors of a civil war, tarnish the honor of the state, blast her prosperity, and produce a state of things, the consequences of which no man can foresee,—and hold in abhorrence the conduct of men, who, elected by the people to perform a specific duty, have basely betrayed their trust, and brought the state to this momentous crisis; and whereas, at the late election of delegates to the assembly, on the first Monday of this month, when the conduct and views of the recusant electors were fully discussed and considered, the people of Maryland, by a large and decided majority of votes, have rebuked and condemned them, and have rallied in support of the government of the state, and against a revolution, by electing to the house of delegate sixty-one out of eighty members, opposed to any revolutionary movements—

Therefore resolved, That we condemn the conduct of the aforesaid recusant electors, who, having solicited and obtained the appointment at the hands of the people, betrayed the trust reposed in them, by basely and treacherously refusing to attend the electoral college, (as enjoined by their positive obligations to the constitution), with a view to dissolve the government of the state.

Resolved, That we consider a revolution in the state at this crisis, the greatest of all conceivable calamities—that we deprecate it as fraught with certain mischiefs, and recommended to us not even in prospect by any counterbalancing good, and that as peaceful citizens devotedly attached to our native and adopted state, and feeling a deep and abiding interest in her honor and prosperity, we solemnly pledge ourselves to sustain the government against any revolution.

And whereas, we have understood that John S. Sellman has returned to the electoral college, with a view to the appointment of a senate—therefore,

Resolved, That we consider his conduct in that respect, as highly honorable and patriotic.

Resolved, That as we cannot approve, we will not unite or co-operate in the measures recommended at some late meetings in Frederick county, as tending directly to anarchy and confusion, and we

*Van Buren paper.

†Mr. Buchanan, of this county, although a Van Buren man, is avowedly opposed to the course of the 18 recusant electors.

ferently hope that such rash and imprudent counsels will be discountenanced by the good sense, virtue and patriotism of the people, and for this purpose we recommend that district meetings be held throughout the county.

On motion, the proceedings of the meeting signed by the officers, were directed to be printed and copies sent throughout the state.

On motion, the meeting was then adjourned.

*WM. McMAHON, president.

†MESHACK FROST, } vice presidents.

*JOSEPH DILLEY, }

*John M. Buchanan, secretary.

†Singleton Townshend, assistant secretary.

PRESENTMENT of the eighteen recusant electors, by the grand jury of Allegany county.

The grand inquest for the body of Allegany county being about to return to their homes, deem it their duty, before they separate, to take some notice of the causes which have led to the present momentous and alarming crisis in the public affairs of our state. Certain individuals, entrusted by the people with the duty of appointing a senate for the state, have refused to execute their trust, and have left the state without a senate. The conduct of those men is without excuse or palliation—they intended to secure the triumph of a party, and, failing in that, to subvert the government and endanger the public tranquillity. The grand jurors do, therefore, present

Charles Magill, Robert Wason, Casper Quynn, John Fisher, George Ellicott, Ephraim Bell, Joshua Vansant, John Evans, George A. Thomas, Samuel Sutton, Washington Duvall, Robert T. Keene, M. Fountain, Enoch George, John B. Thomas, Sprigg Harwood, Thomas Pope, Wesley Linthicum, as unfaithful public agents and disturbers of the public peace.

George McCulloh, foreman, Alexander King, *Mat's. Duckworth, Henry N. Shaw, *Joseph Dilley, *J. L. Browning, John Poland, *John Watts, Robert Lashley, Singleton Townshend, Henry Brown, *Peter Krigbaum, *George Staup, *Andrew Rice, *William Robinson, James McCarty, *Joshua Kight, *Thomas Beall, Henry White, *Godfrey Fazenbaker.

Cumberland, Oct. 18, 1836.

[Those marked with a star () are Van Buren men—being 11 of the 20 jurors.]

SPIRIT OF THE PARISIAN JOURNALS.

The National asserts that the alliance of England with France is about to be dissolved; but at the same time, that this alliance, by supporting hitherto the government system in this country, has done more harm than good to its liberties. The tendency of the French cabinet towards the absolutist courts will bring to pass an important change in two capital points, in the last and in Spain. From the moment that France separates from England, and inclines towards another alliance, it is impossible that the relations of Russia and Turkey can be regarded by the French cabinet in the same light. France was English in the Levant: it ought to have been neutral: it will now become Russian. In Spain the rupture with England is marked by the refusal to send further supplies; but this apparent neutrality cannot be persevered in, and the result will be the adoption of the cause of Don Carlos, and active opposition to the Spanish revolution. At home, the foundation of French policy will not be changed: it has all along been anti-democratic, and it will be so still, only it will lose the gloss of a whig alliance, and of being the friends of the queen of Spain, while, in order that nothing may be wanting to it, the real prime minister is M. Guizot, who is one of the emigres of Ghent.

The Courrier Francais, after remarking that the country is now again about to be subjected to a reaction, and to the influence of a ministry, directed by an emigre of Ghent, and composed of partisans of the restoration, shows how the anti-liberal principle has been steadily at work ever since 1830, and how the immovable will has perpetuated its ascendancy over every successive cabinet since that period. If the country is at the present time in arrear instead of advance of its state twenty years ago, it must be confessed, that in many points of view, things have changed. Thus the country has paid the milliard of emigrants; the 400 millions for the counter revolution of Spain; about 100 millions towards establishing the anarchy of Greece, under king Otho; a good sum of money, more than ought to have been paid, for Algiers; and 700 or 800 millions, for the extraordinary expenses of the first installation of the government of July; so that, from all this, it results, that France has the satisfaction of learning that the budget is every year in deficit, which is always increasing. All this, however, does not hinder the governing powers of the country from leading a joyous life. The budget of liberty, however, is not less in a deficit than the financial one. Except the time of the censorship being provisionally established, the liberty of the press is now more restrained than it was under the restoration; the responsibility of ministers and their agents is more illusory than ever; freedom of religious worship is exercised by the exclusion of new religions, and the sealing up the doors of dissenting churches; and the main principle of the jury is violated. Let France rejoice! her liberty is advancing in the same way as her finances; let her look at these twenty years of glory and progress with exultation; and, above all, let her not despair of her futurity: has she not the charter, that is now a truth, and a representative government?

*Van Buren.

†Harrison.

The Constitutionnel says that three parliamentary questions cannot fail of being brought forward next session, each of which will be fatally contrary to the doctrinaires. The first will be the election of three new vice presidents; and no doubt the three honorable deputies, members of the late ministry, who have already filled those offices, will be re-elected. The next will be the address; a thing that has never been much to the taste of the coterie, and now will be less so than ever. There are certain expressions which can be introduced into it, and which will have the same effect upon them as a drop of water to a hydrophobic person; conciliation and generosity will not, this time at least, be without meaning. The third, the conversion of the rentes, will also be a stumbling stone to them; for who is to give way on that question—the actual ministers or the chamber? In addition to all this the present ministers have, not only as a cause of offence towards the chamber, the having replaced ministers specially approved of by the chamber, but also of being, every one of them, pure doctrinaires. The majority will not submit to them. The majority know that, besides the doctrinaires, other ministers may be found, better disposed to give satisfaction to the desires of the country.

The Bon Sens asserts that the country is once more in the full tide of the restoration; and that, with the return of the doctrinaires the press resumes all the power it did not like to exercise with the Tiers-parti. The press becomes what it was during the restoration: it is called on to defend, as it was six years ago, liberty of conscience against the invasions of Catholicism—liberty of person against the violence of a privileged oligarchy—and the principle of equality against the encroachments of feudal power, for a moment restored to life. Are the doctrinaires prepared to sustain a fight upon such ground as this?

The Quotidienne professes that it cannot conjecture in what way M. Guizot intends to face the chamber, nor how he can hope to be able to form a majority. There are, besides, it adds, elements of disunion in the cabinet itself; for even if marshal Soult were to join it, each of the three ministers, M. Guizot, M. Mole, and the marshal himself, would always be trying to get rid of each other, in order that they might become the heads of the cabinet. M. Guizot, the real leader of the ministry, represents nothing and nobody except himself; he is hated by all parties, except his own. To get rid of this odious coterie, it is a pity that the law against secret associations cannot be applied: for this, however, to be possible, their number must exceed twenty, and they have taken good care in this respect to keep out of the reach of the law.

The Paix says that the doctrinaires will soon find themselves in the presence of the chambers; they will then have nothing to do to make their system known; they will have no date to inaugurate; they will only have to appeal to the 11th October and 13th March, and they will then have merely to demand of the chamber whether it is willing to continue the system or not. This time, however, there must be no Tiers-parti; there will only be a choice between the juste-milieu—in other words, the constitutional monarchy and the comple-rendu—that is to say, a monarchical republic, between conservation and destruction. It is for the deputies to make the choice.

GENERAL JESUP.

From the Montgomery (Ala.) Advertiser.

We publish below a correspondence between a committee of gentlemen of this place, and major general Jesup. We have noticed with deep regret, the assaults upon the well earned reputation of this distinguished officer. The results of this campaign prove that general Jesup was prompt, energetic and skilful. The removal of the Indians, that for years has been the object of fruitless negotiation, has been accomplished in less than three months under his vigorous measures. The testimony of the officers and men of our state, who served with general Jesup and under him, has been uniform to his high and chivalrous character, and to the urbanity of his manners, and the purity of his life. That the American people should permit an officer so gifted in mind and intellectual qualities to be sacrificed, is what cannot for one moment be credited. General Jesup does right to court investigation. His success has obscured the view of the imbecility and weakness of others, and those "whose purpose it has suited" to misrepresent him, will find any thing but satisfaction in the exhibition of the plain truth.

The general will carry with him the approbation of Alabama to his public conduct, and the gratitude of her people for his faithful attention to duties, in the performance of which they were so vitally interested.

Montgomery, Ala. Sept. 11, 1836.

GENERAL: A portion of our fellow citizens being desirous of testifying to you, the high appreciation of the eminent services rendered by you to the country during the last war with Great Britain; their admiration at the promptitude, energy and skill you have displayed in bringing the disturbances among the Creek Indians to a close, and effecting their removal from the borders of our state; and their respect for you, personally, have appointed the undersigned to ascertain from you, at what time it would suit your convenience to attend a public dinner in this town.

With very great respect, we are, general, your obedient servants,

JOHN A. CAMPBELL,
WM. GRAHAM,
GEO. D. SHORTRIDGE,
EDWARD HANRICK,
N. E. BENSON,
WILLIAM KNOX,
GEO. WHITMAN,
GEO. GOLDTHWAITE,

Committee.

To maj. gen. Thos. S. Jesup, Tuskegee, Ala.

Fort Mitchell, Ala. Sept. 23, 1836.

GENTLEMEN: I have received at this place your letter of the 11th instant, addressed to me at Tuskegee. Under other circumstances than those in which I am placed, it would afford me great pleasure to meet, in the manner they propose, that portion of my fellow citizens of Montgomery whom you represent. But it has suited the purposes of others, in order to divert public attention from the facts connected with the Creek campaign, to misrepresent my conduct. It is due to all that an investigation take place; I shall demand it so far, at least, as my name has been associated with my transactions here, public or private; and for that purpose I shall proceed to the north the moment my duties here shall have been brought to a close. Until an investigation take place, and my reputation be rescued from the odium attempted to be fastened upon it, I deem it due to myself to decline all public attentions such as tendered through you. Whether you agree with me in opinion, or not, as to the propriety of my determination, I feel assured you will properly appreciate my motives.

Do me the favor, gentlemen, to present my grateful acknowledgments to my fellow citizens in whose behalf you act, for the honor conferred upon me by your invitation, and accept for yourselves my warmest thanks for the flattering terms in which you have thought proper to notice my services. I am, gentlemen, most respectfully, your obedient servant,
THO. S. JESUP.

To Messrs. Campbell, Hanrick, Shortridge, Graham, Knox, Whitman, Benson and Goldthwaite, committee.

LAW CASE.

From the New York Journal of Commerce.

CIRCUIT COURT, SEPTEMBER 30TH.—JUDGE EDWARDS PRESIDING.

George Allen vs. Hugh Rowland. This was an action to recover damages for ill treatment received by the plaintiff, who was a seaman on board the British barque Mona, from the defendant, who was captain of said vessel. In the month of March, 1835, the Mona sailed from London to go to Vera Cruz, and from there to New York, having on board the plaintiff, who had shipped as steward, at the rate of 80s. per month, whilst the other seamen were paid 40s. The plaintiff, however, took the lower wages and lighter work of a steward, in order to avoid hardship or exposure to the weather, as his health was then delicate, and his eyes were affected with some disease; and it appeared that the defendant was not ignorant of the reasons which induced the plaintiff to select the situation of steward.—The day after the vessel arrived at Vera Cruz, the defendant ordered him to come on deck and help to get out the long boat; and as he did not obey the order as promptly as the captain thought he should, the moment he did come on deck, the captain knocked him down with a blow of the fist, and then took the double of a two inch rope and gave him a severe flogging with it, the steward having no clothes on his back at the time but a linen shirt.—About a week after the vessel left Vera Cruz, the captain turned the steward out of the cabin and made him go forward and do the duty of a seaman; and on the same day, whilst the ship was under close reefed topsails, the captain ordered the steward to go aloft and loosen the top gallant sail—which the ship could not then carry, it was blowing so hard—and as soon as the steward had loosened the sail, the captain ordered him to roll it up again—a thing which no one seaman could possibly effect in the then stormy state of the weather. On another occasion, when the rays of the sun were so scorching and the steward's eyes so bad from disease that he could scarcely keep them open, the captain ordered him to scrape the masts, a work which was at the time totally unnecessary. The steward commenced the work, but, finding that it caused him most intolerable pain, he begged of the captain to allow him to leave it off; but, instead of doing so, as soon as the steward had finished scraping the mast, the captain made him scrape it over again. The ill treatment inflicted on the steward soon caused him to become almost totally blind; but the captain continued to make him go aloft, until the crew at last remonstrated against sending a man aloft whose blindness rendered him incapable of doing any service there, and caused him to run the risk of his life. The captain continued to annoy the defendant in one way or other during the greater part of the voyage; and when the vessel arrived here, the plaintiff complained to the British consul, who discharged him from the vessel, and he commenced the present suit against the captain before he sailed for England. This was the case for the plaintiff.

For the defence, the consignee of the Mona deposed that he had asked the plaintiff how the captain treated him during the voyage, and that he replied, "the captain had been very kind to him, and that he had no complaint against him;" but, on being cross examined, the consignee said he could not recollect the exact expressions made use of by the plaintiff. It was also elicited from the consignee, that the defendant had left him $800 to meet the demand consequent upon the suit.

Verdict for the plaintiff, $800. For the plaintiff, Mr. Muloch.

THOMAS EWING OF OHIO.

The following letter was addressed by Mr. Ewing to a committee of the workmen of Cincinnati, Ohio, in reply to a letter from them requesting him to attend and address a meeting of that body.

Lancaster, Oct. 3, 1836.

GENTLEMEN: I received your favor of the 27th ult. inviting me, in behalf of the workmen of Cincinnati, to attend and address a meeting to be held by them on the 8th instant.

I would accept the invitation with pleasure if my other engagements would permit it, but unfortunately they do not. I must, therefore, deny myself the gratification which I should feel in meeting with so many of my fellow citizens, and joining with them in the discussion of subjects important to the character of our state, and to the pure republican institutions of our country. I should be the more gratified to be with them, as I am assured they are, what they profess to be, real WORKMEN—a portion of the hard-handed and sound-hearted yeomen and mechanics of our country; men, on whose intelligence, integrity and patriotism, our republican constitution must rest as the surest and strongest pillar which sustains and supports it.

You have been kind enough, in the letter which you wrote in their behalf, to speak in terms grateful to my feelings of the taunts and sneers which have been cast out against me for having once been a workingman, and having labored with my own hands for my support and advancement. Many false things have been said and written of me, but this is not one of them. This is true. I admit the charge to the full extent. And if the workingman be unworthy to rise to the elevated stations in our republic, then I am unworthy. If wealthy parentage, tender nurture, and youth spent in ease, in indulgence or luxury, be essential to qualify a man for office in a republic, then am I not qualified, for I have none of those advantages. My father was poor, and lived a life of hardship and privation. When young he was a subaltern officer of the revolution, and shared the fortune of many of the ardent youth of that day, who devoted themselves to the same glorious cause. At the close of the war he was cast upon the world without property, or the habit or the means of acquiring it. He left his native state, and sought a home in the frontier settlements, in the then "far west," where I was born, in a very humble shed, and reared, not, surely, in the lap of luxury. With my mental and physical powers as my only inheritance, I was brought up a workingman, or, rather, a workingboy—among the people, and truly one of them—and I have no regret that my lot was so cast. I have seen, and known, and felt how much of manly sense, shrewdness of observation, sterling worth and generous feeling, are concealed beneath the rough exterior of the plain workmen of our country. I know them well, for I have been an inmate of their homes, a guest at their tables, and one amid the social circle around their firesides; and I look back to those scenes, not only with pleasure, but with pride. I am proud to feel that I carry with me something of the true character and spirit of the American workingman. I was early imbued with that spirit—I imbibed it in infancy—I grew up with it to manhood, and I trust I shall retain it to the latest period of my life. And if to these characteristics, which I claim with them as our common heritage—if to their sound good sense, just moral feeling, patriotic devotion and firmness in support of the right, I have been able to add that knowledge which is the fruit of long and laborious study—that facility for business which springs from habit—something of literary taste, and a talent for public speaking, which enables me to bring the powers of my mind and my stores of knowledge into use, then I claim that, even without the advantage of high birth or early fortune, I am fit to stand forth in the presence of the nation as the true representative of the people of my state.

In the elevated station to which their partiality has called me, I have still been a workingman. I have not wasted my time in idleness, nor my energies in the haunts of dissipation; but have devoted myself fully and entirely to my official duties—the service of my state and of the union. I am now assailed with a virulence heretofore unknown in the annals of our political warfare: those who have fixed their eyes on the revenues of the general post office, the public treasury and the public lands, and marked them as their plunder and their spoils, now rage with fury against me. I am not surprised at it. I stand in their path, and they have been so long kept back from the tempting bait that they are now hungry and fierce for their prey. If I had been dull and inefficient—if I had slept on my post—or, especially, if I had connived at the villany which I saw practised, I might have been permitted to pass without reproach, and probably received as a favorite by those who now assail me.

But I did not, for my very nature forbade it—I did not calculate chances, or weigh the advantage, which one course of conduct would bring, or the dangers to which another would expose me. A sentinel on the watch-tower, I had no choice but to give warning of danger when I saw it approaching. Placed in the breach, I must defend my post, until the people could rally and come to my rescue.—And whether I now be sustained by their cheering voices, or be borne down by the multitude, and the malice of my enemies, I regret nothing of my course, and shall never wish that I had changed it. One of its consequences only I look to with anxiety and pain—it is, that many good men, all deceived by the base falsehoods which have for years been invented and circulated against me, withhold from me that approbation to which I feel I am entitled at their hands, and which I know they would extend to me, if they could be undeceived as to my political course.

Be kind enough to communicate my sentiments to the meeting, and believe me, with great respect, your obedient servant,
T. EWING.

BALTIMORE AND SUSQUEHANNAH RAIL ROAD.

Office of the Baltimore and Susquehanna Rail road company, Oct. 11th, 1836.

To the stockholders of the Baltimore and Susquehanna rail road company:

GENTLEMEN: The president and directors respectfully submit to you their ninth annual report of the operations of the company.

In their last report you were informed that the general route of the road to York had been decided on by the board, after a deliberate examination of the results of the surveys instituted throughout the intervening country. In the past year two divisions of the "Baltimore and Susquehanna" and one of the "York and Maryland line" rail roads, embracing the whole line from Timonium to York, were successively put under contract, as the final locations were completed; and, except upon a few small sections, the construction of both roads is now in active progress throughout their entire extent.—

The "Wrightsville and York" rail road, which will connect with the "York and Maryland line" road, thereby forming a continuous line of rail road from Baltimore to the Susquehanna river, is steadily advancing, and will, it is expected, be completed before the road can be opened from this to York.

During the winter and early part of the spring, the unusual inclemency of the weather was such that but little work could be done; and when at length the season became more propitious, the operations of the contractors were unexpectedly retarded by the great scarcity of laborers. Every exertion was made to increase the force employed; but it was found that from the number of public works which were carried on in different parts of the country, the demand for hands was greater than could be supplied. Towards the latter part of the summer, however, the healthiness of the country along the line of our works attracted many from less favored districts; and for some months past the construction of the road has advanced with energy and rapidity. Upon many sections, the graduation and masonry are nearly completed, and throughout the line the amount of work done bears witness to the zeal and diligence of the contractors. The bridges, which will be of wood, upon the plan of colonel Long, are also preparing; and the board have the fullest confidence, that long before the period shall arrive for their next annual report, they will have announced the opening of a direct and regular channel of communication with Pittsburgh, and all the widely extended country which is intersected by the great works of Pennsylvania.—The accompanying report of the chief engineer will shew more particularly the character and amount of the work done on the different sections of the road.

In the month of December last, contracts were made in England for the whole quantity of iron rails which will be required, including an amount sufficient to lay down a new tract from Baltimore to Timonium. For, since the construction of that road, experience has shewn that true economy prescribes the use of a rail of strength sufficient to bear locomotive engines of considerable weight, whilst it can at the same time be laid down with much less timber than was formerly employed. That adopted by the board is a modification of the T. rail designed by J. Trimble, chief engineer of the company, which has been highly approved by those qualified to judge of its merits.—Being of the weight of nearly 60 lbs. to the yard, it will be simply laid upon wooden sleepers, or stone blocks, dispensing entirely with the string-piece. A very heavy and constant source of expense in the annual repairs required upon the wooden superstructure of a rail road, far exceeding the interest upon the additional cost of the heavy iron rails will be thereby avoided, whilst at the same time they can with ease be kept in a proper state of adjustment, and the transportation over them can be carried on with increased rapidity, safety and economy.—The average cost in England of the rails, (of which upwards of 2,200 tons have already arrived here) will be about £10 6s. sterling per ton; a much lower price than they could have been obtained for at any period subsequent to the date of the contracts. Ten locomotive engines have also been contracted for, in this country and in England; all of which are to be delivered in the course of the ensuing winter and spring.

Before laying down the new rails upon the old division of the road, it is the intention of the board, if they have the means within their power, so to change its location in several places, as to avoid many of the curves of small radius, which are found to offer much interruption to rapid motion with steam power upon the road. As none can doubt the importance of making as perfect as practicable, a road which must always be one of the great avenues from Baltimore to the west, and will for a time be the only one of the same character, it is the earnest wish of the board, and they are fully satisfied that all the means in their power should be used, so to reconstruct the old division of the road, as to render the facilities of transportation upon it, equal to those which will characterize the residue of the road to York. As the rails must, at all events, be renewed, it is evident that the desired improvements in the location can be made at the same time at far less expense and inconvenience than at any future period.

With the view of ascertaining the best mode of extending the road into the city, surveys have been made through different streets, but the board have as yet taken no further action on the subject.

The amount of the loan authorised to be made to the company from the state treasury by the act of December, 1834, ch. 241, was one million of dollars, the whole of which has been received. This sum was believed by the board sufficient for the completion of the road to York; and it would probably have been adequate not only to the construction of the road, but also to the procuring of the means of transportation upon it, but for the great advance which took place in the price of labor and materials after the passage of the act. For instance the price of the common flat bar rail road iron, which at the commencement of the year 1835, was £6 17s. 6d. sterling per ton, had advanced at the time of the contracts made by the company, to between £8 and £9, and rose in the next month to £11. But the board were fully satisfied that every motive of sound policy required them to adopt a rail of different form and much greater weight than the flat bar rail; and they accordingly, as before stated, selected the one recommended by the engineer, although the usual cost of rails of that description is 40 shillings per ton higher than that of the flat rail. In addition to the enhanced price of the iron, the cost of the new rail is more than five times as great as that of the rail formerly laid down, owing to its much greater weight. The number of tons of iron rails and fastenings required per mile for each track of the new road is 94; whilst upon the old road to Timonium were used not more than 17 tons per mile for a single track. A similar increase in the wages of labor likewise added to the cost of graduation. Throughout the summer the wages paid by the contractors, have been $2 per day.

But notwithstanding the enhanced cost of the road above the estimates of 1834, arising from the circumstances mentioned above, the board are yet satisfied that the loan furnished by the state, will suffice for the completion of the road from Timonium to York. For the purpose, however, of procuring the requisite means of transportation upon it, of establishing proper depots, of altering the location of the old road, and of extending it into the city, a greater amount of funds will be required than the board now have at their disposal. But they cannot anticipate that any difficulties will be permitted to interrupt the successful prosecution of your enterprise upon the very point of its completion; or that after so long and arduously contending with rival states, to regain a portion of that western commerce which was once her own, the city of Baltimore will not be prompt to grasp with avidity, the glorious prize, when it shall be shewn to be brought again unquestionably within her reach.

An account of the receipts and expenditures of the company to the 1st day of January, 1836, has been heretofore submitted to you. From that day to the 1st October inst. they were respectively as follows, viz:

Balance on hand 1st January, 1836,	538,543 79
Receipts.
From state of Maryland	250,000 00
“ transportation	12,265 50
“ interest on loan	14,489 55
“ sale of instruments	205 00
	276,960 00
	815,503 84
Expenditures.
Expenses of office	1,207 43
Salaries, (prest. & sec'y.)	1,811 61
Depots	301 00
Interest (paid state)	28,125 00
Transportation	12,588 64
New roads, viz:
Graduation & masonry	186,919 63
Contingencies of construction	950 01
Iron rails	107,258 01
City division	167 50
Timonium div.	353 22
Lumber	2,017 22
Wagon department	1,526 92
Printing & advertising	386 25
York & Md. L.
R. R. Co.	14,286 09
Damages	6,454 43
	320,319 28
	364,422 91

Balance on hand $451,180 93
The whole amount of transportation of the year is $13,283 99, of which $1,018 46 is not yet collected.

The expenditures for transportation have been increased by the carriage of materials for the new road, for which no charge has been made.

Since the date of this account the last instalment of the loan from the state, amount to $250,000 has been received, increasing by that amount the balance on hand.

Before concluding this report, the board would take occasion to submit for your consideration a few general remarks upon the results which may be anticipated from the completion of your road. The great works of internal improvement in the state of Pennsylvania, with which it is the primary object of this company to form a connexion on the banks of the Susquehanna, being now in full and successful operation, the effects which have been produced by their completion are objects of the deepest interest to you, and are of vital importance to the city of Baltimore.

By the last annual report of the canal commissioners to the legislature of Pennsylvania, it appears that on the 1st November, 1835, that state had completed upwards of 600 miles of canal and slack-water navigation, and nearly 120 miles rail road; and that at the same time there were completed, or in a course of construction by different incorporated companies within the state, about 400 miles of canal and 520 miles rail road. This was previous to the very liberal aid which at the last regular session of the Pennsylvania legislature was extended to works of internal improvement in every quarter of the state; the effect of which will soon become visible in the addition to the foregoing list of many miles both of rail roads and canals.

The returns of the transportation upon the works constructed by the state alone, since they were first opened for public use, were as follows, viz:

Years.	No. of boats.	No. of cars.	No. of miles trav. by pas.	Amount of tolls received.
1830				27,012 90
1831				38,241 20
1832			152,780	50,909 57
1833			878,315	151,419 69
1834	664	349	4,085,191	309,789 15
1835	760	774	11,231,924	684,357 77

The receipts by the state as above, were exclusively for tolls and for the use of motive power on the rail roads, which is furnished by her—the transportation being carried on, and the freight of course received by individuals and companies. The payments to the state for the year 1835, were—

For amount of tolls on canals	$403,048 43
For “ “ on rail roads	194,623 24
For motive power on “	86,726 10

$684,357 77

The quantities of a few of the principal articles transported, were as follows, viz:

Flour,	263,662 bbls.
Wheat,	243,559 bush.
Corn and grain,	393,315 “
Tobacco,	6,715,542 lbs.
Iron,	53,797,710 “
Merchandise,	36,859,711 “
Groceries,	23,335,993 “
Leather,	1,664,718 “
Mineral coal,	121,995 tons.
Whiskey and Dom. spirits,	1,241,884 galls.
Sawed lumber,	14,528,557 feet.

From the above statements some idea may be formed of the vast amount of that internal trade, which circulates throughout the state the life blood of her prosperity, and of which the amount during the present year is understood to have far exceeded that of any former period.

But the value of the Pennsylvania works is not to be estimated solely by the magnitude of the trade which is even now transported over them.—By the progressive completion of the various lines of communication west and north of Pittsburgh, the commercial importance of that place and the amount of internal trade which will there centre, must every year be rapidly augmented; whilst the resources of the region of the country traversed by the improvements which follow the north and west branches of the Susquehanna have scarcely yet begun to be developed. And by the rail road communication now forming between Williamsport, on the west branch canal, and Elmira or Newtown, situated on the New York and Erie rail road, an avenue will be opened to the fertile regions of the Genessee, and a connexion will be formed with both the Erie canal and the New York and Erie rail road, at points from both of which the distances to the city of New York will much exceed those to Baltimore.

It is to the Baltimore and Susquehanna rail road that we look to secure to the city of Baltimore a participation in the immense trade of which we have spoken. The great line of communication from Pittsburgh to the Atlantic cities, is by canals and the Portage rail road, to Columbia; and thence by the Columbia rail road, a distance of 91 3-4 miles to Philadelphia. From Columbia to Baltimore the distance by the rail road now constructing will not exceed 70 miles. We will therefore have the same mode of access to the Pennsylvania canals, which is enjoyed by Philadelphia, with the difference of distance in our favor; and on the other hand, will be given to the agriculturist and manufacturer of Pennsylvania, the reciprocal advantage of being enabled, after transporting his commodities to Columbia, there to enjoy the benefit of a choice of markets between two rival cities, each striving to offer such inducements as may attract his custom. The distance from Pittsburgh to Baltimore by this route will not exceed 382 miles; and if it be the interest of the citizens of Pennsylvania to open the cheapest and shortest routes to the markets for their produce, the construction of a rail road from York to Harrisburgh will probably effect a further reduction in that distance of at least 10 miles.

The distance from Lake Erie to Elmira by the New York and Erie rail road will be 205 miles, and thence to New York 303 miles; whilst that from Elmira to Baltimore, by the rail road to Williamsport, and thence by the Pennsylvania canals, will be but 245, a difference in favor of Baltimore of 58 miles. From Elmira by the Chemung canal, the Seneca lake and Seneca canal, the distance to Montezuma, on the Erie canal, is 84 miles, making the whole distance from Baltimore to Montezuma 329 miles, whilst that from Montezuma to New York by the Erie canal is 366, a difference in our favor of 37 miles. Through the Susquehannah route, therefore, the city of Baltimore will be placed nearer to Lake Erie than is the city of New York, and may enter into competition with her for that trade of which the latter has now the monopoly; and that this route will become the great and national channel of communication between the north and south for travellers, and for the United States mail, cannot be questioned, since from Lake Erie to Baltimore the distance by it will be but 450 miles, whilst between the same points, by the route via New York and Philadelphia, it will be 706, a difference of 256 miles.

Such are the benefits which the city of Baltimore has to expect from the completion of your enterprise. The disadvantages under which her traders have labored, have been sorely felt; and during the past year it has in repeated instances happened that sales have been effected in this city, of goods destined for the western markets, only on condition that the vender would at his own cost deliver them in Philadelphia, whence they were to be transported along the canals of the Susquehannah valley. But when a direct communication shall be afforded from Baltimore to the same canals, a wide field will be thrown open to the commercial enterprise of her citizens, and all their energies will have ample room for exercise. Like the magnificent Susquehannah itself, the commerce of a region almost unbounded in extent, will flow from a thousand sources, until uniting upon her banks, it rolls along in one wide stream of wealth.—Through your exertions, Baltimore will be enabled to enter upon favorable terms into the zealous competition with which her rivals seek to divert to themselves the fertilizing branches of this mighty current, and to the activity and industry of her citizens may we safely trust to avail themselves of the advantages you will have placed within their reach.

With the prospect then of at length reaping the full reward of your labors, the president and directors cannot but offer their congratulations to the stockholders, upon the advance of their work towards completion. Looking to all the considerations which give value to a rail road, the board still entertain the most confident belief that the revenue which the Baltimore and Susquehannah rail road will yield, will fully justify the most sanguine expectations which they have held forth, and they as firmly trust that the advantages which will accrue from it to the city of Baltimore, will be at least as great as have been represented. By order of the board,

CHARLES HOWARD, president.

MR. DALLAS' LETTER.

An examination of the late letter of G. M. Dallas, esq. to certain persons in Pennsylvania.
Communicated for the Baltimore Patriot.

The hostility felt or professed by the Van Buren party to the bank of the United States is truly surprising. So long as that institution existed under a charter derived from the federal government, there were at least plausible reasons for disliking and opposing it. The most enlightened men differed very honestly on the question of its constitutionality, and the most honest men did not agree as to the integrity of its management and administration.—Whether the friends or the foes of the institution were right, it is not my present purpose to inquire. Be that as it may, I am at a loss to perceive the applicability of the same objections to it under its present charter, which were so strenuously and effectually urged while it existed as a creature of the federal government. The question of its constitutionality no longer exists, and its capacity for mischief, which it is charged with having exerted so extensively and unscrupulously, is effectually destroyed by the limitations of its present charter. Nevertheless, it is still pursued with the most bitter hostility; and that, too, by a large portion of the very people who derive from it the most important benefits, and who have therefore the strongest interest to support it. I presume that they understand their own motives, but they may not find it an easy thing to justify their course to the cool and dispassionate judgment of the people of their sister states.

I have no concern, however, with this subject in its connexion with party politics in Pennsylvania or elsewhere. My attention has been called to it only by the recent letter of the hon. G. M. DALLAS to the "democratic corresponding committee of Smithfield, Bradford county, Pennsylvania;" a letter which, in my opinion, does him no honor, either as a lawyer or as a statesman. I will not pause to criticise that production in its style and manner.—It is so much the fashion of the present day for the friends of the administration to flatter gen. Jackson both in season and out of season, that we naturally expect something of the sort, on all occasions which present the least chance for the language of adulation to be heard. From such a man as Mr. Dallas, however, we had a right to expect that flattery, however liberally bestowed, would at least be presented in the garb of delicacy and good taste. There was no necessity that he, of all men in the world, should make so broad a declaration of his devotion to the person or the public measures of gen. Jackson; nor is the language of flattery so strange to the ear of that gentleman, as to authorise the belief that he would not understand it, except in its plainest and coarsest forms. I am willing, however, that Mr. Dallas shall play the courtier in his own way; it is only with the principles of his letter that I have any concern, and to them only do I desire to call the serious attention of others.

It appears from the letter of Mr. Dallas that the object of his correspondents, the "democratic corresponding committee of Smithfield, Bradford county, Pennsylvania," was to devise some mode by which the charter of the bank of the United States might be annulled without too plain a violation of law, or public faith, or public decency. The application to him was suggested by his high character as a jurist, and his known devotion to the interests of the "democratic republican party." Such of us, therefore, as feel a stronger devotion to law, good order and good government than to any party whatever, may indulge the hope that if the plan suggested by Mr. Dallas, for destroying the chartered rights of corporations, should be found to be impracticable or inconsistent with the genius of our governments and institutions, no other plan will be attempted, and that corporations, as well as individuals, will be allowed to remain in the undisturbed possession and exercise of all the rights which the laws of the land have conferred upon them.

I am happy to perceive that Mr. Dallas is not disposed to go all lengths with his party. He rebukes plainly, though tenderly, many of the extravagancies in reasoning by which the more ultra of his political friends have endeavored to prove the charter of the bank invalid; and he rejects, in a manner equally positive, some of the irregular and summary plans by which it has been proposed to get rid of the obnoxious institution. He admits that there is nothing in the constitution of the United States which prohibits a state from incorporating a bank; and, what is more important, while he denounces the legislature of his own state as both corrupt and stupid, he admits that they had rightful power to incorporate the bank; that it stands on the footing of contract, and, consequently, that its charter cannot be taken away by an act of ordinary legislation. These concessions are important in the present temper of his party, and, while they entitle him to some credit, will, it is hoped, exert a salutary influence upon the wild zeal which has hitherto distinguished them. But Mr. Dallas also has his plan; and although not quite so summary as some others which have been suggested, it is not less effectual and decisive. His idea is that this bank, and all other "monopolies," as he is pleased to call all incorporations, may rightfully be put down by an amendment of the constitution, and he refers his political friends to that as the proper "remedy" in the present case. It is this idea which I propose now to examine.

Mr. Dallas introduces his views of the effect of an amendment of the constitution by a very pointed allusion to the circumstances under which the charter of the present bank was obtained. He appears to attach much importance to the fact, that a law had already passed for calling a convention to amend the constitution of the state; and, consequently, that the bank took its charter with a full knowledge of all the hazards which it had to encounter from the action of that body. This is undoubtedly true in point of fact, but it is not perceived that it possesses any weight as an argument. The risk which the bank incurs, depends on the power of the convention to affect its charter; if there be no such power, there can be no such risk. So far, therefore, as the mere question of power is concerned, the argument that the bank knew beforehand that a convention would be called, is the plain petitio principii. Mr. Dallas should first have proved to us that a convention would have power to annul the charter. He might then have argued, with perfect justice and propriety, that the bank could claim no particular tenderness or forbearance, since it knowingly put itself within the power of the convention, and challenged the exertion of that power. In no other view do his remarks upon this point possess any weight whatever.

The following extract from the letter of Mr. Dallas presents his whole view of this question:

"A convention is the provided machinery of peaceful revolution. It is the civilized substitute for intestine war, the American mode for carrying out the will of the majority; the inalienable and indefeasible right to alter, reform or abolish their government, in such manner as they may think proper. When ours shall assemble, it will possess, within the territory of Pennsylvania, every attribute of absolute sovereignty, except such as may have been yielded and are embodied in the constitution of the United States. What may it not do? It may reorganize our entire system of social existence, terminating and proscribing what is deemed injurious, and establishing what is preferred. It might restore the institution of slavery among us; it might make our penal code as bloody as that of Draco; it might withdraw the charters of the cities; it might supersede a standing judiciary, by a scheme of occasional arbitration and umpirage; it might prohibit particular professions or trades; it might permanently suspend the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus, and take from us, (as our late general assembly made an entering wedge to do), the trial by jury. These are fearful matters, of which intelligent and virtuous freemen can never be guilty; and I mention them merely as illustrations of the inherent and almost boundless power of a convention. The only effective limits to its authority are the broad and unchangeable rules of justice and of truth; and these, I have already shown, do not hedge around the charter."

I can scarcely imagine stronger terms than these, in which the unlimited power of a convention, acting by a mere majority, can be asserted. Indeed, we are told, in so many words, that there are no limits, except such as are found in the "broad and unchangeable rules of justice and of truth." How far these admitted limits will apply in the case of the bank, we shall presently see. The principles here asserted derive no part of their importance from their application to this particular case. They involve much higher interests than those of any private corporation; they concern, not the people of Pennsylvania alone, but those of every other state in the union. It is of the utmost importance to all of us that we should form correct opinions upon this subject. I do not deem it necessary to examine the several examples which Mr. Dallas has given, as illustrations of the power of a convention. He himself, upon better consideration, will perceive that some of them are disallowed by the constitution of the United States, and many, very many of them, present no just analogies by which to prove the existence of such a power in the case before him. It is quite evident that he meant to assert the existence of that power, in its broadest and most extended sense, and, therefore, it is of no importance whether his "illustrations" be correct or not. Our present concern is with his principles—I wish I could say with his reasoning also. It is remarkable, however, that he has not thought it necessary to offer any proof whatever of the correctness of his opinions. He has delivered them "ex cathedra," under a just impression, perhaps, that they will be embraced without question or examination by all the faithful to whom they are addressed. They are not, on that account, the less worthy of examination by those who are not disposed to take their faith from authority.

The general proposition that the people have an "unalienable and indefeasible right to alter, reform, or abolish their government in such manner as they may think proper," will scarcely be denied at this day. But this right is not without limitations in its extent, and qualifications in the mode of exercising it. A brief examination will, it is believed, make this sufficiently plain.

There are three cases in which "the people" may be supposed to exercise their sovereign power over the forms of their government. The first may be imagined, for the sake of illustration, although, probably, it never had existence in point of fact. If we can carry our minds back to a period prior to all history, we may suppose a certain number of individuals as existing upon the earth, without any form of government whatever; we may further suppose a certain number of such individuals as agreeing to unite together under some form of social compact. It is quite evident that all the individuals of that number would be, in all respects, upon a perfect equality. They would bring into the general mass only their rights of person; for the rights of property, being the creatures of the social state, cannot be supposed to exist prior to society. The mere rights of person are the same in all; they exist alike in men, women and children. It is perfectly clear that such an assemblage of individuals, meeting together under such circumstances, would have an unlimited right to establish for themselves any form of government whatever. Of course, however, the government would apply only to those who consented to be bound by it. There would be no right in any number to bind any other number against their will; for the right of a majority springs only from compact, and does not exist in nature. This case, however, presents no fair analogy with that which Mr. Dallas was considering, because here the government cannot be established except by unanimous consent; and, of course, whatever it might be, no one would have a right to object to it. The analogy fails, also, in another important particular. In the case supposed, every member of the social union would, as already remarked, be precisely equal in point of right and interest; in which respect, as I shall presently show, it is widely distinguishable from the case which Mr. Dallas was considering. No argument, therefore, in favor of the unlimited power of the Pennsylvania convention can be deduced from any analogy with the power of men in a primitive state, meeting together to form a government for the first time.

The second case is that of a people existing under an established government, owing allegiance to a higher power, and determining to shake off that allegiance and establish a government for themselves. This is the case of revolution. It is presumed that a people so circumstanced, having achieved their independence, and meeting together for the purpose of forming a government for themselves, would possess very extensive powers, indeed. Having never before existed as a separate power, no rights or interests can be supposed to have sprung up among them, by their invitation, or under any pledge of the public faith for their protection. It is true, the people would not be upon that exact equality which has been shown to exist in the first case. They would possess, in this case, not only the equal rights of person, but also the unequal rights of property. These rights of property, however, having been acquired under a government which they have pronounced void, by the very fact of shaking it off, could not claim that absolute inviolability which would attach to them under different circumstances. It is true, they would claim high respect, and it would be the point of wisdom to secure them as far as possible, consistent with the forms of the new government. That government, however, would be under no pledge, direct or implied, to protect them, and in this respect it would be much less restricted in its power than in the case of a regular government, changed not by revolution, but by the voluntary, peaceable action of its people. This is the case which was before Mr. Dallas, and is the third and last in my enumeration.

In a government regularly established, possessing within its own limits sovereign authority, a variety of rights and interests have been invited into existence, under a pledge of full protection from the government itself. All who live under such a government are parties consenting to it, and every right acquired under it is acquired under a pledge of each member of the social union to all the rest that he will protect and support it. These rights, however, being acquired and exercised under the authority and protection of the body politic, are, to a certain extent, subject to its control and regulation. To what extent they are so subject, we are now to inquire.

Mr. Dallas seems to suppose that, whenever a people call a convention for the purpose of amending its constitution, the whole frame of society is broken up, and resolved into its original elements. It is only from this idea that he can deduce the absolute power which he attributes to such a convention; for such a power would be inconsistent with any of the restraints, or duties, or obligations of the old government. Let me suppose for a moment that he is right, and what is the consequence? If society be indeed resolved into its original elements—if the restraints and all the rules of the old government be removed and destroyed, then every member of the defunct social union is referred back to the rights which he possessed prior to that union. Among these rights, the right to consent to the government or not, as may seem to him best, is among the most prominent and important. He stands, then, in the condition supposed in the first case—that is, in the condition of primitive nature. From what, then, does Mr. Dallas derive the right of a majority to control him? Who are this majority when the social estate is destroyed, and its limits undefined? How are you to ascertain it? And if you could ascertain it, what right have you to say that it shall consist of males only, and not of females, of adults, and not of children.

It is perfectly clear that the idea of a majority springs only from the relations of the social state, and, of course, the powers of that majority are derived, not from nature, but from compact alone.—The moment, therefore, that you suppose a state of things which breaks up the relations of society, and destroys the obligations of compact, no legitimate majority can exist, and its powers become merely ideal. The conclusion is manifest. Either the unlimited power of a convention, as supposed by Mr. Dallas, does not exist, or, if it exist, it can only be under a condition of things which denies to a majority the right to bind the rest. There is no doubt that a convention truly representing the people might, by unanimous consent, do what it pleased with its government. But this case can scarcely exist in practice, and is not the case supposed by Mr. Dallas. My remarks upon this part of the subject are designed only to show that the powers of a convention, acting only through a majority, are not absolute and unlimited, but that, like all other powers, they have their qualifications and legitimate restraints.

I cannot, of course, understand a man of Mr. Dallas' intelligence as designing to draw any distinction between the power and the right of a majority. Power relates not to numbers, but to physical strength, and may well exist in a minority. In a political sense, we mean by power only rightful power; and, in this understanding of the term, it is perfectly manifest that the right of a majority of a convention, that is, of the people, to bind the minority, is not without its limitations. Let us now see what these limitations are.

So far as the present argument is concerned, it is enough to say that the power of a majority to bind the minority does not extend to any right vested under the government sought to be reformed, and for which the citizen has paid an equivalent, either in money, in personal service, or any other form. It would probably be found, on a more full examination of the subject, that the power is still farther limited, but the limitation here supposed is sufficient for the decision of the issue between Mr. Dallas and myself.

It is a well established doctrine of the law of nations, that the obligations and duties contrasted by a people under one form of government are binding upon the same people, however their government may be changed. So universal is this principle, that it applies even to the case of a usurper, who has obtained possession of the government by force, and against the will of the people. History is full of examples of this sort; but it is enough to refer to the indemnities paid to the United States by Naples and France. We are at this moment receiving from the latter power, under the legitimate reign of Louis Philippe, indemnity for the spoiliations committed upon our commerce during the usurpation of Napoleon. The principle upon which this rule of international law is founded is alike plain and just. The people constitute the country. Whatever is done by their government is done by them, either by their express authority, or by their consent and acquiescence. On them, therefore, rests the responsibility; and they are the same people, however their form of government may be changed. A different rule would open the door to the most crying injustice and the most enormous frauds. A people would only have to change their government, in however important a point, to wipe off their obligations, not only to other nations, but to individuals also. The national debt of England might be paid in a few months by this summary process.

Let us not apply this principle to the case before us. The bank of the United States is incorporated by a legislature representing, as to this matter, the sovereignty of the state, and possessing, as Mr. Dallas himself admits, full power and authority to incorporate it. It has paid, or agreed to pay, a large and even extravagant bonus for its charter. This was done under a solemn agreement, by the stockholders on the one part, and by the commonwealth of Pennsylvania, acting by its legitimate and authorised agent, the legislature, on the other. It is, in Mr. Dallas' own language, "essentially a contract," having all the characteristics of a contract, of which mutuality is one. Is it, then, in the power of either party to annul this contract, without the consent of the other? If it were a case between individuals, the answer would be plain; and the same rule, by universal admission, applies as between a nation and individuals. Suppose that the depredations committed by France, and for which she is now paying, had been committed by Pennsylvania, could she get rid of her obligation to indemnify the sufferers by simply changing her constitution? Undoubtedly not. The analogy holds throughout. France is sovereign as to all purposes; Pennsylvania is equally sovereign as to the present question. The obligation of France arises from a wrong done by her and suffered by us; the obligation of Pennsylvania arises from her own voluntary act, and is, to say the least of it, equally strong and equally free from objection. Mr. Dallas, however, supposes that Pennsylvania, which he himself considers only a limited and qualified sovereignty, may rightfully do what an unlimited and unqualified sovereignty cannot rightfully do; and that obligations which, by the admitted law of nations, would bind one people, would not bind another people under the same or analogous circumstances. If he does not contend for both these propositions, he must admit that there is no right in the people of Pennsylvania to annul, in any form, a contract which the same people have freely and solemnly made.

The justness of this reasoning will be the more apparent, if we pursue the principle contended for by Mr. Dallas, through its practical results, in the very case before us. What is a bank? It is not, as many seem to suppose, a monster with "seven heads and ten horns;" an organized existence, living and breathing. A bank, in any practical sense of the term, is but the stockholders of the bank, and its rights are neither more nor less than their rights. Among these are the right to hold property, to lend money, and to sue for and recover debts due to them. These rights, however, can be exercised only in a particular mode: that is, in the corporate name, and not in the names of the individual stockholders, or any part of them. Suppose, then, their charter should be destroyed, how are they to collect their debts, or expel an intruder from their banking house? The corporation being destroyed, it could not be entertained as plaintiff in a court of justice; and its contracts having been made in its corporate character, they could not be enforced in the individual character of the corporators. The consequence would be, that each stockholder would thus be forcibly deprived of his entire interest in the corporate subject, and each debtor of the bank would be released from his obligation to pay! Was it ever before supposed that a people could, by a mere change in their form of government, work such an outrageous injustice as this? If they can go thus far, where are they to stop? If they may thus violate one right, why may they not violate another? All rights stand upon the same footing; there is no difference in their degree nor in their sacredness. I have the same right to any one dollar of my estate, that I have to any hundred dollars, although I have certainly not the same interest. In like manner, I have the same right to my property which I have to my life, and the government which may arbitrarily deprive me of the one, would commit no greater injustice in robbing me of the other. It is no answer to this view of the subject to say that the convention may easily provide for the collection of the debts of the bank, for the security of its corporate property, &c. If the convention may do this, it may also not do it. We are discussing a right, and that is no right at all which may be enjoyed, or not, at the arbitrary will of another. Mr. Dallas seems to have been conscious of the force of this view when he suggested the propriety of returning the bonus, &c. The injustice of withholding it, and the unqualified political wrong which it would involve, did not escape his attention. But he seems not to have perceived that this would be merely a voluntary reparation, which implies the existence of a wrong to be repaired.

The error into which Mr. Dallas has fallen, and to which, I fear, his whole school of politics is rapidly tending, is this: In assuming that the people possess all power over their government, he supposes that their power extends to the past as well as to the future. There can be no greater nor more dangerous mistake than this. There is no power in the people to cause that not to have existed which, in point of fact, has existed. They may rightfully declare what their government shall be, in all time to come, but they cannot annul the obligations which they have previously contracted. So long as governments are regulated in their conduct by the broad and unchangeable rules of justice and of truth, they will claim no such power; and whenever they do claim such a power, they place themselves out of the pale of civilized nations, and can no longer expect the respect even of their own people.

The true effect and meaning of Mr. Dallas' principle is this: An act which, if done in one mode, would involve a gross breach of the public faith, and an unpardonable outrage against private right, may be done in another mode with perfect propriety, and without any wrong or injustice whatever, although the party affected by it has in no wise consented to such a course of proceeding. He admits that the bank is lawfully incorporated; he admits that its rights are vested under "a contract" with the state; and he admits that its charter cannot be annulled by an act of ordinary legislation. And why not? Certainly because the bank has a right to exist; because it stands upon the footing of contract; because the public faith is pledged to sustain it, in all its rights. And yet Mr. Dallas supposes that the same people who made this contract, the same people who gave this pledge, have only to place themselves in a different attitude, and instantly the contract is dissolved, the pledge is withdrawn, and all the rights which grew out of them vanish into thin air! If it be legitimately within the power of a majority to do this, I ask, in Mr. Dallas' own language, "what may they not do?" If they may take away one right, they may take away two, three and all rights; if they may act thus towards one man, they may act in the same way towards two or more men. Thus a majority, only one more than half the people, may claim, upon Mr. Dallas' principle, a perfect right to deprive all the rest of every right whatever.—Upon the same principle, they may make slaves of the minority, or bring all the property of the country into hotch-pot, and redistribute it according to the most approved rules of agrarian equality. A principle which leads to such consequences as these, can be neither wise, nor just, nor true.

Mr. Dallas' idea that the call of a convention by a government already organized and independent, ipso facto, releases all the obligations of the government itself, and destroys all the rights of the people, is contradicted by the practice of almost every state in the union. There are few of them that have not amended their constitutions, and yet not one of them, so far as I am informed, has thought it necessary to provide, in the express terms of the new constitution, for the security of rights acquired under the old one. The reason is, that no one, before Mr. Dallas, ever supposed that such a provision was necessary. The people who go into convention for the purpose of amending their constitution, do it under an implied pledge that their existing rights shall not be arbitrarily invaded. It would be the worst of madness to resort to such a measure, upon any other terms. In a case like this, the members of the community do not stand upon equal terms. One brings into the common mass only his rights of person, another brings his rights of property also; and even the rights of property are different in form and extent. It is precisely in these respects that a convention, called under such circumstances, differs in the extent of its powers, from those alluded to in the first and second cases before mentioned. A government, which has been once in operation, has invited into existence a variety of rights and interests, which have vested and grown up under its authority, and upon the faith of its protection. Who ever imagined that, by consenting to change some one or more principles of that government, he surrendered all these rights to the arbitrary control of a majority? Every one knows that no such thing is contemplated. He consents, indeed, that the majority shall, to a certain extent and within certain limits, regulate and control his rights and interests for the time to come; but beyond this the individual never means to go, and beyond this the majority have no right to go.

The principle contended for by Mr. Dallas flows from the idea that a people who meet in convention for the purpose of mending their constitution, do by that act resume all their original rights and powers. Grant this to be true, and what are those rights and powers? Certainly none other than those rights and powers which have been surrendered to the government as contradistinguished from the people. All other rights remain with the people; it is only to the government that they have surrendered any thing, and, of course, it is only from the government that any thing is to be resumed. The rights of individuals never belonged to society as such, and of course those rights cannot, ex vi termini, be "resumed" by society. Thus, in the case before us, the power to incorporate a bank belonged originally to the people, and was by them surrendered to the government. This power, therefore, may be resumed, and the government be hereafter denied the right to incorporate a bank. But the right of an individual to hold property never belonged to government as such, although it exists under the authority, and is enjoyed by the permission of government. Still it is, and at all times was, strictly a private right, which the government permitted, but did not bestow; which the government never possessed, and therefore never surrendered; which it never surrendered, and therefore cannot resume.—The people may do what they please with their government; they may, at their own arbitrary will and pleasure, take away all the rights and powers with which they have clothed it, simply because the government is their own. It is their creature and their property. But the rights of individuals are not the rights of "the people," and therefore the people cannot, in one mode more than in another, arbitrarily take those rights away.

I am aware that there are cases in which society has a right to take away the rights of individuals. The right to hang or imprison for crime, and the right to condemn private property for public uses, are of this character. But it would be a waste of time to show that neither of these is analogous in principle to the case under consideration.

If it be true, as Mr. Dallas supposes, that a people, by the mere act of calling a convention, "resume" not only the rights surrendered to the government, but those required by the individuals also, it follows that the rights of property are thus resumed. How, then, are they reacquired? Does the convention ever consider it necessary to provide, in express terms, that these rights shall revert exactly as they were before? There is not, I presume, a single example of such a provision in the history of conventions. So far, therefore, the idea is rebuked by the practice of all nations. But if the idea be correct, then in all cases where such express provision is not made, all the property of the country is divested, and the individual owns nothing, and "the people," as a political community, own all! This consequence is inevitable, and the absurdity is glaring. But this is not all. There are duties as well as rights; obligations which grow out of rights, and follow them as the shadow follows the substance. Shall society resume the rights of property, and yet not resume the obligations which property has contracted? It seems to me that when "the people" take away my estate, it is perfectly consistent with and demanded by "the broad and unchangeable rules of justice and truth," that they should also assume the debts which I have contracted on the faith of that estate! Take, then, the principle of Mr. Dallas, with all its consequences, and how short will be the existence of the best popular government!

Such are the absurdities, and such the appalling consequences, of this monstrous doctrine of the unlimited power of a majority! I am conscious that the subject has been very inadequately discussed. It is far too vast to be compressed within the compass of a newspaper essay. My object has not been to argue the question as it ought to be argued, for I have neither time nor opportunity, even if I had the requisite ability, for such a task. I have desired only to touch on some of the most prominent topics which it suggests, as materials of serious reflection by others. Without detracting in any degree from the weight which attaches to the name of Mr. Dallas, I may be permitted to say that it is not from his authority only that this subject derives its importance. I see with regret a melancholy foreboding that the principle he avows is held by almost his entire political party. It is daily spreading, daily acquiring strength and boldness. In this view it is interesting, not only to the bank of the United States, or to the people of Pennsylvania: it concerns alike the people of all the states, and the lovers of free, regular and orderly government throughout the world. Its obvious tendency is to unsettle every society, by rendering the rights of property precarious and insecure. In its consequences it is at war with all government. It is the principle, not of reform, but of revolution; not of law, but of violence; the mere right of the strongest. It is high time that its true character were understood by the people. They ought to know that the insecurity of the rights of property precedes but by a short interval the insecurity of the rights of liberty and life; the anarchy which follows the overthrow of regular government, and the despotism which anarchy renders unavoidable.

MADISON.

The editor of the Washington "Globe," in that paper of the 17th September, thus noticed Mr. Dallas' letter.

LETTER OF MR. DALLAS.

This paper has taken a strong hold of the public attention. The issue it presents between the sovereignty of the people on the one side, and corporation privilege on the other, is pregnant with results of greater magnitude than any other question that has risen since the revolution. If the great pitched battle which Mr. Biddle and the British stockholders in the United States bank have drawn up all their force to fight, (wielding too, at present, the state government of Pennsylvania), shall result in a triumph of the popular will in support of equal rights over prerogative monopoly, asserting vested rights, obtained by fraud and corruption, in derogation of the will of the people, and reaching to a control of the currency and property of the whole country, then the republicans of the union may breathe free again. But if Biddle and his foreign bankers and capitalists succeed in crushing the power of the people in the most independent and steadfast democratic state in the union, the march of aristocratic monopoly will have commenced, and the present generation may look to see its yoke fixed upon the neck of every state of the union. If there be no remedy in the sovereign power to relieve itself from the sale of privileges by half a dozen corrupt senators, embracing, in the power they confer, a controlling influence over the currency—the value of property—the freedom and purity of elections—the independence and purity of the press—the whole taking root in the practical power of levying taxes and raising a revenue, which, from the extent of it, may interfere with the free exercise of this essential attribute of legislative power by the representatives of the people themselves—then the idea of the permanency of our republican institutions may at once be quietly resigned. But we think that there is no man, who holds sacred the principles which were established by our revolution, that can maintain the doctrine of the bank party, which yields to the legislature the power to confer privileges effecting deeply, however indirectly, the great political interest of a whole community, and deny to a convention, called by the sovereign power of the people to build up their political institutions from the foundation, the right to remove an establishment incorporated for the benefit of a few, which stands directly in the way of the work which the community requires them to raise for the commonwealth. This is to put a government emanating from an act of ordinary legislation, above that established by a constitution, and is enabling the temporary agents of the people, appointed to legislate for the time being, to legislate for perpetuity, and to add to the power of granting a monopoly the power of making it eternal.

It is upon this principle that the English church establishment denies the right of the parliament of Great Britain to touch its system of tythes. The church is almost without a congregation in Ireland; and yet the Catholic property is held in a sort of mortmain throughout the kingdom, to pay tythes to the church of England clergy! The commons of England have voted down the principles of vested rights, as asserted by the church of England, to maintain its system of plunder in Ireland. The bishops plead the statute law of England, supported by the submission of centuries, as establishing a sacred vested right. They hold it to be a contract between the church and the state; the one agreeing to perform certain services, and the other to make compensation in the tythes of a kingdom. The parliament, however, maintains the ground, that the people have the right to alter the laws of church and state. It was in this way that the church property in the abbeys and monasteries of England vanished, when the people thought fit to throw off the supremacy of the papal power at Rome. And will the people of Pennsylvania admit the principle, that a body of apostate representatives, limited in their office and duties, can sell to foreign stockholders, for thirty years, or forever, (the principle is the same), rights affecting deeply and durably the interests of the state, political as well as pecuniary? If the doctrine be established that such an act of legislation is not only beyond the power of repeal by a subsequent legislature, but is beyond remedy, through a convention clothed with all the power that the sovereign authority of the people can confer, then may the bishops of England, if ousted of their tythe privileges in Ireland, renew them in the form of corporation privileges in Pennsylvania, under a suitable composition with Burden, Burden & Co.

We hope the democracy of Pennsylvania will embody their whole strength upon the elevated ground taken in the letter of Mr. Dallas, and we trust he will himself be called to a position in the public councils, state and national, where his weight of character, his high talents and attainments, may be brought to bear, to give the most effectual support to the principles he has advanced, and which we have no doubt will encounter the fearful opposition of all that the moneyed power and the tory oligarchy on this or the other side of the Atlantic can array against it

FOREIGN CHRONICLE.

Greece. Emigrations are taking place to Greece from the neighboring countries. Eighteen hundred families of Nomade horsemen, from Epirus, Macedonia and Thessaly, desirous of abandoning their wandering habits, have arrived with 500,000 sheep and 90,000 horses. Three thousand families from the Aspropotamos, among whom are many mechanics and country people, have also desired to be incorporated into various communes. The Ispariots, too, are disposed finally to settle in Eretria, now that the government has granted them some advantage.

Turkey and Egypt. The plague at Smyrna is fast subsiding. Reschid pacha has, it is said, discovered to a certainty, that Mehemet Ali was endeavoring to arms the Kurds against Turkey. Several British commercial houses have of late been established in Aleppo. Mehemet Ali had declared by an order, dated Alexandria, July 24th, that the ardent spirit trade shall be a monopoly of the state. Heavy duties have been laid on the wine trade; in short, all the treaties existing between the porte and France are considered as null and void. Egypt suffers greatly from famine. The crops have failed everywhere. The expedition into Arabia has been abandoned. The intensity of the epidemic was increasing in Lower Egypt and Damietta. [Swabian Mercury.]

An Irish estate has recently been advertised in a Cork newspaper, with temptations to a purchaser of no ordinary kind. It consists of two villages, the future prospects of which are set forth by stating that one of them is let for nine hundred years, and the other on a lease for ever!—on the expiration of which terms both the said villages will be capable of great improvement.

Fatal mistake. A few days since, as Mr. George Roscoe, a highly respectable attorney, was visiting some friends near Ilminster, Somersetshire, he was mortally wounded in the following singular manner:—The house in which he slept being alarmed in the night by a report of thieves, the servant of the family came down with a large horse pistol, intending to shoot the depredators, but unfortunately observing Mr. Roscoe, who had descended by another staircase, and mistaking him for a robber, instantly shot him through the heart.

Horrible warfare. A letter from an English gentleman at Nineva, on the Tigris, communicates some particulars of the Turkish army under Reschid pacha, in the subjugation of the Kurds. It seems that the Kurdish chieftain roasts alive all the prisoners he takes from the pacha, and that the pacha retaliates by impaling all the Kurds who shall fall into his hands; thus the contest is carried on with an atrocity exceeding even the horrors of Spanish warfare.

The St. Simonians. Letters from Alexandria state that nearly all the St. Simonians who accompanied father Enfantin into Egypt have disappeared. There were twenty in number, of whom one has died of some ordinary disease, five have been carried off by the plague, four have turned Mahometans, another has disappeared, nobody knows how, and three have left Egypt for other parts of the east. One of these last, although he cannot speak a word of Arabic, and has not assumed the turban, has had the courage to put himself at the head of a caravan of pilgrims from the west, and gone to Mecca; but, as the caravan had not returned, his fate was not known. The rest have found employment in superintending the roads, the hospitals, and in giving public instruction. Father Enfantin alone remains unoccupied; he is sustained by his brethren, and particularly by Solyman pacha (colonel Selves).

Culture of rice in Java. The Batavia journals contain a long report on the measures taken within the last two years for extending the cultivation of rice in Java. From this it results that since 1831 there have been brought into this cultivation 25,000 parcels of land of 5,000 square ells each, to which there will be shortly added 67,000 parcels. In 1833 the aggregate quantity of these settlements in produce was 1,100,000 futas of wet, and 250,000 of dry rice. Of these fields 34,000 are now employed for the cultivation of sugar and indigo, but they will be greatly more than replaced by the quantity of land drained for the growth of rice.

A correspondent has sent us a calculation, from which it would appear that the whole human race, if collected together in one spot, would not occupy a space much greater than the extent of that on which London stands. He supposes the population of the globe to be equal to 1,000,000,000 souls, and the average space occupied by each individual to be 1½ square feet, the whole of the human family collected together would cover a square of 17,063 feet, or of about 8½ miles.

Poland. The emperor of Russia has aimed another blow at Polish liberty. An ordinance has been issued by him, which declares that the autumnal recruitment in Poland and the Polish provinces shall be to the extent of two in five hundred, and in the empire one in five hundred. The peasantry of several villages of the Palatinate of Lublin have been induced, either by the promises or threats of the government, to renounce the Latin for the Greek church, and Russian priests have taken the places of the Roman Catholic clergy.

In Russia, the sovereign is not only the head of the empire politically, but the head of the church.

Fishing extraordinary. A youth of the name of Brown was fishing at a dam in Derbyshire, Wales, in August. On perceiving that he had got a "bite," he hastily pulled up his line, and to his astonishment a most beautiful kingfisher was safely attached to his hook.

Carbonic acid in the air. Dr. Dalton, an English physician, who has for years turned his attention to the amount of carbonic acid in the atmosphere says that he has satisfied himself that its average quantity is one part in 1,000. He is also of opinion that the quantity of this gas in the atmosphere is constantly the same in town and country, and that even in a crowded theatre it seldom rises to one per cent.

The French troops in Africa. The last accounts from Oran to Aug. 25th, represent the heat as excessive. This did not prevent the army from making a reconnaissance of about 10 leagues along the beautiful banks of the river Tielat, where they found means of mitigating the enervating effects of an extreme temperature by indulging in the luxurious fruits of the rich gardens that adorn that valley, whose shaded flowery bosques recall, it is said, the dreams of Persian poetry. The heat was so great that the natives were lying under the trees and brambles naked. The Sidi Ibrahim and the Ouled Chemes who belong to the great tribe of the Beni Amors, inhabit this favored spot. They can bring but 250 men in the field, and submitted to the French on being guaranteed a protection against Abdel-Kader, who has established his camp at Ein-el-Kibir, or the Great Fountain.

Count Wetterstedt, minister for foreign affairs in Sweden, and count Guddenstolpe, have been presented to the king of France. Their object is supposed to be to arrange with the Russian minister relative to the proposed incorporation of Norway with Sweden. The Norwegian mountaineers kick fiercely against the project of chaining their destinies to the car of the French king of Sweden, Bernadotte.

Three Spanish decrees of 30th August direct the sale of the bells and furniture of the convents, and a forced loan of 20 millions sterling to defray the expenses of the war. The disrobing of the convents must go hard against the ancient and inveterate prejudices of Spanish fanaticism.

DOMESTIC CHRONICLE.

Immense freight. The steamboat Huntville arrived at New Orleans on the 29th of September from Bayou Sarah, with 1,000 bales cotton, new crop.

A leap! A waiter named Brown, engaged at the refectory corner of Roosevelt and Chatham streets, New York, was discovered by the keeper, Mr. Edwards, purloining money from the drawer; for safe keeping he took him to his house and looked him up in a room in the third story. In the morning Mr. Edwards repaired to the police for an officer, after getting one he returned and unlocked the door to call forth his prisoner, but found to his mortification, that he had made his escape, by jumping from the third story window.

Real estate in Buffalo. Three years ago, a gentleman of that city sold a piece of ground for six dollars a foot, and made an hundred per cent. in the trade. Since then the purchaser has been offered one hundred and fifty dollars a foot for the same land, and refused it. It would bring that under the hammer even in the present hard times. A piece of land on the Terrace, sold two years ago for 1,200 dollars. It was lately resold for 12,000 dollars. A short time since a lot on the flat was sold at a considerable advance on the spring prices; the cash payment down being 10,000 dollars. During the past six weeks we have heard of a good number of sales, and uniformly at an advance.

New coins. The government of the United States intend to issue new coins as a substitute for the copper coins now in use. They will be composed of a mixture of copper and silver, and besides the cent, which will be of the size of the silver dime, half cents and pieces of the value of ten cents and a half will be struck of the same metallic composition.

The city councils of Boston have resolved to send seventy-four representatives to the legislature of the state, and we believe the city sends five or six to the senate.

The cholera has been very severe on some of the plantations in the vicinity of Charleston. According to a letter received in New York, Thomas Pinckney, esq. of Santee, lost forty-eight negroes. William Mazyek, esq. of the same place, lost eighteen. On the plantation of William F. Capers, esq. Daniel's island, thirty-one slaves died. Mrs. Lounder, Mrs. Rutledge and others, were also sufferers, and the disease was evidently spreading from place to place. It had, however, entirely subsided on the above named plantations, and at Daniel's island, there had not been a case for ten days. The letter adds that the bilious fever and measles have been almost as destructive as the cholera.

Snow fell in Montreal on Wednesday the 19th inst. Snow birds have made their appearance in Quebec and Montreal. The Indians say, "when the ponds fill up and the snow birds come, look out for winter."

Cultivation of figs. Mr. Eliphalet Averill, of Hartford, Conn. has discovered a method of preserving fig trees and bringing the fruit to perfection. When the figs are half or two-thirds grown, they cease growing and present every appearance of not coming to maturity, when to facilitate their growth a drop of olive oil is put upon their blossom ends, which in eight or ten days produces most extraordinary effect in ripening and making them delicious. By pursuing this method, two crops of nice figs it is said, can be raised in New England in good seasons; in Georgia three are obtained.

Anthracite coal. The first coal of this species known west of the Alleghany mountain, was, we are informed, discovered lately on the banks of the Big Muddy creek, in Jackson county, Illinois. If this report should prove true, and the vein extend across the Mississippi as has proved to be the case in relation to the bituminous coal, there can be no longer any obstacle to the manufacturing prosperity of Missouri, and in fact the whole west. With her mineral resources and the proper fuel for their manufacture, she must stand unrivalled. [St. Louis Bull.]

The Marines at Fort Mitchell, Alabama, have been ordered to Florida, and took up the line of march on the 4th inst.

Clover. In the yard of the Moyamensing prison a clover is growing of a kind not before seen in this country. The leaf is large, and in the centre of each leaf is a small heart of the shape of that on ordinary playing cards, of a deep red color, distinctly marked. It is supposed that the seed was conveyed in some Spanish wool which was picked at the prison. [Philadelphia Sens.]

The steam packet William Gibbons was wrecked on Monday last, when on her voyage from New York to Charleston, S. C. on the south point of Boddy's island, near the mouth of the New Inlet. There were about 140 passengers aboard, all of whom were saved, but the vessel it is supposed will be lost.

A grave above ground. On the bank of the Ohio river, between Mayaville and Wheeling, there is a cast iron coffin, supported by pillars, about two feet above the surface of the earth, with the following inscription:

"In memory of Andrew Ellison, who departed this life January 12, 1824."

The deceased was an eccentric but unfortunate man. He was one of the first settlers in the western country, and hewed down the woods with his own hand. He left about two hundred thousand dollars to his widow, on condition she buried him according to his direction; she is required to move the coffin to any place in which she may take up her abode. By marrying again she forfeits the whole estate.

Wild turkeys. On Thursday last a flock of about thirty or forty wild turkeys were seen flying over Georgetown, in the direction of the chain bridge, and on the Virginia side of the Potomac. A man who happened to be on the bridge at the time with his gun, was fortunate enough to shoot nine of the bery, which he afterwards sold for $1 25 each. It is an old saying that the early appearance of wild turkeys is a sign of a hard winter. We hope that this sign will fail of being accomplished. [Georgetown Metrop.]

Judicial longevity. The average age of the hon. Jeremiah Smith, Timothy Tanar, Paine Wingate and Arthur Livermore, formerly justices of the supreme court of Maine, is now over 83 years. Judge Wingate is in his 98th year, is the oldest graduate on the Cambridge catalogue, was a senator, and it is believed is the only survivor of the first congress under the constitution.

Sacrilege. Some villains taking advantage of the storm and noise on the night of the late election in Philadelphia, broke into St. Mary's church, Fourth street, in that city, and stole several of the sacred vessels. They cut to pieces some of the dresses, for the sake of the lace, and took a quantity of silver money which had been collected on Sunday. The owner was lost, though of solid silver; the sacrament was laid upon the altar, and the chalice carried off.

A general frost prevailed throughout South Carolina and Georgia on the 6th inst. At Augusta, ice formed, and some damage to the cotton crop was anticipated. At Savannah, ice as thick as a quarter of a dollar, formed in a small tub. Potatoe vines, pepper plants and young cotton pods were more or less affected.

Deep snow. In speaking of the late severe snow storm, the Albany papers inform us that in some places in the county of Tompkins it fell to the depth of two and a half feet; it was so deep between Schenectady and Utica that an extra steam engine was necessary to propel the cars.

NILES' WEEKLY REGISTER.

FIFTH SERIES. No. 9.—VOL. I.]

BALTIMORE, OCTOBER 29, 1836.

[VOL. LI.—WHOLE No 1,809.

THE PAST—THE PRESENT—FOR THE FUTURE.

EDITED, PRINTED AND PUBLISHED, BY WILLIAM OGDEN NILES, AT $5 PER ANNUM, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

[3]—The "Index" to the last volume of the "REGISTER," the preparation of which has been unavoidably delayed, will soon be published and duly forwarded to subscribers.

[3]—It may be well to state that the reply to Mr. Dallas' letter, recently published in this work, is attributed to the pen of Judge Abel P. Upshur, of Virginia.

MEXICO. Nothing of importance has transpired since our notice of the withdrawal of Mr. Gorostiza. The National Gazette, in reference to that act, says: "The Mexican minister, before the return of the president from Tennessee, considered his mission as terminated, in consequence of the persistence of the government in the order under which general Gaines entered the Mexican territory. His departure, however, was postponed, at the request of the secretary, until the return of the president, when the negotiations were renewed without success. Senior Gorostiza, being unable to obtain the recall of general Gaines, merely awaits his passports to return home."

NEW JERSEY. The legislature of this state assembled at Trenton on the 25th instant. In the council each party had seven members; but owing to the absence of one of the whigs, Dr. Jephth B. Munn, of Morris county, (V. B.) was chosen vice president.

Thomas G. Haight, of Monmouth, was chosen speaker of the house, and Joseph C. Potts, editor of the Trenton Emporium, was appointed clerk. The Van Buren majority in the assembly is 12, and the same on joint ballot.

A bill was immediately introduced, passed through all its stages, and ordered to be engrossed, fixing the time of choosing electors of president and vice president on the third Tuesday and Wednesday of November next, instead of the time now fixed by law in that state, which is thirty-six days before the meeting of the electoral college.

TREASURY ORDER. One of the receivers of the public moneys in Michigan, recently made a deposit of the funds received by him since the issuing of the late treasury order. The amount was about $180,000 half of which was in specie; and as the deposit bank was about 150 miles distant, it occupied a team of seven yoke of cattle eleven days in conveying the money to its place of destination, during which time it was guarded by three men the whole being a cost of at least five hundred dollars to the people!

Thus it is that the treasury order operates. First, the whole business of the country is deranged from Maine to Georgia, by the draining the specie from the banks, and after it is deposited in the hands of the receivers, the public money is wasted by hundreds of dollars in conveying it to a place of safety. [Buffalo (New York) Journal.

RAIL ROAD ACCIDENT. On Thursday last the train of cars which left Baltimore for Frederick, was upset about two miles this side of the Monocacy river, in consequence of an unperceived defect in the road—one of the rails being loose and out of place the end of it struck the tender, and threw the whole train off the track, thus causing the overturn. Several of the passengers and the conductor were severely injured, but none dangerously.

FROM FLORIDA. The last accounts from Florida state, that general Call had arrived at the Wythlacoochee, and was prevented from crossing, the Indian forces being too strong to risk a general battle. A few shots were exchanged, and governor Call's guide, Indian Billy, was killed. Gen. C. captured three Indian women and six children. He had fallen back upon Fort Drane to obtain provisions.

We understand that a volunteer force of about 20 men had proceeded from Black Creek with the purpose of intercepting a much smaller party of Indians, with a drove of hogs, but were repulsed, and had returned to Black Creek without effecting their object.

A letter from St. Marks, dated September 30th, published in the Army and Navy Chronicle, states that there was much sickness at Suwanee Old Town. A steamboat having on board 120 sick, of the Tennessee volunteers, was in the harbor of St.

VOL. LI.—SRO. 9.

Marks, bound to Pensacola. The sickly season would soon be over.

GEN. GAINES. The Army Chronicle says—We understand that gen. Gaines has been recalled from the immediate and personal command of the troops on our south western or Texian frontier; and that those delicate and important duties have been entrusted to brevet brigadier general Arbuckle. This is preparatory, we presume, to the investigation before the court of inquiry to be holden at Frederick, in which gen. G. is interested.

Generals Gaines and Scott still continue in command of their respective departments.

IMPORTANT TO PENSIONERS. The following circular from the treasury department is published for the information of all pensioners:

CIRCULAR.

Treasury department,

2d comptroller's office, Sept. 29, 1836.

The agent for paying pensions at

Sir: In order to guard more effectually against a repetition of frauds, as heretofore practised by the production of forged papers, the first three following additional rules will be observed by the accounting officers of the treasury:

1. In every case where the pensioner employs an attorney to receive his pension, the execution of the power must be in the presence of at least one witness, other than the magistrate before whom it is acknowledged. No payment to an attorney will be allowed unless supported by a voucher thus executed.

2. In all cases where the signature of the pensioner or his attorney is required, such pensioner or attorney will write his name at length, if capable of so doing, otherwise, his signature may be by mark or cross, in which case the execution must be in the presence of at least one competent witness, other than the justice or notary who acts officially in the case.

3. No payments will in future be made to any pensioner, either in person or by attorney, who has not applied for his pension for more than one year, without the production of evidence of his identity, as prescribed in the instructions from this office of June 10, 1833, chapter 1, section 2, and form B, nor until such evidence has been transmitted to the commissioner of pensions, and a special direction authorising the payment has been given.

4. In cases where a certificate has been issued by the commissioner of pensions, to the widow or children of an officer or soldier under the act of June 7, 1832, or under the act of May 16, 1838, no proof of the relationship of the applicant to the deceased officer or soldier is to be required by the pension agent, that proof having been necessarily filed in the office of the commissioner of pensions prior to the issuing of such certificate. Respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

ALBION K. PARRIS, comptroller.

THE OLDEST PENSIONER. Eighty years ago, the strong hold of the north, Fort William Henry, submitted to the fortune of war, and surrendered to the French under the gallant Montcalm. With Munroe at the siege was David Thompson, who lately died at Easton, N. H. aged about 100 years. He is believed to have been the last survivor of the two thousand soldiers, commanded by the brave old col. Munroe, who so heroically withstood the repeated attacks of eleven thousand regulars and two thousand Indians, under the command of Montcalm, and also the government pensioner of the longest standing on the roll. The erect bearing of a soldier, which he acquired in his youthful days, and of an honest man, which he had been from earliest manhood, he maintained till the hour of his death.

There is a curious story told of his grandmother, Mary Houghton. At the sinking of Port Royal in Jamaica by an earthquake, she clung to the sill of her house, floated away on it, and was taken off by a vessel safe, when all but three of the inhabitants of that ill-fated town perished in the ruins. Several years had elapsed after the disaster, when there came to the tavern in Dorchester, where she served as a waiting-woman, a traveller, whom she instantly recognized as her husband. He was at sea when their house was sunk and had had no tidings of her. She died in 1708, aged 105.

[Lowell Courier.

THE PRESS. The following extract from a recent publication by the venerable American lexicographer deserves the attention of the public, and especially of the conductors of the newspaper press:

"The press, when judiciously managed, is one of the greatest blessings of a civilized people; when abused, it is the most powerful instrument of mischief. Probably no civil privilege in this country is so much perverted and abused. In no country is reputation held so cheap. Slander, like the scythe of death, levels all worth and distinction; the press, one of the noblest instruments of improvement, is converted into an instrument of deception, and the means of making citizens hate and oppress each other. The moral effect of this abuse is lamentable; for it seems to have become a ruling belief of partisans that a man has a right to defame those who differ from him in opinion.

"If such is to be permanently the effect of popular elections we shall pay dear for the privilege in the loss of morals. At present, no reputation is safe, especially that of a man in public life, or one who appears before the public for the most laudable purpose. The scrambling for office keeps the public mind in continual agitation; generating evil passions and enmities among citizens, who, even when they are wrong in their opinions, are entitled to the enjoyments of their reputation and their social rights.—What a noble improvement in our public prints shall we witness, when facts shall be carefully collected, judiciously selected and fairly published, without conjectural inference; and when principles shall be discussed with ability and candor, without assailing character and motives.

NOAH WEBSTER."

SPAIN continues in a most distracted condition—intestine feuds and party prejudices have reached to a fearful crisis and give but little promise of a speedy or easy restoration of tranquillity. The following gives Don Carlos' views of Spain. A proclamation has been addressed to the Spanish nation by Don Carlos, dated Aspetia, 2d Sept. In it, after deploring the misfortunes that had fallen on the country, and taking notice of the events at La Granja and Madrid, Don Carlos declares that the world does justice to the sacredness of the cause of his subjects. He asserts that the quarrel is now not one of the successions to the throne, but of European order against anarchy, and points out the divisions of the revolutionists among themselves. He observes that heaven will not leave the country a prey to its misfortunes, and calls upon every body to compare the two armies, although that of the revolutionists has been aided by foreign troops. He also compares the state of the provinces in the north to that of other parts of the kingdom; and declares his wish to be the seating of himself on the throne of his ancestors, that he may reign by the fundamental laws and privileges of the nation, and that by his parental and economical government, he may repair the ills of the last half century. The proclamation ends by an appeal to all Spaniards of probity to abandon the cause of the usurper, and to associate themselves on his side.

LORD NELSON. A late English writer, an eye witness to the scene, gives the following description of the amputation of this hero's arm, and his subsequent death, after the glorious affair of Trafalgar. It makes one's blood run quicker to read it:

"No sooner had Nelson been examined by the surgeon than immediate amputation was recommended. I undressed him myself, and laid him down on the cabin table, making him as comfortable as possible; but the wound was one which must have been dreadfully painful, for the bone was shattered to pieces; and I never remember to have seen such a fracture before. 'I'm ready,' said Nelson; 'so, doctor, despatch. You know your business too well for me to fear, or you to cause useless pain.'—I thought I should have dropped when I saw the first cut. Nelson's face never moved. His lips, it is true, were closely pressed together; but that, I have been told, is a strong sign of determination.—His cheeks were pale from the loss of blood, and he appeared faint from the exertion of rescuing some of the men whom he saved from the Fox. Oh! how I felt when I saw the long knife, bright as the battle-lamp, dazzling all around. Nelson looked at it, and in a moment it was down to the bone, right round and round the arm. He did not flinch from this; but just before, when the surgeon drew the skin back, he looked up. Then came the saw; and I'm blessed if the carpenter, sawing off the beel of a studding-sail-boom, could have set to work with more coolness than the doctor. Off fell the limb—Nelson's good right arm—one that, in the attack, not a month previous, with the Spanish gun-boats, had defended its owner, and saved his life, as well, perhaps, as John Sykes' skull. No sooner was the limb dressed, the knives removed, the assistant surgeon despatched to look for others, than up gets the admiral, and—"Brace," says he, "get some paper, and write down the despatch as I tell you." And it's as true as the gospel, he told every word, and held the paper and read it himself, to see that it was all correct, although it was 11 o'clock at night before it was finished."

MORTALITY OF NEW YORK. The following is a statement of the deaths in this city during nine corresponding months in the years 1835 and 1836.

	1835.	1836.
January	694	577
February	635	542
March	627	582
April	510	609
May	527	544
June	389	579
July	576	697
August	679	894
September	678	807
	5,315	5,841
		5,315
Surplus in 1836		526

TEXIAN NAVY, &c. We publish the following list of vessels whose registers and papers emanate from the Texian government:

Vessels of war.
Texian schr. of war Independence, com. Hawkins.
" " Invincible, capt. Brown.
" " Brutus, capt. Hurd.
" " Liberty, Wheelwright.
" " Thomas Toby, Suares.
" " Terrible, (privateer.)
" armed steamboat Ocean, capt. Grayson.
" " schooner Passaid, (transport.)
Merchantmen.
" brig Col. Crockett, Chase.
" schooner Col. Fannin, Thompson.
" " San Jacinto, Henry.
" steamboat Yellow Stone, Grayson.
" " Laura, ———.
" " Cayuga, ———.
" sloop Col. Knight, Charles.
" " Fourth of July, Scott.

List of American vessels engaged in the trade between New Orleans and ports in Texas:

American brig	Good Hope, capt. ———.
" schr.	Flash, capt. Falvel.
" " "	Flora, capt. Appleman.
" " "	Julius Caesar, Lightburn.
" " "	Kosciusko, Burns.
" " "	Pennsylvania, Delarue.
" " "	William & Francis, Watts.
" " "	Gen. De Kalb, Matthews.
" " "	Urchin, Bridges.
" " "	Shenandoah, Moore.

The above is taken from the most correct sources, and shows the number of vessels more or less connected in the trade between our city and the ports of Texas.

At this time many of these merchant vessels go without convoy, that being hitherto rather accorded to vessels having Mexican goods aboard, and bound to some of the ports in Mexico.

These schooners are in danger of being taken by Mexican brigs of war now cruising off the harbors of Texas, and which, in the absence of many of the Texian armed schooners, and of any convoy by a United States vessel of war, will probably commit depredations on our commerce. [N. O. Bull.]

"VINDICATE HIBERNICÆ." The venerable Matthew Carey, the Irish and American patriot, proposes to republish the standard history of Ireland, named above. This work should be in the hand of every man, who desires to know the truth respecting that injured and oppressed country. In this prospectus, Mr. Carey has the following passage:

"When it is considered that there are at least from 6 to 700,000 Irish and descendants of Irish in this country, of whom probably half are Roman Catholics; that this work was written (with what success let the judgment of the archbishop of Dublin, of Mr. McNevin and other enlightened individuals decide) with a view to vindicate the character of their country; that at the advanced age of 76

I subject myself to the very painful labor of revising a book with above 1,100 quotations, some of them from ponderous folios and quartos of four and five volumes: that (let it not be forgotten) I not only do not seek to make a considerable sacrifice on it, as I have made on the two former editions—when all these circumstances are, I say, duly considered, it is astonishing that so much apathy and indifference are displayed by so many whose bosoms ought to glow with the pure love of country. It is painful to state, but truth calls for the statement, that there have not been more than half a dozen Irishmen in the United States, who have, either now or heretofore, taken any serious interest in the subject, or made any effort to promote the success of the work."

INDIAN TREATY. The following letter from gen. Hughes on this subject contains the most gratifying intelligence, and we hasten to lay it before our readers without any comment, as it speaks for itself.

[Boonslick Dem.]

Fort Leavenworth, September 17th, 1836.

Peter H. Burnet, editor of the Far West:

Sir: It is with inexpressible pleasure after a struggle for many years, I now have it in my power to announce to you and to my fellow citizens of the "Far West," that on this day a treaty has been satisfactorily concluded with the Ioway, Sac and Fox tribes of Indians, by which they have ceded and relinquished to the United States, all their claims to the strip of land lying west of the state of Missouri, and north of the Missouri river. Nothing is now wanting but the confirmation of the treaty, by the senate of the United States, and the assent of the state of Missouri, to enable our citizens to enter and live in peace and quietness, in this desirable country.

I shall be off in a few days, with a deputation of Indians, who desire to meet governor Dodge in the Wisconsin territory, to hold a council with him, on the subject of the cession of their lands lying north of the Missouri, giving room for a large state on the north of your state. If the efforts now making should be crowned with success, the Indians owning the country, will emigrate to the south side of the Missouri river and our citizens enjoy their homes in peace in a country, which for salubrity of climate, health, mineral, commercial and agricultural advantages, will not be surpassed by any section of North America. With high respect and esteem your ob't serv't, AND'W S. HUGHES.

EXTINGUISHMENT OF FIRE IN ST. PETERSBURGH. The following article, in relation to the extinguishment of fires, is from a new publication, by M. Von Tietz, Prussian counsellor of legation, to St. Petersburg, Constantinople and Napoli di Romania.

"In every district in the city (St. Petersburg) there are several police stations, wherein fire engines are placed, with high towers, upon the galleries of which there are two watchmen. So soon as these observe a fire break out, by ringing a bell, apprise the firemen beneath, who immediately hasten to the spot. In whatsoever portion of the city the fire happens to be, it is indicated upon the towers alluded to. For every district a peculiar set of figures is exhibited as a kind of telegraph; at night this is done by lanterns. Every body of firemen has its distinct time appointed even to a minute, by which to reach the place of fire. The whole are organized and equipped like a regiment; and have no other occupation besides this. They are exercised every week, sometimes a wooden building of light construction, at some distance from the city, is set on fire, in order to instruct the men in the practical service. The mounting of the machines is excellent, and the entire arrangements for extinguishing fire appropriate, and indeed elegant. Of these, the most useful are the fire ladders, which can be drawn up with great ease, to the highest story of a house. Equally serviceable are the large nets, held extended to receive those persons who can only be saved by springing down into them; this manœuvre is constantly practised by the firemen in order to gain dexterity; and hitherto, on adopting it, they have always been fortunate enough to save the individuals without incurring any accident. In the severe frosts of winter, in order to prevent the water from freezing, certain preparations are made under the navigable reservoir, for receiving hot coals. It is interesting to observe at fires the strict regularity with which the subordinates obey the orders of their officers, and the death-defying intrepidity wherewith these grave, powerfully formed men dash into the devouring element, fearlessly scrambling along the narrow paths on the tops of the flaming houses. The emperor always remembers, after each event of this kind, to reward them by some liberal donation."

TRADE WITH THE SANDWICH ISLAND. We copy the following from a correspondent of the Boston Mercantile Journal, who has resided at Honolulu, and who has had abundant means to obtain information. It is an accurate exhibit for 1834; since that year trading foreigners have multiplied and business increased.

Imports into the port of Honolulu, island of Oahu, for the year 1834.

From the United States of America,	$82,000
" Valparaiso and Lima,	36,000
" Coast of California,	62,000
" China,	42,000
" Society and other South Sea island,	4,000
" America and England, per whale ships,	20,000
" New Zealand and New South Wales,	16,000
" Columbia river and Russian settlements,	10,000
	$272,000

The articles imported from the United States, Chili and Peru, consists of American domestic cotton cloths, prints of calicoes, hardware, sheathing copper, cordage, canvass, naval stores, paints, iron, ship bread, nails, glass, salt provisions, rum, brandy, gin, wine and furniture.

From California—otter skins, bullock hides and horses. From China—silk and cotton goods, nan-kins, teas, sugar, &c. From Society and other islands in the southern hemisphere—pearl shells, turtle shells, sugar, cocoa nut oil, &c.

The articles landed from whale ships are generally the same as those imported in American merchant ships. From New Zealand, New South Wales and Columbia river, we receive boards, plank, spars and fish.

In the foregoing estimate no account is made of the large quantity of goods brought to this port, destined for other markets and of course taken away again without landing or exchanging hands.

Exports from the port of Honolulu, island of Oahu, for the year 1834.

Sandal wood, 7,000 piculs (large and small),	$40,000
Sea otter skins and other furs,	55,000
Bullocks' hides,	20,000
Spermaceti, black, rakui and cocoa nut oils,	20,000
Turtle shell $1,000, pearl shells $3,000	4,000
Salt 3,000, goat skins $3,000,	6,000
Provisions, vegetables and other supplies to the American and English whale ships, which they barter for in exchange for goods or draw bills of exchange upon England and America,	70,000
Merchandise imported and again exported, principally to California and other Russian settlements in N. W. America,	50,000
	$265,000

List of vessels owned by foreigners residing at Honolulu, and engaged in the trade to California, Russian settlements, China, &c. &c. 1834.

	Tons.	Value.
Ship Rasselas ,	307	$12,000
Barque Don Quixotte ,	257	10,000
Brig Lady Wrangell ,	140	10,000
" Avon ,	180	10,000
" Diana ,	190	8,000
" Convoy ,	135	6,000
" Torment ,	200	10,000
Schr. Loriot ,	100	8,500
" Unity ,	65	4,000
" 4th July ,	60	4,000
" Harriet ,	60	3,500
" Victoria ,	50	2,500
" Thetis ,	35	2,500
" Flibberty Jibbet ,	37	2,500
		$88,500

Arrivals year 1834:

American whale ships,	99	89,000? barrels oil.
English do. do.	17	14,400 " "
Merchant ships,	9
Merchant brigs,	27

152 vessels—total number of tons, 46,416, besides an English sloop of war.

The value of houses, wharves and other landed property owned at Honolulu by Americans and English, cannot be estimated less than 100,000.

The whole amount of property at the port of Honolulu actually owned or on deposit and belonging to foreigners, is not less at any time than half a million of dollars, of which 400,000 dollars is the property of Americans, and 100,000 dollars English.

INCLINED PLANES. The new locomotive steam engine, "Washington County Farmer," built for the commonwealth of Pennsylvania, by Mr. Norris, was placed on the Columbia rail road on Tuesday afternoon.

The power of the engine was then tested in ascending the inclined plane, which was performed to the complete satisfaction of numerous scientific gentlemen invited expressly for the occasion.

The plane is 2,800 feet long, ascent in that distance 196 feet, equal to 389 feet to the mile or 1 foot rise in 143 10. Weight of engine 18,170 lbs. with water included. Load drawn up 30,116 lbs. including tender with fuel and water, two large passenger cars and 39 passengers. Time of running, 3 min. 15 sec.—pressure in the boiler under 70 lbs.

In descending the plane, the engineer repeatedly came to a dead stand from a great speed, and for some minutes played up and down the grade, thus proving most satisfactorily the immense power of the engine and the perfect safety in its performance. The engine is a master-piece of machinery and of beautiful exterior.

The result here obtained has never been equalled by the best engines in this country or Europe, excepting only similar performances of the "George Washington," an engine by the same maker.

The advantages of this great improvement in locomotive engines, is self-evident—rail roads can be constructed at much less cost than heretofore, now, that engines can be procured (of the usual weight) to perform on grades of 70 or even 100 feet rise in the mile. [Phil. Inq.]

EXPERIMENTS AT SEA. We are indebted to a friend, who has just arrived from Europe, for the following:

Experiments made on board the Charlemagne.—20th of September, 1836, the weather being calm, I corked an empty wine bottle, and tied a piece of linen over the cork; I then sank it into the sea six hundred feet: when drawn immediately up again the cork was inside, the linen remained as it was placed, and the bottle was filled with water.

I next made a noose of strong twine around the bottom of a cork, which I forced into the neck of the bottle, lashed the twine securely to the neck of the bottle, and sank the bottle six hundred feet. Upon drawing it up immediately, the cork was found inside, having forced its way by the twine, and in so doing had broken itself in two pieces; the bottle was filled with water.

I then made a stopper of white pine, long enough to reach to the bottom of the bottle; after forcing this stopper into the bottle, I cut it off about half an inch above the top of the bottle, and drove two wedges of the same wood into the stopper. I sank it six hundred feet, and upon drawing it up immediately the stopper remained as I placed it, and there was about a gill of water in the bottle, which remained unbroken. The water must have forced its way through the pores of the wooden stopper, although wedged as aforesaid, and had the bottle remained sunk long enough, there is no doubt but it would have been filled with water.

BEAR BAITING ON REFORMED PRINCIPLES.—William Green, Freemasons' row, appeared at the police office to answer a summons procured against him by inspector McCulloch. The latter stated that on Monday the 29th ultimo, he went to the house of the defendant, where he found between fifty and sixty men, and about thirty dogs, with which the former were baiting a bear. "Well," said Mr. Hall, "what have you to say for yourself this time?" "Pooh!" replied the defendant, "why it's all nonsense; the dogs can do the bear no harm, because it's clothed all over in the skin of another bear; nor the bear can't hurt the dogs—not a bit!" Mr. Hall—"No, I believe the bear cannot hurt the dogs, but I think the dogs hurt the bear." Defendant—"Pooh, not a bit, I tell you; and whereas he says I had fifty or sixty men, and thirty dogs—I tell you, as I charges sixpence a piece for men, and threepence for dogs, and I only fobbed eight and sixpence that day, so how can that be—hey?" Mr. Hall. "There is a law against it, and—" complainant, (interrupting)—"We baits 'em on reformed principles. It do not hurt 'em, 'cause we only baits the skin, and not the bear. You might as well bait a bundle of rags. In London they used to bait 'em stark naked, but we 'dopts a reformed system; we sews 'em up in a skin, and lets the dogs tear away; they can't hurt 'em; it's impossible; it's only to try the fact if the dogs has corridge and pluck enough to run at the bear, and there's nothing contrary to the hact of parliament in that, I think." Mr. Hall—"I have attempted to tell you that the practice is unlawful, but I perceive you are inclined to be boisterous as when you were last summoned here: now—" Defendant, (interrupting)—"I've got the bears, and I must keep 'em. I can't sell 'em. How am I to get a bit of bread for myself and the poor dumb animals? Pooh! it does not hurt 'em a bit." Mr.

Hall—"If you would suffer yourself to be sewed up in a bear's skin and allow twenty or thirty ferocious dogs to be turned loose upon you, then—Defendant (again interrupting.)—"Well, I will! I agree to it! You may sew me up this minute, and set all the dogs in Liverpool at me; I'm ready now. Pooh! on the new system it doesn't hurt a bit." Mr. Hall. I tell you sir, it's very cruel, and—" Defendant, (in derision.)—"Cruel! Pooh! What's fox hunting? Cruel! You start out a poor fox, or maybe a hare, that hasn't strength to defend himself, and you turn out forty or fifty big dogs after him, twice as big as he is, and you gallop away after him till he is exhausted; then the dog catches him and tears him all to pieces. Cruel! which is the cruellest? But that's a gentleman's sport, and gentlemen can do as they like." Mr. Hall said, as the law was, so he must administer it. The defendant was fined forty shillings and costs. [Liverpool Mercury.]

SANDWICH ISLANDERS. The last American Quarterly Review remarks upon the difficulty which the Sandwich Islanders experience in pronouncing our harsh consonants and their combinations. Accordingly, they soften all English names in accordance with this principle. Thus New Bedford becomes Nu Bedefoda; Boston is made a word of four syllables, Bosetona; Nantucket is Nonetuketa; Philadelphia becomes Piladelpia; and Britain, Beritania. The letter s is one of the stumbling blocks; they cannot pronounce it, but always change it into k or l. Hence, Mr. Ellis, the missionary, was called Elliki. [Post.]

DUTCH NAMES OF PLACES. Bergen signifies to save, secure or hide.

Bloemen-dal, anglice, the valley of flowers; corrupted to Bloomingdale.

Boter-bergh, anglice, butter hill, from its resembling in form a roll of butter.

Brooklyn. This word, it is alleged, is a corruption of the Dutch word Breuckelen, or Brokkelen. The former word may signify a gap or opening in a coast.

"The utmost sandy breach they shortly reach." The meaning of "Brokkelen" is to "make breaches or gaps in," or a place where such breaches are made. As to the applicability of this name to the locality in question, I cannot decide.

Coney island. This name is generally supposed to be a corruption of Cony's island; so called in honor of its original proprietor. Sed quere. May not Coney island have been so called in consequence of its abounding in *coney*s, or rabbits?

Haverstrow—Oatstraw. This place is now called Haverstraw.

Hoboken is the name of one of the ancient families of Antwerp, the original proprietor of the soil.

Moordenaar's Kill—Murderer's Creek, (in Rensselaer county), so called because it was the scene of some dreadful murders during the French war.

Paltz—anglice, palatinate.

Paulus Hook, named after Paulus or Paul Schrick, the original owner of the soil.

Poesten-kill. The Dutch word "poesten" means to huff, swell, or storm.

Red-hook, from the Dutch word "roodehoek," literally red point, or corner.

Sandy Hook, from the Dutch zandti hoek, literally translated "sandy corner."

Slypsteen-eyland—anglice, grindstone island.

Styt-den-duyvel Kill, literally translated, means "in spite of the devil creek." See Geoffrey Crayon.

Staten island, from the Dutch Staaten-eyland, i. e. States island, meaning the states general of Holland. Statburgh is referable to the same origin.

[Schenectady Reflector.]

THE ORPHAN OF THE TEMPLE. Under this head, the London Morning Post publishes an article relative to the claims of an individual professing to be the son of Louis XVI, but known under the title of the duke of Normandy. It purports to be a letter from M. Gruan, the former procureur of the king, and at present the friend and advocate of the individual in question. It states "that, in 1809, the son of Louis XVI. arrived for the first time in Prussia, where his presence was known only to the duc de Schill. In 1811, the emperor of Austria, the king of Prussia, and the emperor of Russia, were informed that the prince was in Germany.—In fact, the prince was obliged to confide the secret of his birth to M. Lecocque, and the minister, prince of Hartenberg, ordered to be sent to him the documents proving that he who submitted them was really the son of Louis XVI. and Maria Antoinette; in consequence of this communication, and by order of the minister, the duke obtained the rights of citizenship, on condition of assuming the name of Naundorff, which was given him as a protection against the power of Napoleon. As his family have refused to acknowledge him, and he has been banished from France, the prince has addressed himself to the emperor of Austria and other powers, for permission to be confronted with his sister, the dutchess d'Angouloene, and to have his pretensions fairly examined. His last petition was addressed to the king of England, and bears date the 26th August, 1836. Lord Palmerston, to whom it was communicated, returned it with an expression of regret that it was not in his power to lay it before the king."

The letter, which forms a part of the article in the Times, concludes in the following language: "I wish," sire, "to have the question settled of my veracity or falsehood. Deign, therefore, to grant me an audience, which will settle your own conviction. It is an office worthy of the king of Great Britain to bring my sister and myself together, and grant us the opportunity of a conference. This proceeding will silence the tongue of calumny, and make her what she would never have ceased to be, but for the traitors who surround her."

"Should you accede to my request, sire, the noble daughter of king Louis XVI. and Maria Antoinette will hasten, I doubt not, to accept your majesty's mediation, and you will restore to the orphan of the temple her whom he has never ceased lamenting during his life, and who deserves by her long and cruel sufferings to find a brother and a friend."

To what degree of credit the claims of this individual are entitled, we have no means of determining. If he be the "true prince," his case is certainly a hard one, compelled as he is to see a distant branch of the Bourbon family placed in that throne to which he possesses an hereditary claim. But such are the tricks which fortune so often plays both with kings and subjects.

[Philadelphia Commercial Herald, Oct. 19.]

GAME BY THE WHOLESALE. The Portland Argus states that at a recent shooting match, in Fryeburg, (Mud city), captain Henry Batchelder and five others brought in 1,735 squirrels of all kinds, black, gray, red, flying and striped; and about 150 woodpeckers, blue jays, hawks and owls. Another party, consisting of captain Charles and four others, brought in 1,265 squirrels of the above description, over 100 woodpeckers and many other birds—the whole amounting to nearly 3,850. Bears are also very numerous in that section of the country: six or seven have been killed in that neighborhood. Near the White Mountains a boy five years of age was taken by one and carried off. At the same place, an infant child was taken from its mother's arms by one of these monsters, who escaped to the woods with it, where it was soon followed by men and dogs and made to pay the forfeit of its life. No trace of the child was found, save a few pieces of its clothes.

The same paper says, there is now living in Fryeburg, in this state, a lady, whose weight is estimated at 700 lbs. She walks about the house with apparent ease, is healthy and cheerful. Her countenance is as fresh as a buxom lass of 16, though her age is about 45.

LONG ISLAND FARMS. Alderman Ingraham stated in the course of debate in the board of aldermen, of New York, that upwards of two hundred thousand dollars had been offered for the Long Island farms—these grounds cost the city, a few years since, only about six thousand dollars.

FOREIGN NEWS.

PORTUGAL.

The Diario de Gobierno, published at Lisbon on the 10th September, contains a proclamation issued by the queen relative to a new revolution, her acceptance of the resignation of all the late ministers in consequence, and the appointment of others. The members of the present cabinet are—Conde de Lumiares, minister of war and president of the council.

Manoel de Silva Passos minister of the interior. Manoel Antoni Lopez Vicira de Castro, minister of ecclesiastical affairs.

Visconde de Sa de Banderia, minister of finances and ad interim minister of foreign affairs.

Antonio Cesar de Vasconcellos Correa, minister of the navy.

The following proclamation was issued by the queen on the 10th of September:

Department of the interior. In accordance with representations, that have recently been made to me by a great number of citizens, and induced by other demonstrations of the national will in favor of the restoration of the political constitution of the kingdom, of the 23d September, 1822, with such modifications as circumstances require, I freely declare, that the said constitution is in full force, and direct that the general cortes of the Portuguese nation shall be immediately convened; the members of which, besides the ordinary powers they possess, shall be invested with power to make those modifications in the constitution they may think proper.

The minister and secretary of state of the department of the interior, ad interim, will carry this decree into execution, and take prompt measures to receive my oath to the constitution, and for the meeting of the cortes.

Given in the palace de Necessidades on the 10th September, 1836. THE QUEEN.

The Malaga papers furnish some information touching the causes of this revolution. We avail ourselves of the translations given by the Courier & Enquirer:

It appears that for some time previous a general dissatisfaction was evinced by the people of Lisbon, against the minister Freire, and that on the arrival there on the 9th of September of some opposition deputies from the provinces of the Douro and Upper Beira, this dissatisfaction was manifested by the demonstrations of joy with which these deputies were received; the Tagus was covered with boats filled with people, and on their landing they were accompanied by an immense crowd to their lodgings. The government had taken measures to prevent any events of serious consequence following, but they appear to have been fruitless.

At night the battalions of the national guards who were under arms, joined the troops of the line, and proclaimed the constitution of 1822. A deputation was sent by them to the queen, requiring her to proclaim the constitution of 1822, and dismiss her ministers. This was immediately conceded, and the count de Lumiares and Viscount Sa de Bandeira, were directed to form a new ministry. No excesses, it is said, were committed, except the breaking the windows of the palace of the duke de Palmella.

The ex-ministers, Freire and Carbalho, had disappeared, and it was supposed they were secreted in the queen's palace, whose husband, Don Fernando, was believed to be inimical to the change. An apprehension was entertained that the queen would attempt to escape on board of one of the vessels of the English squadron in the Tagus, which had been considerably reinforced and consisted of three ships of the line and many smaller vessels.

On the morning of the 10th, a considerable activity was observed in the British squadron; the boats were lowered and filled with marines, three of them had guns on board, and they approached in line near to the Belem quay. The national guards immediately ran to arms, and were joined by the troops of the line that were encamped at Origue. At one o'clock they proceeded with their chiefs to the palace of Las Necessidades. A deputation of officers repaired to the queen to demand an expression of her adhesion to the constitution. The whole corps diplomatique were with her with the exception of the Spanish minister. Her majesty, after conferring with the British ambassador, signed the decree we published above, and subsequently the troops marched off after passing before her, stationed at the balcony.

Those who directed this movement not being entirely satisfied, the count de Lumiares prevailed on the queen and her husband to swear to the constitution in the municipal hall, whither she proceeded in a carriage with him, and there they both took the oath required.

It was said that all the foreign ministers except the Spanish, have protested against the act of the queen, which they assert she was compelled to perform by violence. The English steamboat was detained till the 11th, when she left Lisbon, taking with her the protests of the diplomatic corps, and other interesting despatches.

The following proclamation was issued by the governor of the palace.

The chief of the staff in a private letter to me, dated from Carolina on the 22d of this month, gives me the pleasing intelligence that the rebels under Gomez, united with those under Serrador, Quilez, Esperanza and others, making in all 14,000 men, have been completely defeated at Villarrobledo, on the right bank of the river Manzanares, by general Espartero's division under the command of brigadier Alaix, 3,000 prisoners, all the baggage, a large number of killed, and the complete dispersion of the rebels are the trophies of brilliant victory, which is a happy accompaniment to that obtained in Navarre, by our brave general Oraa.

JUAN ANTONIO ESCALANTE.

SPAIN.

Captain Townsend, of the brig Empress, at New York, in 28 days from Malaga, informs the editors of the Daily Advertiser that despatches from Madrid had arrived at Malaga on the 26th September, announcing that general Alaix (of the queen's party) on the 21st of September had had an engagement with general Gomez, of the Carlist army. Gen. Alaix had taken 3,000 prisoners with all the booty that gen. Gomez had before taken from the queen's army, and had completely dispersed the whole Carlist army, which consisted of 14,000 men. A great number of the Carlist troops were killed. This news was confirmed by an extra express from Madrid, which arrived a few hours before the Empress sailed. There were great rejoicings in Malaga on the reception of this news.

ELECTIONS.

GEORGIA.

We have received full returns of the congressional election in this state, and subjoin the aggregate votes given to each candidate—from which it will be seen that the union ticket is elected, with the exception of gen. Coffee, who died previous to the termination of the election, and his name was consequently dropped. Mr. Dawson, being the highest on the state rights ticket, is therefore elected. The legislature stands, union men, 155, state rights, 111.

Recapitulation of the ninety counties in the state.

Union ticket.		State rights ticket.
Cleveland,	29,577	Alford,	28,754
Coffee,	28,521	Black,	28,318
Glascok,	48,139	Colquett,	28,607
Grantland,	29,330	Dawson,	28,944
Haynes,	29,475	Habersham,	28,523
Holsey,	29,175	Jackson,	28,408
Jackson,	29,403	King,	28,401
Owens,	29,321	Nesbit,	28,337
Towns,	29,539

General Glascock was on both tickets.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

The following members of congress have been elected—Mr. Pickens in the 3d and Mr. Thompson in the 2d district, were elected without opposition. The 4th, 7th, 8th and 9th districts are still to be heard from.

Members elected.

1st district,	Hugh S. Legare,
2d	Waddy Thompson,
3d	Francis W. Pickens,
5th	Wm. K. Clowney,
6th	James H. Hammond.

PENNSYLVANIA.

The following statement of the congressional vote of Pennsylvania is copied from the "Pennsylvania," which paper says, the returns are all official with the exception of a few from the north western counties which, however, will be found to correspond, very nearly, with what is set down to them.

Dist.	Van Buren.	Harrison.
1. Southwark, &c.	2,568	2,074
2. Philadelphia city	3,072	5,317
3. Northern Liberties, &c.	4,432	4,389
4. Delaware county	1,043	1,100
Chester	3,811	3,427
Lancaster	4,207	5,389
5. Montgomery	3,194	1,963
6. Bucks	3,085	3,260
7. Northampton	2,154	1,012
Wayne	580	284
Pike	maj. 846
Monroe	1,146	205
8. Schuylkill	1,128	935
Lehigh	1,753	1,495
9. Berks	4,276	3,160
10. Dauphin	1,834	1,609
Lebanon	1,051	1,186
11. York	3,386	2,414
12. Franklin	1,795	1,703
Adams	1,813	1,344
13. Cumberland	1,889	1,715
Perry	1,100	421
Junata	644	519
14. Columbia	1,250	1,002
Luzerne	1,631	1,644
15. Mifflin	1,036	575
Huntingdon,	1,793	1,922
Centre.	2,085	637
16. Lycoming,	1,522	937
Union,	1,391	1,170
Northumberland,	1,362	919
17. Bedford,	1,385	1,494
Susquehanna,	902	875
Toga,	1,217	105
Potter,	226	46
McKean,	158	16
18. Bedford,	maj. 800

Somerset,	577	1,453
Cambria,	maj. 36
19. Westmoreland,	2,871	1,574
Indiana,	823	1,100
20. Fayette,	2,075
Greene,	1,177
21. Washington,	2,537	2,766
22. Allegheny,	2,984	3,155
23. Butler,	1,433	970
Clearfield,	455	289
Jefferson,	290	355
Armstrong,	maj. 163
24. Beaver,		maj. 250
Mercer,	1,265	1,731
25. Crawford,	1,466	1,148
Erie,	1,172	1,727
Warren,	512	251
Venango,	maj. 600

86,415 72,967

Members elected to the next congress, to which is prefixed the delegation in the present congress.

24th congress.	25th congress.
Joel B. Sutherland,	Lenuel Paynter,
James Harper,	John Sergeant,
Joseph R. Ingersoll,	Geo. W. Toland,
Michael W. Ash,	Francis J. Harper,
Edward Darlington,	Edward Darlington,
William Heister,	Edward Davies,
David Potts, jr.	David Potts, jr.
Jacob Frye, jr.	Jacob Frye, jr.
Mathias Morris,	Mathias Morris,
David D. Wagener,	David D. Wagener,
Edward B. Hubley,	Edward B. Hubley,
Henry A. Muhlenberg,	Henry A. Muhlenberg,
William Clark,	Luther Reily,
Henry Logan,	Henry Logan,
George Chambers,	Daniel Sheffer,
Jesse Miller,	Charles McClure,
Joseph Henderson,	William W. Potter,
Andrew Beaumont,	R. H. Hammond,
Joseph B. Anthony,	David Petriken,
John Laporte,	Samuel W. Morris,
Job Mann,	Charles Ogle,
J. Klingensmith, jr.	J. Klingensmith,
Andrew Buchanan,	Andrew Buchanan,
T. M. T. McKennan,	T. M. T. McKennan,
Harmar Denny,	Richard Biddle,
Samuel S. Harrison,	William Beatty,
John Banks,	William Henry,
John Galbraith,	Arnold Plummer.

Mr. Pearson is elected to supply the vacancy in the present congress occasioned by Mr. Bank's resignation.

OHIO. The names of the whigs are put in italics.

Having received authentic returns from all the congressional districts in Ohio, we annex a complete list of the members elected to the next congress, to which, for the purpose of comparison, we prefix the names of the present representatives.

24th congress.	25th congress.
1. Bellamy Storer,	Alexander Duncan,
2. Taylor Webster,	Taylor Webster,
3. Joseph H. Crane,	Patrick G. Goode,
4. Thomas Corwin,	Thomas Corwin,
5. Thomas L. Hamer,	Thomas L. Hamer,
6. Samuel F. Vinton,	Calvary Morris,
7. William K. Bond,	William K. Bond,
8. Jeremiah McLene,	Joseph Ridgway,
9. John Chaney,	John Chaney,
10. Sampson Mason,	Sampson Mason,
11. William Kennon,	James Alexander, jr.
12. Elias Howell,	Alexander Harper,
13. David Spangler,	D. P. Leadbetter,
14. William Patterson,	W. H. Hunter,
15. Jonathan Sloane,	John W. Allen,
16. Elisha Whittlesey,	Elisha Whittlesey,
17. John Thomson,	Andrew W. Loomis,
18. Benjamin Jones,	Matthias Shepler,
19. Daniel Kilgore,	Daniel Kilgore.

OH-Whigs in italics.

In the next congress there will be eleven whigs and eight Van Buren members. In the present congress the parties are ten to nine. The changes in the 3d, 6th, 12th, 13th and 15th districts were caused by the present members declining a re-election. Mr. Corwin was re-elected by a majority of 1,702 votes, and Mr. Ridgway by a majority of 1,586 votes over Mr. McLene, the present Jackson member. Mr. Storer lost his election by 550.—The exact state of the polls in the other districts we have not learnt.

IMPORTANT TREASURY CORRESPONDENCE.

From the Globe of the 26th inst.

Having understood that a correspondence had recently taken place with the secretary of the treasury in respect to the present state of the money market, and more especially in New York city, as growing out of the late deposit act and other causes, we applied for copies of it. They have been politely furnished, and will tend, we believe, to remove much misapprehension in respect to this subject, and to correct many prevalent errors.

Washington, Oct. 22, 1836.

SIR: In the present state of the money market in England, we cannot look with confidence to a continuance of the import of specie from Europe. It might therefore be deemed beneficial by the department, at this time, to procure a million of dollars or more in specie from Havana or Jamaica. Should instructions be given to that effect, to the superintendent of the mint, the bank of America will cheerfully act as agent (without any charge on their part) to carry the same into effect. Cuba or Jamaica presenting at this moment the best prospect for obtaining a supply. We have the honor to be, sir, with great respect, your most obedient servants,

GEO. GRISWOLD,
BENJ'N L. SWAN.

Hon. Levi Woodbury.

Washington, Oct. 22, 1836.

SIR: The unparalleled speculations in lands throughout the United States, the over trading of the commercial community, and the transfer of the surplus funds under the recent act of congress—preparatory to a distribution among the several states—have turned the balance of trade against the city of New York, and caused a very severe pressure upon the money market.

Believing it will give you pleasure to remove the existing evils, as far as it is compatible with your official duties, we beg to suggest for your consideration, the postponement of the warrants already drawn on banks in the city of New York, and running to maturity, in favor of banks in the state of New York, thirty days from the time they respectively fall due; and all those payable to banks out of the state, three and six months; and, in the mean time, to direct the banks on whom those warrants are drawn, to place the amount of those funds in the respective places required.

It may be proper to remark, that we have not come here as delegates or agents for any institutions or others, but in our individual capacity, knowing the above facts, and to represent them to the secretary of the treasury, being fully persuaded he feels a deep interest in the welfare of the country. We have the honor to be, sir, with great respect, your most obedient servants,

GEO. GRISWOLD,
BENJ'N L. SWAN.

Hon. Levi Woodbury.

Treasury department, October 24, 1836.

GENTLEMEN: Your communications of the 22d instant have both been received, and carefully considered:

In respect to your suggestion about the mint, and the readiness of the bank of America to aid the government without charge in procuring a supply of suitable metal for coining, I am happy to acknowledge the liberality of the offer, and to state, that the director of the mint, as long ago as last August and September, had full authority conferred on him for this purpose. At the same time he was requested to make seasonable preparation to obtain the amount of metal probably needed to keep the mint in full and active operation, and was assured that any reasonable sums of money would be transferred to him for that purpose. I trust that on your seeing him, or opening a correspondence with him, he will give any further information desirable on this point.

In respect to the other topics in your letters, connected with the present state of the money market, you do not err in "believing it will give me pleasure to remove the existing evils, as far as is compatible with my official duties."

But as the causes which you justly assign for those evils are so deeply seated and wide spread, and are so disconnected with the operations of this department, it is hardly practicable that any durable or efficient relief can be obtained, except by a removal or modification of the causes themselves. This removal or modification of the chief and primary causes, must depend on the returning prudence, moderation and good sense of the community, generally, in limiting trade within reasonable boundaries, abandoning numerous wild speculations in lands and stocks, and in managing their banking concerns with a stricter regard to true banking principles.

The only cause over which this department has any immediate control, being the execution of the late deposit act, you will readily perceive that its several provisions having emanated from congress, and not the treasury, can legally be changed or modified by congress alone. In the mean time, those provisions it is my duty, and will be my care, faithfully to enforce, while they remain a part of the law of the land. But every indulgence which can be granted, consistent with those provisions, will cheerfully be given to the fiscal agents of the treasury, and through them to the commercial community, as well as to all persons unfavorably affected by the operation of a portion of the deposit act.

So far as regards your requests, there is a discrimination to be noticed between two species of distribution of the public money required by the act.

The first distribution is between different banks, so that no one shall be allowed to hold permanently more public money than three-fourths the amount of its capital. This is not in any degree postponed by the act of the next year, or any other specified time; but is to take effect soon as practicable, or according to the fair construction of the intention of congress, soon as it can reasonably be effected, considering all the various circumstances connected with so large and delicate an operation. In your city alone, its operations will require the transfers of something like eight millions of dollars from the old deposit banks to new ones, either in the state or out of it.

The selection and organization of new banks to receive so large a sum, and the collection and removal of so great an amount gradually and safely, have, with the like operation in other sections of the country, severely taxed my attention and labors for some months, and are still doing it.

Besides this first distribution of the deposits, a second one is rendered necessary by the deposit act, among the different states in ratable proportions. Under this last operation, the proportions are not required to be actually paid over to the states till next January, and quarterly thereafter during the year.

But the preparation beforehand to insure their punctual and prompt payment there has been careful and constant, and coupled, whenever convenient with the first and earlier distribution required among the banks, so as to prevent the great inconveniences and pressure in the money market attendant on double transfers, first from bank to bank near, and next from state to state at a distance.

I have, therefore, in cases where the public money had largely accumulated in any banks in any one state, and new banks could be seasonably obtained in other states, where only a little public money already existed, made but one transfer to accomplish both objects, and by a single operation have reduced the excess in certain banks and in certain states, and placed it in the states where it would be needed next year, and where they before had not an equal portion of the public money.

In accomplishing these objects with a view to arrange, upon an equal and proportionate basis, the deposits among both the banks and the states as required by the law, due notice of the times and place of large payments, has been given so as to proceed in a gradual, and at the same time, seasonable manner, considering a sudden and immediate transfer of the whole, not only possible, but ruinous to the community as well as the banks, and not intended by the act. When it has been ascertained that the operation going on was too rapid for the resources of the banks or the neighborhood, without great distress, I have extended the period of time for the transfers, and especially those of distant states, (which are less urgent than the others under the law), provided it could be done without defeating the spirit as well as the words of the law, and without hazarding its faithful and prompt execution.*

*It may be proper to add, by way of further explanation as to the facts, that, if all the above ordered transfers to other states from New York were completed, and no new transfers, receipts or expenditures should take place, there would still remain in that state, and most of the amount in its commercial capital, about ten millions of dollars of public money, or quite five millions more than the whole probable proportion of that state, under the provisions of the deposit act.

The three original deposit banks in that city, had, by the last returns, nearly a million of dollars each more public money than three-fourths of the amount of their respected chartered capitals. But the excess has, since the deposit law took effect, being four months ago, been seasonably placed under transfers to other banks, some of which are within, and others out of, the state of New York, and payable at future periods; giving what was regarded reasonable time for the operation.

Adhering to these principles, I do not hesitate on your representation, to extend the time of payment for most of the transfers not yet due from the several banks in New York city though the transfers in your own neighborhood, and particularly those for the reduction of the deposits to their legal amount among these banks, cannot, with propriety, be much longer delayed. Some of the outstanding transfers have now 30, 60 and 90 days or nearly that, to run before payable; and several of them, amounting in all to about one and a quarter millions of dollars, are not payable at a distance but in your own city.

All those payable out of the city and state, over the amount of transfers payable from other states before the 1st of January, are less than one and a half millions of dollars.

Those transfers from your city, which fall due at home or within the state of New York before the 1st of January, will, therefore, as you desire, be postponed 30 days each, but cannot, with propriety, be further extended. Those which fall due out of the state, before the 1st of January, will at once all be postponed to the 1st of January, as the chief, though not sole object of them, is to have the money there seasonably for division among the states.

It is hoped that these indulgences will be employed, by the banks to enable them to complete easily the transfers already ordered, and to execute efficiently the remaining transfers which will be necessary under the act to be directed hereafter, and of which, as heretofore, unless public exigencies should forbid, whenever large in amount, a due and liberal notice beforehand of the times and places of payment, will be carefully given.

Concerning your last request to me to direct the banks making the transfers to put the amounts at the proper places, in the meantime, before they become payable, it may be necessary to explain, that the transfer order is now, in both form and substance, to that effect. When it is made payable at a distance, the funds must be remitted there by the time it falls due; but if at home, they must be got ready at home.

If, as is apprehended from your remarks, it is supposed by some that a transfer draft can, any more than a treasury warrant, be made payable on its face in any thing except specie, provided the holder chooses to demand specie, the error should be corrected, as the idea is illegal and preposterous. But the department has, in no case ever given any order to demand any portion of either of them in specie.

The holder of the warrant often accepts bank notes or checks, and so does the holder of the transfer draft, and in the latter case the bills of the bank, in whose favor it runs, or balances against such bank would, of course, be always as available as specie to meet the transfer when due. I am, gentlemen, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
LEVI WOODBURY, secretary of the treasury.

To Geo. Griswold and Benjamin L. Swan, esqs.
New York.

LAW CASE.

From the Journal of Commerce.

Superior court, October 20th. Judge Oakley presiding. Fetterplace, Hiler & Co. vs. Tinkham & Hart.

This was an action to recover damages for injury done to merchandise, on board a vessel belonging to the defendants, who undertook to convey it to this port.

The plaintiffs reside at Marseilles, and the defendants are ship owners in this city. On the 22d of April, 1835, the plaintiffs shipped at Marseilles, on board the brig Seadrift, belonging to the defendants, 100 bags of beans, in good order, consigned to Putnam and Slocum of this city. The brig arrived here in July, and the consignees found that 42 bags of the beans were materially damaged on the passage, and 7 bags of them so completely spoiled that they were ultimately thrown away as being totally worthless. The consignees therefore had them surveyed by the port warden, and sold at auction as damaged goods, by Minturn & Co, who sold the 39 bags for $193 19, which appeared to be nearly the full value of them, in their then condition, as a judge of the article who purchased them at the auction, was glad to resell them for a few dollars more than he gave for them. The damage which the beans received on ship board was occasioned chiefly by rats and mice, but it was also alleged that they were damaged by improper stowage, and damp, as they emitted a most offensive smell, and it appeared that several of the bags had become so rotten on the passage, that on their arrival here, the mate of the vessel purchased some new bags and put into them the beans which had fallen out of the original bags which had become decayed. Another proof of the article having been improperly stowed, was deduced from the fact, that some of the bags were marked with the rust of the iron hoops of casks which had been stowed over them, and that the parts of the bags so marked were completely rotten. In order to show that the articles must have been injured by damp, and had not become spoiled from any inherent defect, it was shown that some of the bags had been stowed in the state room, and in these the beans were in order on their arrival here. It was shown in evidence that if the beans had been in good order they would be worth $650 in this market at the time they arrived here.

For the defence, it was contended that the damage was done the beans entirely by mice, and that it was therefore one of those inevitable accidents which ship owners were not liable for, and in order to show that all due care and precaution had been taken in this respect, evidence was adduced to show that before the vessel left N. York she had been thoroughly smoked. From New York, she went, in the first place, to New Orleans, and there a cat was procured, which remained on board during the remainder of her voyage. Whilst the vessel was at Marseilles she was hove down, newly coppered and thoroughly overhauled, and the mate deposed that he then saw no mice on board, or until after the vessel had got to sea, on her voyage home. It appeared, however, that there were great numbers of them then on board, during the latter part of the passage. There were no other articles likely to attract mice, taken on board at Marseilles, except the beans, and evidence was adduced to show that the mice might have been brought on board in the bags which contained the beans. The rust marks on the bags were endeavored to be accounted for, by alleging that it occurred from the bags having been thrown on the casks when the vessel was being unloaded. The evidence as to whether the beans were or were not properly stowed, was on the whole extremely indefinite.

The court charged the jury. That the evidence as to the stowage was by no means satisfactory, but as the jury were satisfied that the bags were placed in contact with the casks, all the witnesses agreed that this was bad stowage, and for any injury which the articles had thus sustained, the plaintiffs were entitled to damages. But if the jury believed that the articles had been properly stowed, the plaintiffs could recover no damages on that account. Whatever might have been the effect of the stowage, it was very evident that the beans had been injured to some extent by mice. On this part of the subject the question was, did the captain use all due caution to avoid the damage. The jury were to consider that the law was not, that the ship owners were responsible at all hazards, or under any circumstances, for the injury done by mice. If the jury were satisfied that every possible means had been used to keep the mice out of the ship, but that notwithstanding they got into it, and that when they did get in, every possible effort was made to destroy them, then the owners were not responsible. The extent of injury sustained was not very clearly shown in evidence, and the jury perhaps ought to calculate it liberally. There was some evidence as to the value of the beans, but the sale under the warden's inspection was not binding on the defendants as to the value of the article. The court knew no law which made such a sale of goods binding on the ship owners as conclusively showing the value of the article sold; it might however be taken as so much evidence in proof of the value.

The jury retired, and after remaining out for some time without coming to a decision, the court ordered them to seal their verdict and bring it into court this morning.

For the plaintiffs, Mr. Paine; for the defendants, Mr. Cutting.

The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiffs of $294 54.

"REFORM OR REVOLUTION" IN MARYLAND.

ALLEGANY COUNTY.

A meeting of the Van Buren party, attended by many Harrisonians, was held at the court house, on Friday evening, the 14th instant. As the notice for the meeting was of a party character, THOMAS PERRY was called to the chair, and HENRY HAMMILL appointed secretary. After the meeting was organized, William Matthews, esq. addressed the audience, and gave his reasons for supporting Martin Van Buren in preference to general Harrison. When he had finished, a call was made upon Mr. Perry, by some of his friends, to give his views also. To this call Mr. Perry acceded; and when he had concluded, S. M. Semmes, esq. asked permission to address the meeting in reply. To this some objection was made, and Mr. Semmes requested the question to be taken, on a motion made to ascertain the wishes of the meeting. There was no determining by the sound, as it was impossible to decide from the number of voices on each side of the question; but the chair declared that a majority of the meeting were opposed to hearing Mr. Semmes. A motion was then made to adjourn, which a number of Van Buren men (among them the officers of the meeting) practically carried by blowing out the lights, and leaving.

A call was now made, for all who wished to hear both sides of the question, to stand fast. A large number of both parties remained, and the meeting was immediately reorganized by calling SINGLETON TOWNSHEND, esq. to the chair, assisted by ISAAC McCARTY and GEORGE W. DEVECKON, and appointing NORMAND BRUCE and HANSON B. PIGMAN, secretaries. Mr. Semmes then went on at length to reply to the addresses of Messrs. Matthews and Perry. After he had concluded, H. B. Pigman addressed the meeting. Dr. S. P. Smith then made some appropriate remarks with regard to subjects connected with the reform for which the Van Buren party contend, and the manner in which they have identified it with the revolutionary movement of the eighteen electors. In conclusion, Mr. Townshend, the chairman, made some very happy and interesting remarks, and was frequently interrupted by the cheers and applause of the meeting.

On motion of Joseph Shriver, it was resolved, that the proceedings of this meeting, signed by the officers, be published.

On motion, the meeting then adjourned.

SINGLETON TOWNSHEND, president.

ISAAC McCARTY, vice

GEORGE W. DEVECKON, presidents.

NORMAND BRUCE, secretaries.

HANSON B. PIGMAN, secretaries.

IMPORTANT EXPOSE.

The following correspondence is published with the view of informing the people of the manner and means resorted to by the disorganizers of our state government, to carry their schemes into effect. It is upon a subject that most vitally interests the welfare of the whole state. In attempting to bring Allegany into their measures, however, these revolutionists have widely missed their object. The letter of Mr. Buchanan is highly creditable to him, and there can be no doubt, that in relation to this revolutionary movement and the conduct of the eighteen recusant electors, it expresses the sentiments of the people of Allegany county. Mr. Buchanan is a Van Buren delegate elect from this county.

Correspondence.

Cumberland, Oct. 17, 1836.

SIR: In a casual and friendly conversation between us this morning, you mentioned having received a circular from some gentlemen in Baltimore, in reference to the call of a provisional convention, and that you had replied thereto. You did not say distinctly what was the purport of that reply, nor was I sure at that moment that I had a right to ask. A little reflection, however, convinces me, that on a subject so vitally important to the whole people of the state, and more especially to the citizens of this county, it is both right and proper that the correspondence should be exposed to the public view. Convinced then, as I am, from my knowledge of your views on that subject, that you will at least not sink in the estimation of your constituents, by such exposure, may I not ask the favor of you to furnish me with a copy of that correspondence for publication? With sentiments of regard, I am yours, &c. M. C. SPRIGG.

To J. M. Buchanan, esq.

Cumberland, Oct. 17, 1836.

DEAR SIR: Your polite note of this date, requesting me to furnish you with a copy of the correspondence which has taken place between myself and certain gentlemen of Baltimore, has been received. The correspondence was not intended by me for the public eye, nor can the sentiments of one so humble and obscure, even in the ordinary walks of life, as myself, be of any effect at this time; but the peculiar relation in which I now stand to the citizens of Allegany county, will certainly be a sufficient apology for me in furnishing you with a copy of the correspondence alluded to, to be disposed of in any manner you may see proper. Very respectfully, your friend, &c.

JOHN M. BUCHANAN.

To hon. Michael C. Sprigg.

Circular to Mr. Buchanan.

Baltimore, Oct. 9th, 1836.

To J. M. Buchanan, esq.

SIR: It will be recollected that the nineteen electors who refused to meet with certain of their colleagues to form a senate, in their address to the people of Maryland made the following recommendation:—"we would most humbly and respectfully recommend to our fellow citizens throughout the state, to proceed forthwith to elect, on the first Monday of November next, six delegates from each county and city, to meet in convention at Annapolis, on the third Monday of the same month, clothed with full powers to extend the authority of all civil and military powers now in commission, until a convention hereafter to be chosen, can be convened to amend the old or form an entire new government for the people of Maryland."

In pursuance of the above, meetings have already been called in the several counties, and delegates to a provisional convention will have been nominated before this reaches you. For the purpose of deliberating upon the just demands of the whole people, and the best means to obtain a reform of present abuses, it is very desirable that the friends of a republican constitution in every county in the state should make a common effort in the cause, and elect delegates to said convention. You are therefore respectfully requested to use your best exertions to further the object recommended by the nineteen republican electors, by calling meetings immediately, and putting in nomination such gentlemen as the friends of reform in your county may judge best able to represent their views on the subject in agitation, and to carry out the measure recommended in the foregoing extract from said address to the people. It will be necessary that some arrangements be made in reference to the judges of election.

On behalf of the friends of reform, we are, with high respect, your obedient servants,

William Krebs, Geo. Gordon Belt,
John Jas. Graves, Cornelius McLean,
T. Parkin Scott, B. H. Richardson,
Joshua Vansant, John S. Tyson,
Albert Constable, Joseph White.

Mr. Buchanan's reply.

Ellerslie, near Cumberland, Oct. 15, 1836.

GENTLEMEN: I received your circular communication dated 9th inst. informing me that "the nineteen electors who refused to meet the twenty-one and elect a senate had recommended to their fellow citizens throughout the state to proceed forthwith to elect, on the 1st Monday of November next, six delegates from each county and city to meet in convention at Annapolis," &c. &c. and to "use my best exertions to further the object recommended," &c. &c.

Could I imagine that any possible advantage would be derived to the interests of this, the county of my adoption, to the honor of my native state, or to the welfare and happiness of the citizens thereof, by adopting the course recommended by the nineteen electors, I would most cheerfully and cordially yield my feeble but zealous exertions to promote the object of your communication.

But inasmuch as I conscientiously believe that, should the course recommended by the nineteen recusant electors be carried into effect, it will be destructive of the best interests of the state, and will inflict a stab upon our institutions, and present happy and prosperous condition as a state, which neither time nor the ingenuity of man will ever be able to heal, I cannot, of course, co-operate with you in carrying the proposed convention into effect.

In thus refusing to lend you my aid, I trust I will not lay myself liable to the imputation of having changed my sentiments upon the all-absorbing subject of state reform.

Those who know me personally will not for a moment entertain such an idea. It is well understood here that I have been a principal pioneer in Allegany in propagating the principles of reform; but I never for an instant supposed that the good work was to be accomplished by means of a revolution, and at the sacrifice of the honor of the state, and thereby bringing upon us all the calamities of a civil war, anarchy, confusion, bloodshed, and a train of evils too horrible to imagine. This is no ideal picture. Before the proposed project can be consummated, we will be witnesses of the sad reality, and those who are foremost and loudest in advocating this nefarious scheme will be the first to fall victims to their mad and ruinous indiscretion.

I entreat you, gentlemen, by that love which I know you all entertain for your country, by the tender and endearing ties by which you are connected with your wives and children, to abandon your present wild and visionary scheme, (to call it by no harsher name), and let us all, at this important crisis, unite, cordially and heartily, in one common effort to save the constitution of the state and her laws inviolate, from the perfidious hands of AMBITIOUS DEMAGOGUES, AND THE MACHI-

NATIONS OF WICKED, CORRUPT AND ABANDONED POLITICAL KNAVES.

I am now, as I always have been, the decided and zealous friend of reform, and will cheerfully go as far as those who step the farthest to remedy the grievances complained of in our present form of government, according to the mode indicated by the sages who framed our constitution. To any other mode I would object at this time, as being dangerous alike to the stability of our institutions, to the interest and honor of the state, and to the peace and happiness of her citizens.

Under the present very excited state of public feeling, I doubt very much whether any form of government could be adopted which would prove at all acceptable to the whole people, or give peace and quiet to the state.

I humbly pray, however, that a season much more propitious to a calm discussion of the interesting subject of reform is not far distant, when we will all see "how sweet and pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity and love"—when the feuds and angry bickerings of party strife will have died away, and floated down the stream of time, no more to be remembered, or remembered only to be condemned and regretted, when we will all be able to set down together as our fathers did of old, intent only on forming such a system of government as will advance the prosperity of the state, the honor and happiness of the people, and enable us to hand down to the latest posterity, unimpaired, the advantages and blessings of a free government. With sentiments of respect, I am, gentlemen, your friend, truly,
JOHN M. BUCHANAN.

To William Krebs, John James Graves, &c.

From the Republican Citizen extra.

FREDERICK COUNTY.

The meeting was organized by calling Gideon Bantz, esq. (the late whig senatorial electoral candidate), and col. John H. Simmons, V. B. to the chair, and appointing Mahlon Talbott (late sheriff of Frederick county, a whig) and John Sifford, esqrs. as secretaries. The hon. Henry R. Warfield, hon. W. C. Johnson, hon. Francis Thomas and col. John H. McElfresh addressed the meeting in eloquent speeches, which were responded to by frequent, animated and enthusiastic cheers.

On motion of the hon. Wm. C. Johnson, the chair appointed the following gentlemen, as a committee to draft resolutions: Wm. Cost Johnson, whig, Washington Burgess, W. Dr. Robt. C. Cummings, W. Mahlon Talbott, W. L. P. W. Balch, W. Jacob Markell, Van Buren, Madison Nelson, V. B. John Rigney, V. B. John Brunner of J. V. B. John B. Boyle, V. B. Christian Getzendanner, V. B. col. John McPherson, V. B. Dennis Dorsey, V. B. who after retiring a short time, reported the following resolutions—which were unanimously adopted.

Resolved, As the opinion of this meeting, that no good end can be gained by the continued reiteration of an unfounded assertion, that life and property are in danger in Maryland. However widely men may differ as to the character of our institutions, and the best means of altering and reforming them, there cannot be found, we solemnly believe, any respectable number of persons in this state, who would not cheerfully aid to protect life and property, if seriously in danger.

Resolved, That this meeting is fully satisfied that no senate will be formed, by a compromise, between the conflicting claims of the two branches of the electoral college, and that it is therefore the duty of every lover of order and peace, to devise some other means, by which the duties devolved under the present constitution on the senate alone, or the senate and house of delegates united, shall be performed.

Resolved, As the sense of this meeting, which we believe to be in accordance with the opinions of an overwhelming majority of the voters of this county, that the only way of providing a substitute for the senate and house of delegates, and effecting reform of the present constitution of Maryland is by a convention, elected fresh from the people, for that specified purpose—and, that we regard all attempts at reform by the legislature, passing two successive enactments as futile and impracticable, so long as a majority of the legislature may be elected by seven thousand out of fifty thousand of the voters of the state, and cannot therefore be considered responsible to the great body of the people for their acts.

Resolved, That we will never cease our exertions to reform the present constitution, until a convention has been organized and a republican constitution has been submitted to the people at the ballot box, and by them either rejected or adopted.

Resolved, as the opinion of this meeting, that four-fifths at least of the voters of this county, desire to see a convention of delegates assemble with full powers to revise, remodel and amend the existing constitution; or abolish the same, and substitute in its stead a form of government not unworthy of the age.

Resolved, That the chair appoint a central committee, composed of one hundred members of both parties, with power to make such arrangement as may be necessary, to aid the people of Frederick county in the great undertaking which four-fifths of them have at heart, to restore to the majority their right to rule.

Resolved, That these proceedings be signed by the chairmen and secretaries, and published in all the papers in the state, friendly to conventional reform.

GIDEON BANTZ,
JOHN H. SIMMONS, } chairmen.
MAHLON TALBOTT,
JOHN SIFFORD, } secretaries.

FACILITY IN TRAVELLING.

From the American Almanac

Internal improvement; increased facilities of intercourse and travelling in the United States.

The great and rapid improvement which has taken place in the condition and circumstances of the people of the United States, since the American revolution, is strikingly illustrated by the increased facilities of travelling and intercourse between the different parts of the country, by means of turnpike roads, canals, rail road cars, all of which were, at that time, wholly unknown here, with the exception of stage coaches, which had been established on two or three short routes. But it is since the close of the last war with Great Britain, that the spirit of enterprise, with respect to internal improvement, has been chiefly manifested; it is, at the present time, especially active, and promises, should nothing happen to check its progress, to accomplish much more in the ten succeeding years, than has been effected in twice the number of any years that are past.

The present facilities of intercourse are altogether beyond what not only the first settlers of the country, but also the inhabitants no more than fifty years ago, could have conceived to be possible.

The following statement of gov. Everett, at the late centennial celebration of the settlement of Springfield, Massachusetts, is scarcely an exaggeration. "Such was the difficulty of crossing the pathless wilderness which lay between them [the first settlers of Massachusetts] and the coast, that a man may now go from Boston to New Orleans, by way of Pittsburgh, a distance of more than 2,500 miles, in about as many days as it took the first settlers to reach the banks of Connecticut river."

In the year 1754, a convention of delegates from the English American colonies met at Albany, for the purpose of forming a plan of union; and it was proposed that, if the plan were carried into effect, Philadelphia should be the place of meeting. The reasons in favor of the city were stated by Dr. Franklin, a member of the convention, who was evidently disposed to give the most favorable representation of the facilities of intercourse which the case admitted, as follows:

"Philadelphia was named as being nearer the centre of the colonies, where the commissioners would be well and cheaply accommodated. The high roads through the whole extent are, for the most part, very good, in which forty or fifty miles a day may very well be, and frequently are, travelled. Great part of the way may likewise be gone by water. In summer time, the passages are frequently performed in a week from Charleston to Philadelphia and New York; and from Rhode Island to New York, through the sound, in two or three days; and from New York to Philadelphia, by water and land, in two days, by stage, boats and wheel carriages that set out every other day. The journey from Charleston to Philadelphia may likewise be facilitated by boats running up Chesapeake bay, three hundred miles. But if the whole journey be performed on horseback, the most distant members, viz: the two from New Hampshire and South Carolina, may probably render themselves at Philadelphia in 15 or 20 days; the majority may be there in much less time."

But such a change has now taken place, that one may travel with ease from Concord, the capital of New Hampshire, to Philadelphia, or from Boston to the city of Washington, all the way in rail road cars and steamboats, a distance of about 450 miles, in less than 48 hours; and the passage between New York and Philadelphia is performed in from 7 to 8 hours.

Stage coaches were very little known in this country till a period subsequent to the close of the revolutionary war; and for some time after they were introduced, they did not often go more than about 40 miles in a day. In England, in 1706, the stage coach was four days in going from London to York, a distance of about 200 miles, which has, for some years past, been travelled in about 20 hours. The first stage coach drawn by four horses in Massachusetts, of which we have any knowledge, was established in 1774, running between Boston, Salem and Newburyport. An intelligent gentleman, who travelled in the first stage coach from Boston to Worcester, makes the following statement: "Lemuel Pease, of Shrewsbury, established the first line of stages between Boston and Worcester, in 1782; afterwards extended to Hartford, and subsequently to New York. Before that time, the public mail was carried on horseback by Messrs. Hyde and Adams, alternately, every thing being conveyed in a pair of saddle-bags, and one mail a week only coming from the south. After New York was evacuated by the English, in 1783, the mail was extended to that city. But the principal intercourse from the north was by water. In 1786, Mr. Ballard set up the first hack in Boston. It was a chaise, and was stationed by the old statehouse. A coach was soon after added."

The first turnpike corporation in Massachusetts was granted in 1795; the oldest canals in the United States of any considerable magnitude are the Santee canal and the Middlesex canal, the former of which was completed in 1802, and the latter in 1808. The oldest canal which has been much used for conveying passengers is Erie canal, which was completed in 1825. The oldest rail road in the United States, the Quincy rail road, in Massachusetts, only three miles in length, was finished in 1827. The rail road which was first used in the United States for conveying passengers is the Baltimore and Ohio rail road, (not yet finished), which was opened for passengers from Baltimore to Ellicott's Mills, 13 miles, in 1830. The first steamboat that was used in any part of the world for conveying passengers was one which commenced sailing on the Hudson, between New York and Albany, in 1807.

The first post office in America was established at New York in 1710. In 1790, the number of post offices in the United States, was only 75, and the extent of post roads 1,875 miles. In 1835, the number of post offices was 10,770; the post routes covered about 112,774 miles. In daily, or less frequent trips, the mails were carried on these routes about 25,869,486 miles, viz: 16,874,060 miles in four horse post coaches and two horse stages; 7,817,973 miles on horseback and in sulkeys; 906,959 miles in steamboats; and 270,504 miles in rail road cars.

The rivers and waters of the United States present a vast field for steamboat navigation, which is more in use here than in any other parts of the world. This mode of navigation has produced surprising changes with respect to facilities of intercourse, especially in the extensive region which is watered by the Mississippi and its tributaries. In the western country, the present century has witnessed extraordinary changes and wonderful improvement in the arts of civilized life; and a system of internal improvement is now in progress there, which, considering the recent settlement of the country, may be justly regarded as magnificent.—The following account of "things seen by a young son of the west," originally published in the "Cincinnati Register," is extracted from the "People's Magazine," for July 13th, 1838:

"I have seen the time when the only boat that floated on the surface of the Ohio was a canoe, propelled by poles used by two persons, one in the bow, and the other in the stern.

"I have seen the day when the introduction of the keel-boat, with a shingle roof, was hailed a mighty improvement in the business of the west.

"I remember the day when the arrival of a Canadian barge (as the St. Louis boats were called at the head of the Ohio) was an important event in the transactions of a year.

"I remember the day when a passage of four months from Natchez to Pittsburgh was called a speedy trip for the best craft on the river, and when the boatmen, a race now extinct, leaped on shore after the voyage, and exhibited an air of as much triumph as did the sailors of Columbus on their return from the new world.

"I remember the time when the canoe of a white man dared not to be launched on the bosom of the Alleghany.

"I remember the time when a trader to New Orleans was viewed as the most enterprising amongst even the most hardy sons of the west, on his return from his six months' trip, he was hailed as a traveller who had seen the world.

"I remember the day when the borders of the Ohio were a wilderness, and New Orleans was 'toto orbe divisa,' literally cut off from the whole world.

"I have lived to see the day when the desert is flourishing as the rose;—when the race of boatmen has become extinct, and their memories only preserved in the traditional tales of our borderers.

"I have lived to see two splendid cities, one devoted to manufactures, the other to commerce, spring up, where, in my boyhood, nothing appeared like civilization but the hut of the soldier or of the settler.

"I have lived to see a revolution produced by a mechanical philosophy, equal to that effected by the art of printing. It has changed the character of western commerce, and almost proved that the poetical wish of 'annihilating time and space' was not altogether hyperbolic. By it Pittsburgh and New Orleans have become near neighbors.

"I have lived to see the day when a visit to New Orleans from Cincinnati requires no more preparation than a visit to a neighboring country town. I remember when it required as much previous arrangement as a voyage to Calcutta.

"I have lived to see vessels of 300 tons arriving in twelve or fifteen days from New Orleans at Cincinnati; and I calculate to see them arrive in ten days.

"I have lived to see vessels composing an amount of tonnage of upwards of 4,000 tons, arrive in one week at the harbor of Cincinnati.

"All these things I have seen, and yet I feel myself to be entitled to be numbered amongst the young sons of the west."

The steamboat Mediator has been recently stated to have performed the passage in July, 1836, from New Orleans to Louisville in 7 days and 15 hours; at the same rate it would have reached Cincinnati in about 8 days, so that the expectation of this "young son of the west" is already more than realized.

The canals in the United States, which are now finished, comprise upwards of 2,000 miles in length; the rail roads already completed, upwards of 1,500 miles; and the rail roads now under contract or in progress, have been recently estimated to amount to more than 3,000 miles. It may doubtless be said without exaggeration, that rail roads are now projected in this country on a more extensive scale than in all other parts of the globe. When the various works of this description, which are now in progress or in prospect, shall be completed, the principal places in the different parts of the country will be brought comparatively near to each other; and one may travel on a continuous line of rail roads from Portland to New Orleans, and from various other points on the Atlantic to the Mississippi.

The spirit of enterprise, with respect to internal improvement, has extended more or less to all the states in the union, yet in very different degrees. Some of the states, indeed, do not admit of the construction of canals or rail roads, except of comparatively small extent, while others present a vast field and great inducements for works of the kind on a magnificent scale.

FRANCE.

Dissolution of the Thiers administration, and proposed French intervention.

From the New York Daily Advertiser.

Paris, Aug. 22, 1836.

To the editors of the N. Y. Daily Advertiser:

GENTLEMEN: Events of vast importance succeed each other with wonderful rapidity. To-day, we are without a government, though that which has gone out of office has only lasted six months.—Since the revolution of 1830, the doctrinaires are the only men who have retained for any great length of time their places and influence. The reason of this is obvious. They are the only men who would brave public opinion, put to naught public feeling and sympathies, and retain place for the sake of power, patronage and pecuniary advantages. I assure you this is the case. They know they are hated—they know that for every doctrinaire in France we can point to five thousand patriots.—They know they are suspected. They know that the nation has no confidence in either their integrity or their policy—and that France is far more legitimate than she is doctrinaire. Still they jogged on, always tricking, and never thriving. When they come into office, they have heard the universal groan of sorrow, misery and national dissatisfaction.—When they have been turned out of place by some misunderstanding in the chambers, or by some intrigue at court, they could not fail to hear the shouts of joy and gratulation which have literally proceeded from all sides. They are "the poison in the potage." They are the "death's head at a fete."—They are the "ghost of former times," stalking through halls which are splendidly gay and illuminated and joyous. Whenever they appear, they convert mirth and ease into sombre care and uneasiness. They are the "nightmare" on the security and repose of the country. They are "the blight" which withers the hopes of the cultivator, and the possessor of land and of gardens. Yet these men are once more on the tapis. Guizot, who was spouting in Normandy, is now conspiring at Paris. He has sent for Duchatel! He has consulted count Jauhert. He has had an interview with de Remiat. His right hand man is the vindictive Periel. He is preparing a list of an administration to the king.—It is to be the quintessence of the "doctrine"—which means bad laws and force—obedience without liberty—and monarchy without legitimacy.

The history of the dissolution of the Thiers administration may be told as follows. I am answerable for the correctness of my statement, both to you and your readers.

The late president of the council was always of opinion that, from the moment the conflict in Spain assumed a serious shape, by the escape of Don Carlos from London, and his arrival in the Basque provinces, France ought to interfere avowedly and actively—capture Don Carlos—destroy the Carlist army—obtain a general pardon for the Basques and Navarrese, and aid in placing the queen on the throne with a sort of "juste milieu" government, and "juste milieu" constitution. As well during the administration of the duke de Broglie as during his own, he often urged this line of policy on the king of the French, and predicted, over and over again, that if this system should not be adopted, either Don Carlos would succeed in obtaining the throne, and would establish absolutism at Madrid, or else that the republican party would rise, and, after having proclaimed the constitution of 1812, would go on from step to step, until at last the republic itself would be established.

The king, Madame Adelaide, and the ambassadors of the northern powers, were always opposed to this advice and to this policy. The king was resolved on not intervening in the affairs of Spain. Even the assistance which was given to the queen Christina, in the shape of a foreign legion, headed by the brave gen. Bernelle, was opposed to his wishes and convictions—and Louis Philippe often regretted that he had not simply confined his proceedings to guarding the French frontiers, and allowing of no sort of interference on either side.

At last, the French legion obtained a signal victory over Villareal. The Carlists were defeated by gen. Bernelle. A newly formed Polish squadron of cavalry assisted in obtaining that result; and Cordova and Harispe agreed in opinion that, if from 20,000 to 30,000 volunteers could be raised in France, and be gradually introduced into Spain, and be headed by a French general, the result would be most satisfactory for the cause of the queen.

In this measure, the king assented with great reluctance. He was opposed to a secret, as much as he was to an open intervention: and he knew quite well that the day would come when this secret intervention would and must lead to protests on the side of the northern powers, and then either to war, if persevered in, or to national humiliation, should the system of intervention be abandoned.

But M. Thiers, who had never really given up his original plan of an avowed and positive French intervention, went on with his system of recruiting, and established head quarters at Pau. General Bugeaud, who had gained some laurels in Africa, was sent for by M. Thiers secretly to return to France, in order to head the foreign legion as soon as it should enter; and the minister of foreign affairs had so laid his plans as that the recruiting should go on to supply from time to time auxiliaries to the queen, until really she should be supplied with a French army. But, unfortunately for M. Thiers, (though I rejoice at it), this could not be done in a corner—the king heard what was the scheme of the president of the council from M. de Montalivet, and from the ambassadors of the northern powers—and he was resolved that, at any rate, gen. Bugeaud should not be appointed to head the legion. Gen. Bugeaud, when he learnt that the king of the French was opposed to his nomination, of course refused to accept the post, and felt by no means grateful to M. Thiers for having recalled him from Africa, where he hoped to gain fresh laurels. As the king would not allow so prominent an officer as gen. Bugeaud, a member of the chamber of deputies, to head the auxiliary corps forming at Pau, certain that such a measure would be looked on by foreign governments as a real act of intervention, M. Thiers consulted gen. Harispe by despatch as to the best French officer to be appointed to this distinguished post. He pointed out gen. Lebeau—and, after some correspondence between Conlova, Saarsfield, and the government of the queen regent at Madrid, gen. Lebeau was named the commander of this auxiliary corps, with a portion of which he crossed the frontiers and entered Spain.

But, unfortunately for the plans of M. Thiers, (and again I say I rejoice at it, because I am an enemy of all intervention), just as he was about carrying into full effect all his projects, the ambassadors of the northern powers addressed themselves to the king, in consequence of gen. Lebeau having announced in a proclamation that he had been named commandant by the king of the French, instead of saying by the queen regent of Spain. This was a violation of all the engagements entered into by the king with the ministers of Austria, Russia, Holland and Prussia, at Paris—as well as in direct opposition to all that the dukes of Orleans and Nemours had declared at Berlin and Vienna. The king was angry that Lebeau had thus, unauthorised, made use of his name; but he soon found out that it was the fault of M. Thiers, who had informed the general that the king of the French had appointed him to that post. Little did M. Thiers think that gen. Lebeau would let out the secret in a proclamation. When the king discovered, through M. de Montalivet, and through the ambassadors of the northern powers, that gen. Lebeau had acted under the advice, and in consequence of the orders of M. Thiers, his majesty required that the proclamation of gen. Lebeau should be formally denied in the columns of the Moniteur. To this, M. Thiers was of course much opposed. It was humiliating to him, and humbling to gen. Lebeau. But the king would not yield; his honor was engaged that there should be no intervention, and he would not forfeit his word to foreign powers.

In the mean time, however, a circumstance occurred of immense magnitude, which, for the moment, appeared likely to reconcile all conflicting opinions, and to put off the question of intervention ad infinitum. The constitution of 1812 was proclaimed at Saragopas, at Seville, at Malaga—then at St. Ildeonso—and then at Madrid. The queen was said to be a prisoner. Butcheries were said to be perpetrated in the streets of the capital, and Spain was represented to be in a state of anarchy! The affair of the legion was, for the moment, forgotten. "There were some differences of opinion," said the Journal de Paris, but these are now at an end. The events which had occurred were reported to have set all to rights—and the Thiers cabinet was saved!

But these were incorrect reports. True, M. Thiers consented not to go on recruiting. True he agreed to general Bernelle and his men returning to France. True he agreed to wait, and see what course would be adopted by the Calatrava cabinet at Madrid. All this was settled. So far good. But this was not enough. The king required that the author of the "revolt!" at St. Ildeonso and Madrid should be shown that France would not recognize the constitution of 1812—would not suffer the alleged "imprisonment" of the queen—would not sanction any democratic movement or form of government in Spain—and would withdraw all allegiance from every Spanish government which should not be based on "juste milieu," or even perhaps "doctrinaire" principles.

M. Thiers refused to consent to such a line of policy. He was quite as much opposed to the constitution of 1812, as was the king of the French, or the northern powers of Europe; but he thought that, if it should be given out in Spain that France had abandoned the liberal cause, in consequence of that constitution being proclaimed, the French government would, of course, lose all its influence at Madrid—the democratic feelings of the Spaniards might be excited to the highest pitch—and, driven to see and to feel that they must do all themselves, they would proclaim the republic as the sure and certain means of extinguishing Don Carlos and all his army. Thus, according to M. Thiers, the last case would be worse than the first.

The king of the French, Madame Adelaide, and M. de Montalivet reasoned differently. They were of opinion that the foreign legion should be dissolved—that the military camp formed at Pau should be broken up—that the Spanish liberals in power should be made to feel that France, or her government, was no more for them or their cause—and that, if they wished to escape destruction by the Carlists, they must return to "more wholesome doctrines," and to a "more monarchical government," before they could expect or receive even the indirect support and protection of France.

So the question arose, of whether the French legion should be broken up—all French troops recalled—the corps at Pau disbanded—and France remain a simple spectator; or whether the troops at Pau should remain as they were, and the troops in Spain remain inactive, until the Spanish government and cortes should show what was their intentions and policy.

The king would not yield. M. Thiers would not give way. To disband the troops he would not consent. The king gave orders that they should be disbanded. M. Thiers gave orders that they should not. This state of things could not last; M. Thiers gave in his resignation, and it was accepted. With respect to the coadjutors of M. Thiers, they were more or less divided in opinion, except M. de Montalivet, who held opinions diametrically opposed to those of M. Thiers. For instance, the minister of public instruction, M. Pelet, was opposed to all intervention; M. Duperre, the minister of marine, was for letting the troops which had actually entered Spain remain there, but for disbanding those who were at Pau; whilst Messrs. Thiers, Jugut, Papy and Maison, were against taking any step, which would, in their opinion, drive the democratic party to extreme measures. But when the question came on for division of M. Thiers' resignation, then indeed the whole of his coadjutors united with him, and they decided that they would all leave the ministry together. M. de Montalivet thought differently, and he remains. M. d'Argout was absent, but he has since fully acquiesced in the step taken by his late associates.

At the moment I write, nothing is decided by the king. He is no lover of the doctrinaires. They are tyrants at heart, and he knows it. But to whom can he address himself but to them? They are the only party who will consent to take office on any terms for the sake of being in power; and, when once there, then they are tyrants. For two years past their organ, the Journal des Debats, has been proclaiming the necessity for an intervention. But now that they are aware that whoever shall come into office must be prepared to abandon all intervention, or the king will not name them, they turn dead round, and write daily articles against any intervention, so as to obtain place by accepting the conditions of the king.

You know my opinions on the subject of intervention. I hate obedience to foreign dictation, and I loathe subserviency to the will and threats of foreign ambassadors. But yet I am an enemy, a decided and firm enemy, to all intervention in the affairs of Spain; and, much as I deplore the probable return of the doctrinaires to office, I shall the less regret it, if it shall lead to the rigorous enforcement of the principle of non-intervention. Still I have my doubts. The doctrinaires are always tricksters. They will not intervene now, whilst the constitution is triumphant; but, if hereafter they should be able to follow the example of 1823, and intervene in favor of absolutism against liberalism in Spain, I am convinced they would do so with all their hearts and souls. I am, gentlemen, your obedient servant, O. P. Q.

EXPRESS MAIL.

This mail will commence running on the 15th of November next.

Between New York and Philadelphia, there will be two mails daily upon the rail roads, running with the speed of the express, and carrying the entire mail matter, in consequence of which the additional postage will not be charged between those cities. The same policy will be pursued between Philadelphia and Baltimore, and further south, as soon as the department, by the aid of the rail roads or other means, can give the whole mail the same expedition as the express.

The department will endeavor to make such arrangements as will give the towns on the upper line through New Jersey, the same mail facilities they now enjoy, and expects shortly to improve them.

Annexed are the regulations formed by the postmaster general in reference to the matter to be conveyed by this mail: [Globe.]

Post office department, Oct. 22d, 1836.

Regulations for the express mail.

1. No letters will be sent by this mail, except such as have written upon them the words "express mail."
2. No free letters, nor letters containing money, nor letters exceeding half an ounce in weight, except public despatches, nor any newspapers or pamphlets, will be sent by this mail.
3. If letters bearing a frank, or containing money, or weighing more than half an ounce, be put into post offices marked "express mail," the postmasters will erase those words, and send them by the ordinary mail.
4. All letters and public despatches sent by this mail will be charged with triple the usual rates of postage.
5. Letters marked "express mail," and put into post offices not on the line of the express, will be sent by that line, when they reach it, and will be charged, where put in, with triple postage for the whole distance.
6. Editors of newspapers have a right to receive free by this mail, slips from all newspapers which they may now receive free by the ordinary mail, but cannot receive the slips and the newspapers both. If both come to them, the postmasters will charge the newspapers with postage.

7. Slips from newspapers, are small parts of newspaper publishers, to convey the latest news, foreign and domestic. But one slip can be received from the same newspaper; and in no case must it exceed in size two columns of such newspaper.

8. Newspaper slips must show on their face from what newspapers they come, and be put into the post office open, with the name of the editor or newspaper for whom designed distinctly written upon them.

9. Postmasters will put all slips for the same place into a packet directed to that place.

FRENCH CLAIMS.

While our nation glories, and with propriety, in having brought other powers to do justice to the claims of our merchants, it is singular that the nation itself should stand in the light of a defaulter towards those very merchants whose right it so eloquently pleaded with other powers. The government of the United States is, by its treaty with France, indebted to the merchants of the United States for all the claim of the latter upon the government of France, for spoiliations previous to 1800—and we are glad that means have been resorted to by the claimants, to procure from the government an acknowledgment and restoration of their rights. This is fortunately a question of wrong that does not apply to the present administration, more than to any previous one since the ceding of Louisiana. [Philad. U. S. Gaz.]

At a convention of delegates from several states of the union, on the subject of French spoiliations prior to September, 1800, assembled conformably to notice, in the city of New York, on the 13th of October, 1836—George Griswold, of New York, was appointed chairman, and Theodore Dexter, of Massachusetts, secretary.

The following states were represented, viz: Maine, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland, North Carolina, South Carolina and the District of Columbia.

It was, on motion, Resolved, That James Bayard of Pennsylvania, J. H. Cauten of the District of Columbia, and Theo. Dexter of Massachusetts, be a committee to prepare a memorial to congress on the same subject, and to report such measures as they may deem expedient in relation thereto.

At an adjourned meeting held on the 14th October, the above committee reported a memorial which was unanimously adopted, as were the following resolutions:—

Resolved, That the memorial adopted by this convention be signed by the delegates from the several states, and transmitted to Washington, to be presented to congress early in their next session.

Resolved, That the claimants in each state be requested to appoint one or more persons to repair to Washington as soon after the meeting of congress as possible, to act in concert, as a committee, in urging their claims upon the attention of that body.

Resolved, That claimants throughout the United States be requested to forward memorials, either separately or in connexion with others in the same place, to their respective representatives in congress, at an early period of the next session.

Resolved, That Charles Macalester of Pennsylvania, Jas. B. Murray of New York, Theodore Dexter of Massachusetts and J. G. Davies of Maryland, be a committee to wait upon the president of the United States, and present him with a copy of the proceedings of this convention.

Resolved, That the following gentlemen consisting of one from each state be a committee of correspondence, with full power to perform any acts necessary to promote the obtaining of their just rights from congress:

Maryland	Philip Wallis.
Pennsylvania	John C. Smith.
New York	James B. Murray.
Massachusetts	Theodore Dexter.
Maine	William King.
New Hampshire	Edward Cutts.
Rhode Island	J. C. Brown.
Virginia	J. Cooper.
North Carolina	J. B. Hinton.
South Carolina	J. S. Guier.
District Columbia	Nathaniel Wattles.

Resolved, That the proceedings of this convention be signed by the chairman and secretary, and published. GEO. GRISWOLD, chairman.

THEO. DEXTER, secretary.

THE POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

Senate chamber, Washington city, June 10, 1836.

SIR: The peculiar situation in which you recently stood before the senate, the protracted delicate state of your health as well as my own bodily infirmities, have conspired to prevent me from addressing you sooner in relation to a course of conduct heretofore pursued by subordinates of the post office department, which to my mind is not only disgraceful to the character but subversive of the principles of a free government; and to ask you respectfully, to inform me whether such practices are or are not tolerated by the rules of the department? and if not, whether you will take official cognizance of charges, if preferred, to the end that the guilty may be removed from stations which they have disgraced and unworthily hold, or, if innocent that they may be exonerated from unjust suspicion. It seems to me that this course is equally due to public sentiment, the individuals implicated and the reputation of the department over which you preside. Therefore anticipating your prompt and affirmative reply, and with a view of furnishing a few cases in point, for immediate investigation, and as specimens of a widely extended system, I will for the present content myself by bringing to your notice the following.

B. H. Dibble, postmaster at Buffalo, in the state of New York; George Plitt and John Taylor, the latter a foreigner, clerks in the post office department, have used the time and influence of their official stations by written communications and personal importunities to bias voters, to produce favorable results in local and state elections, especially in reference to the nominations and during the pendency of the late gubernatorial canvass in the state of Pennsylvania. And it is my desire that so much of this communication as refers to the individuals above named, shall be considered by you and filed of record as charges emanating from me; and which I will substantiate by the clearest proofs if called upon to do so by the head of the department; who alone possesses the power of a summary correction. But calls upon me for proofs from any other source than the P. M. general will receive no other notice than my present declaration, that I hold myself morally and legally responsible for what I speak and write, and will plead no other privilege than to give the truth in evidence.

I am far from desiring, in the remotest degree, to disfranchise or curtail the rights of public agents; but the gross impropriety of a servant of the people, living on their bounty, arrogantly assuming an official superiority and right to dictate to his masters, is too glaringly insolent and absurd to admit of illustration, and ought to meet with the indignant frowns of every freeman. It is however due to truth and fair dealing to say, that I know of no causes of complaint similar to those above mentioned, thus far, during the administration of the present head of the post office department. To touch this subject, in any manner whatever, is as unpleasant to me as it can be to any individual; and nothing could have incited me to do so, but a strong desire for the abatement of a loathsome public nuisance, which, in my mind, ought not to be looked upon with the least degree of allowance. I remain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

SAMUEL MCKEAN.

Hon. Amos Kendall, P. M. general, U. S.

Post office department, Sept. 27, 1836.

Hon. Sam'l McKean, U. S. senator.

Burlington, Bradford county, Pennsylvania:

Your letter of the 10th June last, complaining of the political conduct of sundry persons holding appointments under this department, was duly received. My answer has been delayed partly by pressing business, partly by ill health and consequent absence from the city, and partly by the importance and delicacy of the subject. On the one hand, it is difficult to maintain by argument, that a person accepting a public station forfeits thereby any right to canvass freely, in speeches or in writing, the claims of aspirants to office, and the principles involved in pending elections, which he possessed as a private citizen. On the other hand it must be admitted that there would be danger to our institutions, should the government support, in those who receive honors and emolument at its hands, a band of political leaders who should, through their public stations, assume to direct public opinion and control the results of elections in the general or state governments. The difficulty is to draw the line between the rights of the citizen on the one hand and the assumptions of the office holder on the other. To draw any distinct line, I must confess myself, after mature reflection, utterly incompetent. I do not however hesitate to say, that I deem the direct and habitual interference of officers of this department in the electioneering contests carried on in the several states, dangerous in principle as well as mischievous in practice.

It would be dangerous to have our eleven thousand post offices made centres of electioneering operations directed by their incumbents, and sustained by the revenue which they collect from the people, under the laws regulating the post office department. It would have a mischievous effect on the intercourse and business of the country, if the correspondence of the citizens were exposed to be handled by men of excited feelings, who might have or might think they had a strong personal as well as political motive to misdirect or suppress it. My advice to postmasters and all the officers and agents of this department, on all proper occasions, has been to keep as clear from the excitement of political strife as possible—to shun mere political meetings, or if present to avoid taking any part in their proceedings. To decline acting as members of political committees or conventions—to abstain from engaging in disputes and altercations with persons having official business with them, and as far as practicable with all others—and to take especial care to treat all men alike in their official intercourse.

There is a legitimate influence attached to office. It is that which arises from a faithful, prompt and polite performance of its duties, in which all men of all opinions and parties are served with the same impartiality and urbanity. The office holder thus makes himself beloved in the circle which surrounds him; all honest men are satisfied, thus far, with things as they are; and the popularity which gathers around him, is shared by the administration under which he acts. This is the legitimate influence of office, and it is in this manner only that I desire the postmasters, officers and agents of this department, to endeavor to sustain and enhance the popularity of the administration.

Do not understand me as maintaining that political considerations should have no weight in selecting for office, or that any one should give up or compromise his political principles after he has received an appointment. On the contrary, although I would not remove a good postmaster and honest man, for mere difference of political opinion, I hold that it is but common honesty in those holding power to select for office, men, whose principles accord with their own, and that in a contrary course they give evidence of an entire want of sincerity in the principles they profess. What honest motive can induce a man of one set of principles to give dignity, power and influence to men who profess the reverse and are struggling to overthrow that which he desires to establish?

May not the world justly suspect that he is either hypocritical or corrupt? As an honest man, therefore, I must give a preference to political friends in making appointments, if those presented shall be men of moral worth and qualified for the stations. Nor do I hold that men in office should conceal their political opinions or refrain from an open and manly exercise of their political rights. They may do the one without entering into disputes and altercations, and may accomplish the other without stepping forth as leaders of the people in the canvass.

It results from these observations, that no well defined rule for the regulation of the political conduct of those in office can be safely prescribed, and that every case must be decided upon its own merits and accordingly to the peculiar circumstances which surround it.

The offences of which you complain are stated to have been committed before I came into the administration of this department. One of the gentlemen complained of is no longer in the service, and I am quite sure that for the last seventeen months there has been no cause of complaint against the other two.

Under these circumstances, I have a repugnance to calling in question their political conduct during the administration of my predecessor, whose opinions and advice to his subordinates may have been very different from mine. If I were to do so, I might condemn and punish them for political conduct, which their official superior at the time, countenanced and approved. While, therefore, do not decline examining any evidences which may be submitted to me touching their political conduct, in as much as it may involve other considerations affecting their fitness for public trust, I do not feel that it is my duty to call for such evidences in this case, where the complaint is exclusively political. With very high respect, your obedient servant,

AMOS KENDALL.

WILL OF THE LATE COL. BURR.

Below will be found the will of the late col. AARON BURR, which will doubtless be perused with interest by most of our readers. We understand that the first volume of Burr's Memoirs [by Mr. Davis] is in the hands of the Messrs. Harpers for publication, and will probably appear about the middle of November. Some of the pages of the manuscript have been submitted to our perusal, and we do not hesitate to say that the work will do credit to the industry and intelligence of its author. From Mr. Davis' long and intimate connexion with col. Burr and the political parties of the day, he is admirably well calculated for the task he has undertaken, and we are satisfied that he will conscientiously discharge the duty imposed upon him without being influenced by fear for the living, or affection for the dead.

[Courier & Enquirer.]

I, Aaron Burr, of the city of New York, now residing at No. 23 Nassau street, do make and publish this my last will and testament, as follows:

I appoint Matthew L. Davis, Peter Townsend and Henry P. Edwards, attorney and counsellor at law, my executors.

I give the charge and custody of my private papers to the said M. L. Davis, to be disposed of at his discretion.

I propose in a codicil, to be hereunto annexed, to give a list of my debts, and to point out the resources from which they are to be paid.

And I authorise my said executors to settle all suits and claims which I may have against any person or persons whatsoever, and to give receipts and acquittances thereupon; and to sell my land or real estate to which I may be entitled at the time of my death, and to give deeds therefor.

And I do hereby revoke and annul all former and other wills and testaments by me made.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto subscribed my name this 21st day of April, in the year of our Lord 1834.

A. BURR.

Signed, published, &c. in the presence of

CHARLES F. HILL,
HENRY OSCAR TAYLOR. }

Whereas, on the 21st day of April, in the year of our Lord 1834, I made and published my last will and testament, and therein declared my intention of making a codicil thereto: Now, in performance of such intention, I do hereby make and declare and publish this as a codicil to my said will.

First—I give to Bridget Williams the sum of nine hundred dollars, being the balance of moneys left in my hands for this purpose, with which I direct my executors to purchase an annuity, payable to her during her natural life, payable quarterly.

Second—I give to my two daughters, known by the names of Frances Ann, aged about six years, now residing with Mrs. Frances Watson, and under the immediate care of her daughter, Mrs. Sarah Minthorne Tompkins; the other daughter, named Elizabeth, being about the age of two years, now residing with Mrs. Guaynetta Conklin, both well known to Henry O. Taylor, all the rest and residues of my estates, both real and personal, to the survivor of them, their heirs and assigns, forever. Nevertheless, I give to Samuel Corp two hundred dollars, being in consideration of an act of great liberality shown towards me more than twenty years ago. I regret that it has not been in my power at an earlier date to give any evidence of my gratitude towards him. In testimony whereof, I have hereunto subscribed my name, this 11th day of January, 1835.

A. BURR.

Signed, &c. in the presence of

HENRY OSCAR TAYLOR, }

I, Aaron Burr, of the first ward of the city of New York, do make and publish this as a further codicil to my will dated the 21st day of April, in the year 1834.

Item—I give to the duke de Bassano—frances, for which he has my note, payable without interest, which sum he advanced me in the most liberal and delicate manner, having learnt, as I was afterwards informed by the celebrated Monsieur Denon, directeur general desnuesser, at Paris, which I much regret that it has not been sooner in my power to repay; and which I now beg him to receive with my thanks.

I direct that all my private papers, except law papers, appertaining to suits now depending, be delivered to my friend Matthew L. Davis, to be disposed of at his discretion, directing him, nevertheless, to destroy or deliver to the parties interested all such as may, in his estimation, be calculated to affect injuriously the feelings of individuals, against whom I have no complaint. In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand, &c. this 26th day of July, 1835.

A. BURR.

Signed, published, &c. in the presence of

A. E. HOSACK, M. D. }

The further codicil to the will of Aaron Burr, dated the 21st day of April, 1834: Further, I direct and order my pictures to be given to my two daughters upon the day of their marriage; in the mean time to be in the custody of my friend and kinsman, Theodosia Prevost, by whom the division is to be made.

Item—I give to Henry Oscar Taylor such books and maps and wearing apparel belonging to me as may be found in my house at my death.

Item—I give to my friend and kinsman, Theodosia Prevost, the picture of my daughter, which is enamelled on a China cup, which is believed to be in the upper drawer of my yellow desk. In testimony whereof, I have hereunto subscribed my name, &c. this 27th day of December, 1835.

A. BURR.

Signed and published in the presence of

OGDEN E. EDWARDS, }

HENRY OSCAR TAYLOR. }

COTTON MANUFACTURES.

In England, in 1834, the number of spindles was 9,833,000; in France 8 1-2 millions, while in the United States there were but 1 3-4 millions. And in the same year there were imported into this country, cotton goods from England to the value of $8,200,000, from France $1,100,000, and from Germany $300,000, making a total of 9,600,000. This large sum expended among ourselves instead of being sent out of the country, might have given employment to a vast number of persons and been the source of wealth to many more. The fact also proves that there is abundant room for the profitable employment of a greater amount of capital in this important branch of business; for with our high protective duty, if the foreign manufacturer can afford to send his fabrics to this market, we, saving the duty both upon the raw material and upon the cloths, can certainly safely increase the quantity of our manufactures and afford to undersell him in our own markets. Besides these advantages, our exports of cotton fabrics have been gradually increasing from 1826 when they amounted to but little over one million of dollars until the present time.

In 1833 the exports amounted to $2,321,000, of which $1,900,000 were to South America and Mexico; $120,000 to India and Africa; $215,000 to China, and $86,000 to the West Indies. Now with all the advantages of our country for manufacturing, with the opening of these and other markets for our goods, with the increasing use and demand in our own country and abroad, and the increasing popularity of American manufactures, can any doubt remain about the stability and the profit of cotton manufactures in the United States, and especially in New England. Let it be remembered that we have confined ourselves principally to the manufacture of coarse goods, but as the business advances, the higher and more valuable qualities of fabrics will become the subject of attention, by which new employment will be given to skill and ingenuity, and new markets opened to the manufactures of our enterprising and indefatigable countrymen. The same causes which have built up the cities of Liverpool and Manchester, in England, of Glasgow and Paisley in Scotland, and given employment to a million and more of persons in those countries, are now in operation among us, and under the fostering protection of our free institutions, the security of property, an energetic spirit, and increasing skill and improvements, are destined to diffuse wealth and prosperity widely over our land.

The following progress of a pound of cotton, extracted from the English Monthly Magazine, will not be uninteresting. "There was sent to London lately from Paisley, a small piece of muslin, about one pound weight, the history of which is as follows: The wool came from the East Indies to London; from London it went to Lancashire, where it was manufactured into yarn; from Manchester it was sent to Paisley, where it was woven; it was sent to Ayrshire next, where it was tumbled; it was then conveyed to Dumfries, where it was handsewed and again returned to Paisley, whence it was sent to Glasgow and finished, and then sent per coach to London. It may be reckoned about three years that it took to bring this article to market, from the time when it was packed in India, till it arrived complete in the merchant's warehouse in London: whither it must have been conveyed 5,000 miles by sea, nearly 1,000 by land, and have contributed to reward the labor of nearly 150 persons, whose services were necessary to the carriage and manufacture of this small quantity of cotton, and by which the value has been advanced more than 2,000 per cent."

[Portland Ad.]

STEAM COMMUNICATION WITH EUROPE.

The annexed article will be read with interest, we presume, at the present time, when we are almost in daily expectation of seeing the departure of the first steampacket for Liverpool. The subject was introduced and partially discussed, with a great variety of others connected with science and the arts, at the great meeting of the British association at Bristol, (England), held during the week commencing on the 20th of August. At this meeting were present almost all the distinguished and distinguished men of science in Great Britain, and many from other countries, among whom, we observe, was Dr. Hare, of Philadelphia. The report of proceedings occupies no less than twenty-five wide and closely printed columns of the Bristol Journal, now one of the largest papers published in England.

As for the extract which we subjoin, we confess that it is not to us the clearest and most intelligible document that ever was. Perhaps it is owing to our want of full and accurate knowledge on the subject, and perhaps to a similar defect on the part of the reporter, who may not have caught the exact scope and bearing of the calculations; but we think that Dr. Lardner is responsible, having no great faith in either the talents or the learning of that gentleman.

Be that as it may, however, his opinions are before the reader, who will perhaps be able to make something more of them than we have succeeded in doing. If we understand him rightly, he doubts the practicability of making the Atlantic voyage by steam; captain Cobb will prove him to be in error, before long, or we are much deceived in our expectations. [New York Com. Adv.]

STEAM COMMUNICATION WITH DISTANT PARTS. Dr. Lardner said if there was one point in practice of a commercial nature which more than another required to be founded on experience, it was this one of extending steam navigation to voyages of extraordinary length. He was aware since the question had arisen in this city, it had been stated that his own opinion was adverse to it; that impression was totally wrong, but he did feel that as steps had been taken to try this experiment, great caution should be used in the adoption of the means of carrying it into effect; almost all depended on a first attempt, for a failure would much retard the ultimate consummation of their wishes. He believed those in this section who knew him would readily acquit him of being forward to question the power of steam; he tendered the most unqualified allegiance to the sovereignty of steam, but he tendered the allegiance of a free and thinking subject to a constitutional monarch; he did not bow before the power of steam as an abject slave, and if he found a failure in the administration of that power, he attributed it entirely to the ministers (cheers). There were distinctions to be drawn depending on the length of the trip, and on the stages into which it was divided. There was one main distinction between the operation of a marine and land engine; the marine engine was used with salt water, and the land engine with fresh water; heat would convert that water into steam, but the heat that would do that with the fresh water would not do so with other subjects that were combined with salt water—it would not do that with salt, which, in consequence, produced an incrustation in the boiler, and this was most injurious. A remedy for this had been discovered, which was almost perfectly efficient; this was the use of copper boilers. There had been a contrivance brought into operation, which, if it was effectual, as its promoters considered it to be, would be a perfect remedy; he alluded to a condenser which was known by the name of Hall's condenser, which was so contrived that the steam circulated like the blood in the human frame, but this had been discovered by Watt, who had left little for his successors to do.

With regard to the power of steam engines, practical men considered that for short trips the best proportion was to give the vessel the power of one horse for every two tons; that as the length of the trips increased, they must have a smaller proportion of power; this should be three tons for every horse power; and that for the longest trips to which steam power could at present be applied, the proportion should be about one horse to four tons. It might be asked why this particular proportion was selected, and the answer was this—that it was found by experience, that such would not contain sufficient coals; but the surplus of power in long voyages would be invaluable where power was most valuable. It was necessary they should devise some means of determining the locomotive duty of coals; it was a question to which he had devoted a good deal of time, and the only method he had been able to devise had been to determine the consumption of fuel per hour; he had made extensive observations, and he considered you must place 15 lbs. of coal per hour for every horse. Mr. Watt some time since established a series of experiments on boilers, with the view of determining the relative consumption of fuel and the result was then, that the consumption of fuel under the marine boilers was one-third less than under the land boilers.

A committee of the house of commons, some time since, had to determine the expediency of opening a long steam communication with India, and much evidence was given; in one case the opinion was 8 lbs. in another 9 lbs. and in another 11 lbs. They would take nine months, and then came the question of speed. They were all well aware that there had been for some years in operation a line of steamers by Falmouth and Corfu; they touched at Gibraltar. On an average of 51 voyages, the rate at which they made their trips was noted, and the result was 7 1-4 miles per hour; they had, therefore, the conclusion, that the locomotive duty of 9 lbs. of coal, is 7 1-4 miles of distance. If, therefore, 9 lbs. gave 7 1-4 miles in distance, one ton would give 1,900 miles for every horse power; then they must look for average weather; the build of the vessel was such that they had not space to try more than 1 1-4 ton of coals for every horse power. Almost all the vessels with which the experiment had been made had the patent paddle wheels, and they had been worked with the best coals. The next question was, what modification the vessel must undergo, when applied to steam communication with the United States.

In the Atlantic there were westerly winds which prevailed almost continually, extremely violent, and attended with a great swell of the sea; but it was an astronomical phenomenon, which was very well understood. The outward voyage of the large packet ships was generally estimated at 40 days, the homeward voyage in 20 days, so that the entire voyage occupied 60 days. If, then, they assumed that the average of outward and homeward voyages to the United States corresponded with the average weather between Falmouth and Corfu, then they would arrive at this conclusion: that the outward voyage was more than the average, in the proportion of 4 to 3. If the locomotive duty of coals provided for the voyage between Falmouth and Corfu was 1,900 miles for a ton per horse power, they must deduct from that 33 per cent.; in order to get what the duty would be on the outward voyage to New York, you must take a third from 1,900, and you would have 1,300 miles. The direct line from Bristol to New York was 3,500 miles; if you allowed one ton of coals for every 1,300 miles per horse power, the vessel would require to carry 2 1-3 tons for every horse power in her engine: therefore this vessel must carry nearly three times the whole complement the admiralty steamers could carry.—Let them take a vessel of 1,600 tons, provided with a 400 horse power engine: having 2 1-3 tons per each horse power, the vessel must carry 1,848 tons of coal; to that adding 400, the vessel must carry 1,748 tons. He thought it would be a work of time, under all the circumstances, to say much more to convince them of the inexpediency of attempting a direct voyage to New York; for in this case 2,080 miles was the longest run a steamer could encounter; at the end of that distance she would require a relay of coals. The question then became a geographical one as to the best mode of accomplishing this. There were two ways which might be proposed: one, to make the Azores an intermediate station, and to proceed from thence to New York; the other would be to proceed to some point in Newfoundland, and make that an intermediate station; the distance from Bristol to the Azores is 1,300 miles, and from the Azores to New York 2,400 miles, being 20 per cent. more than the steam limit he had mentioned.

There was a point called Sidney, in cape Breton, where there were coal mines, worked to a profit by Messrs. Rundell and Bridge; but, then, that was 2,300 miles; but if we took our final departure from some place upon the western coast of Ireland, and there charged the vessel with coals, the distance to Sidney would be only 1,900 miles. The rail road system might be established in Ireland which would be a benefit in more ways than one: London and all the southern sections of the country would pour in their produce and population by the railway to Bristol. (Cheers.) He could assure them he had a mind totally disinterested; he was not an engineer, and has not a share in any joint stock company! because he felt that to render himself useful to the community those faculties nature has given him, he should deprive himself of part of that utility if he placed himself in a situation that any one could say he would, by possibility, have any interested motive. He would, therefore, counsel those who proposed to invest capital in this most interesting enterprise, to keep in mind certain points to which he would direct their attention:

1st. He would advise that the measured tonnage should correspond with the tonnage by displacement.

2d. To go to an increased expense in using the best coals.

3d. He would earnestly impress upon them the expediency of adopting the paddle-wheels shown to the section yesterday.

4th. He advised the proportion of 1 to 4 as the proper tonnage.

5th. He would impress upon them the expediency of giving more attention in the selection of engineers and stokers; it was a matter of the last importance, and a saving of 30 or 40 per cent.

With respect to the boiler, he would recommend copper only.

Lastly, he would advise the coal boxes to be tanked.

Mr. Russell would confess he had listened with the greatest delight to the lucid and logical observations they have just heard. He would merely add one word: let them try the experiment with a view only to the enterprise itself, but on no account to try new boilers or other experiments, but to have a combination of the most approved plans that had been yet adopted.

Mr. Brunel then pointed out some errors in the calculation made by Dr. Lardner, which would be in favor of the undertaking; he was convinced nine or even ten miles an hour might be accomplished, and Dr. Lardner had formed his conclusions upon old vessels, and not from one in which every thing was done upon the most approved principles yet known, and thus reduced possibility to certainty.

Mr. Field said he had made the calculations for the ordinance on the vessels in Corfu; they were taken upon an average which included the infancy of the undertaking.

Dr. Lardner, in reply, said that he thought the voyage practicable, but he wished to point out that which would remove the possibility of a doubt, because, if the first failed, it would cast a damp upon the enterprise, and prevent a repetition of the attempt.

This discussion created the greatest possible interest.

MESSAGE OF THE GOV. OF ARKANSAS.

*Fellow citizens of the senate,
and of the house of representatives:*

In compliance with the provisions of our constitution, it is my duty, as a co-ordinate branch of the government, to communicate to you the condition of its affairs, and to suggest such measures for your consideration, as may occur to my mind, as expedient and proper for your action.

The duties, labors, powers and responsibilities of the present session of the legislature, are of greater magnitude than will, perhaps, be those of any succeeding one. The important and arduous duties of revising and remodelling our imperfect laws, upon which the peace, happiness and destinies of our citizens depend; the election of persons to the numerous offices which the constitution makes it your duty to fill; a judicious and wise arrangement of the various funds subject to your disposal; and the creation of a sound currency for the use of the state, give to the session upon which you have so recently entered, more than ordinary solemnity and interest. It becomes us, therefore, to advance to the task with our minds unbiassed—devoted to, and determined on, the performance of our duties for the good and happiness of the people, and the advancement and honor of the state. Let us offer up our acknowledgments to the Great Preserver of nations, and humbly supplicate His guidance, protection and approbation, in the accomplishment of duties of such magnitude.

It is with infinite pleasure that I can inform you, that our new and interesting state has just reason to boast of health, happiness and prosperity.

The reports of the auditor and treasurer are herewith transmitted. The latter exhibits the debt of Arkansas to be eight thousand six hundred and ninety-four dollars and ninety-six and three-fourths cents, showing a decrease of the debt, since the 30th September, 1835, of $272 20. By the report of the auditor, the probable amount of the revenue of the state, yet unpaid, for the year 1836, will be twenty or twenty-one thousand dollars. The duties of the auditor and treasurer have been yearly augmenting, and are now so great as seem to demand an increase of the salaries of those officers, in proportion to their respective duties. The suggestions contained in the auditor's report, I deem of sufficient importance to recommend to your consideration; and will here remark, that the insufficiency of our present revenue laws suggests the propriety of the passage of others more salutary. The duties of all officers, connected with the revenue, should be clearly defined, and, to insure promptness and punctuality in the discharge of them, heavy penalties for great delay or wilful neglect should be imposed.

The extra duties performed by the auditor, in accordance with the requisitions of an act of the legislature, approved 23d of October, 1835, appear to have been so laborious that justice seems to demand the allowance of a compensation equal to the amount of extra labor imposed.

Although it may not be considered within the immediate province of the executive, I cannot allow this opportunity to pass, without communicating my views upon the subject of compensation that may be given to those who, under our constitution, may be chosen to fill offices. I feel warranted in the belief, that our sources of revenue will authorize the allowance of respectable and liberal salaries to our public functionaries. And I feel much solicitude that this should be the case especially in regard to the judicial department of the government. An enlightened and intelligent judiciary is calculated to have a great influence upon the future character of Arkansas—to have a wholesome influence upon the morals and feelings of its citizens, and upon the peace and happiness of the whole country. A devotion to the laws has ever been, (and I trust ever will be), a striking characteristic of the American people: that devotion is only acquired from the perfect confidence they feel in the honesty and capability of those who are chosen to construe and adjudicate upon them. It is with a desire to insure such feelings of confidence in the minds of the people of Arkansas, in those who sit in judgment upon their property, their liberty, and, it may be, their lives, that I here take the liberty of drawing your attention to the subject of the selection and compensation of our judicial officers. A liberal compensation seems to me to be necessary to induce men of scientific, legal and practical knowledge, to forego such professional prospects as their talents and qualifications would justly entitle them to at the bar, and to accept of places upon the bench. I feel assured that those you have the honor to represent, would cheerfully coincide with a course of this kind on the part of their agents.

Viewing our situation as the immediate frontier, and so near a neighbor to the Mexican or Texian government, in which a cruel and savage kind of warfare is now raging; and taking into consideration that the government of the United States has removed numerous tribes of Indians from east of the Mississippi river to our immediate western border, and that some of the leading men of their tribes, unwilling to quit their places of nativity, were forced away in chains, we have just grounds to entertain fears of hostility from some of those quarters. I feel every confidence that our government will place, and continue to keep, on our frontier, a respectable portion of their regular troops. Our standing army is, however, too small to justify the belief that the portion which can be assigned will be sufficient to insure us perfect safety against the tomahawk and scalping-knife.

Taking this view of the subject, I consider there is no power granted by our constitution to your executive, of more importance than that which makes him commander-in-chief of the military forces; and believing that the safety of our citizens and country, in a very great degree, depends on a speedy and effectual organization, disciplining and arming the militia of the state, I cannot too strongly urge this subject to your early and favorable action. I feel warranted in the belief that the citizens of no country would be found more willing and ready to march, at the first cry of the war-whoop, in defence of their country, than the people of Arkansas. But to enable them to act efficiently, they must have discipline and arms.

I would suggest the propriety of letting some part of your action on this subject, encourage the establishment of independent companies, under proper military regulations. In addition to the necessity of our own preparations and exertions to defend ourselves, as a border people, we should claim, from the general government, the erection upon our frontier, of sufficient garrisons to insure us protection and safety. It should also place at the disposal of the executive of the state, a sufficient quantity of munitions of war to arm the militia. We are also justly entitled to an arsenal, or depot of arms, at some convenient and appropriate point; and we should not rest satisfied without such means of protection. I therefore recommend the propriety of your representing our situation to the general government, and, in energetic language, ask them for those indispensable means of defence.

I cannot too earnestly press upon your consideration the subject of the completion of the state house. Some years since, a liberal donation was granted by the general government, for the purpose of erecting a suitable building for the accommodation of the representatives of the people of Arkansas. And, recently, from the same source, a farther grant, of five sections of the public lands has been made, for the completion of that building. The latter donation is now at your disposal; it is for you to determine the manner in which the donation is to be converted to the purpose for which it was granted.

In the mean time, I would respectfully recommend that you make an appropriation to put the whole building in such a condition as to prevent farther injury by remaining in its present exposed state. My predecessor has delivered to me various papers, purporting to be abstracts relative to contracts and expenditures, connected with the disposal of the former appropriation. I would respectfully recommend the appointment of a committee to investigate this subject, with authority to examine all papers in relation thereto, and to call on such individuals as can elucidate and give explanations on any matter connected therewith. And also, in a similar manner, to examine into the disposition made of the fund arising from the thousand acre grant, designed for the construction of a court house and jail. There are several papers now in my possession relating to this subject.

As we are now dependent on other states for the facilities afforded by banks, the interest of our country appear to require our early action upon the subject of banking. Our constitution has most wisely limited the number of banks to two; a number sufficiently large at any time to give a safe circulating medium, and to answer the agricultural and commercial interests of the state. Any measure calculated to secure these ends will receive my cordial approbation.

By an act of the general government, regulating the deposits of the public money, approved 23d June, 1836, we will, on the 1st day of January, 1837, be entitled, as a loan, to a part of the surplus revenue, then remaining in the treasury of the U. States, for the reception and disposition of which, provision should be made.

I would, also, call your attention, to the act of the general government, supplementary to the act entitled "an act for the admission of the state of Arkansas into the union, and to provide for the due execution of the laws of the United States within the same, and for other purposes," approved 23d of June, 1836, which should be ratified. By a provision of this act, section numbered sixteen, in every township, has been granted to the state for the use of the inhabitants of such township, for the use of schools: a disposition of the lands thus granted, in a manner best calculated to secure the objects designed, will meet my approbation. All salt springs, not exceeding 12 in number, with six sections of land adjoining to each, have been granted to the state for the use of the state, which are to be selected by the general assembly, on or before the first day of January, 1840; the same to be used under such terms, conditions and regulations, as the general assembly shall direct, but not to be sold or leased, at any time, for a longer period than ten years without the consent of congress. For selecting those lands and leasing out the salt springs, agents or commissioners should be appointed.

For receiving the five per cent. on the net proceeds of the sale of public lands in Arkansas, to which, by this act, we are entitled, from and after the 1st day of July last, provision should be made. The funds arising from this source, will be gradually augmenting, and should be loaned out at interest until a sum of sufficient magnitude is at our disposal to be used with effect, as the law designs, for the purpose of making roads and canals.

Among the most interesting portion of your legislative labors, will no doubt be a consideration of, and action upon, a system of internal improvement for the state. By the division of the surplus revenue, to which I have before alluded, a fund will be placed at the control of the representatives of the people, which, if judiciously managed, will enable them to improve the roads and highways to a great degree, and thus enhance the value of the property of our citizens, by making the access to and from market, an object of trifling importance. We are too young, in knowledge and means, to follow closely in the vast strides of internal improvement taken by most of the states in the union; but we can make such a beginning as will, when our resources and experience become greater, and our population more dense, assist materially in the proper application of those resources. I would, therefore, recommend the appointment of a board of internal improvement, composed of persons of suitable topographical knowledge and experience.

The miserable and shackling condition of our common jails is such, that we have scarcely one in our state sufficiently strong to secure a prisoner without a standing guard. Experience, in other states, demonstrates clearly the good effects of penitentiaries; but should the present legislature, in its wisdom, deem it inexpedient, at this session, to make provision for the erection of a building of that character, I am convinced that the public good requires some kind of legislation that will insure the establishment of common jails which will be sufficient to retain criminals, without the expense of guards, or necessity of loading them with chains.

The time and mode of choosing electors to vote for president and vice president of the U. States, is of sufficient importance to insure your immediate action.

One among the important duties to be performed by the present legislature, will be the judicious disposal of the fund which will arise from a donation of seventy-two sections of land granted to the state by the general government, for the purpose of establishing a seminary of learning. Its magnitude will doubtless insure your serious consideration and action. The creation of institutions of learning upon a scale as liberal as our means will justify, must, when carried into effect, give to our young state an early, respectable and proud stand among her sister republics. Most of the states in our union have adopted measures and created funds for a general system of education within their respective borders, and from their experience we are taught that an earlier movement in the same benevolent course, would have much advanced the moral and intellectual standard of their citizens; and learning wisdom from the experience of our neighbors, we can, in the outset, take such steps as will, in the course of a few years, enable all our citizens to bestow on their children the benefits of education.

Arduently hoping that unity and harmony of action will prevail in your deliberations, and nothing be done which will prove prejudicial to the best interests of the people, and that wisdom may guide you in the creation of wholesome and salutary laws, that will reflect honor on yourselves, and give character to our state, is the devout supplication of your fellow citizen.

JAMES S. CONWAY.

Little Rock, September 17th, 1836.

INDIAN WRITTEN LANGUAGE.

From the Georgetown Metropolitan.

